England, like a work of genius, deserves and requires a slow and frequent perusal to understand its beauties.

LORD JOHN RUSSELL.

THE description of England, in its present state, is nearly on the same plan as that of the "Magna Britannia," &c., written by the Rev. Thomas Cox, vicar of Broomfield, in Essex, a Survey of Great Britain, completed in six volumes quarto, in 1731. By adopting, in the present work, which is on larger paper, very small types for printing, and by the arrangement of the parochial divisions in double columns, a more precise account has been obtained, and a much greater number of places has been mentioned under the several parishes; besides including many circumstances of local interest, and a notice of many objects worthy of observation in the vicinity of the cities and towns in each county.

The manners, customs, policy of all,
Pay contribution, to the store he gleans.

COWPER.

The first volume contains an explanatory Introduction relative to the several divisions of the kingdom, the population, the parliamentary representation, the intercourse by roads, and by inland navigation to the several ports, a description of the metropolis and of the southern part of England; of all the eastern and western counties which are comprised in the Home circuit, the Norfolk circuit, and the Western circuit, including the Channel Islands. The counties are alphabetically arranged in the six divisions, three in each volume, corresponding with the circuits in the civil jurisdiction of the kingdom.

The second volume, in like manner, contains the northern topography of England, in an epitome of the county history in the Oxford circuit, the Midland circuit, and the Northern circuit, including a description of the Isle of Man and the Liberty of Berwick-upon-Tweed. In each circuit the counties are also alphabetically arranged; in each county the Hundreds, Wapentakes, or other local divisions, follow in the same order, and the Parishes of each Hundred are similarly disposed. At the end is a copious Index, compiled, under the Editor's direction, by Mr. W. J. Ward, whose kind assistance is here acknowledged.

Since the commencement of its publication, in May 1830, the proprietors of the work have been changed more than once; other untoward circumstances left the Editor, at one period, without even a hope of his labours being completed. He has to acknowledge with gratitude the kind and liberal attention he received from the present proprietor, Mr. G. Virtue, by whose spirited exertions alone the Editor was enabled to perform his duty, and to continue the account to the end. Mr. Virtue's chief object has been to produce a work of obvious utility at a reasonable price, so as to place it within the reach of every class, not without incurring a very great expense, and at considerable risk. The plan of a concise description of the English Counties, it is some satisfaction to record, received at an early stage of its progress the approbation of the Committee of the Society for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge, and was spoken of in terms of commendation in the Literary Gazette and Times newspaper. Other journals of celebrity gave their meed of praise to the publisher for its cheapness and fidelity.

Without assuming any extraordinary pretensions to topographical information, the Editor may mention that he has, with "expensive diligence," personally visited every county in England, excepting only Devonshire and Cornwall, and that besides having given up much time to research he was long engaged in the following works, entirely relative to the subject:

"An Essay on Roman Villas of the Augustan Age, and on the Remains of Roman Domestic Edifices discovered in Great Britain," 1833.

The Descriptions annexed to Neale's "Views of the Seats of Noblemen and Gentlemen," more than seven hundred in number, 1818—1827, in eleven volumes.

The Descriptions accompanying "Views of Noble Mansions in Hampshire, by J. Hewetson," 1825.

The Descriptions in "Great Britain Illustrated, from drawings by William Westall, A.R.A." 1830.

The first volume of "Winkles's Illustrations of the Cathedral Churches of England and Wales," containing descriptions of seven of the principal Cathedrals, 1836.

"Antiquities in Westminster Abbey, ancient oil paintings and sepulchral brasses, engraved from drawings by G. P. Harding," 1825. And

The Descriptions annexed to "Neale and Le Keux's Views of the Collegiate and Parochial Churches," 1826; two volumes.

In the present work every circumstance of commanding attention is included in the description of the towns and villages, and a more particular account is given of the metropolis and its modern improvements, as well as of the universities of Oxford and Cambridge, with their collegiate structures and public edifices. Statistics are, however, made subordinate to a design of rendering the book instructive, by particularizing the most interesting and picturesque objects in the several counties, as well as scenes, situations, and prospects remarkable for extent or beauty.

Humble dales, and mountains bold,
Meadows, woodlands, hills, and fields.

The admiration which the splendid remains of antiquity now very generally excite, rendered it desirable to notice all curious fragments of ancient architecture in the monastic buildings, churches, and crosses of religious foundation; Anglo-Norman castles, the remains of feudal times; the castellated mansions of later date, and the Tudor houses of the nobility and gentry, with brief observations on the peculiarities of each, and historical anecdotes of the structures; nor are the more remote stone circles, cromlechs, Roman and Danish encampments, barrows, tumuli, &c. entirely unnoticed. The whole containing a body of topographical information in a digested order, exhibiting the situation, extent, and productions of the country, natural and artificial, with its government, &c. as well as remarks on the improvement in the arts, manufactures and commerce of the kingdom.

The intrinsic merit and usefulness of provincial histories have always been acknowledged, and in the present state of national taste, works of this description are deservedly regarded with increased attention. Topography is a species of literature almost peculiar to England, the public records of this country affording advantages which, it is presumed, are not possessed by any other state in the world. The minute industry and accurate research of Leland, Camden, Burton, Dugdale, Weever, Ashmole, Spelman, Blomefield, Thoresby, and Chauncy have unfolded immense stores of information upon the subject of local antiquities, while the more recent publications of a higher class, amongst which may be enumerated the volumes of Baker, Blore, Bray, Clutterbuck, Dallaway, Gough, Hunter, Hutchins, Hoare, Lysons, Nichols, Ormerod, Surtees, and Whitaker, by their extensive investigations have exalted this branch of literature, in contributing to the gradual completion of an entire series of county history. To have particularized the authorities in the present work, in which brevity was absolutely necessary, would have been impracticable, so numerous and varied were the books consulted; it is only necessary to say, that to the best works the Editor's obligations are the greatest, and that the information must be considered as entirely derived from them; the errors are his own; as, in his endeavours to add to the value of his own labours, by recording the opinions of others, he may have sometimes mistaken them.

There is another class of books, of the greatest utility in a compilation like the present, to which constant recurrence has been made, amongst these it may be sufficient to mention Carlisle's Topographical Dictionary, and the Population Abstract for 1821, which, with the county maps, published by Carey and Smith, have been resorted to as sufficient authority.

The only personal obligation the Editor has to acknowledge is to Mr. W. H. Leeds, author of several literary works on architecture, for a critique on the modern public edifices of the metropolis, in volume I.

This brief description of the English Counties being now completed, it is the Editor's duty to return his sincere thanks to numerous subscribers who patiently gave him their encouragement during its progress, and to hope that his patrons will derive that satisfaction from his labours which it has been his ambition to deserve.

Handwritten text in a cursive script, likely a historical document or manuscript. The text is written in brown ink on aged, yellowish paper. The script is dense and fills the majority of the page, with some lines appearing slightly faded or obscured by the texture of the paper. The text is arranged in a single column, running vertically down the page.

INTRODUCTION.

ENGLAND, the most considerable division of Great Britain, is bounded by Scotland on the north; by the German Ocean, or North Sea, on the east; by the English Channel, on the south, which divides it from France; and by Wales, the Atlantic Ocean, and the Irish Channel on the west. From north to south England is 450 miles in length, and is in some places 300 miles in breadth, from east to west, being about 1750 miles in circumference, containing a population which, in 1821, appears to have consisted of no less than 11,261,437 persons. The aspect of the country is various and delightful; in some parts verdant plains extend as far as the eye can reach, watered by copious streams. In others the pleasing vicissitudes of gently rising hills and bending vales, fertile in corn, waving with wood, and interspersed with meadows, offer the most delightful landscapes of rural opulence and beauty. Some tracts abound with prospects of the more romantic kind; lofty hills, craggy rocks, deep narrow dells, and tumbling torrents; nor are there wanting, as a contrast to so many agreeable scenes, the bleak barren moors and wide uncultivated heaths. These are constantly diminishing, in consequence of numerous enclosures and extension of cultivation. The native animals of England are the stag, of which a few are yet to be found in their natural state; the fallow deer, of which there are two kinds; the dog, of which there are various species and different breeds, adapted to the chase; the fox; the wild cat, which is still found in some woods; the martin, the badger, &c. The wild bulls of this island are known to exist at Chillingham castle, in Northumberland, and the wild boar was formerly a native of this country, as also the wolf and the bear, but have gradually become extinct. The most remarkable of the birds, are the eagle, which is rarely met with; falcons of various species; the black cock, and the ptarmigan, found on the lofty hills of Cumberland.

The soil of England is various, consisting generally of clay, loam, sand, chalk, and gravel. Peat and mossy soils are common in the northern districts, and are also to be found, though more rarely, in the southern counties. No country in the world displays such a rich and uniform verdure for so large a portion of the year; while in more southern climates the bloom of nature withers under unintermitted and parching heats, or is obstructed in more northern latitudes by the influence of cold; nature is here refreshed in summer by frequent showers, and in the winter the cold is never so severe as to destroy vegetation. The indigenous fruits are few and of little value; but others have been introduced or brought to perfection by the skill and careful cultivation of the English gardeners. There is scarcely a farm of any extent in the south-western counties which has not an orchard attached to it of sufficient extent to supply the family with cider; but it is chiefly in the counties of Devon, Hereford, Worcester, Gloucester, Monmouth, and Somerset, that cider and perry are made in large quantities for sale, and where the orchard forms a principal object of attention. Hops are cultivated to a considerable extent in the southern counties; timber grows abundantly in most parts of the country:—

Below me trees unnumbered rise, beautiful in various dyes :
The gloomy pine, the poplar blue, the yellow beech, the sable yew,
The slender fir that taper grows, the sturdy oak with broad spread boughs.

Here are some individual trees of extraordinary magnitude, particularly oak and elm trees; but generally the size of the trees in England bear no comparison with some described by travellers.

The mines and quarries of England afford a constant supply of valuable produce; coal is found in great abundance in the northern counties, and in Derbyshire, Staffordshire, and Shropshire; it is also found in Leicestershire, Warwickshire, and in some of the western counties; but those in the south are generally destitute of that article. Iron abounds in Shropshire, Gloucestershire, Derbyshire, and in the north of Lancashire; it is produced, although not in equal abundance, in other counties: the iron mines are of great antiquity, and are known to have been wrought before the Norman Conquest. Lead is produced in different parts, both in the south and north: these mines are very ancient, and are known to have been wrought in the time of the Romans. Tin is confined to Cornwall and the adjoining parts of Devonshire, and black lead to a small district in Cumberland. Mines of copper are wrought in Cornwall, Devonshire, Derbyshire, and partially in Yorkshire and Staffordshire. There are also mines of rock salt, pits of fullers' earth, potters' clay, &c.

The manufactures of England are of prodigious extent, not only is her own produce made into every variety of fabric and form for use or ornament, but the produce of other countries is imported in order to supply materials for the ingenuity of the numerous artisans; and such are the various devices, and complicated improvements, which science has invented for the abridgement of labour, such is the minuteness and skill with which the industry of the country is arranged and subdivided upon one vast and general plan, and so great is the capital employed that England is enabled, in all the countries to which her commodities are exported, to undersell the manufacturer in his own market. The superiority and cheapness of English manufactures has given them a preference in the markets of Europe and America. In addition to her commerce and manufactures England has extensive fisheries, both at home and abroad.

Literature, science, and all the liberal arts keep pace with the advancement of commerce in England; knowledge has become widely disseminated amongst all classes, and the various periodical publications which are circulated contribute to foster a general spirit of inquiry amongst the people, and to counteract that apathy to mental pursuits, which is apt to grow up in a community purely commercial. In every town of note a newspaper is published, and there are besides other works, as magazines, reviews, and scientific journals, which serve to diffuse an ardour for liberal discussion.

Counties.

England is divided into forty counties, a division which appears to have been established in the Anglo-Saxon era, many of the counties being mentioned in history before the extinction of the Heptarchy, under the original name of shire, which, in its primitive signification, means a share, a division, and county is equivalent to earldom, a province or dominion of an earl. There are three counties-palatine, Lancashire, Cheshire, and Durham, with peculiar jurisdiction, and Cornwall, under the title of duchy, is settled by act of parliament on the king's eldest son. The shires of England were originally named from some remarkable particularity in the county or the capital town. Surrey, Sussex, and Middlesex from their relative situations, as well as Suffolk and Norfolk. Westmorland and Cumberland are sometimes called the middle shires. All are under the government of a shire reeve, or sheriff, a chief officer of the king.

The Ridings.

A Riding, or trithing, the original name, implies a third part; a mode of division in England now only peculiar to Yorkshire, but common to Lincolnshire, and some other counties in the Anglo-Saxon era.

Lathes.

Lathe, the shire division peculiar to Kent, is stated in the laws of Edward the Confessor to have been the same with the Riding, but could not have comprised the third part of the shire, as in Kent, the only county in which it is named, no less than seven distinct Lathes occur. At present there are only five Lathes in Kent, each consisting of several hundreds. The Lathes were, probably, military divisions, connected with the establishment of the Cinque Ports, for defence of the coast against invasion. The court leet seems to have the same derivation; and Dymchurch Lathe, an annual court, is now held in Romney marsh, for the election of a bailiff, &c.

Rapes.

The six intermediate divisions between the shire and the hundred in Sussex are called Rapes. These appear to have answered generally to the Lathes of Kent; but there is no mention of any court attached to the Rape. It was entrusted to the jurisdiction of an individual, and probably was a military district for the supply of a castle.

In Dorsetshire and Hampshire the hundreds are classed in divisions, simply so named.

Hundreds.

The division of the southern parts of England into Hundreds is unquestionably of Anglo-Saxon origin, and was probably made in imitation of the Centena of Germany; but in what manner the name of hundred was applied is uncertain: indeed, there is scarcely any subject, connected with topography, that has caused so much controversy. Some authors have considered the hundred as relating to the number of heads of families, or the number of dwellings situated in the division; others to the number of hides of land therein contained. By analysing the Domesday Record, an able writer has proved that, as it regards the county of Bedford, the hundred anciently consisted of a hundred hides of land; the same is asserted by Mr. Baker to have been the case with the hundreds of Northamptonshire. Mr. Rickman, in the preliminary observations to the "Population Abstract," says that, "at least one hundred, which, in Saxon numeration, means one hundred and twenty, free men, householders answerable for each other, may be supposed originally to have been found in each hundred; and that the hundreds were regulated by the population, appears from the great number of hundreds in the counties first peopled by the Saxons. Kent and Sussex, when Domesday Book was compiled, each contained more than sixty hundreds, as at present. In Lancashire, a county of greater area than either, there are no more than six hundreds; in Cheshire, seven: and, upon the whole, so irregular is this distribution of territory, that, while several hundreds do not exceed a square mile in area, nor 1,000 persons in population, the hundreds of Lancashire average at 300 square miles in area; and the population contained in one of them, Salford hundred, is now above 320,000."

This irregularity seems to have been felt as an inconvenience early as the reign of Henry VIII., when a remedy was attempted by ordaining divisions, which still exist in most of the English counties. These divisions appear to have been formed by a junction of small hundreds, as in Wiltshire, or a partition of large hundreds, as convenience required, in each particular case. But time, which had caused the irregularity of the ancient hundreds, gradually has the same effect in more modern arrangements. The divisions of Dorsetshire underwent a change in the year 1740.

One part of a hundred is sometimes found in the very middle of another, or several parts of a hundred scattered widely over a whole county. These ragged hundreds are supposed to have had heads of religious houses for their lords, or owners; whence it is presumed that the detached portions were acquisitions after the hundred came into their possession.

Several of the hundreds are strangely scattered; and instances are, probably, most frequent in Wiltshire; Winkley hundred, in Somersetshire; Faringdon hundred, in Berkshire; that of Barton Stacey, in Hampshire, and some others, are remarkable instances of this irregularity, still in existence. Parishes which extend into more hundreds than one, are numerous; as well as the number of places which lie at a distance from their own county or hundred.

The felling of a forest, the draining of a marsh, or the cultivation of a waste by the lord of the manor, would extend the limits of a hundred, in that direction; or whatever was gained or lost by purchase, by heirship, or by violence, must also have altered the boundary.

Hundreds were primarily denominated from places of rendezvous, the situations of which have, in many instances, sunk into oblivion, with the disuse of the custom. The names of hundreds terminating in Low, received their names from some remarkable hill, as Totton's low in Staffordshire; others from a tree as Crowthorn, and Grumbalds Ash, in Gloucestershire, the place where the hundred court was originally held. The jurisdiction of these hundred courts was afterwards transferred to the county courts, and remains so at present, excepting with regard to some; as the Chilterns, which have been by privilege annexed to the crown. These having still their own courts; a steward of these courts is appointed by the Chancellor of the Exchequer, with a salary of twenty shillings, and all fees belonging to the office, which, being an appointment of profit, the steward must vacate his seat in Parliament. The Chiltern is a name applied to the range of hills traversing Buckinghamshire, a little southward of its centre, and extending from Tring in Hertfordshire, to Henley in Oxfordshire.

Wards.

The four northern counties of Cumberland, Westmorland, Durham, and Northumberland are divided into Wards, so named from the warding or guarding necessary in that part of the country against the frequent excursions of the Scots.

At Alnwick, on the proclamation of the fairs, the adjacent townships send representatives to attend the bailiff, who keep ward all night in every quarter of the town, and are free of toll by this service. This is the most perfect remains of watch and ward now retained.

The Wards of the City of London are similarly named, from the guard or watch necessarily kept in them.

Wapentakes.

The Wapentakes of Yorkshire and Lincolnshire are equivalent to the Hundreds, and the name literally signifies "To arms," from wappen, weapons, and tac, touch. The meeting was held sometimes at a distance from town, whence the division derived its name from some conspicuous natural object, as Barkston Ash, Skireake, or shire oak; the last is still remaining in the village of Hedingley, near Leeds, in Yorkshire.

Soke, Liberty, &c.

Soke is a district wherein the power or liberty to administer justice, is exercised. It is used in Lincolnshire and Rutlandshire. Lythe is a liberty, or member, as Pickering Lythe in Yorkshire.

Districts of large extent are found under the name of Liberties, which affect the general course of law in the hundreds. In Dorsetshire, where this denomination chiefly prevails, the grants of some of these liberties are dated as late as the reign of Henry VIII. and even of Elizabeth.

Parish.

The Parish of the early Britons was synonymous with Diocese; the district submitted to the authority of a bishop, was originally called his parish. It is admitted by the most intelligent antiquaries that the distribution of the kingdom into parishes, in the present acceptation of the term, did not originate in any specific decree, but was the progressive work of ages, and was nearly completed by the end of the twelfth century. A comparatively few parishes was, it is true, formed in the Anglo-Saxon era; but being too extended in their boundaries for the accommodation of a dispersed population, were subsequently divided in the Anglo-Norman period.

Selden, speaking of Domesday Boke, in his history of tythes, says that, "In certain counties, as Somerset, Devon, Cornwall, and some few others, a parish church is rarely noticed; but, in others, churches very often occur." In the time of King James, according to Camden, there were 9284 parishes; and, in 1821, there were 10693 parishes in England.

In modern times the boundary of every parish has been settled with precision; an exactness produced by the laws for the relief of the poor, by which a motive for ascertaining the boundary of a parish continually subsists. When this began to take place, the parishes of the northern counties were found to be much too large, thirty or forty square miles being there no unusual area of a parish; and in general the parishes in the north average at seven or eight times the area of those in the southern counties. According to the last Report of the Poor Law Commissioners in 1837, 7942 parishes were formed into 363 Unions for the administration of relief.

Soon after the restoration of King Charles II., a law was passed permitting townships and villages, although not entire parishes, to maintain their own poor; and under this law the townships northward of the rivers Humber and Dee have become as distinctly limited, as if they were separate parishes; but the townships still seem liable to separation and partition.

Mr. Davidson, clerk of the peace for the county of Northumberland, arranged the townships of that county under their several parishes, in the year 1777; and W. W. Carus Wilson, Esq., an active magistrate in Westmorland, did the same for that county, in the year 1802.

The place which gives the name to the whole parish, is the designation under which the several townships will be found arranged, although it frequently happens that the place is less important than its subordinate township; but this arrangement could not be avoided without departing from the customary manner of denomination.

Extra Parochial Places

Besides the Parishes, and their tythings or townships, there are many places in England, not contained within the limits of any parish, and thence called extra-parochial. These places are found usually to have been the site of religious houses, or of ancient castles, the owners of which did not permit any interference with their authority, within their own limits; and in early times the existence of such exemptions from the general government of the kingdom, is not surprising. In the language of the ancient law of England such places were not geldable, nor shire ground; and as the sheriff was then the receiver-general in his county, extra-parochial places were neither taxable, nor within the ordinary pale or civil jurisdiction; and the inhabitants are still virtually exempt from many civil duties and offices, served not without inconvenience by others, for the benefit of the community at large. The number of such places is not inconsiderable, although difficult to be discovered; more than two hundred are probably enumerated in this work; and the subject is worthy of attention, as the acquisition or new land, by reclaiming forests, drainage of fens, or embankment from the sea, furnishes occasion for endeavouring to establish extra-parochial immunities.

Population.

From the summary of population returns, reduced into order by John Rickman, Esq., and printed by command of Parliament, a valuable document to the topographical historian, it appears that the population of England was, in 1700, .. 5,475,000 persons.

in 1811, .. 9,538,827
in 1821, .. 11,261,437

and that the increase in the last thirty years has been 4,757,904.

The amount of population throughout this work has uniformly been taken from the census of 1821; the following census of 1831 having been made while this work was in progress, it would, consequently, have been improper partially to have adopted that as a guide.

It is to be observed that the returns are always given in parochial districts, which are very seldom coincident with the boundaries of the towns, whence a difficulty arises in correctly estimating the population of large towns.

Reform in the Representation of the People in 1832.

As the act of parliament was passed and carried into execution during the progress of this work, it is necessary to state the most important of the changes that were made, with a view to a more comprehensive parliamentary representation.

In SOMERSETSHIRE—Ilchester, Milborne Port, and Minehead. In WILTSHIRE—Old Sarum, Ludgershall, Hindon, Great Bedwin, Heytesbury, Wootten Bassett, and Downton.
In HEREFORDSHIRE—Weobly. In SHROPSHIRE—Bishops Castle.
In NORTHAMPTONSHIRE—Higham Ferrers and Brackley.
In LANCASHIRE—Newton. In WESTMORLAND—Appleby. In YORKSHIRE—Aldbrough, Boroughbridge, and Hedon.

Boroughs in which the Number of Representatives is reduced from Two to One each, are

- In KENT—Hythc. In SURREY—Ryegate. In SUSSEX—Midhurst, Horsham, Arundel, and Rye.
In SUFFOLK—Eye.
In CORNWALL—Liskard, Launceston, St. Ives, and Helston. In DEVONSHIRE—Ashburton and Dartmouth. In DORSETSHIRE—Wareham, Lyme, and Shaftesbury. In HAMPSHIRE—Petersfield and Christchurch. In WILTSHIRE—Westbury, Wilton, Malmesbury, and Calne.
In BERKSHIRE—Wallingford. In OXFORDSHIRE—Woodstock. In WORCESTERSHIRE—Droitwich.
In LINCOLNSHIRE—Grimsby.
In LANCASHIRE—Clitheroe. In NORTHUMBERLAND—Morpeth. In YORKSHIRE—Northallerton and Thirsk.

New Boroughs to return Two Members to Parliament, are

- In KENT—Greenwich. In MIDDLESEX—The Tower Hamlets, Finsbury, and Marylebone. In SURREY—Lambeth. In SUSSEX—Brighton.
In DEVONSHIRE—Devonport.
In GLOUCESTERSHIRE—Stroud. In STAFFORDSHIRE—Wolverhampton, and Stoke-upon-Trent.
In WARWICKSHIRE—Birmingham.

In CHESHIRE—Macclesfield, and Stockport. In DURHAM—Sunderland. In LANCASHIRE—Manchester, Bolton, Blackburn, and Oldham. In YORKSHIRE—Leeds, Sheffield, Bradford and Halifax.

New Boroughs which return One Member each to Parliament, are In KENT—Chatham.

In SOMERSETSHIRE—Frome.

In GLOUCESTERSHIRE—Cheltenham. In STAFFORDSHIRE—Walsall. In WORCESTERSHIRE—Dudley, and Kidderminster.

In CUMBERLAND—Whitehaven. In DURHAM—Gateshead, and South Shields. In LANCASHIRE—Ashton-under-Lyne, Bury, Rochdale, Salford, and Warrington. In NORTHUMBERLAND—Tynemouth. In WESTMORLAND—Kendal. In YORKSHIRE—Huddersfield, Wakfield, and Whitby.

The Boroughs which were specially regulated by Clauses of the Reform Act, 1832, are the following :—

New Shoreham in Sussex, now includes the whole of the Rape of Bramber, with the exception of some parts, which are included in the Borough of Horsham.

Aylesbury, in Buckinghamshire, includes the Hundred of Aylesbury.

Penryn, in Cornwall, includes the town of Falmouth.

Melcombe Regis, in Dorsetshire, returns two Members only, instead of four.

Cricklade, in Wiltshire, includes the Hundreds of Highworth, Cricklade, Staple, Kingsbridge, and Malmesbury, excepting that part of the last Hundred included within the Borough of Malmesbury.

East Retford, in Nottinghamshire, includes the Hundred of Bassetlaw, and all places within the boundary or limit of that Hundred.

The following alterations were made by the Reform Act of 1832, in the several Counties of England :—

Essex, Kent, Surrey, and Sussex were divided, and two Members are returned for each division. Hertfordshire now returns three Members to Parliament.

Norfolk and Suffolk are divided, and return four Members each. Buckinghamshire and Cambridgeshire return three Members each.

Cornwall, Devonshire, Hampshire, Somersetshire, and Wiltshire return four Members each; and Dorsetshire returns three Members. The Isle of Wight returns one Member.

Gloucestershire, Shropshire, Staffordshire, and Worcestershire return four Members each. Berkshire, Herefordshire, and Oxfordshire now return three Members each.

Derbyshire, Leicestershire, Lincolnshire, Northamptonshire, Nottinghamshire, and Warwickshire return four Members for each.

Cheshire, Cumberland, Durham, Lancashire, and Northumberland have been divided, and two Members are returned for each division, in each county. Yorkshire returns two for each Riding.

The Counties of England now return 144 Members; the cities return 50, the Universities 4, and the boroughs 273, making a total number of 471 Members of Parliament for England: the number of the Commons, including Scotland, Ireland, and Wales, is 658 Members.

Churches.

The nature and value of the benefice is described in every parish. Rectories are the most numerous class of benefices, and are usually the richest. A rectory is the entire parish church, with all its rights, glebe, tithe, and other profits; a living, whereof the predial tithe is not impropriated. When the living is in the hands of a layman, it is an impropriation. An appropriation is when the living is in the hands of a bishop, college, or religious house, a serving of a benefice to the perpetual use of some foundation which has obtained the king's licence to appoint a vicar to officiate for them.

At the dissolution of monasteries, most of these appropriations devolved to the crown, and were conveyed to laymen; whence they are called impropriations, as being improperly in the hands of laymen.

A great portion of benefices is in the patronage of the crown, of the bishops, of ecclesiastical dignitaries and corporations, and of opulent individuals.

The first forms, rules, rites, and ministers of the Christian Church, received Greek denominations; its whole vocabulary was derived from the Greek language. The bishops bore Greek names; and the whole church might be called more Greek than Roman; although the church flourished, and first received a decided form and hierarchy, at Rome. The first fruits and tenths was a fund collected from the church before the Reformation; these were paid to the Pope, and made applicable to carrying on the secular government of Rome. Henry VIII. contrived to apply these tenths and first fruits to state purposes in this country. Previously the value of rectories were ascertained by the taxation of 1254, 38th Henry III., made by Walter, Bishop of Norwich, called the Norwich taxation; and by that of Pope Nicholas IV. in 1291, the 20th Edward I.

In 1535, 26th Henry VIII., a return was made, which gave a survey of all the ecclesiastical lands and revenues of the country in that period. This valuation, known by the name of Liber Regis, or the King's Book, is kept up to the present time, in the Remembrancer's Office. The valuation in the King's Book, in many cases, determines whether a living be tenable with a fellowship or a college, or not. In taking a second living compatible with a former, regard must be had to this valuation in the King's Book; and it is according to the same valuation, that the presentation must have a stamp of a greater or lesser value.

Besides the chapels belonging to the larger parishes, there are free chapels, independent of the rector, and some parochial chapels, differing only in name from parishes; but they are not numerous.

Monasteries.

A considerable portion of the landed property in the kingdom having been in the possession of the monastical, clerical, and military orders, an account is given in this work of all the abbeys, priories, and houses of friars, formerly in England. So extensive were the temporal possessions of the religious institutions, that there were few parishes which were not, in part, claimed by the regular orders, or in which the religious had not an interest. Of the number of religious houses existing in 1535, 186 belonged to the Benedictine order, 173 to the Austin canons, and 103 to the Cistercians; the rest, in smaller proportions, amongst the numerous orders. The valuation, at the time of the dissolution, is chiefly taken from that of Speed, in his "Historie of Britain," being the gross incomes of the religious foundations, of which Dugdale gives only the clear revenues; but other valuations, from competent authorities, are occasionally inserted. The names of the persons to whom the estates were granted after the dissolution, are given in most instances, and those of the present proprietors, whenever they could be obtained. A description of the most beautiful, but dilapidated remains of the conventual buildings, which yet adorn the country, is introduced as a means of directing the attention of the public to the finest specimens of architectural science.

Orthography.

The spelling of the names of various places, has been found to differ very much; and, as a proof of the unsettled state of orthography, seventeen methods of spelling Wainfleet in Lincolnshire, the birth-place of the founder of Magdalen College, Oxford, is mentioned by Dr. Chandler, in his life of that prelate.

The original names of places have been very often confounded and neglected; and in the changes made by time and caprice, the topographer has to contend with innumerable corruptions. There is no greater difficulty in topographical and genealogical researches, than in ascertaining precisely the spelling of a proper name. Burghley is adopted, in the history of Hatfield house, in Mr. Robinson's "Vitruvius Britannicus," as most agreeable to contemporary authority, and as approaching nearest to its evident derivation from Burgh and Ley, simply meaning the town field; although Burleigh, it must be confessed, is frequently used in works of acknowledged authority, and is not more improper than the titles of Earl of Stradbroke, derived from Stradbrook, a village on his lordship's estate in Suffolk, or that of Viscount Goderich, which is taken from Goodrich castle in Herefordshire.

Roads.

The principal Roads in the kingdom are those by which the mail-coaches travel, branching from the metropolis to the most distant points in every required direction; amongst many improvements of the Roads suggested by Mr. Telford, it may be mentioned that all high hedges and trees are now cut down, and the sloping banks near the roads removed, that they may be kept open to the sun and air.

The improvements in the inland department of the General Post-office, which have been made since this book was commenced in 1830, are numerous and extensive. The following post towns have been established within that period, in addition to those which formerly existed.

Bognor, Robertsbridge, and St. Leonards, in Sussex; March, in Cambridgeshire, and Long Stratton, in Norfolk.

In the Western Counties—Callington, Redruth, Ilfracombe, Ivy-bridge, Torquay, Torrington, Stony Cross, Ilchester, South Petherton, Wincanton, Hindon, Swindon, Wily, and Woodyates.

In the Oxford circuit—Chalford, Coleford, Newnham, Bilston, Cheadle, Eccleshall, Droitwich, and Malvern.

In the Midland Counties—Belper, Matlock, Ashby de la Zouch, Barton on Humber, Spittal, Dunchurch, Leamington, Solihull, Southam, and Welford.

In the Northern Counties—Altringham, Chester le Street, Rushyford, Garstang, Felton, Catterick, Dewsbury, Driffield, Goole, Huddersfield, Market Weighton, Pocklington, and Selby; besides Bridgend, Builth, Chirk, Corwen, Crickhowell, Llanelly, Llangatock, Narbeth, Pwllheli, Rhayader, and St. Clears, in Wales.

A list of the principal Roads is necessary, to show how the several Counties are connected, and the facilities of travelling.

1. The Dover road, the most frequented in England, being the readiest passage to France and the Downs, is through Dartford, Rochester, Sittingbourne, and Canterbury, to Dover.

2. The Brighton road is through Croydon, Reigate, Crawley, and Cuckfield, to Brighton.

3. The Hastings and St. Leonard's road is by Seven Oaks, Tunbridge Wells, Robertsbridge, Battle, and Hastings, to St. Leonards.

4. The Portsmouth road is through Kingston, Guildford, and Petersfield, to Portsmouth.

5. The Southampton and Pool road is through Staines, Farnham, Alton, Winchester, Southampton, and Ringwood, to Poole.

6. The Falmouth and Penzance road leads through Bagshot, Harford Bridge, Overton, Andover, Salisbury, Blandford, Dorchester, Bridport, Axminster, Honiton, Exeter, Oakhampton, Launceston, Bodmin, Truro, and Falmouth, to Penzance.

7. The Exeter road, via Yeovil, is through Staines, Andover, Salisbury, Shaftesbury, Yeovil, Crewkerne, Chard, and Honiton, to Exeter.

8. The Exeter, Devonport, and Falmouth road is through Bagshot, Whitchurch, Andover, Amcsbury, Ilchester, Ilminster, Honiton, Exeter, Ashburton, Plymouth, Devonport, Liskeard, Lostwithiel, St. Austel, and Truro, to Falmouth.

9. The Bath, Exeter, and Devonport road passes through Hounslow, Maidenhead, Newbury, Marlborough, Devizes, Bath, Wells, Bridgewater, Taunton, Collumpton, Exeter, Chudleigh, Newton Abbot, and Totness, to Devonport.

10. The Bristol and Pembroke road is through Hounslow, Maidenhead, Newbury, Calne, Bath, and Bristol, to Cardiff, Swansea, Carmarthen, and Pembroke.

11. The Stroud road is through Maidenhead, Henley, Abingdon, Faringdon, Fairford, Cirencester, and Stroud.

12. The Gloucester and Monmouth road passes through Hounslow, Maidenhead, Oxford, Witney, Northleach, Cheltenham, Gloucester, Ross, Monmouth, and Abergavenny, to Carmarthen.

13. The Worcester and Ludlow road passes through High Wycombe, Oxford, Moreton in Marsh, Worcester, and Tenbury, to Ludlow.

14. The Birmingham, Shrewsbury, and Holyhead road, is through Stony Stratford, Towcester, Daventry, Dunchurch, Coventry, Birmingham, Wolverhampton, Shiffnall, Shrewsbury, and Oswestry, to Holyhead.

15. The Banbury, Birmingham, and Stourport road, is through Aylesbury, Bicester, Banbury, Southam, Warwick, Birmingham, and Kidderminster, to Stourport.

16. The Chester road is through Dunstable, Woburn, Northampton, Lutterworth, Hinkley, Atherston, Tamworth, Lichfield, Stafford, Nantwich, and Tarporley, to Chester.

17. The Liverpool road is through St. Albans, Stony Stratford, Towcester, Daventry, Dunchurch, Coventry, Colcshill, Lichfield, Stone, Newcastle, Knutsford, and Warrington, to Liverpool.

18. The Manchester and Carlisle road passes through Redburn, Dunstable, Woburn, Northampton, Market Harborough, Leicester, Loughborough, Derby, Asbourne, Macclesfield, Manchester, Preston, Lancaster, Burton, Kendal, and Penrith, to Carlisle.

19. The Halifax road passes through Woburn, Newport Paynell, Market Harborough, Leicester, Loughborough, Nottingham, Chesterfield, Sheffield, and Huddersfield, to Halifax.

20. The Leeds road passes through Barnet, Welwyn, Hitchin, Bedford, Higham Ferrers, Kettering, Uppingham, Oakham, Melton, Nottingham, Mansfield, Chesterfield, Sheffield, Barnsley, and Wakefield, to Leeds.

21. The Wetherby and Carlisle road is through Barnet, Welwyn, Baldock, Stilton, Stamford, Grantham, Newark, Ollerton, Worksop, Doncaster, Pontefract, Wetherby, Boroughbridge, Gretnabridge, Brough, Appleby, and Penrith, to Carlisle.

22. The Lincoln and Hull road passes through Waltham Cross, Baldock, Peterborough, Bourne, Folkingham, Sleaford, Lincoln, and Brigg, to Hull, on the opposite side of the Humber.

23. The Boston and Louth road is through Waltham Cross, Ware, Arrington, Caxton, Huntingdon, Peterborough, Spalding, Boston, and Spilsby, to Louth.

24. The York and Edinburgh road is through Waltham Cross, Ware, Arrington, Huntingdon, Stilton, Stamford, Grantham, Newark, Barnby Moor, Doncaster, Ferrybridge, Tadcaster, York, Easingwold, Thirsk, Northallerton, Darlington, Durham, Newcastle, Morpeth, Alnwick, Belford, Berwick, and Dunbar, to Edinburgh.

25. The Cambridge, Lynn, and Wells road, is through Ware, Royston, Cambridge, Ely, Downham, Lynn, Snettisham, and Burnham, to Wells.

26. The Newmarket and Norwich road is through Bishops Stortford, Littlebury, Newmarket, Bury St. Edmunds, Thetford, and Attleborough, to Norwich.

27. The Ipswich and Norwich road is through Ingatestone, Witham, Colchester, Ipswich, Stoke, and Long Stratton, to Norwich; the Yarmouth road is the same as that of Norwich to Ipswich, when it passes thence through Wickham Market, and Yoxford, to Yarmouth.

Rail-Roads.

Rail-roads, presenting an increased celerity of movement, were introduced into this country in the beginning of the seventeenth century, and were employed in some of the collieries at Newcastle-on-Tyne. A description of them, as constructed in the year 1676, may be found in "The Life of the Lord Keeper North." These Rail-roads were of wood, and for a long time made but little progress in improvement. Cast-iron Railroads are stated to have been used at the colliery belonging to the Duke of Norfolk, near Shelfield, in the year 1776.

A Steam Carriage was invented and brought into use by Trevithick, upon the Rail-road of Merthyr Tydvil, in South Wales, in the year 1804; but the locomotive engine was not brought to perfection till 1830, upon the Liverpool and Manchester Rail-road; see page 357 of Vol 2.

The Rail-roads of England which have been executed, and are now in operation, about thirty in number, are here placed in the order in which they were completed.

1. The Surrey Railway, from the Thames at Wandsworth to Croydon, nine miles in length, was opened about the year 1802, for the conveyance of lime, chalk, and agricultural products, to London, and for the return of coals and manure for the use of the country through which it passes; horses are the motive power employed; and it was never intended for the conveyance of passengers.

2. The Croydon, Merstham, and Godstone Rail-road, formed in 1803, is a continuation of the Surrey Rail-way.

3. The Forest of Dean Rail-road, opened in 1809, for the conveyance of timber, coals, iron, ore, and other minerals, found in the forest, for shipment at Bullo Pill, on the river Severn, near Newnham, whence it proceeds to the summit of a hill in Dean Forest; it is in length about seven miles and a half.

4. The Severn and Wye Rail-road, opened in 1809, affords an easy communication between the rivers Severn and Wye, and the collieries and quarries in Dean Forest. It commences at Lydbrook, on the Wye, and terminates at the lower verge below Newerne, in the parish of Lydney. It is connected with the Severn at Nass point, by a canal, one mile in length. The extent of Rail-road, including nine branches laid from the main line, to coal and other mines, is about twenty-six miles.

5. The Monmouth Rail-road, opened in 1810, runs from Howler Slade, in Dean Forest, to the town of Monmouth; and has several branch Rail-roads communicating with various quarries and collieries near to the main line.

6. The Hay Rail-road commences at Parton Cross, in the parish of Eardisley, in Herefordshire; and, after passing through a mountainous district, by a circuitous course of twenty-four miles, ends at the wharf of the Brecon and Abergavenny canal. This road is of great advantage to the owners of the property through which it runs, by affording facilities for the transit of mineral and other products.

7. The Kington Rail-road is a continuation of the Hay Rail-road from Parton Cross to Kington, and thence to the lime works, near Burlinjob, in Radnorshire: its length is about fourteen miles.

8. The Lanviangel Rail-road commences at Lanviangel Crucorney, in Monmouthshire, and ends on the bank of the Brecon and Abergavenny canal, two miles N.W. from the latter town, a distance of about six miles and a half.

9. The Grosmont Tramroad, or Rail-way, is a continuation of the Lanviangel Rail-road, and ends at the Langua bridge, on the Monnow, between Abergavenny and Hereford, a distance of nearly seven miles, in the course of which a difference in the level of 166 feet is accomplished.

10. The Mamhilad Rail-road commences at Usk bridge, and ends at Mamhilad, three miles north from Pontypool, a distance of five miles.

11. The Gloucester and Cheltenham Rail-road commences at the Knap toll-gate, Cheltenham, and ends at the basin of the Gloucester and Berkeley canal, in the City of Gloucester, a distance of about nine miles. It is the means of supplying the town of Cheltenham with coal at a cheap rate.

12. The Mansfield and Pinxton Rail-road commences at Bullshead lane, Mansfield, and ends at Pinxton basin, near Alfreton, Derbyshire, where it communicates with a branch of the Cromford canal, passing above eight miles through a country abounding with minerals. A branch of this Rail-road begins about a mile a half from Pinxton basin, and passes eastward towards the Codnor Park works. The main line is proposed to be united to the Midland Counties Rail-road.

13. The Plymouth and Dartmoor Rail-road commences at Prince Town, on Dartmoor, and ends at the Sound at Sutton Pool, Plymouth, including a branch from the lime works at Catsdown; its length, through a very circuitous route, is about thirty miles, passing one of the most interesting specimens of woodland scenery in the county, before it reaches Roborough Down.

14. The Stratford and Moreton Rail-road for supplying Moreton in the Marsh, Stow in the Wold, and other places through which it passes, with coal, and for conveying back to Stratford-on-Avon, stone, and agricultural produce; the length is sixteen miles, with a branch to Shipston-on-Stour, extending two miles and a half.

15. The Stockton and Darlington Rail-road, the earliest considerable project of the kind, was the first upon which locomotive steam engines were used; see page 315, vol. ii. The extension to the Tees mouth, crosses the river by a suspension bridge, and proceeds by Stainsby, Stainton, Acklam, Newport, Middlesborough, Leventhorp, and Ormsby, to the river Tees.

16. The Clarence Rail-road begins at Samphire Beacon, on the banks of the Tees, in Durham, and joins the Stockton and Darlington Rail-road at Sim Pasture. By means of this Rail-road several valuable coal-fields and lime-stone quarries have been more effectually and cheaply connected with the port of Stockton. The main line is only fifteen miles and a half long; but there are six branches, extending, collectively, more than thirty miles. The city of Durham branch quits the main line at Stillington, in Red-Marshal parish, for Durham. The Stockton branch from the old Durham and Yarm road, to Stockton-on-Tees. The Deanery branch from Sim Pasture to Bishops Auckland. The Sherburn branch from Ferry hill to the lime and coal-works at Sherburn. The Byers Green branch from Ferry hill to Byers Green; and the Chilton branch from the Durham branch to Chilton in the parish of Merrington.

17. The Redruth and Chasewater Rail-road for conveying the rich mineral produce of the district to a place of shipment, begins in the eastern side of Redruth, in Cornwall, whence it proceeds round Carnmarth hill to Twelve Heads, and then to Point Quay, a shipping port on the river Fal, at the head of Carreg road, in the parish of Feock. The length of the main line is more than nine miles; but there are, besides, four branches, amounting together to more than five miles.

18. The Rummey Rail-road takes its name from the river Rummey, along the bank of which it runs from Abertyswg, in Bedwelty parish, Monmouthshire, to Pye Corner, in Bassaleg parish, where it joins the Sirhowey Rail-road, about two miles and a half W. from Newport. Its length is nearly twenty-two miles; and it is used for the conveyance of the abundant mineral products of the district through which it passes.

19. The Cromford and High Peak Rail-road from the Cromford canal in Derbyshire, to the Peak Forest canal, at Whaley Bridge, opened in 1829, is thirty-four miles in length, passing over high land. An ascent of 990 feet above the level of the Cromford canal is accomplished by means of several inclined planes, up which wagons are drawn by stationary steam engines: the summit level is maintained for twelve miles and a half; and the Rail-road, in its course, passes through a hill by a tunnel, nearly three furlongs in length; fifty-two bridges and archways have also been built upon it. This Rail-road opens a convenient communication for trade between the counties of Derby, Nottingham, and Leicester, the town of Manchester, and the port of Liverpool.

20. The Portland Rail-road is a line of little more than two miles in length, from the Priory lands in Portland Island, to the stone piers, Portland Castle, Dorsetshire.

21. The Heck and Wentbridge Rail-road to convey stone procured at Wentbridge and Smeaton, in Yorkshire, for shipment; is rather circuitous in its course of about seven miles and a half to the Knottingley and Goole canal, part of the Aire and Calder navigation.

22. The Liverpool and Manchester Rail-road, the most important hither completed, has been fully described at page 357, vol. ii., in regard to its course, length, and manner of construction.

23. The Bolton and Leigh Rail-road, one of the branches of the Liverpool and Manchester line, begins at the canal, near Bolton-le-Moors, and proceeds through various collieries to a branch of the Leeds and Liverpool canal, communicating with the Duke of Bridgewater's canal at Leigh, with a short extension to connect the towns of Bolton and Leigh. The length of the Rail-road is little more than nine miles, and the trade is carried on by means of locomotive steam engines.

24. The Warrington and Newton Rail-road, another branch of the Liverpool and Manchester line, enables the town of Warrington to partake of the advantages resulting from easy communication with the great commercial towns and with the coal-fields in its neighbourhood.

25. The Canterbury and Whitstable Rail-road was opened in May, 1830, to give facilities to the trade between London and Canterbury. It begins at the river Stour, Canterbury, and proceeds by St. Dunstons and Hackington through Clowes Wood, part of the Forest of Blean, to Whitstable bay. Its length is six miles and a quarter, formed into a series of inclined planes, a great part of which are of too great an inclination to allow of locomotive power; and stationary steam engines are here provided. On part of the line, which is nearly level, locomotive engines are used; at the distance of a mile and a quarter from Canterbury, is a tunnel about half a mile long. The highest point of the line about midway, is 220 feet above the level of the sea at Whitstable.

26. The Bristol and Gloucestershire Rail-road is part of an extensive plan to establish a Rail-road between Bristol and Birmingham; a length of nine miles is only constructed from Cuckold's Pill, near the floating dock, Bristol, in a north-easterly direction through various collieries to Coal-pit Heath, near Westerleigh, in Gloucestershire.

27. The Leeds and Selby Rail-road, opened in 1834, is described at page 461, vol. 2. It is intended to continue this line to Hull, establishing a communication between the manufactories of Yorkshire and the Baltic.

28. The Leicester and Swannington Rail-road for the supply of coal and lime-stone to Leicester, begins at the Leicestershire and Northamptonshire Union canal, in Leicester, and proceeds N.W. through a tunnel a mile and a quarter long, to the northern side of Swannington, in the parish of Whitwick, nearly sixteen miles in total length. It is to be continued to the Ashby de la Zouch Rail-road, with a branch to Cole Orton.

29. The London and Greenwich Rail-road, the first executed Rail-road having its commencement in the metropolis, was only in progress when the description in vol. 1, page 144* was written. The opening was celebrated on 14th December, 1836, by the Lord Mayor, Sheriffs, Aldermen, and gentlemen connected with science. Five trains of carriages started conveying 1,500 persons, and performing the journey of three miles to Deptford, in less than eight minutes. It was projected by Colonel Landmann; the surveyors and architects were Messrs. Smith and Newman; and the contractor Mr. Mackintosh: the success of the whole is considered to be due to the exertions of George Walker, esq., the managing director. The royal assent to the act for its formation, was given in 1833.

The viaduct is composed of about 1000 arches, eighteen feet in span, and twenty-two feet high; a form of construction rendered necessary by the number of streets over which the line is carried. The Deptford Pier Rail-road is carried from the main line, at the High-street, Deptford, to the river side; and a pier is now constructing to facilitate the embarkation and landing of passengers by steam vessels. This Rail-road will probably become the channel by which other lines of road, as the Croydon and South Eastern may enter the City of London.

30. The Whitby and Pickering Rail-road, seventeen miles in extent, by which the hilly and inconvenient road between those towns is in a great degree superseded, was opened in May, 1836. It is not intended for steam carriages; but the travelling is effected partly by horses, and partly by inclined planes.

The tour, by the Rail-road, is through Eskdale, the picturesque vale of Goathland, Newton Dale, &c.; and illustrations of the scenery on this line have been published, from drawings by G. Dodgson.

31. The Newcastle and Carlisle Rail-road, of which seventeen miles were opened to the public in 1834, and forty-nine in 1836. Before it enters the valley of the Tyne, it encounters some difficult country; and the river scenery of the Tyne, viewed from the Rail-road, is exceedingly beautiful. Coal, stone, and agricultural produce, are the chief articles conveyed. This communication between the eastern and western coasts of England, is expected to be very beneficial; to Carlisle, in particular.

The following Rail-roads are now in active progress; involving, in their construction, a sum of money indicating a degree of private wealth and enterprise, such as no time or country but England has ever exhibited, and suggesting an idea of the aggregate riches of the country, which it is startling to contemplate.

The London and Southampton Rail-road by Vauxhall, Wimbledon, north of Guildford, to Basingstoke, Winchester, and Southampton, nearly seventy-five miles.

The great Western Rail-road connecting Bath and Bristol with London, and terminating on the Birmingham line, about four miles from the station in London, includes a long tunnel, on an inclined plane, at Box, near Chippenham, in Wiltshire.

The London and Birmingham Rail-road, an important undertaking, noticed in vol. 1, page 144*, is very shortly to be opened.

The principal entrance of the London station, erected from designs by P. Hardwick, is on the northern side of Euston Square; the line of road passes by the valley of Brent to Watford, Berkhamstead, Fenny Stratford, near Northampton, Daventry, Rugby, and Coventry, to the station at Birmingham, the entrance to which is now erecting, from designs by Hardwick. There are several tunnels required to carry the line through the different ridges that cross its course; one of these at Watford exceeds a mile in length. By this means, good levels have been secured; and the distance of 111½ miles will be performed in five hours and a half.

The Grand Junction Rail-road continues the London and Birmingham line northward, by Wolverhampton, Penkridge, Stafford, on the western side of Newcastle, and the Potteries, through Cheshire to Warrington and Newton, where it joins the Liverpool and Manchester Rail-road at a point equidistant from each of these towns. This district traversed requires no tunnels; but, across the valley of the Weaver, in Cheshire, is a viaduct of twenty arches, of sixty feet span, and more than sixty feet above the level of the valley.

The North Union Rail-road is another branch, formerly known as the Wigan Rail-road, which completes a distance of twenty-one miles from Newton to Preston, including a viaduct across the valley of the Ribble at Penwortham.

The Preston and Wyre Rail-road will continue the line to the harbour of Wyre on the southern side of Lancaster bay, a length of nearly 300 miles from Southampton to Preston. Here a town, to be named Fleetwood, is proposed to be built; and docks constructed for the accommodation of shipping. Its proximity to the lakes, by means of steam boats plying across the bay of Morecambe, will make it the nearest route to that beautiful district, by many miles.

The Midland Counties Rail-road is to proceed from the London Rail-road at Rugby, passing by Lutterworth, Leicester, and Loughborough, to Pinxton, near Alfreton, in Derbyshire, where it is to join the Mansfield Rail-road, crossed by branches near its northern extremity, to Nottingham and Derby.

The North Midland Rail-road is a continuation to be carried from the end of the Derby branch, by Chesterfield and Rotherham to Leeds, opening a new way to London, from the manufacturing district of Yorkshire.

A Northern and Eastern Rail-road is to connect London and York with a branch from Cambridge to Norwich and Yarmouth. The line is by Bishops Stortford, Cambridge, Huntingdon, Peterborough, Lincoln, and Gainsborough. At York it is to be connected with a proposed Rail-road to Newcastle-on-Tyne.

A Great North of England Rail-road is proposed to connect London with York, and to continue the line to Glasgow and Edinburgh.

An Eastern Counties Rail-road from London to Yarmouth, is intended to be carried through Brentwood, Chelmsford, Colchester, Ipswich, and Norwich, to Yarmouth.

A London and Brighton Rail-road is proposed by different routes, and by different engineers, Stephenson's and Rennie's.

A Birmingham and Gloucester Rail-road is intended to pass near Bromsgrove, Droitwich, Tewksbury, and Worcester, to Cheltenham. A grand connexion Rail-road is also proposed from Gloucester to Worcester, Stourbridge, and Wolverhampton, to Birmingham, giving an advantage to the Stourbridge and Kidderminster manufactories.

A Bristol and Exeter Rail-road is contemplated to pass by way of Clevedon and Weston, Bridgewater, and Taunton, a distance of about seventy-two miles.

A Manchester and Chester Junction Rail-road is proposed, and also a Manchester and Leeds Rail-road; the district over which the last must travel is exceedingly difficult.

A Birmingham and Derby Junction Rail-road, and a North Midland Rail-road from Derby to Leeds, are projected.

The London Grand Junction Rail-road will join the London and Birmingham line near the Regent's Canal, St. Pancras, and proceed thence to Skinner-street, in London; another called the Birmingham, Bristol, and Thames Rail-road, will proceed from the London and Birmingham line at Harlesdon Green to the basin of the Kensington canal.

Steam-engines and Rail-roads are not merely facilitating the conveyance of merchandize from one part of England to the other; they are doing more—they are sealing the intercourse between mind and mind, and they are exciting demands for knowledge; sending the desire for that knowledge into all the recesses of this empire, tending powerfully to the cultivation of the mental, as they are improving the physical, capabilities of the country.

Rivers and Inland Navigation.

England has numerous Rivers, which are not only of essential importance in facilitating the communication with the interior, and thus giving vigour to commerce and industry, but add greatly to the beauty and picturesque scenery of the country. The most considerable of these Rivers on the eastern coast are the Thames, the Blackwater, the Stour, the Orwell, the Deben, the Alde, the Blyth, the Yare, the Glaven, the Ouse, the Nen, the Witham, the Humber, the Eske, the Tees, the Wear, the Tyne, and the Tweed.

The Eastern Coast is less remarkable for the characteristic beauty of its Rivers, than the Western: on which coast are the Solway Frith, the Eden, the Pöbeck, the Lune, the Ribble, the Mersey, the Dee, the Wye, the Severn, the Avon, the Parret, the Taw, the Torridge, the Camel, the Heyl, the Fal, the Fowey, the Looe, the Tamar, the Plym, the Dart, the Exe, the Lyme, the Wey, the Medina, the Anton, the Arun, the Adur, the Ouse, the Rother, the Swale, and the Medway.

The Western Ports of England, so called at the Custom House, are Rochester, Feversham, Ramsgate, Deal, Dover, Rye, Newhaven, Shoreham, Arundel, Chichester, Portsmouth, Southampton, Cowes, Poole, Weymouth, Lyme, Exeter, Dartmouth, Plymouth, Looe, Fowey, Falmouth, Gweek, Truro, Penzance, Scilly, St. Ives, Padstow, Bideford, Barnstaple, Ilfracombe, Minehead, Bridgewater, Bristol, and Gloucester.

The Northern Ports of England are Leigh, Maldon, Colchester, Harwich, Ipswich, Woodbridge, Aldborough, Southwold, Yarmouth, Clay, Wells, Lynn, Wisbech, Boston, Grimsby, Hull, Bridlington, Scarborough, Whitby, Stockton, Sunderland, Newcastle, Berwick, Carlisle, Whitehaven, Lancaster, Preston, Liverpool, Chester, Douglas, Isle of Man, and Chepstow.

The Inland Navigation of England is chiefly indebted to the magnificent undertakings of the Duke of Bridgewater, a nobleman who spent his time and fortune in pursuits that well entitle him to be called the benefactor of his country. The first canal projected by Brindley, and constructed at the expence of his grace, from his estate at Worsley to the town of Manchester, was completed in 1760; since which time the greatest part of the canals in England have been formed, and brought nearer to perfection, than in any other part of the world. The introduction of Rail-roads have now given a check to the progress of Inland Navigation.

In 1795, the canals in one county, Staffordshire, exceeded 200 miles in length: the improvement and extent of the Potteries, was mainly facilitated by the convenience of water carriage; and, at the same time, the land near the canals rapidly advanced in value, by a communication being opened, and by the introduction of manure. A map of the Inland Navigation is given, corrected to 1830; and all the canals are here enumerated.

The Adur River, in Sussex, was improved in 1807, from Bainbridge to Shoreham Harbour.

The Aire and Calder Navigation, Yorkshire, has been improved by a canal from the Aire at Huddesley, to the Ouse at Selby, made in 1774; and by a canal from Knottingley to Goole, opened in 1826.

The Alford Canal, Lincolnshire, constructed in 1828, extends from Alford to the sea, near Anderby, five miles eastward, where is a harbour and pier.

The Ancholm River Navigation, Lincolnshire, from Brigg to the Humber, was made under the direction of Rennie, in 1825.

The Andover Canal, Hampshire, constructed in 1789, from Andover, crosses the River Anton, passes Stockbridge and Romsey to Redbridge, near Millbrook, on the Southampton water, at the point where the tide meets the River Test.

The Arun River, Sussex, was improved in 1785, from Houghton bridge to New bridge, near Pulborough, whence a Canal is cut parallel with the river to Pallenham Wharf, where the river becomes navigable; and another Canal is cut from Greatham bridge to New bridge, shortening the distance arising from the winding of the river. The length to the Port of Arundel is twenty-six miles; and in 1793 piers and improvements were made in the harbour of Little Hampton, by cutting a new channel through the sea beach: here the trade is increasing.

The Ashby de la Zouch Canal, Leicestershire, to the Coventry Canal, near Nuneaton, is continued to the Lime works at Ticknall, in Derbyshire, and by another line to those at Cloud hill, in Leicestershire, opened in 1805.

The Ashton-under-Lyne Canal, Lancashire, forms part of a line of Inland Navigation between the Irish Sea and the German Ocean, passing through Ashton to Manchester, Rochdale, and Lancaster.

The Avon River, Wiltshire, was made navigable from Salisbury to Christchurch, in Hampshire, in 1666, but the works were destroyed by a flood; and it is only navigable at spring tides about two miles from the sea.

The Avon River, Warwickshire, was made navigable in 1793, from Stratford-on-Avon to Evesham, Pershore, and Tewksbury, where it falls into the Severn.

The Avon and Frome Rivers of Gloucestershire were improved in the reigns of William III., George II., and George III., under the direction of the Corporation of Bristol, whose jurisdiction extends to Hanham Mills. The Port of Bristol was improved in 1803; and the Bristol Dock Company constructed a dam across the Avon at Redcliff, in 1806.

The Avon River, Somersetshire, on Lower Avon, is navigable from Bath, and was improved in 1807.

The Axe River, Somersetshire, from Lower Weare to the entrance into the Bristol Channel, nine miles, was greatly improved in 1803.

The Barnsley Canal, Yorkshire, was opened in 1799; it is connected with a Rail-road to Silkston, near Wakefield.

The Basingstoke Canal, Hampshire, made in 1793, passes Odiham by Grewell hill tunnel, half a mile long, to Aldershot and the River Wey, about three miles above its junction with the Thames.

The Baybridge Canal, Sussex, opened in 1827, extends from Baybridge to Binesbridge, near West Grinstead, where the navigation of the River Adur commences.

Beverley Beck, Yorkshire, from Beverley to Hull, is maintained and improved by the Corporation of Beverley, under an Act of Parliament in 1744.

The Birmingham Canal Navigation, Warwickshire, consists of a Canal from Birmingham to Bilston and Antherley, near Wolverhampton, communicating with another Canal between the Severn and Trent, with cuts to several coal mines; a Canal from Riders Green in Staffordshire, to Broadwater engine, and another from Birmingham, which joins the Coventry Canal at Fazeley, near Tamworth. These Companies were united in 1784, and they have since joined the last Canal to the Trent and Mersey Navigation, and have opened a communication between that and the Worcester Canal.

The Birmingham and Liverpool Junction Canal, made in 1828, extends from Tettenhall, near Wolverhampton, where it joins the Worcestershire and Staffordshire Canal, to Norbury and Drayton, across the River Tern to Audlem and Nantwich in Cheshire, and joins the Ellesmere and Chester Canal, near Dorfold Hall, a distance of thirty-nine miles.

The Bourn Eau Navigation, Lincolnshire, was improved in 1781, from Bourn to the River Glen, at Tongue end, opening a communication with the Port of Boston.

The Bradford Canal, Yorkshire, completed in 1744, extends from the Leeds and Liverpool Canal at Shipley, to Bradford.

The Abergavenny Canal, Monmouthshire, completed in 1805, extends from Brecon to Abergavenny, and to the Monmouthshire Canal, near Pontypool, crossing the River Avon, and passing through a short tunnel; it also communicates with several iron works, collieries, and lime-stone quarries, by Rail-roads.

The Duke of Bridgewater's Canal in Lancashire, from Worsley Mill to Manchester, was opened in 1760. In 1776, this Canal was united with the Trent and Mersey Canal, at Preston Brook; and in 1795, a Canal to Pennington, near Leigh, has since connected it with the Leeds and Liverpool Navigation, by which means a vast extent of commercial intercourse is facilitated by this Canal.

The Bridgewater and Taunton Canal, Somersetshire, was completed in 1825, between those towns.

Bude Harbour and Canal, Cornwall; this harbour was improved in 1819, and a Canal cut to Thornbury, in Devonshire, a branch of which extends towards Launceston.

The Bure River Navigation, Norfolk, from Colteshall to Aylsham bridge, was improved in 1773.

The Bure, Yare, and Waveney Rivers, Norfolk, running into Yarmouth Haven, were improved in 1772.

The Caistor Canal, Lincolnshire, was formed in 1793, from Moorton, near Caistor, to the river Ancholme at South Helsey.

The Calder and Hebble Navigation was formed by Smeaton, from the Aire and Calder Navigation to the Rochdale Canal, with a cut at Salterhebble to Bailey Hall, near Halifax; made in 1825.

The Cam, or Granta River, Cambridgeshire, was made navigable in 1813, from Clayhithe Ferry to Queen's Mill, about seven miles.

The Camel River, Cornwall, has a tide-way navigation from Guinea Port, near Wade Bridge, to the sea at Padstow.

The Canterbury Navigation: the River Stour, from Canterbury to Sandwich, was improved in 1825, and a jetty, 1000 feet in length, is proposed.

The Carlisle Canal, Cumberland, from the eastern side of Carlisle to Fishers Cross, Bowness, on the Solway Frith, was commenced in 1819, and has superseded the circuitous navigation of the Eden river.

The Chelmer and Blackwater Navigation, Essex, from Chelmsford to the tide-way at Colliers Reach, on the Blackwater, includes a canal uniting the rivers and a canal from Heybridge, near Maldon, to the basin at Colliers Reach, opened in 1796.

The Chesterfield Canal, Derbyshire, was made in 1776, from Chesterfield through a coal district, and entering Yorkshire at Shire Oaks, passes near Worksop and East Retford to the Trent at Stockwith.

The Colne River, Essex, was made navigable from the Hithe at Colchester, to Wivenhoe on the coast, in 1781.

The Coombe Hill Canal, Gloucestershire, made in 1792, extends from Coombe Hill to Fletcher's Leap, Deerpark, on the Severn, near Tewksbury.

The Coventry Canal, Warwickshire, opened in 1790, extends from Coventry to Fazeley, where it joins the Birmingham and Fazeley Canal, and then is continued to Fradley Heath, near Alrewas, in Staffordshire, where it joins the Trent and Mersey Canal.

The Cromford Canal, Derbyshire, constructed in 1790, crosses the rivers Derwent and Amber to Butterley Park, and Codnor Park iron-works, and joins the Erewash Canal, near Langley Bridge, Heanor.

The Crouch River, Essex, is a tide-way navigation for sixteen miles.

The Darent River, Kent, is navigable, as a tide-way, four miles above its junction with the Thames.

The Dart River, Devonshire, has a tide-way navigation for twelve miles above the mouth.

The Dearne and Dove Canal, Yorkshire, was completed in 1800, from Barnsley to the river Don, at Swinton.

The Deben River in Suffolk, is navigable as high as Woodbridge; and there is a dock at Ramsholt, six miles below Woodbridge.

The Dee River, Cheshire, is navigable from Chester to the sea.

The Derby Canal, formed in 1793, extends from the Erewash Canal at Little Eaton, through Derby, to the Trent and Mersey Canal, which joins the river Trent at Swarkston.

The Derwent River, Derbyshire, was made navigable from Derby to the Trent, in 1720; but, on the opening of the Derby Canal, the navigation on this river was discontinued.

The Derwent River, Yorkshire: the navigation of this river, from Malton to the Ouse, at Barmby on the Marsh, was extended to Yedingham Bridge, in 1805; it is the property of Earl Fitzwilliam.

The Dorset and Somerset Canal, from the river Stour to the Kennet and Avon Canal, near Bradford, was commenced in 1803; but is not completed.

The Driffield Navigation, Yorkshire, was improved in 1817; it extends from the town of Driffield to the river Hull, near the mouth of the Aike Beck.

The Droitwich Canal, Worcestershire, from Droitwich to the river Severn, was formed by Brindley, in 1768.

The Dudley Canal, Worcestershire, was executed in 1796, and extends from the Worcester and Birmingham Canal, near Selly Oak, entering the Lapal Tunnel near Stonehouse, and passing another tunnel beyond Halesowen, joins the Birmingham Canal near Tipton Green.

The Don River Navigation, Yorkshire, from Tinsley to the river Ouse, several miles below Doncaster, with cuts to avoid the windings of the river, was completed in 1826.

The Ellesmere and Chester Canal, projected in 1772, and improved in 1830, extends from Ellesmere on the Mersey to the Dee at Chester, whence it joins a branch of the Trent and Mersey Canal at Middlewich, and proceeds to Hurleston, where a cut unites it with the Birmingham and Liverpool Canal: it afterwards enters Shropshire, near Whitchurch, and joins the Montgomeryshire Canal. At the eastern extremity of the Vale of Llangollen the Ellesmere Canal passes over the river Dee by the Aqueduct of Pontcysyllte, which was opened in 1805.

The Erewash Canal, Derbyshire, was made in 1777, from the Cromford Canal to the river Trent, near Sawley; in its course it unites with a branch of the Derby Canal, and joins the Nutbrook Canal, near Sandyacre.

The Exeter Canal, Devonshire, is constructed parallel with the river Exe; and the navigation was improved in 1829.

The Foss Navigation, Yorkshire, from Stillington to the Ouse, near York, was made in 1801.

The Foss Dyke Navigation in Lincolnshire, is an ancient canal, extending from the Witham, near Lincoln, to the river Trent at Torksey.

The Gipping River, Suffolk, from Stowmarket to Ipswich, was made navigable in 1793.

The Glastonbury Navigation, Somersetshire, from Glastonbury to the river Brue at High Bridge, and thence to the sea, was improved in 1827.

The Gloucester and Berkeley Canal, Gloucestershire, opened in 1827, is a ship canal, for the purpose of avoiding the tedious passage of the Severn; it commences on the southern side of Gloucester, and joins the estuary of the Severn at Sharpness point, near Berkeley.

The Grand Junction Canal, commenced in 1793, is more than ninety miles in extent from Braunston in Northamptonshire, near Daventry, where it joins the Oxford Canal. After passing Craunston tunnel it proceeds to Norton; at Wedon, the canal is carried across a valley to Stowe Hill, by a raised embankment of earth, about half a mile long and thirty feet high, being nearly parallel with the bells in Wedon church steeple. A cut from Northampton joins the canal, which then passes Blisworth tunnel, and is joined by a cut from Fenny Stratford, which crosses the river Ouse at Woolverton. The line rises to the Wendover branch, and continues to ascend to the summit level at Tring, descending again by Hemel Hempstead and Rickmansworth to Harefield, Uxbridge, and Norwood; it intersects the Brent River, and joins the Thames at Brentford. From Norwood it forms a junction with the Paddington Canal, by which, and by the Regent's Canal, another communication is formed with the Thames and the metropolis.

The Grand Surrey Canal commences near Addington-square, Camberwell-road, crosses the Kent-road to Peckham, towards the Docks at Rotherhithe. It was formed in 1811.

The Grand Union Canal, Leicestershire, was made in 1810 from the Union Canal at Grimley, in Leicestershire, to the Grand Junction Canal, near Long Buckley, in Northamptonshire, with a cut from Market Harborough. It is forty-five miles in length.

The Grand Western Canal, Devonshire, formed in 1812, extends from Topsham to Exeter, Tiverton, and Wellington to Taunton, where it joins the river Tone.

The Grantham Canal, Lincolnshire, was made in 1793, from Grantham to the river Trent, near Nottingham, with a cut to Bingham, near Newark.

The Gresley Canal, Staffordshire, from the colliery at Apedale to Newcastle-under-Lyne, was made by Sir Nigel Gresley, in 1775.

The Hereford and Gloucester Canal, commenced in 1792, is only completed from Gloucester to Ledbury, including a tunnel at Oxenhall, near Newent, more than a mile in length.

The Hertford Union Canal, to connect the River Lea Navigation with the Regent's Canal at Old Ford, near Bethnal Green, was commenced in 1824.

The Horncastle Navigation, Lincolnshire, opened in 1802, is an improvement of the river Bain, from Horncastle to Tattershall, and of the Tattershall Canal to the river Witham ; it also includes the navigation of the Witham to the Foss Dyke Canal at Lincoln.

The Huddersfield Canal, made in 1806, forms part of one of the lines of Inland Navigation between the Irish Sea and the German Ocean. From Huddersfield it communicates with Sir John Ramsden's canal to join a canal from Manchester, and thrice crosses the river Colne by aqueducts ascending to a summit level near Marsden, 656 feet above the surface of the sea, being higher than any other canal in England. It also passes under Pule Hill and Brunn Top, and crosses the river Tame repeatedly.

The Isle of Dogs Canal, Middlesex, formed in 1807, now belongs to the West India Dock Company.

The Itchin Navigation, Hampshire, was improved in 1820 ; it extends from the City of Winchester to the tide-way in Southampton water, a distance of fourteen miles.

The Ivel River, Bedfordshire, is navigable from Shefford to its junction with the Ouse at Tempsford, six miles below Biggleswade. The works have not long been completed.

The Ilchester and Langport Canal, Somersetshire, was formed in 1795, and connects Ilchester with the river Parret at Langport.

The Kennet and Avon Canal, Wiltshire, was opened in 1810. It extends from the river Kennet at Newbury to Hungerford, Bedwin, and Crofton ; to Devizes, Semington, and Bradford, to the river Avon at Bath. In 1813, the proprietors purchased the Kennet River Navigation from Newbury to the Thames at Reading. The Kennet and Avon Canal also communicates with the Wiltshire and Berkshire Canal at Semington, near Steeple Ashton ; with the Frome Canal at Widbrooke, Bath, and with the Somerset Coal Canal, near Bradford. It is carried over several rivers by aqueducts, one of which, over the Avon at Limpley Stoke, is of excellent architecture.

The Kensington Canal, Middlesex, was formed in 1826, from the western extremity of Kensington to Counters Creek, on the Thames.

The Lancaster Canal, completed in 1819, extends sixty miles from Kendal to Hincaster Green Tunnel, across Stainton Ceck, by Milnthorpe and Burton, Westmorland, to Lancaster. It then crosses the Lune by an aqueduct of five arches, and passes Garstang to Preston ; a Rail-road crosses the Ribble, and the canal is thence continued through a tunnel to Bark Hill, near Wigan. It also joins the Leeds and Liverpool Canal.

The Lark River, Suffolk, was improved in 1817 ; it is navigable from Mildenhall to its junction with the Ouse, above Littleport.

The Lea River Navigation, Hertfordshire, commences at Hertford, and, passing Ware, joins the Stort River Navigation, near Hoddesdon ; thence it extends to Waltham Abbey, Wanstead, and Bromley, to Bow Creek, on the Thames, near Bromley : it communicates with the Regent's Canal, and with the Limehouse Canal, which joins the Thames, above the Isle of Dogs. It was completed in 1824.

The Leeds and Liverpool Canal, Yorkshire, was completed in 1816, and is in entire length more than 127 miles. It has opened a communication between Liverpool and Hull, furnishing a means of transit for the produce of nature and art through districts noted for manufactures. A branch from Wigan to Leigh, opened in 1821, communicates with Manchester.

The Leicester Navigation, completed in 1797, extends from the Loughborough Canal to the Soar, at Quorndon, which river, and the Wreke, are made navigable to Leicester.

The Leicestershire and Northamptonshire Union Canal, completed in 1805, forms a communication between Leicester and the river Nen, near Northampton, by its junction with the Grand Junction Canal at Foxton, near Market Harborough, to which town is a cut. At Saddington, about six miles northward, the canal passes through a tunnel half a mile in length.

The Leominster Canal, Herefordshire, completed in 1826, commences at Kington, and passing Leominster and Tenbury, joins the river Severn at Stourport. It is forty-six miles in extent ; and crosses the river Lugg at Kingsland, also passing through two tunnels ; one at Pensax, in Worcestershire, is nearly two miles and a quarter in length.

The Liskeard and Looe Canal, Cornwall, formed in 1825, extends from Moorswater, near Liskeard, to Talland Pill, West Looe.

The London and Cambridge Junction Canal, formed in 1814, extends from the river Cam, near Clayhouse Sluice, in Cambridge-shire, to the Stort Navigation, near Bishops Stortford.

The Louth Canal, Lincolnshire, improved in 1828, extends from Louth, by the river Ludd, to Alvingham, and thence to Tetney Haven, on the sea coast, near the mouth of the Humber.

The Lune River, Lancashire, was improved in 1807 ; the estuary forms the harbour of Lancaster.

The Macclesfield Canal, Cheshire, formed in 1826, extends from the Peak Forest Canal, near Marple, to the Trent and Mersey Canal, at Talk on the Hill, in Staffordshire ; twenty-nine and a half miles.

The Manchester, Bolton, and Bury Canal, Lancashire, completed in 1805, crosses the rivers Roch and Irwell in its course.

The Market Weighton Canal, Yorkshire, made in 1772, extends from that town to the Humber.

The Medway River, Kent, between Maidstone and Halling, was widened and improved in 1824.

The Mersey and Irwell Navigation, Lancashire, was improved in 1794, forming a communication between Manchester and Liverpool.

The Monmouthshire Canal, completed in 1802, extends from Pont Newynydd to the river Usk and Newport, near Pontypool ; it is connected with the Abergavenny and Brecon Canal, and by cuts and rail-roads with various collieries and iron-works.

The Nen River, Northamptonshire, from Northampton to Peterborough, was improved in 1794 ; and the navigation of the river at Bedford Level, through part of Cambridgeshire, was also previously improved.

The Nen and Wisbech River Navigation, was improved in 1829, at the outfall of the river Nen, draining the lands and altering the line of the navigation.

The Newcastle-under-Lyne Canal, constructed in 1795, extends from Newcastle to the Trent and Mersey Navigation, at Stoke-upon-Trent. The Newcastle-under-Lyne Junction Canal, forming a communication between the Gresley Canal and the preceding, was made in 1798.

The Newport Pagnel Canal, made in 1814, extends to the Grand Junction Canal at Great Linford, on the Ouse, three miles distant.

The North Level Navigation, Cambridgeshire, commences at the Nen outfall, and extends to Clows Cross, with a cut thence to the Old Eau at Blackhorse Sluice, near Crowland ; it was completed in 1830.

The North Walsham and Dilham Canal, Norfolk, was made in 1812, from the river Bure at Dilham, to North Walsham and Antingham on the Ant.

The North Wiltshire Canal, formed in 1813, extends from the Wiltshire and Berkshire Canal, near Swindon, to the Thames and Severn Canal, near Latton, passing the town of Cricklade in its course.

The Norwich and Lowestoft Navigation is a ship canal, executed in 1827, from Norwich to Cuckenhams and Raveningham Mill, where a canal joins the river Yare to the river Waveney, whence at Oulton Dyke is a cut to Oulton Broad, forming a connexion with Lake Lothing ; at the eastern end of which is a cut to the sea, with a tide lock for the admission of vessels.

The Nottingham Canal, from the Cromford Canal to the river Trent, near Nottingham, was made in 1793.

The Nut Brook, or Shipley Canal, Derbyshire, constructed in 1793, extends from the collieries at Shipley and West Halton, to the Erewash Canal, near Stanton, by Dale.

The Oakham Canal, Rutlandshire, completed in 1800, extends from Oakham to the Melton Mowbray Navigation, near that town.

The Ouse River, Sussex, was improved in 1814, from Cuckfield to Lewes and Newhaven, where it falls into the sea.

The Ouse River, Yorkshire, was improved in 1770, from Linton, as well as the Swale, and other contributory rivers ; a great trade is carried on between the city of York and the junction of the Ouse with the Humber, as it unites with several canals and rivers from the manufacturing districts of Lancashire.

The Little Ouse, or Brandon and Waveney River, Norfolk, was improved in 1810, in its course from Thetford to Santon Downham, and Brandon.

The Ouse and Larke Navigation was in 1827 consolidated with the Little Ouse, with the New Bedford River, and with the Eau Brink cut to Lynn.

The Great Ouse River, Bedfordshire, was improved in 1663, by making the Old Bedford River, and by completing the New Bedford River.

The Oxford Canal, completed in 1829, extends from the Coventry Canal at Longford, to Marston Wharf and Banbury, to the Thames at Oxford. It is carried over a valley at Brinklow, and over the Swift and Avon Rivers at Casford and Clifton. The canal also passes through a tunnel near Fenny Compton, upwards of three quarters of a mile in length, and through another under the street and churchyard of Newbold, in Warwickshire.

The Peak Forest Canal, opened in 1800, extends from Limestone Rock in the Peak forest, by Chapel Milton, Bugsworth, Whaley Bridge, and Marple, to Ashton-under-Lyne, where it joins the Manchester and Oldham Canal.

The Pocklington Canal, Yorkshire, from Street Bridge, near Pocklington, to the river Derwent, at East Cottingham, was made in 1815.

The Portsmouth and Arundel Canal, Hampshire, constructed in 1828, opens a navigable communication between the southern coast and various other parts of England, and affords the means of transmitting military stores to Portsmouth, without the risk of capture in time of war. The length of the line, from the river Arun to Chichester, is about twelve miles; thence to the canal at Cosham, is fifteen miles; and the canal to Portchester Lake, is one mile and a quarter.

Sir John Ramsden's Canal, constructed in 1774, extends from the river Calder, near Cooper's bridge, to the head of the Huddersfield Canal, Yorkshire.

The Regent's Canal, Middlesex, formed in 1821, derives importance from the facility it affords to the commercial intercourse between different parts of London and the surrounding country. It commences at the Paddington branch of the Grand Junction Canal, passes through a tunnel under Maida Hill, towards the Regent's Park, Camden Town, Pancras, and Pentonville, under Islington, and the New River, with a branch to Finsbury. It then crosses the Kingsland, Hackney, Mile-end, and Commercial roads, to the Thames at Limehouse.

The Ribble River, Lancashire, was improved in 1806, from Penwortham Bridge, near Preston, to the sea.

The Rochdale Canal, Lancashire, executed in 1807, extends from the Calder Navigation, at Sowerby Bridge, to Hebden Bridge, Todmorden and Warland, then to Littleborough and Rochdale; but is continued through Manchester to the Duke of Bridgewater's Canal at Castlefield, and joins the Manchester and Oldham Canal at Piccadilly Wharf. It is also to be connected with the river Irwell, agreeably to an Act of Parliament in 1836.

The Rother River, Sussex, was made navigable in 1791, from Midhurst to the river Arun, near Stopham Bridge. It belongs to the Earl of Egremont.

The Royal Military Canal, Kent, was constructed for military purposes, in pursuance of a plan for the defence of the coast against invasion; but in 1807 was applied to the service of commerce. It extends from the tide-way at Shorncliff to Hythe, Rye, and Winchelsea to Cliff end; see vol. i., page 50.

The Saint Columb Canal, Cornwall, was constructed in 1773, by John Edyvean, Esq., of St. Austel, to the sea at Towan Bay.

The Salisbury and Southampton Canal was commenced in 1800; but only part of the line between Southampton and Redbridge, where it joins the Andover Canal, has been completed.

The Sankey Canal, Lancashire, constructed in 1756, to form a communication between St. Helens and the Mersey, was the first of the kind in England; see vol. ii. page 361. The canal, about a mile from Newton, is now crossed by a viaduct of the Liverpool and Manchester Rail-road, the height of which is seventy feet from the surface of the canal. In 1830 this navigation was extended to Widnes's Wharf, West Bank, where it communicates with the Mersey.

The Severn River Navigation, Shropshire, was improved in 1811.

The Severn and Wye Canal and Rail-road, formed in 1822, crosses the Forest of Dean nearly from north to south; the extent of which is about twelve miles.

The Sheffield Canal, made in 1815, connects the town of Sheffield with the river Don.

The Shrewsbury Canal was constructed in 1793, from Shrewsbury to the Shropshire Canal at Rockwardine Wood. It passes through a tunnel near Atcham, and crosses the river Tern by an aqueduct of cast iron; see vol. ii. page 101.

The Shropshire Canal, formed in 1788, extends from the Donnington Wood Canal, Lilleshall, to the Severn at Coalport, below Coalbrook Dale. In its course are three inclined planes, worked by steam engines; the first at Donnington Wood, a second at Stirchley, near Shifnal, and a third at Hay, near the Severn.

The Sleaford Navigation, Lincolnshire, formed in 1794, extends from Sleaford Castle Causeway, through the town along the course of the mill-stream and Kyme Eau, to near Chapel Hill, on the river Witham, about thirteen miles and a half.

The Soar River Navigation, or Loughborough Canal, Leicestershire, constructed in 1776. It extends from the Rushes at Loughborough, to Bishop's Meadow, Garendon, on the river Soar, which falls into the Trent.

The Somersetshire Coal Canal, formed in 1802, is a communication between the coal mines at Radstock, and the Kennet and Avon Canal at Limpley Stoke, between Bradford and Bath.

The Staffordshire and Worcestershire Canal, completed in 1790, extends from Stourport on the Severn, to Hay Wood in Staffordshire, where it unites with the Trent and Mersey Navigation, passing Kidderminster and Penkridge.

The Stainforth and Keadby Canal, Lincolnshire, formed in 1809, passes the towns of Thorne and Crowle in its course from the river Don to the Trent, at Keadby, in the parish of Althorp.

The Stort River, Hertfordshire, was made navigable in 1766, from Bishops Stortford to the river Lea.

The Stourbridge Canal, Worcestershire, formed in 1782, extends from that town to Waresley Brook, where it crosses the river Stour and joins the Staffordshire and Worcestershire Canal.

The Stratford-on-Avon Canal, Warwickshire, completed in 1821, connects the town of Stratford with the Worcester and Birmingham Canal at King's Norton.

The Stroud Navigation, Gloucestershire, made in 1776, extends from Wallbridge, near Stroud, to the river Severn at Framilode.

The Tavistock Canal, Devonshire, was constructed in 1803, from the river Tavy at Tavistock, to the tide-way of the river Tamar at Morwelham Quay. At Morwellham Down it passes a tunnel cut through solid rock, a mile and a half in length, and crosses the Lumbourn, near Crebor, by an aqueduct fifty feet above the surface of the river beneath. A collateral cut from the aqueduct to Mill-hill bridge, is also completed.

The Tees Navigation, Yorkshire, was improved in 1828, when a canal was made from Portrack into the Tees, near Newport, in the chapelry of Acklam, Yorkshire.

The Thames River, formerly navigable to Cricklade in Wiltshire, by the completion of the Thames and Severn Canal, was made navigable to Lechlade, distant from London by water, 146½ miles, with a fall of 258 feet.

The Thames and Medway Canal, formed in 1824, obviates the necessity of a circuitous passage of vessels round the Nore, from Gravesend to Strood.

The Thames and Severn Canal, thirty miles in length, completed in 1813, extends from the Stroud Canal to the Thames at Lechlade, passing through a tunnel at Saperton, near Cirencester, more than two miles in length; see vol. ii. page 20.

The Tone and Parrett Navigation, Somersetshire, was made in 1707, from the Grand Western Canal at Taunton, to the tide-way in Bridgewater Bay.

The Torridge Canal, Devonshire, was formed in 1823, by Lord Rolle.

The Trent river Navigation was improved in 1794, from Burton on Trent to the Humber, a distance of 117 miles, with a fall of 118 feet.

The Trent and Mersey Canal, in length ninety-three miles, was completed in 1827, from Wilden Ferry, where the Derwent joins the Trent, to Runcorn Gap, on the Mersey.

The Warwick and Birmingham Canal, executed in 1796, extends from the Digbeth branch of the Birmingham Canal at Birmingham, to Saltisford, Warwick.

The Warwick and Napton Canal, Warwickshire, completed in 1809, extends from the Warwick and Birmingham Canal at Budbrook, to the Oxford Canal at Napton on the Hill.

The Wear River, Durham, was improved in 1830, from Durham to its estuary at Sunderland.

The Weaver River Navigation, Cheshire, was improved in 1829, from Frodsham to Winsford Bridge, and a communication opened between this river and the Mersey.

The Welland River, Lincolnshire, was improved in 1794, from Stamford to Market Deeping, Crowland, and Spalding, to its estuary in the Wash.

The Wey River, Surrey, was made navigable from Godalming to its junction with the Thames, near Weybridge, in 1760.

The Wey and Arun Junction Canal, formed in 1813, extends from the river Wey at Shalford, near Guildford, to the Arun Navigation at Newbridge.

The Wiltshire and Berkshire Canal, completed in 1821, extends from Abingdon to Swindon, and joins the Kennet and Avon Canal at Semington; it is fifty-two miles in length.

The Wisbech Canal, constructed in 1794, extends from the New river at Wisbech, to the old river at Outwell, six miles.

The Witham River, Lincolnshire, was improved in 1829, from Lincoln to Boston, five miles below which town it terminates in the Wash.

The Worcester and Birmingham Canal, completed in 1815, is twenty-nine miles in length from Birmingham to its junction with the Severn at Diglis, below Worcester.

The Wreke and Eye Rivers, Leicestershire, were improved in 1800, under the name of the Leicester and Melton Mowbray Navigation.

The Wye and Lugg Rivers, Herefordshire, were improved in 1809, from Hay to the Severn.

The Wyrley and Essington Canal, Staffordshire, made in 1794, extends from Wyrley Bank to the Birmingham Canal, near Wolverhampton, and joins the Coventry Canal, near Huddlesford.

The Hills of England.

The Plate representing a comparative view of the principal Hills of Great Britain, engraved from a drawing by Mr. Edward James Smith, for this work, shows their perpendicular heights above the level of the sea at low water, according to Colonel Mudge's survey, and other competent authorities. This mode of reference was considered better than any lengthened dissertation, and leaves little to be said on the subject.

Throughout the whole length of England, from the county of Cornwall to Cumberland, are ranges of Hills which may be considered as forming one connected chain along the western side of the country. It begins at Carnbre Hill, in Cornwall, and the following ranges occur in immediate succession—Hengston Hill, Rippon Tor, and the numerous Tors on Dartmoor Forest; the Haldon Hills, known to mariners as the High Blue Lands of Devonshire; Bredon Hill, the Quantock Hills, Pildon Hill, the Mendip Hills of Somersetshire, an extensive range, but of no extraordinary elevation; the Clay Hills, and the Cotswold Hills of Gloucestershire. These are succeeded by the Malvern Hills of Worcestershire, the Wrekin of Shropshire, Weaver Hill of Staffordshire, Axe Edge, and the Peak Forest of Derbyshire, of considerable height; Blackstone edge, Pendle Hill, Pennygent, Ingleborough, and Wharfedale, in Yorkshire, and the Fells of Cumberland, where the highest mountains in England are to be found; these are Helvellyn, Skiddaw, and Saddleback—and the chain is continued by the range of the Cheviot Hills and the Pentland Hills of Scotland. The steepest face of this ridge is on the western side, particularly towards Wales; and there the largest river, the Severn, has its source, receiving its principal tributaries from the eastern side.

Two lower ranges of Hills also extend across the country, one of which reaches from Dorsetshire into Kent, along the coast of the English Channel, but has no river of any magnitude; while the other stretches in an irregular waving line from the Isle of Portland to the Wolds of Lincolnshire and Yorkshire.

The line which is formed by this last range of Hills, passes on the western side of Wiltshire and Oxfordshire, and through the high lands of Northamptonshire, Leicestershire, and Nottinghamshire nearly to Scarborough. The eastern side of this range gives rise to the river Thames, and to the Humber, with its confederate streams.

Professor Brande, one of the most pleasing authors on the subject, says it would be difficult to select a better spot for the study of geology, than Great Britain. Every variety of rock is presented under its various aspects; and though, in foreign climes, nature may have more liberally dispersed the sublime, she has not where more instructively or delicately diversified the earth's surface, than in the small space allotted to the British Isles.

The crust of the earth, it is well known, presents three distinct series of substances. The first, coeval with the world, is primitive, or primary rocks, generally found in huge masses or blocks, not regularly stratified, and affecting, in their fractures and fissures, a vertical arrangement. Sometimes they are of a perfectly homogeneous texture, commonly hard and durable, and sometimes composed of two or three ingredients blended together; they are generally crystalline in their texture, and usually constitute the loftiest mountains.

The transition rocks, the second series, are of more recent formation, and seem to have resulted from some great catastrophe, probably the deluge, tearing up and modifying the former order of things; they are less lofty than the former, and in many instances present a slaty texture; they seem to have been deposited in strata or layers, which are seldom either vertical or horizontal, but variously inclined to the horizon.

The secondary rocks, or third class, owe their formation to partial or local revolutions, as indicated by their structure and situation; and are nearly if not quite horizontal in their position. In their texture they are soft, and consequently easy of decay; they appear rather as mechanical deposits, than as chemical compounds, which have resulted from fusion, crystallization, or solution. These different series are tolerably regularly arranged in regard to each other. The primary rocks form the bases upon which the others rest; the transition are immediately recumbent upon these: and are again succeeded by the varieties of secondary rocks, and by their detritus constituting alluvial matter and soils.

A section of the south of England, from the coast of Cornwall in the west, to London in the east, furnishes a good exhibition of the phenomena of stratification alluded to. It begins at the Land's End with primitive rocks, massive and amorphous. Upon this rest several species of transition rocks, especially slates of different kinds, having various inclinations; and these are succeeded by secondary strata, deviating more and more from the vertical, and acquiring the horizontal position; and ultimately is attained the alluvial matter upon which the metropolis stands. It is principally clay; and has once, perhaps, formed the mud at the bottom of a salt-water lake.

Proceeding from London northwards, towards the Scotch border, the order of stratification is reversed; and traversing a highly interesting series of secondary rocks, some of the primitive series is arrived at in Cumberland. The whole arrangement is such as to include the highest and oldest rocks upon the western side of England, forming an uninterrupted chain, extending from the Land's End in Cornwall to Cumberland, and thence to the northern extremity of Scotland. So that the length of Great Britain, and its general shape, appear in a considerable degree dependant upon this chain of mountainous land, and upon two lower ridges, which extend in one direction from Devonshire, through Dorsetshire, Hampshire, and Sussex, into Kent; and in another, nearly from the same point, to the east of Yorkshire. The western ridge is broken in upon in several places by plains and rivers, giving rise to many chasms in the great chain.

Of the primitive rocks, one of the most abundant in nature, and the most useful in its application, is granite; so called from its appearing to be made up of a number of distinct grains, or particles. It constitutes the basis upon which all other rocks appear to lie; and its essential component parts are quartz, feldspar, and mica. Quartz is the substance commonly called rock crystal; it is sometimes met with in mountain masses, which usually present a conical appearance. The quartz is milk white, and of a more or less granular texture. Feldspar, the next constituent, is a compound body, and an important component of several other rocks. The decomposing feldspar of Cornwall, is abundantly employed in the English porcelain manufactories; and as it contains no iron, it retains its perfect whiteness. Mica, the third and last, is a well marked compound mineral; the extreme tenuity of the plates into which it may be divided, and their elasticity, renders it very useful for the enclosure of objects to be submitted to microscopic inspection.

In some specimens of granite these components may be distinctly traced and separated from each other; but sometimes the particles are so small as to produce a compound, which, to the unaided eye, will seem almost homogeneous. There is, therefore, fine and coarse-grained granite: the former abundant in Scotland, the latter in Devonshire and Cornwall. The Cornish granite is remarkable for the well-defined and large crystals of feldspar it contains, and which may be seen in many parts of London, where this rock has been used for paving, and where the crystals of white feldspar have become evident in the mass, from the constant attrition to which it has been subjected. It is of this stone that Waterloo Bridge is mainly constructed. The colour of granite is principally dependant upon that of the feldspar it contains, though a dark mica will often give it a gloomy hue: it is commonly grey or reddish.

There are two rocks very closely allied to granite, and usually associated with it; slaty granite or gneiss, composed of precisely the same materials as granite, but slaty in its fracture, owing to the comparatively large quantity of mica it contains; and mica slate, a compound of mica and quartz, of a slaty texture, and also deriving its leading characteristic from the large quantity of mica it contains.

The aspect of a granite district in nature is subject to variation; it, however, exhibits traits sufficiently peculiar, which are readily recognised by the traveller in his approach to it. In Cornwall, and in some parts of Ireland, especially in the county of Donegal, the granitic rocks are marked by the bold and abrupt precipices which they present to the attacks of the ocean; and by the barren and dreary aspect of the inland plains, that seem like fields in which blocks of the stone have been torn from their beds, and indiscriminately scattered over the moss grown surface. The elevation of these districts is not considerable: the granite is coarse grained, and splits into immense blocks, separated from each other by natural seams, and appearing like the ruins of edifices constructed by a giant race. In other cases granite forms irregular and broken peaks of prodigious elevation, and does not split into the blocks and masses just alluded to. This is the case in the Alps and Pyrenees, in the highest Scotch mountains, in the Hartz, and in the Tyrol.

Some kinds of granite are prone to decomposition, crumbling down into a fine clay; but, in general, granite is the most durable of nature's productions, and long resists the destroying hand of time; as a building material, therefore, it is almost unrivalled; among the examples are London Bridge, and the Duke of York's Column.

In Wales there is very little granite; in the north of Scotland it is abundant; and in England it occurs in Cornwall, Devon, Westmorland and Cumberland. It is also met with in smaller quantities in Worcestershire, at the Malvern hills; and in Leicestershire in Charnwood forest.

To the class of massive unstratified rocks belongs Porphyry, a substance which is ranked among the primitive formations. Its essential constituent is feldspar; and genuine porphyry may be defined as massive feldspar, containing embedded crystals of the same substance. Any rock including distinct crystals of feldspar is called porphyritic; as porphyritic granite, &c. The colour of porphyry, which is usually reddish, brown, and green, is principally derived from the base, or paste, including the crystals. The common aspect of porphyry is that of blocks and masses, not very unlike some of the varieties of granite; but its fragments are generally smaller, and are in a more decaying condition. Porphyry is an extremely durable material for architectural purposes; and as such was highly esteemed among the nations of antiquity. It is met with in many parts of Britain; and in the north the porphyry districts are of singular grandeur, as at the base of Ben Cruachan, on the banks of the Awe; and amidst the precipices of Ben Nevis, the highest of the British mountains.

The British porphyries are many of them of great beauty, and might well be substituted in all ornamental purposes for the more rare and expensive foreign varieties.

The aspect of syenitic rocks is allied to that of granite and porphyry; the term syenitic is derived from Syene, in Upper Egypt, where this rock is plentiful, and was used for architectural purposes by the Egyptian and Roman sculptors. These rocks may be observed rising from the slaty district of St. David's in Pembrokeshire; and in Cumberland, near Wastdale and Buttermere. A beautiful syenite occurs in Leicestershire at Markfield Knoll, a hill in Charnwood forest.

Another substance belonging to the same class of rocks, is Serpentine: its appearance is singularly picturesque and beautiful; and it forms a delightful contrast to the sublimity of granitic districts. Serpentine has its name from the variety of tints which it exhibits, such as bright red, green, brown, yellow, and their various shades; and it often is prettily traversed by veins of a soft substance, to which the term steatite, or soapstone, has been given.

Some of the varieties of serpentine admit of a tolerable polish, and such are very desirable for many ornamental purposes. Serpentine is seen in Cornwall in characteristic beauty, forming part of the Lizard promontory on the southern coast of the county. It appears in variously-shaped and coloured blocks and masses; it forms natural arches, columns, and caves; and the district is of very singular interest, from many concomitant circumstances, especially from the blocks of porphyry, upon which the serpentine is incumbent, and the veins of granite associating with those of steatite which pervade it.

Steatite is a substance of different tints of grey and green; and, from its very singular unctuous feel, has been called soap stone. It is somewhat abundant in the serpentine of Cornwall, one of the masses of which is called the Soapy rock; it is here carefully collected for the porcelain works of Worcester and Swansea, in which it forms a very important ingredient.

Marble is the last of the rocks belonging to this class. It is also very abundant in the secondary rocks, but its characters are there different. Serpentine and marble are sometimes blended together, and they then form a valuable compound for ornamental purposes, which has been called Verd Antique.

This is a highly important series of rocks; as a class they present analogies which distinguish them from their superincumbent neighbours, and give them the stamp of a peculiar and distinct formation, either formed before organic beings, or under circumstances which have destroyed such remains. In these rocks is seldom observed any regular stratification; they are mostly constituted of amorphous, irregular, and various masses, and present no appearances of having been deposited from water. They are crystalline aggregates; and they are deeper in their situation than other rocks, which always appear incumbent upon them, and often elevated, or heaved, as it were, by their operation. They often break through the beds or layers that cover them, and rise to a very great elevation.

The highest mountains in Britain are composed of granite and its associates; but these are mere trifling protuberances upon the earth's face, when compared with the exceeding heights of the Alpine chain, or the yet more elevated mountains of South America, and of Asia, which consist of the same materials.

The reason why these excessive elevations present nothing but primitive rocks, and especially granite, excepting, indeed, where they are volcanic, may not at first appear quite obvious, for in the low lands the primitive are generally covered by secondary strata, which were also once, probably, incumbent upon their loftiest summits. It is likely that the destructive agencies of the elements have been so powerfully exerted in these elevated and unprotected regions, that the secondary rocks have yielded to their unceasing attacks, and have been carried towards the valleys by the rills and torrents, while granite and its durable accompaniments, have more obstinately opposed the inroads of such resistless assailants.

At the same time, however, it will seem probable that the granitic mountains have themselves suffered tremendous degradation, and that, at a former period, their summits were beyond their present elevation. All this will appear more clear when the general characters of mountain chains, and the phenomena of their decay, are taken into account. But several circumstances present themselves, which announce the influence of destructive agents upon these apparently invulnerable materials. Prodigious masses of granite are often found among the secondary strata that form the valleys under primary mountain chains; they are insulated, and unconnected with any general mass of the same material; and the more distant they are from the granite range, the more they are rounded and smoothened upon the surface; see page 395, vol. ii.

In Cornwall, granite is sometimes of very rapid decomposition; and the streams which traverse these districts deposit a finely-divided earthy matter, resulting principally from the feldspar, and much used in the Potteries. Carglaish tin mine is situated in a decomposing granite of this kind, and presents a spectacle highly worthy the attention of the curious. The mine is a vast chasm in the granite rocks, and exposed to the day. The tin ore and shorl rock traverse it in abundant veins; and the surrounding peaks strongly remind the beholder of a miniature representation or model of the Alps; see page 297*, vol. i.

Of the transition or stratified rocks, one leading and general circumstance may be observed in regard to them, which is, that they never attain the great elevation of the primary bodies. The next peculiarity of the secondary rocks that presents itself, is their containing fragments, pebbles, and organic remains; in the oldest of these rocks, fragments are often found, and rounded pebbles, whence is learnt their origin from former rocks. Upon these, beds occur which contain remains of shells, corals, and fish, all of marine origin, and oftentimes the races are extinct. Approaching the newer rocks, relics of quadrupeds, now no longer known, are observed; and following the deposition of strata, remains of lizards, crocodiles, elephants, deer, and some other animals, are found; and occasionally are discovered districts containing land and sea-shells in alternating layers.

The secondary rocks are the chief repositories of metallic substances, and by their decomposition and decay they furnish the principal materials of the soil in which the vegetable has its habitation, and consequently upon which the existence of animals ultimately depends.

Of the secondary rocks, clay slate may be first noticed; it is extremely abundant, and generally immediately incumbent upon the primary series. The varieties of slate are applied to various useful purposes; that which is easily separable into thin plates, compact, sonorous, and not injured by the application of a moderate heat, is employed for roofing houses. London is chiefly supplied from Bangor, in Carnarvonshire, and from the neighbourhood of Kendal, in Westmorland.

Slate often contains fragments of other rocks, embedded masses, and nodules of various kinds, frequently pebbles, and occasionally a few impressions of shells; it also often derives a green colour from the presence of a mineral called chlorite, consisting of oxide of iron, united to siliceous, and aluminous earths. The slates containing embedded matters, are called grauwacke-slates; or, when of a less slaty fracture, simply grauwacke, a substance which is abundant in this country.

The slate district of England is of considerable extent, and neither wants sublimity nor grandeur; it follows the great primary chain, before alluded to, as running north and south upon the west side of England: in Cornwall the slate is seen immediately incumbent upon granite; and the slaty districts form very beautiful scenery upon many parts of the coast. The term killas has been applied to it by the miners.

Nothing can exceed the scenery about Looe, Fowey, and the country between it and Falmouth; and upon the north coast Tintagell is yet more remarkable.

There is some grauwacke in many parts of Cornwall; the best marked specimens are from Mawnan, near Falmouth, where it alternates with clay slate.

Advancing northwards, the mountain chain is broken by the lowlands of Lancashire; but, in Westmorland and Cumberland, slate again presents itself, plentifully accompanied by grauwacke, which contributes to the enchanting scenery of the lakes. As black peaks and precipices strewed with slippery and cutting fragments, mark the mountains of common slate, so have the grauwacke rocks peculiarities by which they are recognised, and which are no where more evident than in the rounded summits that embosom Derwentwater. In their forms, tints, and outlines, there is something indescribably delightful; and they present the rare union of the sublime and beautiful.

The varieties of mountain limestone are the substances that next occur; they are frequently seen immediately incumbent upon clay slate, and are further distinguished from primitive limestone, or statuary marble, by having a less decidedly crystalline texture. Where this rock lies directly upon slate, it contains few organic remains; but where red sandstone is interspersed between it and the slate rocks, or in proportion as it is distant from the primary and slate rocks, the relics of organization become more frequent. It then abounds in remains of corals and zoophytes, which now are not known to exist. It often is traversed by veins of calcareous spar, and presents a great variety of colours. It is abundant in Devonshire, Derbyshire, and Yorkshire. At Plymouth, this rock is seen immediately incumbent upon slate, in a quarry between Devonport and the town; its colours are red and grey, streaked with white crystalline veins. It is also seen to great perfection in the Breakwater quarries at Oreston.

Slate districts often present very curious inflexions and incurvations of their strata. The slate at Plymouth, and the grauwacke of Clovelly, in the north of Devon, and the killas upon the coast of Cornwall, near Charlestown, are in many places very singularly contorted; and sometimes small undulations present themselves in the laminæ, exactly resembling those left by the ebbing tide upon a gently reclining sand bank. These appearances may, perhaps, be referred to the action of water upon the materials, before they were consolidated.

The aspect of a country of mountain limestone is peculiar, and generally extremely picturesque. The hills, which, in this country at least, are not very lofty, abound in precipices, caverns, and chasms; and, when upon the coast, form small promontories, and jut out in low, but grotesque pillars. The even surfaces are covered with a stunted turf; but the rifts and cracks contain often a soft, rich soil, in which stately timber trees flourish. The chasms of limestone rocks are often filled with a fine clay, which has, perhaps, sometimes been derived from the decomposition of shaly strata, or sometimes deposited from other causes, in the fissures; and the singularities of aspect, and much of the beauty of this rock, is referable to these peculiarities. Thus, upon the banks of the Wye, large and luxuriant trees grace the abrupt precipices, and jut forth from what appears a solid rock. Their roots are firmly attached in some crevice, filled with a favourable soil. Sometimes rivers force their way through the chasms; at other times they are empty, and the roofs ornamented by nature's hand with stalactitical concretions of white and glistening spar, which seem like the fretted sculpture of Gothic architecture.

The views of Dovedale, of Matlock and its vicinity, and the caves of Castleton, are admirably illustrative of the scenery of mountain limestone.

The banks of the Avon, in the vicinity of Chepstow, are of mountain limestone. The rock is there impregnated with bitumen, and hence exhales a peculiar and fetid odour when submitted to the blows of the axe or hammer. This is by no means uncommonly the case where the limestone rock, as in the present instance, is in the vicinity of coal.

Mountain limestone is an excellent material for building; and many of its varieties are sufficiently indurated to receive a good polish, and are thus employed for ornamental purposes, being cut into vases, chimney pieces, and the like. Where they abound in corals, and other organic remains, these frequently add to their beauty.

The colours of transition limestone are various; but its essential constituent part is always carbonate of lime. The black variety known under the name of Lucillite (so called, because admired by Lucius Lucullus,) or black marble, is often tastefully manufactured and ornamented by etching upon its surface; it is found in Derbyshire, and appears to derive its colour from carbonaceous matter.

The next rock that occurs in point of succession is red sandstone: it often rests upon slate; and then, from its position, has acquired the term of old red sandstone. But a similar substance, or nearly so, also is found lying upon mountain limestone, in which case it has been called red marl, or new red sandstone. Entering upon this substance, we come upon distinctly stratified ground; it is very abundant in England, especially in Lancashire, Cheshire, Staffordshire, Shropshire, and Worcestershire; and independent of its embowelled treasures, for it is connected with coal and rock salt, its surface is generally favourable to vegetation, and its soil sufficiently luxuriant.

Red sandstone rocks are seen in some parts of Britain, in great beauty and perfection, especially where they occur on the coast, or are intersected by rivers. At Ilfracombe the old red sandstone of the Somersetshire coast is seen lying upon slate; and the junction is interesting to the geologist, the sandstone becoming somewhat slaty, and the slate having a tendency to a granular fracture.

The slates, grauwackes, and limestones, are in this country the principal seats of the metallic ores; and they form scenery, which, gradually decreasing in grandeur and sublimity, increases in softness, variety, and luxuriance. Gypsum, or sulphate of lime, known also under the name of plaster stone, selenite, and alabaster, occurs in abundance in many parts of the red strata. Near Tutbury in Staffordshire, and near Nottingham, it is found in blocks and veins; and lately a variety, new in England, has been found, called anhydrite. These minerals constitute valuable materials for the ornamental manufactures of Derbyshire.

In Cheshire, the red sandstone contains immense beds of common salt, most abundant in the valley of the Weaver, and near Middlewich, Northwich, see page 273, vol. ii., and Nantwich; it is accompanied by gypsum. The first stratum was discovered upwards of 160 years ago in searching for coal.

Coal is the most important product of these middle strata. What is called a coal field or district, or sometimes a coal basin, may be regarded as a concavity, varying greatly in extent, from a few to many miles, and containing numerous strata or seams of coal, of very various thickness, alternating with sandstone, clays, and soft slate, or shale, containing impressions of vegetables, and sometimes the remains of fresh water shell-fish. The parallelism of these strata is generally well preserved. The whole arrangement is seldom any where quite horizontal, and never vertical, but almost always more or less inclined. Beneath each stratum of coal, there is often one of soft clay, or clunch, which rarely contains the organic remains of the overlying shale; and although the alternating strata of coal be very numerous, it is seldom that more than three or four will afford profitable occupation to the miner. The upper seam is commonly broken and impure; and few beds, less than two or three feet in thickness, are followed down to any considerable depth. The depth of the mines will, of course, greatly vary, according to the inclination of the strata, the time they have been worked, and other circumstances. The deepest mines are in the counties of Durham and Northumberland; and the thickest beds are found in Staffordshire; the most productive vary from six to nine feet.

Leaving the districts of red sandstone and red marl, a change is observable in the general aspect of the country. There are no steep or abrupt precipices; the hills assume a more picturesque and luxuriant character, and the rugged features of primary country are here softened down into gentle slopes and verdant plains. The rocks which now occur are chiefly varieties of limestone and sandstone, particularly prolific in organic remains; among them are discerned a number of species, of which no living semblance is now in existence.

Corals, zoophytes, ammonites, belemnites, nautili, and a variety of other fossil remains, are found in the argillaceous limestones, which succeed in position to the red sandstone, and are often called white and blue lias limestone. The coast of Dorsetshire, between Weymouth and Lyme, presents a very interesting section of these strata; and their continuation through the country is well entitled to the notice of the geologist.

These strata are succeeded by a species of stone, called Bath stone, from its abundant occurrence in the vicinity of that city; and freestone, or oolite, of which Portland stone is a notorious variety. There then commonly occur various sandstones, with veins of chert, and oxide of iron; and, lastly, chalk, and superincumbent alluvial matter.

In England, chalk is a very abundant formation; and the round backed hills covered with verdure, which mark the eastern counties, are very characteristic of it. Salisbury plain and Marlborough Downs form a centre, whence the chalk emanates, in a north-eastern direction, through the Chiltern hills of Buckinghamshire, and the counties of Bedford and Cambridge, and terminates on the Norfolk coast. In an easterly direction, it traverses Hampshire, Surrey, and Kent, and terminates at Dover; and another arm, passing through Sussex, forms the South Downs, and the lofty promontory of Beachey Head.

Parallel ridges of sandstone generally accompany the chalk; and in Wiltshire, Berkshire, and some other counties, large blocks of granular siliceous sandstone lie scattered upon its surface; of these the celebrated remains, Stonehenge, appear to have been constructed; with the exception of one of the blocks, which is of greenstone. The lower beds of chalk are generally argillaceous, or marly, and contain no flints, and few organic remains. The upper beds abound in fossil relics, of the kinds before alluded to, and in flints, sometimes regularly arranged in distinct nodules, at other times remarkably intersecting the chalk in thin seams. The formation of flints has been much speculated upon; but no plausible theory has yet been adduced in regard to it.

In the south of England the chalk is covered with gravel and clay, the history of which is extremely curious, on account of the fossils they contain, and the evidence they afford, of repeated inundations of salt and fresh water upon the same spot. There are two celebrated concavities filled with such materials, which have been called the London and the Isle of Wight basins. The former is bounded by the chalk hills proceeding from Wiltshire to the south of the Kentish coast, in one direction, and to the northern point of the Norfolk coast, in another; and it is open to the ocean upon the Essex, Suffolk, and Norfolk coasts, which show sections of its contents.

The numerous wells which have been dug in the neighbourhood of London, and the canals, tunnels, and other excavations, and public works that have been carried on, have lately developed many curious facts respecting the contents of this basin.

Greenstone, basalt, amygdaloid, and toadstone, are a singular and important series of rocks, which occur indiscriminately in primary and secondary countries; and are not less varied in their characters and aspects, than in their situation.

It is the remark of an able writer in the "Mining Journal," that the neglect of one of the most interesting, and apparently most obvious branches of scientific research, geology, was the result of many causes, one or two of which only will be here alluded to. The spirit of ancient philosophy disdained the slow and laborious process of patiently investigating natural phenomena; and it was not till the lofty, but severe genius of Bacon, had firmly established the inductive system of philosophy, that a science like geology could be cultivated with success.

It was necessary, also, that the kindred sciences of chemistry and mineralogy should have made considerable progress, before any successful enquiry could be instituted into the nature of the earth, and the position and relations of its constituent masses. Another obstacle to the cultivation of geology at an earlier period arose from the obscurity in which the phenomena it investigates are veiled by nature. The internal parts of the earth are, with few exceptions, excluded from view; those portions exposed to examination are few and far between; often, indeed, obscure and deceptive; and thus it happens that numerous and accurate observations, and extensive powers of generalization, were required, before geology could be placed on a firm foundation, and attract that attention which it deserved.

To have accomplished this important task fell to the lot of Werner, of Freyberg, who is deservedly looked up to as the father of geological science. Many important facts had previously been observed, and many remarkable anticipations had been indulged in by different gifted individuals; but it was reserved for Werner to combine these scattered fragments; to add to them his own close observation and precise mineralogical knowledge, and, finally, to combine these materials into a beautiful and harmonious, though, as it has since been proved, faulty theory; a circumstance so far unavoidable in an infant science, that it detracts but little from his great and original merits. The profession of Werner, as a miner, gave him numerous and valuable facilities for personal observation of geological phenomena; the principal errors into which he fell, were those of supposing that the limited portion of Germany, with which he was acquainted, might be considered as representing the structure of the whole globe; and, as the operation of existing geological causes was then very imperfectly understood, he was led to admit of explanations, founded on imaginary phenomena and gratuitous assumptions.

Dr. Hutton, of Edinburgh, and his able illustrator, Professor Playfair, were well acquainted with the phenomena of the older and pyrogenous rocks, and established on their observations a bold, and in many respects a just theory, but almost entirely opposed to that of Werner; and in the discussion and support of these opposite views, too much of the attention of the earlier geologists was unfortunately directed.

Hasty theories, founded on imperfect knowledge, warmly espoused, and keenly contested, were little calculated to advance an infant science ; and in the early part of the present century a clear perception of this truth appears to have prevailed among many of the principal cultivators of geology in this country. It was seen by them that a vast collection of facts, apart from theoretical considerations, was at that period the great object to be attained ; that a concentration of all their powers to effect this great and laborious task was requisite ; that frequent meetings and communications between geologists could alone remove the narrow and limited views then entertained ; and that, finally, a convenient and accessible depository for their labours was essential. These were the considerations which chiefly influenced the founders of the Geological Society, which originated in 1807, and for some time consisted of little more than the private meetings of some of the chief cultivators of geological science in this country.

The volumes of transactions which have been published bear witness to the zeal and energy of the fellows of this society ; and the names of Greenough, one of its earliest supporters, of Lyell, Buckland, Sedgwick, Murchison, De la Beche, and others, are sufficient to prove the very high degree of talent enrolled among its members.

During a recent examination of Devonshire, Professor Sedgwick and R. J. Murchison discovered a raised beach in Barnstaple and Bideford Bay, which forms at intervals a series of low cliffs from the mouth of the Taw to the bold headland of Baggy Point, a distance of three miles. The greatest thickness of the beach is forty-five feet, and its base is about three feet above the highest tidal level. The top presents eight or ten feet of angular fragments of the adjacent rocks, imbedded in clay. Beneath this superficial covering are twenty-five feet of finely laminated sand, passing downwards into masses of hard calcareous grit ; and the base of the beach consists of indurated conglomerate or shingle, which fills up the inequalities in the surface of the ancient rocks constituting that part of Devonshire. The thickness of these lower beds is about eleven feet. The sands are generally arranged in horizontal layers, but they sometimes present an appearance of false bedding, common in tertiary and secondary formations. Fragments of shells of existing species occur in the sand as well as in the calcareous grit and conglomerate.

Though the base of the beach, as already stated, is generally not more than three feet above high water mark, yet at Baggy Point it rises rapidly to the north to an altitude of seventy feet, and the shingle in parts is nineteen feet thick ; thus presenting the greatest quantity of coarse materials at the point where it attains the greatest elevation.

The beaches in Cornwall, with respect to the character they present, may be divided into three classes ;—1. High shingle beaches, or accumulations formed at high water level on rocky shores ;—2. Mid water beaches, composed of pebbles and fragments of shells, more or less confusedly disposed ;—and 3. Low water beaches, made up of beds of small gravel alternating with sand and layers of shells, and formed below the line constantly covered by the sea.

Of the first of these classes, the raised beds of coarse shingle, and rounded blocks near the Land's End are prominent examples ; of the second, the elevated shingle beach at Plymouth ; and of the third, the ancient beaches north of St. Just's Bay, and south of New Quay. There are no vestiges of similar phenomena on coasts formed of precipitous cliffs, or on the opposite low shores of Pembrokeshire. With respect to the latter, the mounds of blown sand, by which they are bordered, have for ages ceased to increase ; and it is therefore inferred that the sandy beaches, which since supplied the loose materials, are now permanently submerged beneath the sea.

This introduction to the description of the English Counties may be concluded with the following observations ;—England has four points of strength ; two are physical, her coal and her iron ; and two of them are moral, the freedom of the press, and the trial by jury ; and these sources of strength are mutually conservative of each other, for should any attempt be made to destroy the two last, the two first are admirably adapted to defend them.

ESSEX.—Home Circuit.

THIS county is bounded on the north by Cambridgeshire and Suffolk; on the east by the German Ocean; on the south by the river Thames; and on the west by Middlesex and Hertfordshire. The length from east to west is about sixty miles, the breadth from north to south fifty, and its circumference about two hundred and twenty-six miles. The British inhabitants were called by the Romans Trinobantes, a name indicative of the situation of the country on the border of broad waters. The county formed part of the Roman province Flavia Cæsariensis, and five principal stations were situated within its boundary:—Duro-litum, Leyton; Cæsaromagus, Dunmow; Canonium, Canudon; Camelodunum, Colchester; and Ad Ansam, Knights Tolleshunt. Essex formed during the Saxon Heptarchy the separate kingdom of East Seaxa, and the county now contains twenty-four market-towns, four hundred and three parishes, 49,978 inhabited houses, and 289,424 inhabitants. It is in the province of Canterbury, and diocese of London. There were formerly abbeys at Bileigh, Barking, Chiche St. Osyth, Coggeshall, Colchester, Saffron Walden, Tiltey, Waltham, and Stratford Langthorne or West Ham: also priories at Berdon, Bicknacre, Blackmore, Dunmow, Earls Colne, Hatfield, Hockesley, Latton, Lees, Malden, Panfield, Prittlewell, Tackley, Thoby, and Tiptree. The castles of the early lords were at Hadleigh, Colchester, Hedingham, Stansted, Montfitchet, Ongar, Pleshey, and Walden. The forests of Epping and Hainault still retain the name, and supply a number of deer. Essex is part of a tract of the eastern side of the kingdom, considered the largest connected space of level ground in the whole island, but the surface is not altogether flat. Towards the north-west, where most of the rivers rise, it presents a continued inequality of surface. The most level parts are the southern and eastern hundreds, which lie under a proverbial imputation of being unhealthy. The sea-coast is broken into inlets and peninsulas deeply cut in by arms of the sea. Extensive salt marshes border most of the coast, the greater part of which is protected by embankments. The farms in these parts are very large and productive, being manured with chalk brought by sea from Kent. The northern part of the coast between the Stour and the Colne is more elevated, and the middle is in general a fine corn country, varied with gentle inequalities of surface, and studded with woods. Although not highly celebrated for its dairies, those of Epping and its vicinity are famous for the richness of their cream and butter. More calves are fattened here than in any other county. Fish are extremely plentiful on the coast, and in the various creeks; some of the last, near Colchester and the Mersey island, are celebrated for remarkably fine oyster-beds. The most considerable rivers of this county are the Colne, the Blackwater, the Chelmer, the Crouch, the Ingrebourn, the Roding, and the Cam: others of less importance are the Lea, Stort, and Stour. The river Colne rises near Ridgewell, on the northern side of the county, and after passing Castle Hedingham, Halstead, and Colchester, expands into a wide estuary, where it is navigable to the sea. The Blackwater, called also the Pont, has its source on the borders of Cambridgeshire, passes Bocking and Coggeshall, and near Witham receives another stream. It unites with the Chelmer below Malden, and then forms an extensive estuary. The river Chelmer springs near Thaxted, and passing near Dunmow, at Chelmsford receives other streams; it then flows through a pleasant valley, and joins the Blackwater near Malden. The Crouch and Ingrebourn are small rivers rising in the southern part of the county, and pass through a short course to the Thames. The Roding, another small stream, has a circuitous course, visiting Ongar, and several villages in its progress to Wanstead, Ilford, and Barking, and is navigable from Ilford Bridge. The Cam takes a different direction from the other rivers; rising from three springs near Newport, it passes Audley End, Chesterton, &c., and pursues a northern course to Cambridgeshire. The Lea and Stort constitute the western boundary of the county, separating it from Middlesex and Hertfordshire, and the Stour divides it from the county of Suffolk in the north. Essex returns eight members to Parliament; viz. two for Colchester, two for Harwich, two for Maldon, and two for the county,—who at present are Charles Callis Western, Esq., and the Hon. W. P. T. Long Wellesley, Esq. Easton Lodge, near Dunmow, is the seat of Viscount Maynard, Lord Lieutenant of the county.

1. Barstable Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Chelmsford hundred; on the east by Rochford hundred; on the south by the river Thames; and on the west by Chafford hundred.

NORTH BENFLEET, 6 miles S.E. from Billericay, contains 45 houses, and 303 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 16*l*.—South or Great Benfleet, 2 miles S. from the above, contains 106 houses, and 515 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 16*l*. 5*s*. 5*d*., in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Westminster. Across Hadleigh Ray is a causeway leading to Canvey island, containing about 2600 acres of marsh-land appropriated to grazing.

BOWERS GIFFORD, or Bures Gifford, 7 miles S.E. from Billericay, contains 40 houses, and 221 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, is a rectory, value 25*l*.

BULPHAN, 9 miles S.E. from Romford, contains 29 houses, and 242 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 23*l*.

Vol. I.

GREAT BURSTEAD, or Burghstead, 2 miles S. from Billericay, contains 326 houses, and 1861 inhabitants, including Billericay. The church, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen, is a vicarage, value 17*l*. 6*s*. 8*d*.—Little Burstead, 2 miles W. from the above, contains 20 houses, and 201 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 12*l*. in the patronage of the Bishop of London. Billericay has a market on Tuesday, and fairs August 2, and October 7. Near Burstead is an encampment.

CHADWELL, ST. MARY'S, 2 miles E. from Grays, contains 39 houses, and 202 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 17*l*. 13*s*. 4*d*.

CORRINGHAM, 7 miles E. from Grays, contains 44 houses, and 235 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 22*l*. 13*s*. 4*d*.

DODDINGHURST, 4 miles N. from Brentwood, contains 51 houses, and 356 inhabitants.

DOWNHAM, 4 miles E. from Billericay, contains 51 houses, and 315 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, is a rectory, value 12*l*. 2*s*. 8*d*. Downham Hall stands on the south side of the village.

DUNTON, 5 miles S. from Brentwood, contains 17 houses, and 133 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 14*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of King's College Cambridge.

FOBBING, 5 miles E. from Orsett, contains 74 houses, and 407 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 21*l.*, in the patronage of the Crown. It has the highest tower of any church within ten miles, commanding fine views of the surrounding country.

EAST HORNDON, or Great Horndon, 3 miles S.E. from Brentwood, contains 67 houses, and 459 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 10*l.*—West Horndon, or Little Horndon, contains 8 houses, and 45 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a curacy.—Thorndon Hall, the seat of Lord Petre, stands on an eminence which runs at the end of an avenue two miles long, leading from Brentwood to the north front of the building, 300 feet in extent. It was built from designs by Paine, an architect of celebrity in the reign of George III.

HORNDON ON THE HILL, 12 miles S.E. from Romford, contains 70 houses, and 420 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a vicarage, value 14*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's London. Here is a market on Saturday, and annual fairs June 29, and July 15, for wool.

HUTTON, 2½ miles W. from Billericay, contains 46 houses, and 418 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 8*l.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's London. Hutton Hall is the seat of — Forbes, Esq.

INGRAVE, or Ging Ralph, 2 miles S.E. from Brentwood, contains 86 houses, and 427 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a rectory, value 7*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*

LAINDON, or Langdon, 3 miles S. from Billericay, contains 52 houses, and 402 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a rectory, value 35*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of London. Baseldon is a chapelry of this parish.

LANGDON HILLS, 2½ miles N. from Horndon on the Hill, is remarkable for the fine prospect, and contains 29 houses, and 205 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary and All Saints, is a rectory, value 10*l.* 3*s.* 9*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's London.

MUCKING, 2 miles S.E. from Horndon on the Hill, contains 25 houses, and 189 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a vicarage, value 10*l.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's London.

NEVENDON, or Newenden, 5 miles S.E. from Billericay, contains 23 houses, and 186 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 10*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*

ORSETT, or Horset, 12 miles S.E. from Romford, contains 133 houses, and 1130 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Giles and All Saints, is a rectory, value 29*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of London.

PITSEA, 5 miles S.W. from Rayleigh, contains 55 houses, and 289 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 16*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*

RAMSDON BELLHOUSE, 4 miles E. from Billericay, contains 95 houses, and 415 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 14*l.*

RAMSDON CRAYS, 3 miles S.E. from Billericay, contains 60 houses, and 276 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 20*l.*

SHENFIELD, one mile N. from Brentwood, contains 104 houses, and 619 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 14*l.* 18*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Earl of Hardwick. Shenfield Place.

STANFORD LE HOPE, 1½ mile S.E. from Horndon on the Hill, contains 53 houses, and 301 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, is a rectory, value 12*l.* 19*s.* 9*d.*

THUNDERSLEY, 2½ miles S.W. from Rayleigh, contains 58 houses, and 313 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 14*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. This parish extends into Rochford hundred. Sir Richard Wiseman of Thundersley Hall was created baronet December 18, 1828.

LITTLE THURROCK, or East Thurrock, one mile E. from Grays Thurrock, contains 36 houses, and 192 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 13*l.* 15*s.*

EAST TILBURY, 4½ miles E. from Grays Thurrock, contains 35 houses, and 254 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Katherine, is a vicarage, value 13*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. East Lee is a chapelry of this parish. West Tilbury, 1½ mile from the above, contains 41 houses, and 249 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a rectory, value 20*l.*, in the patronage of the Crown. Tilbury Fort, on the banks of the Thames, opposite to Gravesend, was originally built by Henry VIII., and a camp was formed here in the reign of Elizabeth, to oppose the descent of the Spanish Armada: it was regularly fortified by Sir Martin Beckman, in the time of Charles II.

VANGE, 5½ mile S. from Billericay, contains 21 houses, and 124 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 14*l.*

WICKFORD, 6 miles E. from Billericay, contains 70 houses, and 381 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 14*l.*

2. Becontree Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Waltham and Ongar hundreds; on the east by Havering liberty; on the south by the river Thames; and on the east by Middlesex.

BARKING, on the river Roding, 9 miles E. from London, contains 519 houses, and 2580 inhabitants. It has several picturesque old houses, and a market-house, built in Elizabeth's reign. Here is a market on Saturday, and an annual fair October 22. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, is a vicarage, value 19*l.* 8*s.* 11*d.*, in the patronage of All Souls College Oxford. Barking Abbey was one of the earliest of our monastic institutions, but is erroneously said to have been the first convent for females established in the kingdom: it was founded about 675, by St. Erkenwold, Bishop of London, in honour of Christ and the Blessed Virgin his mother, for Benedictine nuns. St. Ethelburgh, the founder's sister and first abbess, afterwards became the patron saint of the convent. At the Dissolution it appeared to be endowed with 1084*l.* 6*s.* 2*d.* per annum. The site of the conventual buildings, with the demesne lands of the abbey, were granted by King Edward VI. in 1551 to Edward Fynes Lord Clinton. Scarcely any remains of the abbey exist, excepting fragments of walls. At the entrance of the churchyard is an embattled gate-house, called Fire Bell Gate, from its having once contained a bell, which Mr. Lysons imagines to have been used as a curfew bell. About two miles from Barking on the road to Dagenham, is Eastbury House, built about the reign of Edward VI.: it is a very fine specimen of the Tudor style of domestic architecture; the whole is of brick unmixed with stone, and the chimney stacks and pinnacles at the corners of the gables are fine examples of moulded brickwork. It is uninhabited. Bifrons also, the estate of the Marquess of Salisbury, is disparked. Chadwell, Ilford, and Ripple, are wards of this parish. Great and Little Ilford are situated on opposite sides of the river Roding. Ilford Place is the seat of R. Westley Hall, Esq.; and Wyefields, of R. Westley Hall, Jun. Esq. Valentines, the seat of Charles Welstead, Esq., contains the original of Southwark Fair, by Hogarth, and other valuable pictures. In the hot-house is a remarkable vine, planted in 1758, the branches of which extend 200 feet, and produce annually 300 or 400 weight of fruit. Cranbrook House is the seat of Webster Hall Dare, Esq.: near it is Claybury Hall.

DAGENHAM, 3½ miles E. from Barking, contains 363 houses, and 1864 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a vicarage, value 19*l.* 10*s.* A breach was made here by the Thames in 1703, which laid nearly 5000 acres of land under water. It was at length completely stopped by Captain John Perry, in 1714.

EAST HAM, one mile E. from Barking, contains 212 houses, and 1424 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen, is a vicarage, value 14*l.* 3*s.* 9*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of London. Green Street Hall, the seat of William Morley, Esq., was formerly a residence of the Nevilles.—West Ham, 2 miles W. from the above, contains 1722 houses, and 9753 inhabitants, including the wards of Plaistow and Stratford Langthorn. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 39*l.* 8*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. At Stratford, William Montfitchet founded a Cistercian abbey in 1135, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin Mary and All Saints. At the Dissolution it was valued at 57*l.* 15*s.* 6*d.* per annum, and was granted in 1538 to Peter Meautis. A gate-house of the abbey has lately been demolished, but some arches, part of the western entrance, are still remaining to mark the site of the church. Hyde House, at Plaistow, was built in 1579.

LITTLE ILFORD, one mile N. from Barking, contains 15 houses, and 87 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a rectory, value 11*l.* 13*s.* 9*d.*

LOW LEYTON, on the borders of Epping Forest, 6 miles E. from London, contains 572 houses, and 3374 inhabitants, including the hamlets of Leytonstone. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 12*s.* Forest House, the seat of Samuel Bosanquet, Esq., stands on an eminence.

WALTHAMSTOW, 5 miles E. from London, contains 685 houses, and 4304 inhabitants, including the hamlets of Chapel End, Clay Street, Hale End, Hoo Street, Marsh Street, and Wood Street. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 13*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of J. Conyers, Esq. It is situated on a hill. The north aisle was built by Sir George Monnox, who was Lord Mayor of London in 1514, who also founded an hospital here in 1527. Walthamstow House is the seat of Sir Robert Wigram, Bart.; and Shern Hill, the seat of Lord Maynard. Higham Hill, northward of Clay Street, is the seat of Jeremiah Harnam, Esq.; hence is a very fine prospect of the surrounding country.

WANSTEAD, 8 miles E. from London, contains 229 houses, and 1354 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Snaresbrook. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 6*l.* 13*s.* 9*d.*, in the patronage of Long Wellesley, Esq. It was rebuilt in 1790, upon ground given to the parish by Sir James Tilney Long, Bart., from designs by Hardwick: the eastern windows are of painted glass, by Eginton, and in the chancel is a monument of Sir Josiah Child. The manor of Wanstead was granted by Edward VI. to Robert Lord Rich, who sold it to the Earl of Leicester, the favourite of Elizabeth, who entertained his royal mistress here for several days. Reverting to the Crown, King James gave it to Sir Henry Mildmay, who having been one of the judges of Charles I., it again became forfeited. James II. sold it to Sir Robert Brooke, and it was soon afterwards purchased by Sir Josiah Child, whose son, Richard Earl of Tilney, built a magnificent mansion about 1715, from designs by Colin Campbell. In 1822 the whole was sold, and the house destroyed. Wanstead Grove, the seat of the Hon. Mrs. Anne Rushout, erected from the designs of John Webbe, contains a collection of pictures, formed by G. Bowles, Esq., amongst which are many by A. Kauffman, R.A., and several enamels by H. Bone, R.A. The gardens are remarkable for American plants. Wanstead Lodge is the seat of Thomas Baucott Mash, Esq.

WOODFORD, 8 miles N.E. from London, contains 395 houses, and 2699 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, is a rectory, value 11*l.* 12*s.* 1*d.* In the churchyard is a remarkably large yew-tree. Woodford Hall is the seat of John Maitland, Esq. Near Woodford Bridge, over the Roding, is Prospect House; and Hearts, the seat of J. C. Jervoise, Esq., which was originally built by Sir Humphrey Handsforth, Master of the Wardrobe to King James I. Sir James Wright, of Ray House, Woodford, was created baronet September 19, 1772.

3. Chafford Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Ongar hundred; on the east by Barstable hundred; on the south by the river Thames; and on the west by Havering liberty.

AVELEY, 3½ miles W. from Grays, contains 136 houses, and 733 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a vicarage, value 14*l.* 10*s.* 5*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of London. Belhus is the seat of Sir Thomas Barrett Lennard, Bart. This park, which is above three miles in circumference, is pleasantly situated in a vale, and to the north-east of the house is a fine piece of water, which greatly adds to the beauty of the grounds; the park abounds with a variety of old oaks and other trees, large avenues of which lead from the two entrance lodges. In 1627, Sir Edward Barrett, of Belhus was created Lord Newburgh, of Fife N.B., being one of those few English gentlemen whom King Charles created Peers of Scotland, the better to incorporate the two nations. He was a gentleman of a very amiable and respectable character, and lived at Belhus with great hospitality. In the adjoining village of Aveley is an alms-house, founded by this nobleman in 1630, said to have been erected from a design of Inigo Jones; it was rebuilt about 1750.

CHILDERDITCH, 3 miles S. from Brentwood, contains 30 houses, and 289 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints and St. Faith, is a vicarage, value 8*l.*

CRANHAM, 4 miles S.E. from Romford, contains 47 houses, and 289 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 13*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* Cranham Hall is the seat of ——— Boyd, Esq. Sir Benjamin Wright of Cranham was created Bart. 15th Feb. 1661.

NORTH OCKENDON, 5½ miles S.E. from Romford, contains 50 houses, and 325 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen, is a rectory, value 16*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* South Ockendon, one mile S. from the above, contains 154 houses, and 777 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a rectory, value 33*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*

RAINHAM, 5 miles E. from Barking, contains 91 houses, and 573 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Helen and St. Giles, is a vicarage, value 10*l.*

SOUTH WEALD, 1½ mile W. from Brentwood, contains 199 houses, and 1135 inhabitants, including Brook Street. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a vicarage, value 26*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. Weald Hall, the seat of Christopher F. Tower, Esq., is situated in a large park northward of the village, in which there is a prospect-house, commanding an extensive view, and on the verge of the park are traces of a circular camp. Rocketts is the seat of Earl St. Vincent. Brentwood, containing 249 houses, and 1423 inhabitants, is a chapelry of South Weald: it stands on an eminence, and has a weekly market on Thursday, and annual fairs 18th July, and 15th and 16th October, for horses and cattle. The chapel, dedicated to St. Thomas à Becket, was founded about 1221 by David prior of St. Osyth.

STIFFORD, 1½ mile N. from Grays, contains 40 houses, and 206 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 15*l.*

GRAYS THURROCK, or Great Thurrock, on the banks of the Thames, 11 miles S.E. from Romford, contains 142 houses, and 742 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 0*s.* 10*d.*: the market is on Thursday for corn, and there is an annual fair on 23rd May. West Thurrock, one mile W. from Grays, contains 97 houses, and 829 inhabitants, including the township of Purfleet. The church, dedicated to St. Clement, is a vicarage, value 15*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* At Purfleet are chalk and lime quarries; and at a short distance is a gunpowder magazine, consisting of detached buildings; so that an accident happening to one, would not affect the others.

UPMINSTER, 3½ miles S.E. from Romford, contains 163 houses, and 952 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is a rectory, value 26*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* Dr. William Durham, an eminent philosopher and divine, was rector here from 1689 to 1735, when he died, æt. 77. Upminster Hall, the seat of Charles Branfill, Esq., was formerly a residence of the abbots of Waltham; the situation is beautiful, the grounds being well wooded and falling in a fine slope from the house. On the east is a distant view of Laindon Hills, and more southerly, of the Thames and the Kentish Hills. Gaines, a mansion on an eminence near the church, was named after the family of Engain, who resided on the same spot. It was built by Sir James Esdaile.

GREAT WARLEY, 3 miles S. from Brentwood, contains 74 houses, and 521 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 14*l.*, in the patronage of St. John's College Cambridge. Warley Lodge is the seat of Mack Allanson Winn, Esq., heir presumptive to Lord Headley. Warley Place is the seat of General Bonham. Little Warley, half a mile westward from the above, contains 27 houses, and 179 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 11*l.* 3*s.* 9*d.* Sir Denner Strutt, of Little Warley Hall, was created baronet March 8, 1642.

WENNINGTON, 6½ miles E. from Barking, contains 18 houses and 128 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory value 8*l.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of London.

4. Chelmsford Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Hinckford and Witham hundreds; on the east by Dengey hundred; on the south by Barstable and Rochford hundreds; and on the west by Ongar and Dunmow hundreds.

GREAT BADDOW, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile S.E. from Chelmsford, contains 259 houses, and 1603 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 18*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* Little Baddow, on the Chelmer, 4 miles E. from Chelmsford, contains 58 houses, and 381 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 2*s.* 2*d.*, in the patronage of Viscount Barrington. In the chancel is a monument to the memory of Sir Henry Mildmay, of Graces, ob. 1639. Tofts is the seat of General G. Strutt. Middle Mead is a hamlet of this parish.

BLACKMORE, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles N.W. from Ingatestone, contains 118 houses, and 657 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* In the reign of John, Adam and Jordan de Samford founded here a priory of Black Canons, which was dissolved in 1525, and granted to Cardinal Wolsey: upon his attainer it was exchanged with the Abbot of Waltham, and at the general suppression it was granted to John Smith. Here was one of the residences of Henry VIII., which went by the name of Jericho; and his son Henry Fitz Roy, afterwards Duke of Richmond and Somerset, was born here. Smyths Hall is the residence of John Barnes, Esq.

BOREHAM, 3 miles N.E. from Chelmsford, contains 96 houses, and 918 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a vicarage, value 10*l.* 3*s.* 9*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Lincoln. In the Sussex chapel are several monuments of the Ratcliffe family, and in the churchyard is a mausoleum for the Waltham family. Boreham House, the seat of Sir John Tyrrell, Bart., is pleasantly situated in a park with two fine avenues of trees, and a large piece of water in the front. New Hall, or Beaulieu, was nearly rebuilt by Henry VIII. about 1517. On the gate-house is the royal arms, with this inscription, HENRICVS · OCTAVVS · REX · INCLITVS · ARMIS · MAGNANIMVS · STRVXIT · HOC · OPVS · EXIMIVM. The king here kept the festival of St. George in 1524. Queen Mary also resided here. Queen Elizabeth granted this magnificent mansion in 1573 to Thomas Ratcliffe Earl of Sussex, her Lord Chamberlain. In 1736, the mansion, gardens, and park were sold to John Olmuis, Esq., and are now the property of Lord Waltham. The part of the building now standing includes the hall, 96 feet by 50. The ancient chapel once contained the painted window now at St. Margaret's church Westminster.

BROOMFIELD, 3 miles N. from Chelmsford, contains 67 houses, and 624 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of London.

BUTTSBURY, one mile S.E. from Ingatestone, contains 103 houses, and 522 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a curacy.

CHELMSFORD, the county town, 29 miles E. from London, contains 893 houses, and 4994 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Moulsham. It is situated on the banks of the river Chelmer, over which there is a bridge, built by Maurice Bishop of London about 1100, and since rebuilt with one arch in 1787. It is principally laid out in four streets, having nearly in the centre the shire-hall, built from designs by Johnson. In the basement of this building is an open space for the corn-exchange, and apartments for the courts of assize, sessions, &c. which are held here. Above is an assembly or county room, extending the whole length of the building with a music-gallery in it. Contiguous to the shire-hall is a conduit of Portland stone. Chelmsford contains a free grammar-school, besides alms-houses and other charitable institutions. The bridge connects this town with Moulsham, and near it stands the county gaol, a spacious and well arranged stone building, of modern erection. In Moulsham are six alms-houses, founded by Thomas Mildmay, Esq. in 1563, and rebuilt by William Mildmay, Esq. in 1758. Within this hamlet, near the river, stood a Dominican priory, the site of which still retains the appellation of the Friars. At the Dissolution the revenues of this house were estimated at 9*l.* 6*s.* 5*d.*, and in 1542 it was granted to Anthony Bonvixi, but has since become the property of the Mildmays. Thomas Langford, who compiled an Universal Chronicle from the Creation to his own times, was a friar in this house. The country surrounding Chelmsford is extremely pleasant and fertile, and several flourishing hop plantations are established in the neighbourhood. Upon the banks of the Chelmer and Blackwater are numerous large corn-mills. In consequence of the navigation of the Chelmer from Chelmsford to the Blackwater, the trade of this town in coals, corn, &c., has increased very considerably. The market is on Friday, and the fairs are on May 12 and November 12 for cattle. On Galleywood common, near the town, there is a race-course, where three plates are run for annually. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 31*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.*: it is a spacious building, the body is modern, and was erected from designs by Johnson, in place of the more ancient part, which fell to the ground on the night of January 17, 1800. The downfall was caused by digging a vault for one of the Tindal family. The old part is of the time of Henry VI., and before the Reformation it contained four guilds, or chantries. On the north side of the chancel is the burial-place of the Mildmays; and here is the monument of Benjamin Earl Fitzwalter, who died in 1756. The glass in the east window was painted by Yarrington of Norwich in 1824: in the three upper compartments are represented the Nativity, the Crucifixion, and the Ascension; and below are the apostles Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John. The altar-piece was painted by Summers in 1803.

Moulsham, the manor of the Mildmays, was prior to the Norman conquest a parcel of the possessions of the Abbey church of St. Peter's Westminster; but at the Dissolution it was sold by Henry VIII., on the 23rd of July 1540, to Thomas Mildmay, gent., one of the auditors of the Court of Augmentations. This gentleman rebuilt the manor-house, "so that it was then accounted the greatest esquire's building in the county of Essex." Since that period a large modern fabric was erected on its site by Benjamin Earl Fitzwalter, from the designs and under the direction of Leoni. This building, called Moulsham Hall, was of a quadrangular form, inclosing a court in the centre, and commanded a view of Danbury Hill from the grand front, which had an ornamental pediment displaying the family arms in basso-relievo; and above, the statues of Apollo, Diana, and Mercury. The interior was arranged with great judgement; but the mansion has been entirely taken down, and the garden walls are only left. Sir Walter Mildmay, the founder of Emanuel College, was born at Moulsham, and became Chancellor of the Exchequer and Privy Counsellor to Queen Elizabeth, and died in the year 1589. Sir Thomas Mildmay was created baronet June 29, 1611, and Sir William Mildmay was created baronet February 5, 1765.

CHIGNAL, St. JAMES, or Great Chignal, 3 miles N.W. from Chelmsford, contains 37 houses, and 217 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a rectory, value 10*l.* 14*s.* 7*d.* The ancient painted glass in the windows was brought from distant parts of the county, and placed here when the church was repaired in 1767. Chignal Smealy, or Little Chignal, a mile northward from the above, contains 9 houses, and 74 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a rectory, value 5*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*

DANBURY, 5 miles E. from Chelmsford, contains 192 houses, and 1005 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Russells. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a rectory, value 20*l.* In the church are some very ancient monuments, supposed to belong to the St. Cluse family. Danbury Hill, one of the highest eminences in the county, is supposed to have been a Danish encampment; whence the name of the town, which is built within the area. Danbury Place is the seat of Sir William Hillary, Bart.

FRYERNING, one mile W. from Ingatestone, contains 118 houses, and 612 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 9*l.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of London.

EAST HANNINGFIELD, 6 miles S.E. from Chelmsford, contains 54 houses, and 398 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 13*l.* 15*s.* 7*d.* South Hanningfield, 2 miles S. from the above, contains 26 houses, and 176 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 10*l.* West Hanningfield, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile N. from the above, contains 89 houses, and 468 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 16*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*

INGATESTONE, 6 miles S.W. from Chelmsford, contains 121 houses, and 747 inhabitants. Here is an annual fair on 1st December for Scotch and Welsh cattle, where large numbers of lean stock are purchased by the graziers. The church, dedicated to St. Mary and St. Edmund, is a rectory, value 16*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*; it contains several monuments of the Petre family, who have been great benefactors to the parish. Ingatestone Hall is the seat of ——— Coverdale, Esq.; and the Hyde is the seat of John Disney, Esq.

GREAT LEIGHS, or Lees, 7 miles N. from Chelmsford, contains 27 houses, and 181 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 25*l.* 7*s.* 1*d.*, in the patronage of Lincoln College Oxford. Chatley is a hamlet of this parish. Little Leighs, 2 miles N.W. from the above, contains 31 houses, and 160 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Evangelist, is a rectory, value 9*l.*, in the patronage of Lord Waltham. Sir Ralph Gernon, in the reign of Henry III., founded here a priory of Black Canons, in honour of the Virgin Mary and St. John. At the Dissolution it was valued at 141*l.* 14*s.* 8*d.*, and was granted in 1534 to Sir Richard Rich, Chancellor of the Court of Augmentations. He enlarged the buildings of the monastery, and converted the whole to a magnificent mansion, containing two courts, with three parks belonging to it. This mansion passed by marriage to the Earl of Manchester. Edward Sheffield Duke of Buckinghamshire bought it, and from him it descended to Sir Charles Sheffield, who sold it to Guy's Hospital.

MARGARET ING, one mile N. from Ingatestone, contains 91 houses, and 479 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 2*s.* Copfold Hall is the seat of Richard Vachell, Esq.

MOUNTNEYS ING, 2 miles S. from Ingatestone, contains 144 houses, and 728 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Giles, is a vicarage, value 11*l.* Thoby Priory is the seat of John Grant, Esq. This is the site of a priory of Austin canons, founded in the reign of Stephen by Michael Capra, Roese his wife, and William their son: it was dedicated to St. Mary and St. Leonard, and was valued at 75*l.* 6*s.* 10*d.* in 1525, when it was granted to Cardinal Wolsey, and after his attainder to Sir Richard Page in 1530.

RETTENDON, 6 miles E. from Billericay, contains 91 houses, and 580 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 32*l.* 6*s.* 3*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Ely.

ROXWELL, 4½ miles W. from Chelmsford, contains 139 houses, and 817 inhabitants. It is a curacy, in the presentation of New College Oxford.

RUNWELL, 5½ miles E. from Billericay, contains 43 houses, and 307 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 13*l.*

SANDON, 3 miles S.W. from Chelmsford, contains 52 houses, and 488 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a rectory, value 13*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of Queen's College Cambridge.

The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary and St. Lawrence, is a vicarage, value 18*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* in the patronage of Trinity College Oxford. Waltham Lodge is the seat of ——— Saville, Esq. Little Waltham, one mile E. from the above, contains 79 houses, and 670 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Martin, is a rectory, value 11*l.* 10*s.* The rectory is the residence of H. Sandford, Esq.

WIDFORD, on a branch of the Chelmer, 2 miles S. from Chelmsford, contains 24 houses, and 118 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 8*l.* Hylands, the seat of P. C. Labouchere, Esq., stands on an eminence, and commands a pleasing view of the well-cultivated district, which here rises in gentle hills on every side.

WOODHAM FERRIS, 9 miles S.E. from Chelmsford, contains 162 houses, and 865 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 28*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*

WRITTLE, 2½ miles S.W. from Chelmsford, contains 399 houses, and 2100 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, in the patronage of New College Oxford. It is a peculiar jurisdiction, and as such is exempt from episcopal visitation. In the chancel is a handsome monument to the memory of Sir John Comyn, of Hylands, in the parish of Widford, Chief Baron of the Exchequer, who died 13th November 1740: over it is his bust, robed and decorated with the collar of S.S. Queen Mary in 1553 granted the manor of Writtle to Sir William Petre; and a descendant of his third son was created Lord Petre of Writtle 21st July 1603. Not far from the village is a square plot of ground, enclosed by a deep moat, which is supposed to have been the site of a palace, said to have been erected by King John in 1211.

5. Cladering Hundred

Is bounded on the north and east by Uttlesford hundred, and on the south and west by Hertfordshire. It is in the north-west part of the county.

BERDON, on the borders of Hertfordshire, 6 miles N. from Bishop Stortford, contains 63 houses, and 338 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a curacy, in the presentation of Christ's Hospital London. In the reign of Henry III. here was a priory of canons of the order of St. Austin, dedicated to St. John the Evangelist. William Earl of Northampton, in 1343, granted the advowson of this priory to the abbot of Walden: it was valued in 1534 at 31*l.* 5*s.* 1*d.* per annum; and the site was granted in 1538 to Henry Parker; but in the reign of Elizabeth it was settled on the hospitals of Christ-church, Bridewell, and St. Thomas.

CLAVERING, 7½ miles N. from Bishop Stortford, contains 176 houses, and 1081 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary and St. Clement, is a vicarage, value 22*l.* 13*s.* 11*d.*, in the patronage of Christ's Hospital London.

MALDON, on the Blackwater, 10 miles E. from Chelmsford, and 37 from London, contains 585 houses, and 3198 inhabitants. It is an ancient borough, situated on the acclivity of an eminence, on the south side of the estuary of the Blackwater, and consists of a principal street nearly a mile in length, a cross street, and other avenues. The descent from the upper part of the town to the river is very steep. It is governed by two bailiffs, chosen annually, six aldermen, eighteen capital burgesses, &c. The town-hall is an ancient brick building, where the sessions are held. The privilege of returning two members to Parliament was conferred upon the town by Edward III., and is vested in those who obtain freedom by birth, servitude, marriage, or otherwise, who amount to about 200. The present members are Thomas Barrett Lennard, Esq., and Quintin Dick, Esq. The import trade of Maldon is considerable, consisting of coal, iron, timber, corn, &c. Here is a market on Saturday, and annual fairs on the second Saturday in July, and 14th September. The town has three parishes, All Saints, St. Mary, and St. Peter's. All Saints is a vicarage, consolidated with St. Peter's, value 10*l.* The church is an ancient and spacious building, with an equilateral triangular tower, terminating in an hexagonal spire. In the south, or Darcy's aisle, is a slab, to the memory of John Vernon, a Turkey merchant, who died in 1653: the stone was brought by him from Smyrna, together with some manuscripts relative to that ancient city. St. Mary's is a peculiar, in the presentation of the Dean and Chapter of Westminster. The tower, and great part of this church, which is situated in the lower part of the town, was rebuilt in the reign of Charles I. The tower only of St. Peter's church remains. A grammar-school and library were founded here by Dr. Thomas Plume, Archdeacon of Rochester, and a native of Maldon, who died in 1704. Bileigh Abbey, a mile westward from Maldon, was founded in 1180 by Robert Mantel for Premonstratensian monks. At the Dissolution the revenue amounted to 196*l.* 6*s.* 5*d.* per annum; and the site was granted in 1540 to Sir John Gate. The chapel, which still remains, was the burial-place of Henry Bouchier, Earl of Essex, who died in 1483.

GREAT DUNMOW, 12 miles N.W. from Chelmsford and 37 from London, contains 452 houses, and 2409 inhabitants. It is situated on an eminence near the river Chelmer, and consists principally of two streets, and carries on a manufacture of baize and blankets. The market is on Saturday, and there are annual fairs 6th May and 8th November for cattle. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 18*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of London. It is a large ancient edifice. The town is supposed to have been a Roman station, the Cæsaromagus of Antonine's Itinerary. Newton Hall, the seat of Sir Frederick Heniker, Bart., was formerly the seat of the Bouchiers, Earls of Essex. Sir Kinelme Jenoure, of Great Dunmow, was created baronet 30th July 1628, but the title is now extinct.—Little Dunmow, 2 miles E. from the above, contains 48 houses, and 342 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a curacy. Inga, sister to Ralph Baynard, in 1104, founded here a priory of Austin canons: it was valued at the Dissolution at 137*l.* 2*s.* 4*d.*, and the site was granted in 1536 to Robert Earl of Sussex. In this priory was a custom, which is believed to have originated with Robert Fitz Walter, in the reign of Henry III., that "he which repenteth him not of his marriage, sleeping or waking, in a yeere and a day might lawfully fetch a gammon of bacon."

GOOD EASTER, 7 miles S. from Dunmow, contains 86 houses, and 478 inhabitants. High Easter, 5 miles S. from Dunmow, contains 130 houses, and 819 inhabitants.

GREAT EASTON, or Easton upon the Hill, 3 miles N.W. from Dunmow, contains 150 houses, and 755 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John, is a rectory, value 18*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of Viscount Maynard. The village is situated on the eastern bank of the Chelmer.—Little Easton, or Easton ad Turrim, one mile S. from the above, contains 58 houses, and 303 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 10*l.*, in the patronage of Viscount Maynard. In the church, upon the south side of the chancel, is the Bouchier chapel, which contains several monuments of the family of Maynard, who are buried in the vault beneath. Easton Lodge, the seat of Viscount Maynard, stands in an extensive park.

LINDESELL, 4 miles N. from Dunmow, contains 61 houses, and 353 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 8*l.*, in the patronage of the Earl of Guildford.

MASHBURY, 5½ miles N.W. from Chelmsford, contains 12 houses, and 85 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 9*l.* 14*s.* 7*d.*

PLESHEY, 6 miles N.W. from Chelmsford, contains 45 houses, and 289 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is a curacy. Pleshey was formerly a residence of the High Constables of England, and particularly of Thomas of Woodstock Duke of Gloucester, the uncle of King Richard II., who in 1393 founded here a college for a master, eight priests, two clerks, and two choristers. At the Suppression this college was valued at 143*l.* 12*s.* 7*d.*, when it was granted to John Gates, and afterwards in 1563 to William Pole and Edward Downing.

ROOTHING AYTHORP, or Eythorp, 5 miles S.W. from Dunmow, contains 49 houses, and 234 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 12*l.* The Roothings, eight in number, besides hamlets of that name, are very healthy, and famous for their excellent arable land. Roothing Berners, 6 miles N.E. from Ongar, contains 11 houses, and 93 inhabitants. It is a curacy. High Roothing, 5 miles S.W. from Dunmow, contains 61 houses, and 388 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 20*l.* Leaden Roothing, 6 miles S.W. from Dunmow, contains 25 houses, and 157 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 12*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. Leaden Hall, an ancient building, belongs to Lord Dacre. The turn-bridge, across the Wash, is curiously constructed to admit the passage of carriages. Margaret Roothing, 6 miles N.E. from Ongar, contains 27 houses, and 209 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, is a rectory, value 10*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.* Marks Fee, about a mile northward from this village, had formerly a chapel. This manor, with its appurtenances, was granted to University College Oxford in 1403, by Walter Skirlaw Bishop of Durham. White Roothing, 6 miles S.W. from Dunmow, contains 84 houses, and 439 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Morell Roothing. The church, dedicated to St. Martin, is a rectory, value 26*l.* The situation of this village is high, healthy, and pleasant. The manor was formerly held by the service of keeping the lanar falcons, and a greyhound trained to make the heron rise, from Michaelmas to the Purification, for the King's use.

SHELLOW BOWELS, 5 miles N.E. from Ongar, contains 23 houses, and 114 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a rectory, value 7*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*

THAXTED, 6 miles N. from Dunmow, contains 404 houses, and 2045 inhabitants. It is an ancient irregular town, situated on the Chelmer near its source, and has a market on Friday, and fairs on Monday before Whit Monday and 10th August. The stately church is dedicated to the Blessed Virgin Mary, and is a vicarage, value 24*l.* The dimensions of the church within, exclusive of the thickness of the walls, and the projection of the buttresses, are 183 feet in length and 87 feet in breadth: it is built cathedral-wise, with a transept between the body and chancel, and a noble tower and spire; the latter of which having been greatly damaged by lightning in the year 1814, was wholly rebuilt about 1822, by Chessyre, of Over Whitaker, near Coleshill, Warwickshire. This church was most probably commenced in the reign of Edward III., but its several parts have been evidently erected at different times.

TILTY, 4 miles N. from Dunmow, contains 15 houses, and 78 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a curacy, in the presentation of Viscount Maynard. Robert Ferrers Earl of Derby, and Maurice Fitz Geoffrey founded here an abbey of White monks, about 1152, which was dedicated to the Virgin Mary. At the Dissolution it was valued at 177*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.*, and the site was granted in 1543 to Thomas Lord Audley.

WILLINGALL DOE, or De Ou, 4 miles N. from Ongar, contains 76 houses, and 434 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Christopher, is a rectory, value 16*l.* Willingall Spain, or De Hispania, southward from the above adjoining parish, contains 42 houses, and 203 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 7*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. The churches of both the Willingalls are situated very near each other in the same churchyard, whence is a pleasant prospect over all the Roothings.

8. Freshwell Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Cambridgeshire; on the south and east by Hinckford hundred; and on the west by Dunmow and Uttlesford hundreds.

ASHDON, 4 miles N.E. from Saffron Walden, and 3½ miles S. from Linton, in Cambridgeshire, contains 170 houses, and 802 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 28*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of Caius College Cambridge. Bartlow End, or Stevington, is a hamlet of this parish. Walton's Park is the seat of Viscount Maynard. On the borders of Cambridgeshire are four pyramidal hills, which are supposed to cover the remains of those slain in the battle between Canute and King Edward at Ashdon in 1016. Roman coins are often found near Bartlow hills.

GREAT BARDFIELD, 7 miles N.E. from Dunmow, contains 186 houses, and 887 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 11*l.*: here is a free-school, and a fair on 21st June. Little Bardfield, 1½ mile W. from the above, contains 60 houses, and 308 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Katherine, is a rectory, value 11*l.* Bardfield Saling, or New Saling, 5 miles N.E. from Dunmow, contains 43 houses, and 282 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, is a curacy.

The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a vicarage, value 18*l.* Little Sampford, 1½ mile S. from the above, contains 74 houses, and 365 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 11*l.*, in the patronage of New College Oxford: it contains some monuments of the Halton family. Sir William Halton of Little Sampford Hall was created baronet September 10, 1642. This family have also purchased the estate of Sir Edward Green of Sampford, who was created baronet July 26, 1660, which title is now extinct. Sampford Hall is now the seat of Sir William Halton, Bart.

9. Harlow Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Uttlesford hundred; on the east by Dunmow hundred; on the south by Waltham and Ongar hundreds; and on the west by Hertfordshire.

GREAT HALLINGBURY, or Hallingbury Morley, on the borders of Hertfordshire, 2 miles S.E. from Bishop Stortford, contains 97 houses, and 678 inhabitants, including the hamlets of Hughes Green, Tile-kiln Green, and Worsley Green. It is a rectory, value 22l., in the patronage of J. A. Houblen, Esq. Hallingbury Place, the seat of J. A. Houblen, Esq., is a spacious edifice of brick, built in the reign of George II.: it stands in a very extensive park, on the borders of Hatfield Forest. At Wallbury, in the vicinity, is a Roman military way. Wallbury Hall is the seat of Joseph Groove, Esq.

Little Hallingbury, or Hallingbury Nevile, one mile S. from the above, contains 99 houses, and 470 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 15l., in the patronage of the Governors of the Charter-house London.

HARLOW, on the borders of Hertfordshire, 18 miles N.W. from Chelmsford, and 23 from London, contains 347 houses, and 1928 inhabitants. Here are annual fairs on Whit Monday and 28th November; and a noted fair is held on Harlow Bush common, not more than 4 miles N. from Epping, on the 9th September, for horses and cattle, which is much frequented by horse-dealers, &c. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 15l. 7s. 11d., in the patronage of the Earl of Guildford. Harlow Lodge is the seat of the Rev. C. S. Miller; and Harlow Bury of W. Barnard, Esq.

HATFIELD BROAD OAK, or Hatfield Regis, 6 miles N.E. from Harlow, contains 90 houses, and 545 inhabitants. Brumsend Heath and Wood Row Quarters are also within the parish. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 7l. 11s., in the patronage of Trinity College Cambridge. In the chancel on the north side of the altar is the cross-legged figure of Robert Vere Earl of Oxford, Lord High Chamberlain of England, who died in 1231: he founded here a priory of Black monks, which at the Dissolution was valued at 157l. 3s. 2d. In 1540 the site was granted to Thomas Noke. Barrington Hall is the seat of Sir Fitzwilliam Barrington, Bart., the direct descendant of Sir Francis Barrington, M.P. for this county in the reign of Elizabeth, who was created a baronet by King James 29th June, 1611. Ryes is the seat of Stanes Chamberlayne, Esq. Down Hall, the seat of Charles Ibbetson Selwyn, Esq., once the residence of Prior the poet, has been rebuilt.

LATTON, or Lacton, 1½ mile S.W. from Harlow, contains 52 houses, and 378 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a vicarage, value 7l. A priory for Black canons, founded before Edward I., was granted in 1536 to Sir Henry Parker.

MATCHING, 4 miles E. from Harlow, contains 107 houses, and 599 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 12l. 10s. 5d., in the patronage of the trustees of Feisted School.

NETSWELL, or Netteswell, 2 miles S. from Harlow, contains 50 houses, and 306 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 13l. 6s. 8d. Netteswell Bury was nearly rebuilt by William Martin, Esq., who also founded and endowed a free-school here in 1777.

10. Havering at Bower Liberty

Is bounded on the north by Ongar hundred; on the east by Chafford hundred; on the south by the river Thames; and on the west by Becontree hundred; of which last it anciently formed a part.

HAVERING AT BOWER, 3 miles N. from Romford, contains 47 houses, and 352 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Evangelist, is a curacy. A palace is said to have been built here by Edward the Confessor, which was occasionally inhabited by several kings afterwards. The situation is unusually fine, commanding extensive prospects over the adjoining counties. Pergo also was a royal residence; Eleanor queen of Edward I. had it; and Joan, widow of Henry IV., died here in 1437. Queen Elizabeth resided here during her progress into Norfolk in 1570: it was afterwards a seat of Lord Archer. Pergo Park is now the seat of E. R. Howe, Esq.; and Bower House, of Countess Poulett. Bedfords, the seat of Charles Ellis Heaton, Esq., is a situation commanding a finely wooded country. Dagnam Park is the seat of Sir Thomas Neave, Bart.

HORNCHURCH, 2½ miles S.E. from Romford, contains 363 houses, and 1938 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a vicarage, in the patronage of New College Oxford: it is said to have been built by William of Wykeham; from the style of architecture it appears to have been erected about the year 1400. In 1826 the beautiful east window was restored by the Rev. John Walker, LL.B., the vicar. In the chancel is an enriched monument of the Ayloffe family, temp. Henry VIII. The bull's head, with large horns, affixed to the east end of the church, is supposed to be the arms or crest of the hospital in Savoy. A priory here was a cell to the hospital of Mount St. Bernard in Savoy. On Christmas-day the lessee of the tithes, which belong to New College, supplies a boar's head dressed and garnished with bay leaves, &c., which is carried in procession to a field adjoining the churchyard and wrestled for,—an ancient custom, which is still continued. Nelmes is the seat of F. H. Newman, Esq.

ROMFORD, on Bourn Brook, 17 miles S.W. from Chelmsford, and 12 from London, contains 675 houses, and 3377 inhabitants, including Collier's Row, Harrold's Wood, and Noke Hill. The town consists chiefly of one large wide street, ranging along the road to Norwich: near the middle is the town-hall and market-house. Here the quarter-sessions for the liberty are held. The government is vested in a bailiff and wardens, who are empowered by patent to hold a court every week for the trial of offences, and to determine in actions of debt and trespass. Markets are held on Monday for calves; on Tuesday for hogs; and on Wednesday for corn, cattle, &c.; and on the 24th June is a very large fair for horses and cattle. Westward of the town are cavalry barracks, erected in 1795. Gidea Hall, the seat of Alexander Black, Esq., on the east side of the town, was built about 1720 by Sir John Eyles, Bart. In the grounds is a fine sheet of water, crossed by the road, over a bridge of three arches, designed by James Wyatt. At Hare Street, one mile eastward, is Hare Hall, erected by John Wallinger, Esq. in 1770, from designs by Pain; it commands delightful and extensive views, particularly to the south and west, with the reaches of the Thames, and the eminences of the opposite county of Kent. Hare Lodge is the seat of Thomas Jackson, Esq.; and Hare Street Cottage, of Mrs. Repton.

The church, dedicated to St. Giles, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.*—Little Maplestead, contains 62 houses, and 313 inhabitants. In the reign of King Stephen Little Maplestead was vested in Robert Dosnelli, or Doisnel, whose daughter and heiress Juliana married William Fitz Aldelme, ancestor of Hubert de Burgh, and steward of the household to Henry II. This lady, with the consent of her husband, gave the whole parish, with its appurtenances, about 1186, to the Knights Hospitalers. A preceptory was established here, under the appellation of Le Hospital; which from the gifts of numerous benefactors progressively became extremely flourishing. At the Dissolution its possessions, with Temple Sutton, &c., were granted by Henry VIII. to Henry Harper, Esq. The ancient church is singular in shape, and being one of the four round churches now in England, is exceedingly interesting. With a circular portion at the west, and a semicircular east end, the plan of this building is unique. The circular area within is twenty-six feet in diameter, and has a peristyle of six clustered columns. The whole length of the church internally is sixty feet: it is dedicated to St. John of Jerusalem.

COLCHESTER, 22 miles N.E. from Chelmsford, and 51 from London, contains 2252 houses, and 12,005 inhabitants. The town is situated on an eminence, rising from the river Colne, over which there are three bridges, and the prospects from the more elevated parts are extensive. In the appearance of the houses there is a pervading air of antiquity which never fails to create an interest. The main street with two others which unite transversely, resemble the shaft and arms of a cross. The castle stands northward of the High-street: it was built by Endo de Rie, steward of the household to William Rufus, and resembled in plan other Anglo-Norman castles.

The present southern entrance on the ground-floor is supposed to have been constructed at a later period. The ancient portal was on the northern side, where at a considerable height the vestiges are still to be seen. The large windows now in the walls of the castle appear to have been subsequently made in places where there were originally only loop-holes. The remains of a gallery within the thickness of the walls may yet be found, and chimneys as well as drains constructed in the usual manner still exist. From the dimensions of the keep, about 163 feet by 127, there must have been three or four large chambers at least on every floor. Colchester is a borough governed by a mayor, high-steward, recorder, chamberlain, town-clerk, two coroners, eleven aldermen, eighteen assistants, eighteen common-councilmen, a water bailiff, and other officers. The arms of the town are Gules, three crowns er, with a cross raguled and trunked argent, set in the lowest. The petty sessions for Colchester division are held in the Moot-hall, in the High-street, an ancient edifice. This town sends two members to Parliament, a privilege conferred in the reign of Edward I., and vested in the mayor, aldermen, common-council, and free burgesses, who amount to about 1400. The present members are Daniel Whittle Harvey, Esq. and William Mayhew, Esq. The town of Colchester is divided into twelve parishes, of which eight are within, and four without the walls. All Saints is a rectory, in the patronage of Baliol College Oxford. St. James's is a rectory, value 11*l.* 10*s.*, in the patronage of the Crown: the church is large and handsome; it contains a monument of Arthur Winsley, who founded and endowed twelve charity-houses in St. Botolph's parish; he died in 1727. St. Martin's is a rectory, value 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*; the tower of this church received much damage during the memorable siege, and is not higher than the edifice. St. Mary at the Walls is a rectory, value 10*l.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of London: the church stands on the highest ground of the old tower, close within the south-western angle of the walls; it was rebuilt in 1713, and contains a monument of Sir Isaac Rebow, M.P. for the town, in the reign of William III. St. Nicholas is a rectory, value 10*l.*, in the patronage of the Crown: the chancel of this church, which stands in the High-street, is a ruin and unroofed. St. Peter's is a vicarage, value 10*l.*: in the chancel are monuments of John Sayer, ob. 1510, and George Sayer, ob. 1577, to Martin Basill, ob. 1623, and others of the sixteenth century. St. Runwald is a rectory, value 7*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* The Holy Trinity is a rectory, value 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of Baliol College Oxford: the church contains the monument of William Gilbert, M.D., chief physician to Queen Elizabeth, ob. 1603. The four parishes without the walls are St. Botolph's, a curacy, in the presentation of Baliol College Oxford: its church is in ruins. St. Botolph's Priory was founded in the twelfth century by Ernulph, who became its first prior. At the Dissolution its revenues were 113*l.* 12*s.* 8*d.* per annum; the site was granted to Sir Thomas Audley, Lord Chancellor. The ruins of the Priory church, chiefly composed of Roman tiles, are very interesting. St. Giles's is a rectory; Sir Charles Lucas, ob. 1648, was buried here. A Benedictine abbey, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, was founded by Eudo de Rie, in 1104: at the Dissolution the revenues were valued at 527*l.* 17*s.* 9*d.*, and it was granted in 1548 to John Earl of Warwick; a gate-house at the upper end of St. John's Green is the only remains of the monastery. St. Leonard's, or the Hyth, is a rectory, value 10*l.*, in the patronage of Baliol College Oxford. St. Mary Magdalen, the smallest parish in the town, is the site of an ancient hospital, re-founded in 1610, the mastership of which is in the patronage of the Crown. The market-place in the High-street was built by subscription, and was opened in 1813; the principal market-day for corn and cattle is Saturday; there is a market also on Wednesday for poultry and fruit. The fairs are on Easter Tuesday, 5th and 23rd July, and 10th October.

DEDHAM, on the river Stour and borders of Suffolk, 6 miles N.E. from Colchester, contains 295 houses, and 1651 inhabitants. HERTFORDSHIRE.—Home Circuit.

THIS county is bounded on the north by Bedfordshire, Cambridgeshire, and Buckinghamshire ; on the east by Essex ; on the south by Middlesex ; and on the west by Buckinghamshire. It was inhabited by the British tribes of Catteuchlani, or Cassii and Trinobantes, and afterwards became a part of the Roman province Flavia Cæsariensis. There were three Roman roads leading through this county, which cannot be said of any other, and the principal stations were Verulam, St. Albans ; and Durolitum, Cheshunt. During the Saxon Heptarchy it formed part of the kingdom of Mercia, when the royal palace was at Bennington. In length this county extends about thirty-six miles ; its general breadth is about twenty-six, and in circumference it is about one hundred and forty miles. It contains one county town, nineteen market towns, one hundred and twenty parishes, 23,178 houses, and 129,714 inhabitants. It is in the province of Canterbury, and dioceses of Lincoln and London. The abbey of St. Albans, founded in 791 by Offa, then king of Mercia, was a mitred abbey, and by a grant from Pope Adrian IV., a native of this county, and the only Englishman who had the honour of sitting in the papal chair, the abbots of St. Albans were authorized to take precedence of all others in England. There were also priories at Cheshunt, Flamstead, Hertford, Hitchin, Langley, Rowney, Royston, Sopewell, Ware, and Wymondley. The castles of its earlier lords were at Hertford, Berkhamstead, and Stortford. The county now returns six members to Parliament, two for Hertford ; two for St. Albans ; and two for the county, who at present are Sir John S. Sebright, Bart. of Beechwood, and Nicolson Calvert, Esq. of Hunsdon House. The general aspect of this county is extremely pleasant ; and although its eminences are not sufficiently elevated, nor its vales sufficiently depressed and broken to afford a decisive character of picturesque or romantic beauty, yet the surface is in many parts richly diversified with hill and dale, clothed with noble woods, and thickly studded with numberless parks attached to the seats of the nobility and gentry. The northern part is the most hilly, and a range of high ground stretches out from the neighbourhood of King's Langley, towards Berkhamstead and Tring, which in many parts commands a great extent of country. Another elevated ridge commences at St. Albans, and proceeds in a northern direction towards Markyate-street ; while several other ranges of elevated ground run nearly parallel with the first, from the vicinity of Sandridge, Wheathampstead, Whitwell, &c. The southern line is also sufficiently high to include some extensive prospects. The most remarkable scenes and situations in the county are Bushey Heath, Little Gadesden, Kensworth, Essenden, Brookman's Park, and Knebworth. Most of the county is inclosed ; and the hedges, intermixed with flourishing timber, have a verdant and pleasing effect. Independent of the wood thus distributed in hedge-rows, large quantities of very fine timber are grown in parks spread over every part of the county. The prevailing soils in Hertfordshire are loam and clay ; the former is met with in almost all its gradations, and is more or less intermingled with flint or sand : a chalky soil prevails generally on the northern side of the county, and extends from the neighbourhood of Barkway and Royston through all the contiguous parishes to Baldock, Hitchin, King's Walden, &c. The basis, indeed, of the whole county is chalk, either more or less pure, although the depths at which it is found are very different. As the principal part of the land in this county is under tillage, the produce in wheat, barley, and oats is very considerable. Chauncy, writing in 1700, says, " This county yields the choicest wheat and barley, such as makes the best mault that serves the King's court, which caused Queen Elizabeth often to boast of her Hitchin grape." Large quantities of turnips are also grown, and artificial grasses are cultivated to a very great extent. The grass lands, compared with those under tillage, are extremely small, although a tract of grass, rendered artificially productive at a great expense, may be found connected with almost every estate in the county. The meadows on the river Stort, extending from Hockeril to Hertford, are very productive, as are those in the vicinity of the Lea, and in the neighbourhood of Rickmansworth. The many streams which intersect the land are extremely favourable to irrigation, although that system is not carried to any great extent. In the south-western angle of the county, near Rickmansworth and Watford, are many orchards, the apples and cherries from which find a ready market in London. The chief manufactures of this county are those of cotton and silk ; the first is principally carried on near St. Albans and Rickmansworth, and the last in the vicinity of Watford. The rivers of this county are the Ver or Muse, Colne, Gade, Bulbourne, Lea, Minoram or Marran, Kime, Beane, Rib, Quin, Ash, and Stort, besides the Thame, Pirre, Hiz, Oughton, and Rhee, which rise in this county, but soon leave it ; and the New River, the springs which constitute its source having their rise in the neighbourhood of Ware. The Lea rises near Luton, in Bedfordshire, and entering the county at Hide Hill proceeds through Wheathampstead, Brocket, and Hatfield Parks to Hertford and Ware, and after its confluence with the Stort quits the county near Waltham Abbey. The Rib has its rise near Cornybury, above Buntingford, and is joined by the Quin, which rises near Biggin : it passes Standon, and falls into the Lea between Hertford and Ware. The Beane rises near Cromer, and flows through Watton and Woodhall Park, meeting the Lea at Hertford. The Gade has its source on the borders of Buckinghamshire, and gives name to the villages of Great and Little Gadesden; thence proceeding by Hemel Hempstead, it is joined near Two Waters by the Bulbourne, and flows through the parks of the Grove and Cashibury to the Colne near Rickmansworth. The Colne is formed by the union of several small streams, and gives name to London Colney, Colney Park, and Colney Street, whence it enters Middlesex. The Mineram, or Marran, has its source in the vicinity of King's Walden, and is soon enlarged by the Kime; after which it passes Welwyn, and joins the Lea at Hertford. The Grand Junction canal enters this county above Berkhamstead, and follows the course of the Gade to Rickmansworth, and thence the course of the Colne till it leaves the county. The medicinal springs are chiefly chalybeate, and are confined to the southern part of the county. The principal is near the race-ground on Barnet Common; others rise on Northaw Common, and in that parish. Some incrustatory springs may be noticed near Clothall, in the northern part of the county. Gorhambury, near St. Albans, is the seat of the Earl of Verulam, Lord Lieutenant of the county.

1. Braughlin Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Edwinstree hundred; on the south and east by the county of Essex; and on the west by Broadwater and Hertford hundreds.

BISHOPS STORTFORD, on the borders of Essex, 14 miles N.E. from Hertford, and 30 miles from London, contains 610 houses, and 3358 inhabitants. The town is situated on the river Stort, in a rich corn country, and obtained the prefix of "Bishops" from having belonged to the see of London at a very early period. Large quantities of malt are made here, and the market on Thursday is very considerable for grain. The fairs held annually are on Holy Thursday, Thursday after Trinity Sunday, and 10th October for horses and cattle. The town is built in the form of a cross, the two principal streets intersecting each other at right angles, with the market-house in the centre. The river divides the town from Hockerill, and was made navigable by Sir G. Duckett in the year 1769 to the river Lea, and affords a ready conveyance to London, which has considerably augmented the prosperity of the malting trade. The remains of the castle, which belonged to the Bishops of London, are very inconsiderable. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a vicarage, value 12*l.*, in the patronage of the Precentor of St. Paul's Cathedral. The grammar-school, founded in the reign of Elizabeth, has been destroyed, but the library is still preserved.

BRAUGHIN, or Brooking, on the river Rib, contains 233 houses, and 1228 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a vicarage, value 19*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*: it contains several monuments of the Brograve family. Sir Thomas Brograve of Hamels was created baronet 18th March 1662. Hamels is now the seat of Joseph Blake, Esq. Sir Robert Dicer of Uphall, also in this parish, was created baronet 18th March 1662.

EASTWICK, on the river Stort, and borders of Essex, 5 miles S.W. from Sabridgeworth, contains 25 houses, and 212 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Botolph, is a rectory, value 7*l.* 11*s.* 8*d.* In the chancel is buried Robert Lee of Baguley, in Cheshire, Sewer of the Household to Edward VI., Philip and Mary, and to Queen Elizabeth: he died 23rd January 1564. The sessions for Eastwick division are held here.

GILSTON, or Geldeston, 4 miles W. from Sabridgeworth, contains 42 houses, and 213 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 10*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of London. In the chancel is a monument of the Gore family, of New Place, now Gilston Park, which was latterly the seat of William Plummer, Esq., a worthy and independent M.P., who died in 1822.

HUNSDON, in a fertile part of the county, 5 miles W. from Sabridgeworth, contains 111 houses, and 584 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 12*l.*, in the patronage of Nicolson Calvert, Esq. The church, situated on an eminence near Hunsdon House, contains a monument of John Lord Hunsdon, Governor of Berwick, and Lord Warden of the East Marshes of England, who died in 1617. Hunsdon House, the seat of Nicolson Calvert, Esq. M.P., stands in a park well stocked with timber: it was originally built, in the reign of Edward IV., by Sir John Oldhall, who was slain on the side of Richard III. at Bosworth-field, when it became forfeited to the Crown. King Henry VII. granted the manor to his mother Margaret, Countess of Richmond, after whose decease Henry VIII. granted it to Thomas Duke of Norfolk, but soon after it again fell to the Crown. The King in 1531 made great additions to the mansion, by building over the moat, which circumscribed closely the walls of the edifice. King Edward VI. assigned Hunsdon House as a residence for his sister the Princess Mary, who constantly resided here till she was proclaimed Queen. In 1559 Queen Elizabeth created her near relation Henry Carey, Lord Hunsdon, and bestowed this house upon him, together with three adjoining manors. Lord Hunsdon was the son of Sir William Carey and Mary Boleyn, sister of Queen Anne, the mother of Elizabeth. His lordship was a Knight of the Garter, and held divers important offices of state. A royal visit to this house, 14th August, 1572, has been commemorated by a picture of M. Garrard, now at Sherbourn Castle, the seat of Earl Digby, and which was engraved by Vertue: it represents the noblemen escorting the Queen on that occasion. In 1583 he was appointed Lord Chamberlain of the Household, and in that capacity established a company of twelve players, who were allowed wages and livery as grooms of the chamber. Shakspeare's tragedy of Romeo and Juliet was first acted in 1596 by Lord Hunsdon's servants, and the players at The Globe theatre were called the Lord Chamberlain's servants, till King James in 1603 granted them a license, under the title of His Majesty's Servants. Lord Hunsdon died at his apartments at Somerset House July 23rd, 1596, æt. 71, and was buried in Westminster Abbey church, where a costly monument is erected to his memory. George, second Lord Hunsdon, was also Lord Chamberlain and K.G.: he died in 1603. John, the fifth Lord Hunsdon, sold this estate to William Willoughby, Esq., of whom it was purchased in 1671 by Matthew Bluck, Esq., whose son sold it in 1743 to Josias Nicolson, Esq., whose daughter and heiress married Felix Calvert, Esq. Mr. Nicolson left Hunsdon, by will, to his grandson the late Nicolson Calvert, Esq., whose nephew is the present proprietor, and who has nearly rebuilt the house, except the original front, the windows in which have resumed the mullions according to the ancient style of architecture.

SABRIDGEWORTH, on the river Stort and borders of Essex, 12 miles E. from Hertford, and 26 miles from London, contains 384 houses, and 2071 inhabitants. Here is a great trade in malt, with a market on Wednesday, and annual fairs on 23rd April and 19th October for horses. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 17*l.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of London. This edifice has a picturesque appearance from almost every point of view, but particularly so from the banks of the river, which meanders in beautiful curves through a most fertile country for some miles on either side of the town. The church consists of a nave, north and south aisles, and a large chancel at the east end, separated from the body by an open screen. The interior is striking, from the number of handsome monuments which it contains; many of the corbels of the roof are curious and well sculptured, and a great portion of the old seats remain. In the middle aisle is a marble slab, inlaid with brass, to the memory of Geoffry Joslyne, who died 11th January 1470, and Katherine and Johanna his wives: he was the father of Sir Ralph Joslyne, Knight, twice lord mayor of the city of London, who died October 25, 1478. At the east end, on the north side, is a very fine marble bust, by Bacon, of Robert Jocelyn, Lord Chancellor of Ireland in 1739; he was created Baron Newport Nov. 29, 1743, and Viscount Jocelyn Dec. 6, 1655: he died in London Dec. 3, 1756. On the south side of the entrance to the chancel is a small mural monument "to the precious memory and name" of Sir William Hewitt, Knight, ob. 1637, and Dame Elizabeth his wife, who died in 1646: it is adorned with half-length figures of the knight and his lady.

The screen of the chancel is perforated with small trefoil-headed arches; over this was the rood loft, the steps to which are now remaining in the south aisle. The chancel is large, and rich in sepulchral monuments, which are kept very clean and are in most excellent preservation; the most ancient is against the north wall, consisting of an altar table, upon which are the mutilated effigies of a man armed and his lady: above the tomb is a tablet inserted in the wall, "Heare lyeth John Jocelyne, Esq. and Phillip his wife, which John died Anno Dom. 1525." On the same side is a monument to the memory of Sir Walter Mildmay, Knt., of Pishobury, who died February 24, 1606, with his figure in armour, and that of his lady Dame Marie, the daughter of Sir William Walgrave of Smalbridge in Suffolk, both kneeling before a table covered with tapestry, edged with fringe, and a double desk with two books upon it; his son standing in armour behind him, with an inscription under it. At the east end of the chancel are three hatchments for members of the family of Jocelyne, whose chief seat has been at Hyde Hall near this town, from the time of Henry III. Against the south wall of the chancel is a monument and bust of Sir Thomas Hewitt, Bart., of Pishobury, who died August 4, 1662, æt. 57, bearing the arms of Hewitt, impaling ermine, on a chevron indented azure, three crowns or; motto Honestum utili; opposite to which is a very handsome monument of his son George Viscount Goran and Baron of St. Jamestown in Ireland: he died in 1689, æt. 37. He is represented in a complete suit of armour, but without his helmet, and is standing upright under a canopy supported by columns, over which are his arms; at the base is a long Latin inscription to his memory. He left his estate at Pishobury to his sister Arabella Lady Wiseman, whose daughter Anne married the Honourable Henry Lumley, brother to Richard Earl of Scarborough, to whom there is also a neat marble slab: he died governor of Jersey, October 18, 1722, æt. 62; and their daughter Frances died October 13, 1719, æt. 6. On a flat stone is an inscription to the memory of William Gardiner, Esq., of Pishobury, who died November 29, 1792, aged 41 years: also Christopher his son, who died in August 1725, aged 4 months. At the entrance into the chancel is a marble slab covering a vault, with the arms of Hewitt impaling Litton, Anno Dom. 1666.

The south aisle is separated from the nave by clustered pillars and pointed arches, composed of very bold mouldings. The ceiling consists of panels formed by the intersection of the beams, supported by brackets resting on corbels; those at the east end are of stone, and are sculptured with the attributes of the Evangelists boldly executed. At the west end of this aisle is the font, of an octagonal form, on a pedestal and base; within the quatrefoil panels, on the sides, have been shields of arms, but their bearings are now entirely defaced. In the church is a great number of brasses inlaid on marble slabs; but the most interesting is one finely executed, supposed to commemorate a branch of the Plantagenet family. The full-length figures represent a knight and a lady; the knight is in plate armour, with his feet resting on a greyhound: at the upper corner of the marble are the arms of old France and England quarterly. The lady's head is covered by a coif, and her neck bare; she is clad in a loose robe and mantle; at her feet is a little dog. In the upper part of the slab, over her head, are the arms of England, with a label of France, as borne by the Plantagenets, Earls of Lancaster: the date of this monument may be assigned to the latter end of the fourteenth or to the beginning of the fifteenth century, by the mode of bearing the arms, as well as by the costume of the figures. It is somewhat singular that this curious monument should have been passed over by the historians of the county, Chauncy and Salmon. Neither Sandford nor his continuator in the Royal Genealogies, Stebbing, appears to have ever seen it. Upon another slab in this aisle are the figures of a knight and a lady, spiritedly executed, with this inscription in Roman capitals, viz.: "Here lyeth buried Edward Leventhorp, Esquire, who died in Decemb. 1551 (being y^e eldest sonne of Thomas Leventhorp, Esq., and Elizabeth his wife, y^e daughter of — Barlee of Aldbury, Esq.). Theire eldest sone was also Edward, who married Mary Parker, the second daughter of S^r Harry Parker, Knight, y^e eldest sone of Harry, lo Morlie."

Against the south wall, towards the east end of this aisle, is a large mural monument consisting of columns supporting an arch; under which is represented a knight in complete armour in a reclining posture, and below him a lady, who is also reclining, tolerably sculptured, to the memory of Sir John Leventhorp, Knight and Baronet, who died September 23, 1625, and his lady: on the basement are his six sons and eight daughters, all kneeling. Over the centre of the arch is a large shield of arms. In this aisle are preserved several brass plates belonging to slabs in the church. On the floor, at the east end, is a marble inlaid with two figures in winding-sheets, at the head of which are two coats of arms. At the feet of the figures have been three coats; the first is now gone. Within the two quatrefoils on the upper part of the east window of this aisle are two coats in stained glass, quarterly or and gules, being the arms of William de Say, who married Beatrice, sister and heiress of Geoffrey Mandeville Earl of Essex.

The north aisle has also some painted glass in the small quatrefoil divisions of the mullions of the east window. At the end of the aisle is a marble slab inlaid with a brass plate eighteen inches by three, inscribed in black: "Of your Charite pray for the Soule of William Channcy, on whose Soule Ihū have mercy." The following members of the family of the historian of the county are also buried here: John Chauncy, ob. 1479, and his wife Anne, the daughter of John Leventhorp, Esq., ob. 1477; John Chauncy, Esq., ob. 1510; John Chauncy, Esq., ob. 1546, and his two wives, Elizabeth, who died 1531; and Katharine, who died 1535: there is also buried here Margaret, the daughter and heiress of William Gifford of Gilston, wife of John Chauncy of Stepney.

Hyde Hall, the seat of the Earl of Roden, is situated on the east of the river Stort. The park, though not very extensive, is beautiful, and its surface is sufficiently diversified to exhibit a considerable display of fine scenery; it is surrounded by very productive meadow lands, which have a verdant and pleasing effect in the various views from the mansion. In the reign of Henry III. this estate belonged to Sir John Hyde, Knight, whose daughter and co-heir Maud having married Thomas Jocelyn, the manor reverted to him: he was descended from Gilbert Jocelyn, who had accompanied William the Conqueror into England. The estate afterwards descended in regular succession to John Jocelyn, Esq., Auditor of the Augmentations at the Dissolution of the abbey by King Henry VIII.; he died in 1525, and was buried at Sabridgeworth church. Thomas the son and heir of the above John Jocelyn, Esq., was created a Knight of the Bath at the coronation of Edward VI., and died the fourth year of the reign of Elizabeth: from him descended Sir Robert Jocelyn, Knight, who was sheriff of this county in 1645: his eldest surviving son was created Baronet by King Charles II. June 8, 1665; he died in 1712, aged ninety, and was buried in the church. From Thomas, the third son of the first baronet of this family, descended Robert Jocelyn, who devoted himself to the study of the law, and became Lord Chancellor of Ireland in 1739: he died in 1756; a marble bust of him is in the church. His son Robert, the second Viscount Jocelyn, was further advanced to the title of Earl of Roden, of High Roding, in 1771: he died June 21, 1797, and was succeeded by Robert, the present Earl of Roden, K.P.

Pishobury, the seat of Mrs. Milles, is an ancient mansion, and is said to have been originally erected by Inigo Jones, but has been altered to its present appearance by Wyatt. In the drawing-room is a handsome marble chimney-piece, sculptured by Bacon. The house is approached by a fine serpentine avenue of trees, and stands in a very pleasant park, abounding with game, and encircled on the south and east sides by the river Stort, that here forms the division of the counties of Hertford and Essex, in a beautiful situation, upon a rising ground, commanding a prospect of a most fertile country, corn-fields and meadow-lands, interspersed with woods and copses, watered by the winding stream. The manor of Pishobury was anciently the property of the Mandevilles, Earls of Essex, from the time of the Conquest, whose heiress Beatrix conveyed it to William de Say; he granted it to Warine Fitz Gerald, a baron in the reign of John: at his death it was left by him to his two sons Warine and Henry, the last of which married Ermentruda, daughter and heir of Roger Talbot of Gainsborough, and by her had an only daughter and heiress Alice, married to Robert de L'Isle, who by that means came into possession of Pishobury, which descended to John his son and heir, one of the Knights Companions of the most noble Order of the Garter at its first institution by King Edward III. He died in the year 1356, and his son Robert de L'Isle sold this manor to Richard Lord Scroope of Bolton, in whose family it remained for a considerable period. Henry Lord Scroope, his descendant, in 1533 conveyed it to trustees for the use of King Henry VIII., by whom it was leased to John Chauncy, Esq. for a long term, at the yearly rent of 12*l*.

Before the period for which it was leased was expired Queen Elizabeth granted the manor of Pishobury to Walter Mildmay, Esq.; he was afterwards knighted by Her Majesty, and was sheriff of this county in 1589. He fixed his residence here, and "under the direction of that famous architect Inigo Jones built a noble mansion-house on a rising ground, in a vale near the river Stort." Sir Walter died February 24, 1606, and was buried in Sabridgeworth church.

Sir Thomas Mildmay, Knt., his son and heir, sold his seat and estate at Pishobury to Lionel Cranfield, Esq. in 1612, the 10th year of James I. After being knighted and chosen a privy-counsellor, Sir Lionel was created Baron of Cranfield in Bedfordshire July 9, 1621, and the year following, Earl of Middlesex and Lord Treasurer of England. In 1635 the Earl sold the manor to Thomas Hewitt, who was afterwards knighted, and was created a baronet by King Charles II. July 19, 1660. His son Sir George Hewitt, Bart. was advanced to the titles of Viscount Goran, and Baron of St. Jamestown in Ireland in 1689: he died the same year at the age of thirty-seven, when the titles became extinct. The Viscount Goran left his seat at Pishobury to Lady Arabella Wiseman his sister, who sold the estate to William Gardiner, Esq. His son and heir William left it to his son Edward Gardiner, Esq., whose sister Rose married Jeremiah Milles, Esq., and inherited the property on the decease of her brother. In the library at Pishobury is a bust of the late Jeremiah Milles, Esq., who died February 13, 1784, æt. 70.

STANDON, or Stanclow, on the river Rib, 6 miles N.W. from Ware, contains 269 houses, and 2135 inhabitants. Here is a market on Friday, and an annual fair on the 25th of April. A free-school was founded here in 1612. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 14*l*. 13*s*. 4*d*.: it contains a monument of Sir William Coffyn, master of the horse to Queen Jane, and high steward of all the liberty and manor of Standon, who died 8th December, 1533; and others of the Sadler family. Sir Ralph Sadler, knight banneret and keeper of the wardrobe to Queen Elizabeth, built Standon Hall, a noble edifice, in 1546. He died here in 1587, æt. 79, and was buried in the church: his monument was decorated with the King of Scotland's standard, which he took in the battle of Musselburgh. The transactions of his various embassies are recorded in a complete collection of his "State Papers and Letters," published in 1809 from MSS. in the possession of Arthur Clifford, Esq., his descendant, and relative of the Lords Aston of Forfar, who afterwards possessed this estate. It had anciently belonged to the abbey of Crowland; and Brithmen, abbot of that monastery in 1030, is recorded to have built here a stately house for the accommodation of his successors in their way to London.

STANSTEAD ABBOTS, 4 miles S.E. from Ware, contains 181 houses, and 950 inhabitants. It formerly belonged to the Abbots of Waltham, and has a free grammar-school, founded in 1635 by Sir Edward Baesh. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a vicarage, value 10*l*. Stanstead Bury is the seat of Capt. Jocelin. The Rye House was built by Andrew Ogard in the reign of Henry VI.: the gate-house only remains, and is now used as a workhouse for the parish. This house is remarkable as having given name to a plot for the assassination of the King, on his way from Newmarket, in 1683, in which the Duke of Monmouth, Lord William Russell, and others, were implicated.

THORLEY, or Thornley, 2 miles S.W. from Bishops Stortford, contains 71 houses, and 386 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a rectory, value 16*l*. 13*s*. 4*d*., in the patronage of the Bishop of London. Twyford is a hamlet of this parish, situated on the river Stort.

THUNDRIDGE, 2½ miles N.E. from Ware, contains 76 houses, and 529 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 6*l*., in the patronage of Trinity College Cambridge.

WARE, on the river Lea, 3 miles E. from Hertford, and 27 from London, contains 670 houses, and 3844 inhabitants. Here is a great trade in corn and malt; a well frequented market on Tuesday, and annual fairs on the last Tuesday in April; and on Tuesday before St. Matthew's day for pedlery and toys. The great bed of Ware, (a curious piece of furniture,) celebrated by Shakspeare and Jonson, is said to be still in being, and visible at one of the inns in the town: it is reported to be twelve feet square, and to be capable of holding twenty-four persons; but in order to accommodate that number it is evident that they must lie at top and bottom, with their feet meeting in the middle. Of the origin of this bed the account is not known. Shakspeare alluded to it in his Twelfth Night: "As many lies as will lie in thy sheet of paper, though the sheet were big enough for the bed of Ware." And at a much later period, Serjeant Kite describes the bed of honour as "a mighty large bed, bigger by half than the great bed of Ware," in Farquhar's comedy of the Recruiting Officer. Chauncy, in his History of the county, relates an extremely ludicrous story of certain citizens and their wives, on whom a trick was played by the host of the inn. The petty sessions are held here. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 20*l*. 10*s*. 0*d*., in the patronage of Trinity College Cambridge: it is a large cruciform edifice, containing several ancient monuments. Here were interred Elizabeth daughter of Gilbert de Clare Earl of Gloucester, founder of Clare Hall in Cambridge; and the accomplished Sir William Fanshaw, who was born and resided at Ware Park. The font also is remarkably curious for its sculpture. In the northern part of the town was a house of Gray or Franciscan friars, which in 1544 was granted to Thomas Birch. Chadwell Spring, near this town, is generally called the head of the New River, which, it appears by an inscribed stone, was opened in 1608, and is conveyed forty miles. The New River is certainly entitled to some notice in the description of place to which it is so great an ornament, and whence it is diffused by innumerable subterraneous channels to almost every part of the great metropolis. During the reign of Elizabeth and James, a number of schemes were projected for supplying the capital with water, the conduits resorted to for that purpose being now found insufficient to answer the increasing demands of an extending metropolis. In the early part of James's reign, the citizens procured "An Act for the bringing in a fresh stream of running water to the north part of the City of London." Mr. Hugh Myddelton, a native of Denbigh, and citizen and goldsmith of London, made an offer to the Court of Common Council, March 28, 1609, that he would begin this work within two months; the Court accepted his offer, and ordered that a letter of attorney should be made out from the Mayor and Common Council, and that indentures should be made and passed between them and him, which was done on the 21st of April. Being vested with ample powers from the City, this gentleman, with a spirit equal to the importance of the undertaking, at his own risk and charge began the work; but had not proceeded far, when innumerable and unforeseen difficulties presented themselves. The art of civil engineering was then little understood in this country; and he experienced many obstructions from the occupiers and proprietors of the lands through which he was under the necessity of conducting his stream. The distance of the springs of Chadwell and Amwell is 20 miles from London; but it was found necessary, in order to avoid the eminences and valleys in the way, to make it run a course of more than 38 miles. It was finished according to Mr. Myddelton's original agreement with the City, when, on September 29, 1613, the water was let into the bason, now called The New River Head, in the parish of Clerkenwell, which had been prepared for its reception.—Ware Park, the seat of Thomas Hope Hyde, Esq., occupies an eminence commanding the rich meadows that lie between this town and Hertford. The mansion is modern, but the park and pleasure-grounds possess all the advantages resulting from inequality of surface, abundance of water from the river Rib, fine plantations, and a very rich surrounding country. Pales is the seat of Sampson Hanbury, Esq.

WESTMILL, on the river Rib, 2 miles S. from Buntingford, contains 70 houses, and 415 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 20*l*.

WIDFORD, on the river Ash, 3 miles E. from Ware, contains 95 houses, and 461 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a rectory, value 12*l*. 13*s*. 4*d*., in the patronage of the Crown. Blakesware Park is northward of the village.

2. Broadwater Hundred

Is bounded on the north by a detached portion of Cashio hundred; on the north-east by Odsey hundred; on the east by Braughin hundred; on the south-east by Hertford hundred; on the south by detached parts of Cashio and Dacorum hundreds; and on the west by Cashio and Hitchin hundreds.

ASTON, 3 miles S.E. from Stevenage, contains 87 houses, and 509 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 26*l.* 11*s.* 8*d.*

AYOTT ST. LAWRENCE, 3 miles N.W. from Welwyn, contains 24 houses, and 160 inhabitants. The church is a rectory, value 8*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*: it was built by Sir Lionel Lyde, Bart., in 1778, from the designs of Nicholas Revett. The old church, now in ruins, contains several monuments: against the north wall is one to Nicholas Bristow and his wife, with their effigies, and likewise six sons and seven daughters; and an altar-tomb, on which were the arms of Bristow, on the south side, with the effigies of eight sons and four daughters; and the following inscription on brass: "Here lie the bodys of Nicholas Bristow, Esq., and Emma his wife, who served the noble princes Henry the Eight, King Edward, Queen Mary, and Queen Elizabeth, and died ann. 15—." The manor is now the property of the family of Lyde. Sir Lionel Lyde was created baronet Sept. 19, 1772. Ayott St. Lawrence is the seat of C. W. Dering, Esq.

AYOTT ST. PETER, 1½ mile S.W. from Welwyn, contains 50 houses, and 233 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 7*l.* 8*s.* 6½*d.*

BALDOCK, 19 miles N. from Hertford, and 37 miles from London, contains 286 houses, and 1550 inhabitants. It is indebted for its origin to the Knights Templars, who built a town here before the reign of Henry III. Baldock is situated near the source of the river Rhee, on the great north road, at its intersection with the Icknild Street; and is principally disposed on the roads from Hatfield to Biggleswade, and from Hitchin to Royston. This town is a great thoroughfare, and many of the inhabitants are extensively concerned in the corn and malting trades; the adjoining country being peculiarly calculated for the growth of barley. Besides considerable benefactions, here are six alms-houses well endowed. The market is on Thursday for the sale of corn, and the fairs are on March 7, the last Thursday in May, August 5, October 2, and December 11, for horses and cheese. The church, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, is a rectory, value 10*l.* 8*s.* 9*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown: it is a spacious and handsome structure, built about the fourteenth century, and occupying the site of a former church, erected in the reign of King Stephen by the Knights Templars. Baldock is the seat of Isaac Hindley, Esq.

BENNINGTON, 5 miles S.E. from Stevenage, contains 110 houses, and 658 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 19*l.* Here was a palace of the Mercian Kings, and a Council was held here in 850. The market is disused, but a fair is annually held on June 29. Bennington Park is the seat of the Right Hon. C. Yorke.

DATCHWORTH, 3½ miles N.E. from Welwyn, contains 99 houses, and 494 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 14*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of Clare Hall Cambridge.

DIGSWELL, 1½ mile S. from Welwyn, contains 36 houses, and 204 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Evangelist, is a rectory, value 7*l.* 4*s.* 2*d.* Digswell House is the seat of the Hon. Spencer Cowper.

GRAVELEY, 2 miles N. from Stevenage, contains 60 houses, and 316 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, with the chapel of Chesfield, value 12*l.* 0*s.* 10*d.* Chesfield Lodge is the seat of E. Parkins, Esq.

HATFIELD, 7½ miles S.W. from Hertford, and 19 miles from London, contains 584 houses, and 3215 inhabitants. The petty sessions for Hatfield division are held here. The market is on Thursday, and the fairs are on April 23 and October 18. The church, dedicated to St. Etheldreda, is a rectory, value 36*l.* 2*s.* 1*d.*, in the patronage of the Marquess of Salisbury: it consists of a nave, chancel, aisles, and embattled tower, with a chapel of the ancient Earls of Salisbury, on the north side of the chancel. In it is a monument of Robert Cecil, first Earl of Salisbury of that surname; it represents the Earl in his robes, lying on a slab of black marble, which is supported by figures, in white marble, of the cardinal Virtues kneeling. Beneath, on another slab of black marble, the Earl is represented as a skeleton, lying on a well sculptured mat in white marble. He died at Marlborough in May 1612, in his fiftieth year, and was buried here.

Hatfield House, the seat of the Marquess of Salisbury, is a large brick edifice, with enrichments of stone, consisting of a centre, projecting wings, and four turrets at the angles, which are surmounted by cupolas and vanes: in the centre is a colonnade of nine arches, and a lofty tower, adorned with three stories of columns of the Tuscan, Doric, and Composite orders; between the second are the arms of the family, with the date 1611.

The manor of Hatfield was anciently part of the revenue of the Saxon princes, and was bestowed by Edgar on the monastery of Ely; in whose possession it was at the time of the Conquest, and until that abbey was converted into a bishopric in the reign of Henry I.: it then became one of the residences of the prelates, and from that circumstance was called Bishop's Hatfield, to distinguish it from other places of the same name. The house probably fell into decay during the civil wars of York and Lancaster; for it appears that it was rebuilt and ornamented by Bishop Morton in the reign of Henry VII. A part of the ancient episcopal palace still remains, now used as offices to Hatfield House. The manor was alienated from the see of Ely by Queen Elizabeth. The palace had been an occasional royal residence, notwithstanding it was the property of the church. Queen Elizabeth resided here many years before she came to the crown; and on the death of her predecessor removed hence to take possession of the throne. Hatfield did not continue long a part of the royal demesne; for James I. in the fifth year of his reign exchanged it for Theobalds, with his minister Sir Robert Cecil, afterwards Earl of Salisbury, who built the magnificent house now standing; and inclosed two parks, one for red, the other for fallow deer.

The roof of the hall is supported from the sides with lions, each holding a shield of the Cecil arms. On the ceiling are compartments with profiles of the Cæsars. Over the fire-place is a large painting of a gray horse, given by Queen Elizabeth to Sir Robert Cecil; and two suits of armour stand on the entablature. The grand staircase is curiously carved, having on the newels the armorial supporters of the Cecils. The gallery is 162 feet long; in it is a very curious organ of the time of James I. Above the chimney-piece in the drawing-room is a very fine bronze statue of King James. The library is 58½ feet long by 26 wide, hung with the original gilt leather; over a marble chimney-piece is a portrait in mosaic of the first Earl of Salisbury, with gray hair, aged forty-eight. Numerous and valuable portraits adorn this splendid mansion.

Sir Robert Cecil, youngest son of Lord Burghley, was by James I. created Baron Essenden, and afterwards Viscount Cranbourn and Earl of Salisbury. The late peer was created a Marquess August 10, 1789. His Lordship was born in 1748, and married in 1773 Lady Mary Emily Hill, second daughter of Wills Marquess of Downshire and has issue James Brownlow William Gascoigne, the present Marquess of Salisbury, High Steward of Hertford, &c. The late Marquess united the two parks, which had before been separated by the great north road; and removed the ancient walls with which the house was surrounded. Bush Hall is the seat of Sir Robert Chester. Camfield Place is the seat of — Panther, Esq. Sir John Boteler of Woodhall was created a baronet April 12, 1620. Brockct Hall, the seat of Lord Melbourne, occupies the site of a more ancient structure that formerly belonged to the family of the Brockets; it was built about the middle of the last century by the late Sir Matthew Lamb, who was created a baronet January 4, 1755, from designs by James Paine, architect, under whose superintendence a bridge has been thrown over a spacious sheet of water formed by the river Lea, which flows through the grounds. The park is very extensive, and in it for several successive years His late Majesty, when Prince of Wales, was entertained with horse-racing. The principal apartments are adorned with a collection of pictures by the first masters; there are some portraits by Sir Joshua Reynolds, amongst which is a whole length of His late Majesty when 19 years of age, represented standing by the side of his charger.

KNEBWORTH, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles N. from Welwyn, contains 32 houses, and 266 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 13*l.* 1*s.* 10½*d.*; it contains many monuments of the ancient lords of the manor, chiefly in the north aisle near the chancel: amongst them are, a slab to Sir John Hotoft, treasurer of the household to Henry VI.; the tomb of Rowland Lytton, Esq., ob. 1582; Sir Nicholas Strode, Knight, ob. 1707; Sir William Lytton, ob. 1704; Strode Lytton, Esq., the heir general of the estate, ob. 1710: the three last monuments are the work of Edward Stanton of London. Knebworth House is the seat of Mrs. Bulwer Lytton. The entrance to the park is a portion of the old building, of the time of Elizabeth; over the arch of the gatehouse is the following inscription: "This lodge was built to commemorate the ancient gateway or lodge which stood in front of Knebworth House before it was altered, of which this is the representation; the stones of the archway having been numbered, that they might be replaced as before. Erected A.D. 1816, by Mrs. Bulwer Lytton."

The mansion stands on a lofty eminence at the south-western extremity of the park, which is extensive and finely wooded; it has its principal front to the east, commanding a beautiful view of diversified scenery: this has been lately rebuilt by Mrs. Bulwer Lytton, widow of the late General Bulwer, of Haydon Hall, Norfolk, in a style of architecture corresponding with the ancient seat, and enrichments characteristic of the period of Henry VIII. The rooms are spacious and handsome, particularly the great hall and the principal drawing-room, at the entrance of which are two marble columns. The present proprietor has erected a mausoleum after an Italian design. Two distinguished members of this family are now in Parliament.

LETCHWORTH, 3 miles N.E. from Hitchin, contains 8 houses, and 76 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 11*l.* 1*s.* 10½*d.*

GREAT MUNDEN, or Mundon Furnival, 4 miles S. from Buntingford, contains 67 houses, and 515 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a rectory, value 21*l.* 9*s.* 7*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

LITTLE MUNDEN, or Mundon Frewell, 5½ miles S. from Buntingford, contains 98 houses, and 464 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 15*l.*

SACOMB, or Sevechampe, 4 miles N. from Ware, contains 58 houses, and 941 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 10*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.* Sacomb Park is the seat of George Caswall, Esq.

STEVENAGE, 12½ miles N.W. from Hertford, and 31 miles from London, contains 343 houses, and 1664 inhabitants. It is pleasantly situated on the high north road, and consists of one large and several smaller streets. In the town are a free grammar-school and an alms-house. In the vicinity are six large barrows lying in a row. The petty sessions for Stevenage division are held here. The market is on Wednesday, and the fairs are nine days before Easter, nine days before Whit-Sunday, July 15, and the first Friday in September. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a rectory, value 33*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* Elm Wood is the seat of James Lucas, Esq.

TOTTERIDGE, 1½ mile S. from Barnet, containing 64 houses, and 490 inhabitants, is locally situated in Cashio hundred. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a curacy. Totteridge Park is the seat of E. Arrowsmith, Esq.

WALKERN, 3½ miles E. from Stevenage, contains 132 houses, and 631 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 20*l.* 1*s.* 10½*d.*, in the patronage of King's College Cambridge. Jane Wenham of this village was convicted of witchcraft in 1712, but was afterwards pardoned.

WATTON, 5½ miles N. from Hertford, contains 153 houses, and 812 inhabitants. Here is a free-school. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary and St. Andrew, is a rectory, value 19*l.* 8*s.* 6½*d.* Watton Woodhall, the seat of Samuel Smith, Esq., occupies one of the finest situations in the county, standing on an eminence in a noble park that is finely diversified by hill and dale, and watered by several small streams which flow into the river Beane in its passage through the grounds: the woods are extensive, and many of the trees are of considerable magnitude and luxuriant growth.

WELWYN, 7½ miles N.W. from Hertford, contains 215 houses, and 1287 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 21*l.*, in the patronage of All Souls' College Oxford: this was the residence and burial-place of Dr. Edward Young; here his "Night Thoughts" were composed. Here is a mineral spring. Lockleys is the seat of Sir G. Shee, Bart. St. John's Lodge is the seat of — Blake, Esq.

WESTON, 4 miles N.E. from Stevenage, contains 167 houses, and 927 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is a vicarage, value 10*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* Sir Thomas Puckering, of Weston, was created baronet November 25, 1612.

WILLIAN, 3 miles E. from Hitchin, contains 48 houses, and 269 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 5*l.*

GREAT WYMONDLEY, or Wimundesley, 2 miles S.E. from Hitchin, contains 58 houses, and 329 inhabitants. It is a curacy. This manor is held by the service of presenting the King with the first cup that he shall drink at the coronation feast: the lord of the manor claims to have the said cup, which is of silver gilt, as his fee. Colonel Cracherode, who purchased the estate of the Grosvenor family, performed this service at the coronation of George III. On the estate is a remarkable chestnut tree.

LITTLE WYMONDLEY, or Wimundesley, 2½ miles S.E. from Hitchin, contains 37 houses, and 227 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a curacy, in the patronage of Trinity College Cambridge. An hospital, or small priory of Black canons, was built here by Richard Argentein, temp. Henry III., to the honour of St. Lawrence: it was rated in 1534 at 37*l.* 10*s.* 6*d.*, and granted in 1537 to James Nedeham, surveyor of the King's works.

3. Cashio Hundred, or Liberty of St. Albans,

Is bounded on the north by Dacorum hundred; on the east by Broadwater hundred; on the south by the county of Middlesex; and on the west by Dacorum hundred and Buckinghamshire. This hundred also contains several detached portions in other parts of the county, all which formerly belonged to the abbey of St. Albans.

ABBOTS LANGLEY, 5 miles S.E. from Hemel Hempstead, contains 341 houses, and 1733 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is a vicarage, value 15*l.* Before the Conquest, and till the Dissolution of the monasteries, this place belonged to the abbots of St. Albans, whence the prefix to its name; and about the time of Henry I. Nicholas Breakspear, born in this village, was advanced to be cardinal, and at length became Pope, by the name of Adrian IV.; he died in 1158.

ALDENHAM, 3 miles E. from Watford, contains 242 houses, and 1399 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Theobalds-street. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a vicarage, value 24*l.* Sir Job Harby of Aldenham was created baronet July 17, 1660.

BARNET, or Chipping Bergnet, 11 miles N. from London, contains 280 houses, and 1755 inhabitants. It is situated on the highest hill in the county, and on that account is called High Barnet. The town had the privilege of a market, granted to the abbots of St. Albans, by King Henry II., whence the prefix of "Chipping." The market is held on Monday, and there are fairs on the 8th, 9th, and 10th of April, for linen, toys, &c., and on the 4th, 5th, and 6th of September, called the harvest fair, for cattle and horses. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a curacy. Here is a free-school, built by Queen Elizabeth. From its situation, the town is exceedingly healthy, and the neighbouring country is noted for abundance of excellent hay. The parish possesses a most extensive common-right over Enfield Chase. Eastward of the town, and near the race-ground on Barnet Common, is a mineral spring, formerly much frequented. The battle of Barnet, April 5, 1471, was fought upon Gladesmore Heath, near the junction of the St. Albans and Hatfield roads, where in 1740 an obelisk was erected to commemorate the defeat and death of the Earl of Warwick.

EAST BARNET, 2 miles S.E. from the above, contains 92 houses, and 507 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 22*l.* 2*s.* 8*d.* Belmont is the seat of—Raikes, Esq.; Oak Hill, of Sir Simon Clarke, Bart.; Oak Lodge, of Ch. Hoggart, Esq.; and South Lodge, of —Box, Esq.

BRAINTFIELD, 3 miles N. from Hertford, contains 34 houses, and 232 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a rectory, value 11*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*

CODICOTE, 2 miles N. from Welwyn, contains 144 houses, and 795 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Giles, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 5*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Ely.

HEXTON, in a detached portion of this hundred, 5 miles W. from Hitchin, contains 55 houses, and 338 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Faith, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*

ELSTREE, or Idlestree, 3 miles N. from Edgeware, contains 58 houses, and 309 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a rectory, value 8*l.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

NEWNHAM, in a detached portion of this hundred, 3 miles N. from Baldock, contains 15 houses, and 112 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Vincent, is a vicarage, value 5*l.*: it contains the monument of Sir William Dyer, Bart., ob. 1680.

NORTHAW, in a detached portion of this hundred, 4 miles N.E. from Barnet, contains 109 houses, and 566 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Thomas à Becket, is a curacy; it was rebuilt by William Strode, Esq., who died in 1809, and was the first person deposited amidst the newly raised walls. Sir William Leman, of Northaw, was created baronet March 3, 1665.

NORTON, in a detached portion of this hundred, 2 miles W. from Baldock, contains 64 houses, and 313 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*

PAUL'S WALDEN, or Abbots Walden, 5½ miles S. from Hitchin, contains 179 houses, and 906 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 10*l.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's Cathedral. Sir Jonathan Keate, of the Hoo, in this parish, was created baronet June 12, 1660. The Hoo is now the seat of Lord Dacre.

REDBOURN, 5 miles N.W. from St. Albans, contains 317 houses, and 1784 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 16*l.* 5*s.*, in the patronage of the Earl of Verulam. A priory, founded here before 1195, was granted after the Dissolution in 1539 to John Cock.

RICKMANSWORTH, on the river Gade, 4 miles W. from Watford, contains 663 houses, and 3940 inhabitants. The situation of this town in the vicinity of several streams is advantageous to manufactures requiring the aid of water, and several large mills have been erected in its neighbourhood. The Grand Junction canal also passes near it. The town is governed by two constables and two headboroughs, and has a market on Saturday; formerly more celebrated for its corn trade than at present. The fairs are July 20 and November 24, for cattle, horses and sheep; and on the Saturday before the third Monday in September for hiring servants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 16*l.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of London; it contains the monument of Henry Carey Earl of Monmouth, ob. 1639, and others of his family. Sir Thomas White, founder of St. John's College Oxford, was born here. Moor Park, the seat of the Marquess of Westminster, is finely diversified and well wooded, including almost every species of timber; the gardens are celebrated for the Moor Park apricot, originally planted here by Lord Anson. This splendid mansion, rebuilt from designs by Leoni, and superintended by Sir James Thornhill, is of the Corinthian order, and the interior displays an air of grandeur and princely magnificence. The views from the southern front are contracted, but on the north is a most extensive prospect, opening upon a fertile vale, animated by the meanderings of the Gade and Colne rivers, and the towns of Rickmansworth and Watford. This delightful view was obtained by lowering a hill, at a great expense; which circumstance has been satirized by Pope, in his Moral Essays, in more severe than just terms. Micklefield House is the seat of J. Clutterbuck, Esq. The Grove, a demesne within the manor of Caroland, the ancient seat of the Heydons, was sold in 1753 to the Hon. Thomas Villiers, second and youngest son of William, second Earl of Jersey; he was created Lord Hyde of Hindon, in Wiltshire, in 1756, and Earl of Clarendon 8th June 1776. On the 16th July 1782, he received His Majesty's permission to accept an honour conferred on him by Frederic III., King of Prussia, that he and his issue, male and female, should bear the eagle of Prussia as a mantle to their arms. His lordship married Charlotte, eldest surviving daughter of William Capel, third Earl of Essex, by Jane, eldest daughter of Henry Hyde, Earl of Clarendon and Rochester. By her he had issue three sons and one daughter, Thomas Villiers Hyde, John Charles Villiers, George Villiers, and Charlotta Barbara. His lordship died December 11, 1786, and was succeeded in his title and estate by his eldest son Thomas Villiers Hyde, second earl, who was succeeded by his brother, the Hon. John Charles Villiers, the present Earl of Clarendon.

RIDGE, 4 miles N.W. from Barnet, contains 56 houses, and 390 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*

SAINT ALBANS, 12 miles W. from Hertford, and 21 miles from London, contains 729 houses, and 4472 inhabitants, exclusive of part of the parishes of St. Michael and St. Peter. This town is situated on the river Ver or Muse, occupying an eminence, and having the principal streets disposed on the plan of a cross, formed by the roads from Barnet to Dunstable, and from Watford to Luton. The market is on Saturday, at which very great quantities of grain are sold, particularly wheat; and there are annual fairs March 25 and 26, and October 10 and 11, for horses, cattle and sheep. The town was incorporated by Edward VI., and is governed by a mayor, ten capital burgesses, a steward, chamberlain, recorder, town-clerk, and other officers. The liberty of St. Albans has a gaol-delivery on the Thursday after the quarter session at Hertford. The borough returns two members to Parliament, a privilege confirmed by Edward VI.; the right of election being vested in the mayor, aldermen, freemen, and housekeepers paying scot and lot, amounting to about 1000. The present members are Sir Francis Vincent and Richard Godson, Esq. The town contains three parishes.

The venerable abbey church was made parochial by Edward VI., and is a vicarage, value 10*l.*, in the patronage of the mayor and burgesses. It is one of the most remarkable edifices in the kingdom, as well as one of the earliest. Monastic foundations had their origin in this country about the time of St. Augustine, who came from Rome to convert the Pagan Saxons to the religion of Christ. And when Offa ascended the throne of Mercia, in 755, about twenty great monasteries had been founded in England, and about the same number of episcopal sees established. Offa's zeal prompted him to do what many of his crowned predecessors had done before him; but being undetermined whom to select as the patron saint of his establishment, while he was at the city of Bath, it is recorded that an angel appeared to him in the silence of the night, and admonished him to raise out of the earth the body of Alban, the first British martyr under the Dioclesian persecution, and place his remains in a suitable shrine. Even the memory of Alban had been lost for 340 years: but the King assembling his clergy and people at Verulam, they commenced their search for his body with prayer, fasting and aims; when a ray of fire was seen by all to stand over the place of burial, like the star that conducted the Magi to Bethlehem. The ground was opened, and in the presence of Offa the body of the proto-martyr Alban was found. The King is said to have placed a circle of gold round the skull of the deceased, with an inscription to signify his name and time, and immediately caused the remains of the saint to be conveyed to a small chapel without the walls of Verulam, as the town was then called, until a more noble edifice could be raised. This transaction is stated to have occurred on the 1st of August in 791, 494 years after the suffering of Alban. The King afterwards made a journey to Rome, to procure the desired privileges of his intended foundation, which the Pope granted, with great commendations of his zeal and piety; when he undertook to build a stately church and monastery to the memory of St. Alban, and that same year he set about the work.

The principal endowment made by Offa was his manor and palace of Winslow, in Buckinghamshire, for which estate he procured the singular privilege of exemption from the tax of Romescot, or Peterpence. Willgod, a very religious man, who was born of a noble family, and related to the King, was placed over the whole body as the first abbot or superior.

At the death of Offa, in 794, Willgod was in complete possession of this new government, and had established the rule of his house. One hundred monks had been selected out of other religious houses, chiefly from that of Bec, in Normandy, and were now under the vow and obligation of the order of St. Benedict, which compelled them to live in the observance of the most rigid chastity, to have no possessions of their own, and to pay obedience to their abbot. Their dress was a long black garment, loose and ungirded, beneath which they wore a close white tunic of woollen, and a hair shirt, a cowl hung back on their shoulders, and their legs were covered with boots. In their diet they were compelled to abstain from all flesh, except when sick. The abbots, who continued to preside over this ancient and royal foundation, until the Dissolution, were in number forty. By grant from Pope Adrian IV. they took precedence of all others in England. Richard Boreman, the last abbot, who had been prior of Norwich, was chosen by the royal interest, being appointed only to present an appearance of abbatial rule and government, and to enact with a better grace the intentions of the King and Parliament, which had now been brought to maturity. On December 5, 1539, Sir Thomas Pope, accompanied by the King's visitors, came to the abbey, when Boreman, on sight of their warrant, immediately signed his resignation, and delivered up the abbey seal, thus giving up the possession of a revenue, estimated at about £2500 per annum, according to Speed. Boreman obtained an annual pension of 200*l.* 1*5s.* 4*d.*, the prior 50*l.* 5*s.* 8*d.*, and thirty-eight monks smaller sums. Sir Richard Lee, Knight, February 5, 1540, obtained a grant of the site of the monastery, together with the church of St. Andrew, as a recompense for arrears of pay due for military services. The King had reserved in his hands the whole abbey church, which was still used as a place of worship, but remained in the possession of the Crown until the charter of incorporation given to the town of St. Albans in 1553 by Edward VI., at which time the King sold it to the townsmen for 400*l.* Before this charter was granted, Sir Richard Lee had actually pulled down and sold the principal part of the materials of the venerable monastery and all its buildings. The most perfect view of this stately edifice is obtained from the meadows on the south side of the abbey. It is constructed in the form of a cross, extending from east to west 330 feet; and from the extremity of the north transept to that of the south, the church occupies 174 feet: the height of the centre tower is considered to be 144 feet: the material of which the fabric is constructed is various; much of the old part is brick, or tile plastered; stone and flint is also used. The church does not stand precisely true to the point of the compass, but the channel end inclines considerably towards the south, which circumstance is by no means uncommon. The most ancient part of the building is evidently that towards the centre, which may be with certainty assigned to the Norman abbot Paul, who was appointed, through the interest of his kinsman, Lanfranc, to the monastery in 1077, the twelfth year of the reign of William the Conqueror. Matthew Paris, a monk of St. Albans, positively states that the present church was begun to be erected, and a great part of the edifice built, by Paul, during the first eleven years of his rule, and that it was dedicated by his successor Abbot Richard d'Aubery, in 1115, the sixteenth year of the reign of Henry I. Archbishop Lanfranc was a great benefactor to the abbey; he not only assisted Paul with large sums to rebuild his church, but endowed the same with lands and manors.

John de Stodham, the twenty-first abbot, in the reign of King John, commenced the rebuilding of the west front, and received of his predecessor Abbot Warren one hundred marks for that purpose. The work, however, proceeded but slowly, and was at length completed by his successor in the abbacy, William de Trumpington, who also made additions to the centre tower, and erected substantial buttresses from the foundation up to the battlements, thereby strengthening the walls, and increasing the beauty of its appearance. He at the same time enlarged the windows at the ends of the transepts, adding so much light, that the church assumed a more splendid appearance, and seemed wholly re-edified under his care.

The tower is divided into three stories, and is supported at the angles by massive buttresses, which terminate in circular turrets, the whole embattled and surmounted by a small taper spire,—a peculiar feature in the churches of this country. The first story of the tower below the battlements contains on each face two double windows within a semicircular-headed arch, the upper part of which is filled with triangular billets, having open spaces between them. In this part of the tower the bells are hung. Below this is a series of four arches, each divided by short massive columns, forming a kind of open gallery, intended to lighten the appearance of the tower, which below this compartment is nearly plain. The transepts are evidently of the same era as the centre tower, with the exception of the large windows at the ends, which we have noticed to have been subsequently added. On the south side were originally situated the cloisters, and the residences of the monks, the grand entrance to the abbey from Sopewell being anciently on the south-east: nine pointed arches indicating the extent of the cloisters, remain on the south wall of the nave of the church. In the clerestory is a series of lancet-headed arches, extending to the west end, which it is most probable were originally glazed. Few windows now appear, and those are irregular in their forms and various in their dates.

The west front of the abbey church still bears an imposing and dignified character, though deprived of much of its ornamental particulars. This portion of the building was completed in the latter end of the reign of King John. A bold pointed arch of entrance leads to a deep porch or Gallilee, within which is the door in two divisions finely carved. The interior of the porch is divided by slender pillars of Sussex marble, supporting sharp-pointed arches and other tracery,—a fine specimen of the early pointed style. The moulding of the large outer arch terminates in two human heads, and above it are sculptured the arms of the abbey, and of Offa King of Mercia, the founder. Two porches, which formerly opened from the west front to the north and south sides, are now stopped up on the exterior: they also are constructed in the early pointed style, and exhibit some fine detached columns of Petworth marble, with rich foliated capitals, &c. Over the porch is the great west window.

From the great arch which supports the tower to the west end of the church are twelve piers or columns on each side, and thirteen arches, each about twelve feet in span.

The four arches on the north side towards the west are supported on a cluster of stone columns attached to an octangular pier, and are pointed. These are constructed in the style of the thirteenth century, and may be assigned to the Abbot John de Stodham, whose work was completed by his successor William de Trumpington; while the continuation eastward, of massive piers supporting plain semicircular arches, marks the earlier period of the Norman abbot Paul. On the south side of the nave the same variety in the architecture is observed. Over the large arches is a triforium or gallery, composed of a range corresponding with the lower, and over that a third range of arches, which rises to the roof; the piers are fitted in the upper compartment.

The lower part of the great west window is now stopped up: like the tier above it, it was in nine divisions, which are again subdivided into eighteen towards the top of the window. No painted glass is remaining; but we may well suppose it was originally adorned with that splendid material. On the south side of the entrance is a small altar to the memory of Francis Carter Niccoll, who died June 1, 1782, æt. 58; and others of his family.

The relling of the nave is boarded, and was the work of Abbot Withemsted in 1428. The ribs form by their intersection square compartments, and are supported on trusses of very coarse workmanship; the whole is painted. Within each panel is a wreath inclosing the initials W. H. C. in large white letters. Near the second column from the west, in the pavement, is a marble slab with indents of a figure, the brass of which is now gone, said to be a memorial of the celebrated Sir John Mandeville, a native of this town, who travelled into Tartary, &c. about the year 1322. The relation of his voyages entitled Itinerarius à Terra Angliæ ad Partes Ierosolymitanis, 4to, Liege 1455, abounds with curious matter blended with extravagant fictions. He died in 1371.

Some of the arches in the nave vary considerably in their decoration from those previously described, as well as from the arches on the north or opposite side of St. Cuthbert's screen, which crosses the nave at the entrance of the choir, where they are found to be plain and semicircular, springing from massive piers constructed of brick, or, as it is called, Roman tile, plastered over: this tile is of exquisite hardness, surpassing stone in durability, but bearing no ornament whatever. On the contrary the columns and arches in the east end of the nave are embellished with very bold and rich mouldings, terminating in finely sculptured heads of an abbot, a king, a queen, and a bishop: above them is a string course ornamented with roses, and above the columns are shields of arms bearing the insignia of the Abbey, of Mercia, of England, of Edward the Confessor, and of France. Above the larger arches is a series of ornamented arches springing from clustered columns, the capitals of which are sculptured into foliage, and the spandrils pierced. The arches of the third, or upper range, are also pointed and decorated in a similar manner: this portion is constructed of Tottenhoe stone, as is also St. Cuthbert's screen, which is recorded to have been erected upon the following occasion: Richard D'Aubeny, fifteenth abbot, being present at Durham when the body of St. Cuthbert was there deposited, was restored to health by miracle. On his return to St. Albans he built this choir screen, and adjoining to it, on the west side, a chapel, dedicated to St. Cuthbert. The western side of the screen is adorned with canopies terminating in rich finials, below which are niches, and on the south side a piscina; at each end of the screen are pointed arched doorways, opening in that part of the choir called the baptistry, from the font being placed there. On the north side of the screen appear the remains of an altar and a piscina; the whole has been mutilated, and the parts obscured by whitewash. Originally the shrine of their patron saint St. Alban, elevated behind the great altar, was visible to the view of the whole choir and congregation from this part. The organ of the church is now placed over it. The monument in the south aisle is to the memory of William Atkinson of Doncaster, who died January 25, 1763, æt. 30, &c.; near which is a mural monument to John Thrane, Esq., who died May 15, 1704, with busts of him and of his wife Margaret: on the opposite side of the aisle is a tablet to W. King of Fineshade, who died May 10, 1766. The roof, at the west end of the south aisle, is of open timber, but towards the east end it is groined with stone; the windows are pointed, and in two divisions. The outer wall of the north aisle is of Norman architecture; but pointed windows have been subsequently inserted, differing in style from those on the south, and still containing a few fragments of painted glass, chiefly armorial.

The western part of the choir exhibits in a prominent manner the earliest portion of the architecture of this noble pile, consisting of the interior of the great centre tower, at the intersection of the transepts: the four vast and unadorned piers of Roman tile that support the fabric are surmounted by large semicircular arches, above which is a range of small arches with double openings to a gallery round the tower under the belfry. The ceiling is of groined timber, and is painted in a florid pattern; in the centre is a circular opening with wooden balustrades. The large piers have been deprived of a portion of their bases to admit of the pews, erected about the time of Charles II.: opposite the pulpit are hung the achievements of the late Earl and Countess Spencer.

Both the transepts are of Anglo-Norman architecture, similar in character to the centre tower. In the arched recesses, which appear on each side of the south transept, were formerly chapels, with altars to the Holy Mary, St. Simeon, Thomas de la Mare, and St. John: in that of St. Simeon are the remains of three stone coffins, dug up some years ago. The large south window was demolished in a violent storm that happened in the year 1703, when its place was filled by the wooden frame now remaining. In the wall beneath the window is an ancient oak door, with curiously worked iron hinges, opening to a short covered passage, leading most probably to the Abbot's chambers, which were formerly near the cloisters: at this end, and on the west side, are some monuments. On the floor are many slabs, with indents of portraits, arms and legends, from which the brasses appear to have been long since removed.

In the north transept the large end window is divided by stone transoms and mullions into seven divisions, three in the centre, and two on each side, and is really handsome: the arch, considering its early date, is rather flat. In this part of the church were formerly altars to St. Hugh, St. Patern, the Apostles, and also the shrine of St. Amphibal. The body of St. Amphibal, the instructor of St. Alban, was found in 1178, and brought from Redbourn to the abbey, where it was preserved, inclosed in a shrine on the north side of the high altar. It was afterwards moved from the apsis of the church to this aisle, in the time of Abbot Trumpington. The martyrdom of Amphibal is painted, in colours now considerably faded, on the centre of the roof; in the other divisions is a series of arms of the principal baronial families in the kingdom. Arms also form the decoration of the ceiling of the south transept. Against the north and west walls of this transept are several monuments. The altar-screen, erected in the reign of Edward IV., by Abbot Wallingford, is a most beautiful specimen of the florid style of architecture; it was intended to veil the shrine of St. Alban, which formerly stood in the presbytery behind the high altar, and to be the means of creating a new degree of respect and veneration for the patron saint, whose relics, about the time of its erection, were visited with greater solemnity, and allowed to be seen but rarely. Although it is generally called Wallingford's screen, there can be little doubt that it was originally designed by Abbot Whethamsted, whose armorial badge is sculptured upon it: it is also surmised that the screen was begun to be erected in the abbacy of Alban, and was completed by Abbot Wallingford about the year 1480; the expense of the whole, which is entirely composed of stone, including the statues, with which it was formerly adorned, was 1100 marks. The workmanship is certainly of the choicest kind; and though a considerable alteration has been made in the centre, or principal compartments, the design is altogether so pure, and the general effect so little injured by the partial mutilation, that it now remains one of the noblest efforts of skill, and a triumphant display of the inimitable excellences of that peculiar style of architecture in which it is constructed, decidedly the most appropriate to the situation where it is placed. The communion-table is of very ancient date, and is inscribed with the names of the four Evangelists, in old English characters: above it is painted the Decalogue, with the Lord's Prayer and Creed. That part of the screen, immediately over it, consists of a series of twelve small canopies, surmounting pedestals, in niches: over these is the large space before alluded to, consisting of paneling, loaded with crockets; besides which, at the spring of the arches below the middle transom, are cherubim heads. Five very rich canopies form the summit of this division of the screen, the centre supported by a console or bracket. In each side division of the screen is a pointed arched door-way, over one of which are sculptured the arms of Whethamsted, and over the other, the arms of France and England quarterly. Three tiers of large canopied niches, on each side, originally held sixteen statues, which assemblage of varied figures must have produced a most imposing and gorgeous effect. The screen is more lofty than is usual in similar works of art, and is crowned by a rich projecting moulding, boldly sculptured with foliage, terminated above by a very delicate open work parapet, minute in its ornaments, and like the rest of this splendid production of masonic skill in singular preservation.

On the south side of the chancel, close to the altar-screen, is the monument of John Whethamsted, abbot of this monastery, who died January 20, 1460, in the last year of the reign of Henry VI. His paternal name was Bostock; but according to a custom amongst ecclesiastics, he received the appellation of Whethamsted, from the place of his birth, and became one of the most famous in the annals of this royal foundation. He was educated at Gloucester College Oxford, of which he was prior, when he was elected to the rule and government of St. Albans, on the resignation of Abbot Heyworth in 1421. The roof of the choir bears evident marks of having been erected during his government: between the groins are alternately painted the eagle of St. Matthew and the Agnus Dei; and over the great eastern arch of the tower appear the arms of the abbey, azure, a saltier or, supported by the lamb and the eagle, and surmounted by a crown, over which is inscribed Domine, miserere. On the dexter side is a shield bearing gules, three crowns or, the arms of Mercia; and on the sinister, another shield, bearing quarterly gules and or, four lions rampant counter changed. Below, upon a large scroll, are these lines, alluding to Whethamsted, who was the sixth abbot of the name of John :

*Sic ubicunque vides sit pictus ut agnus et ales
Effigies operis secti Patris ista Johannis
Esse vel in toto fuisse vel infaciendo
Est opus hoc unum causabit eum faciendu.*

In 1440, after he had ruled the abbey of St. Albans twenty years, he resigned the mitre, and on the 26th of November in that year, John Stoke, prior of Wallingford, was appointed his successor; but upon his death, in 1451, Whethamsted was unanimously re-chosen. On the south-side of the altar is the beautiful monumental chapel which Abbot Whethamsted, in contemplation of his latter end, caused to be erected: it occupies the space beneath one of the great arches of the choir. The richly ornamented canopy forming the roof is supported by a flatly-pointed arch, the soffit of which is adorned with pendants terminating in small armorial bosses, delicately wrought, bearing the badges of the rose within the garter; the rose en soleil, &c. &c. Within this oratory the abbot had provided for the due celebration of masses for the welfare of his soul. The large gray marble slab which covered his remains has been deprived of the brass containing his portrait; but, with the exception of this mutilation, the chapel is still in fine preservation, and is one of those objects that will always render the church of St. Albans interesting to persons of taste as well as to the antiquary. Immediately above the arch, on the outer face of the monument, is a very bold floriated cornice, upon which are three large shields of arms, those of Abbot Whethamsted between those of the Abbey and of the kingdom of Mercia. The moulding is also sculptured with the abbot's badge, three ears of wheat, several times repeated, accompanied by his motto in large letters, Clares habundant.

On the north side of the chancel is a very beautiful sepulchral chapel, which would do credit to the first architect of any period of English history: it is a singularly fine specimen of the scientific taste, that the ecclesiastical rulers of the monastic institutions are sometimes found to have possessed and encouraged. In this chantry, which has been suffered to remain in good preservation, all the sculptured allusions refer to the name or office of the abbot to be commemorated, of whose personal history little is now known. Thomas Ramryge was elected to the abbacy in the year 1492, the eighth of the reign of Henry VII.: his appellation is supposed to have been derived from Ramryge, a place so called about eight miles hence, where it is not improbable he was born; and it is imagined that he continued abbot till the year 1523, which is assigned by Newcombe as the time of his death, although the precise date is not known. After that period Cardinal Wolsey held the abbey in commendam. This chapel Ramryge undoubtedly caused to be erected in his lifetime, and provided that his obit might be commemorated, and periodical masses be established for his soul's welfare: his pious intentions however were but transient in effect; for soon after the Reformation his chantry appears to have been seized upon, and appropriated by a wealthy attorney of the town as a burial-place for his family.

This chapel is inclosed by a beautiful open screen, in four principal compartments, upon the side next the chancel, in one of which is the door, inscribed, Mortuum vadam ad portas inferi. In the small spandrels of the arch of entrance are sculptured very curious representations of the martyrdom of St. Alban and St. Amphibal, according to the monastic legends. The lower part of the monumental screen is panelled with ornamental enrichments, and above the somewhat flatly-pointed arches of the principal story is a bold and broad moulding, bearing shields of the royal arms, with the dragon and greyhound for supporters; others are charged with emblems of the Crucifixion: one shield bears, quarterly four lions rampant, which is supported by two rams, holding each a crozier; above the moulding rises a series of pointed arches, open between the mullions, and enriched with floriated pinnacles, &c.

The interior of this sepulchral chantry or oratory is superlatively rich in sculptured ornaments, most delicately wrought; the ceiling is adorned with pendants, and is divided into compartments by minute tracery, ramifying in elegant forms; at the west end, against the wall, is the full armorial escutcheon of Abbot Ramryge. By what authority these ecclesiastical cognizances were assumed cannot now probably be explained; but it remains a proof that ARMES PARLANTES were adopted as early as the incorporation of the college of arms. The field bears, on a bend coupé three imperial eagles, between a lion rampant in chief, and a ram salient in base, supported by two rams collared, and with the letters r p* g* z*, and roses upon the collars. Rams' heads, the above letters, and other allusions to the name of the abbot, are also frequently repeated amongst the great diversity of ornamental decoration with which this beautiful chapel is profusely covered. Besides these two splendid monuments, there are now left very few memorials of the successive powerful abbots of St. Albans. Some marble slabs in the pavement of the chancel and choir still retain portraits en creux, partially concealed by pews; others, not bearing inscriptions, their particular designation being recorded by tradition only. Roger Norton, ob. 1290; John Berkhamstead, ob. 1301, and John Maryns, ob. 1308, were buried in the choir, under slabs of marble inlaid with brass.

One of the most remarkable specimens of this description of memorial in the kingdom has been removed within these few years from the chancel into the presbytery at the east end of the church; it consists of one entire piece of metal the whole size of the large slab, upon the surface of which it was bedded with pitch. This very curious relic presents a spirited intagliated portrait of Abbot Thomas De la Mare, an ecclesiastic, of noble parentage, being son of Sir John De la Mare, Knt.; he was elected to the abbacy of St. Albans in the year 1349, the twenty-fourth of Edward III., previously to which he had been Prior of Tynemouth, in Northumberland, and had been entrusted with the custody of the Earl of Douglas, taken prisoner at the battle of Neville's Cross. After he had ruled this monastery forty-seven years, he died in 1396, æt. 88; his figure is represented clothed in the richest sacerdotal vestments, having his mitre on his head, and bearing his pastoral staff in his left hand; he is standing enthroned under a very rich canopy, containing numerous saints in niches. Behind the rich altar-screen is a part of the church called the presbytery, in the centre of which formerly stood the gorgeous shrine of the patron saint of the abbey. The whole space beneath one of the large pointed arches, on the south side, is occupied with the sepulchral oratory of the illustrious Duke of Gloucester, who, by the popular enthusiasm manifested during his misfortunes, was generally called the good Duke Humphrey, and the father of his country. He was the fourth and youngest son of King Henry IV. and Mary Bohun his first wife, and was created Duke of Gloucester and Earl of Pembroke in 1414 by his brother, then King Henry V. In 1442 he was accused of high treason, and summoned to take his trial before a Parliament convened at Bury St. Edmund's. Upon his arrival at that town he was confined in the abbey, where he was next day found dead in his bed, 24th Feb. 1447: no one doubted he had fallen a victim to the vengeance of his enemies, although his body was exposed to view, and exhibited no outward marks of violence. He was buried with great funeral pomp, in this church, the expense of the monument being defrayed by the abbot and convent: they also entailed upon themselves an annual expenditure of nearly 80*l.* for daily masses for his soul, and for the celebration of his anniversary or obit. This monument is more florid in style than those already described, and consists of a small oratory or chapel in which the priests officiated, open towards the presbytery, but inclosed by a curiously wrought iron screen on the side next the south aisle: the ceiling of this chapel is adorned with very minute tracery, and is enriched by pendants terminating in delicate bosses. The spandrels of all the arches on the outer face of the monument are filled with quatrefoils in circles, having in the centre of each the arms of France and England quarterly as borne by the members of the House of Lancaster. Immediately over the arches, on the front of the oratory, or chantry, is a very bold cavetto moulding, charged with seven large shields, sculptured with the personal arms of the Duke of Gloucester, viz. quarterly, France and England, within a border; four of these shields are surmounted by ducal coronets, and each of the other three with a lion, as a crest, upon a richly mantled helmet. Above this moulding rises a most splendid canopy or couronnement, consisting of four principal tabernacles, and two of lesser height, accommodating itself to the form of the arch under which it is reared: between each of these floriated gables is a space, occupied by three niches with pedestals, formerly containing statues; these are now gone, but upon the south side of the monument the greater number of the statues now remain: they undoubtedly represent his royal and noble ancestors, and are curious examples of the costume of the period of Henry IV. The identical vault in which the body of the Duke of Gloucester was buried, was accidentally discovered in the year 1703; since which time visitors have been constantly admitted, who have purloined bone after bone of the illustrious individual, until but a very small fragment of his skeleton remains. This vault is not without its decoration; for at the east end is a contemporary painting of the Crucifixion of Jesus Christ, with a chalice to receive the blood which streams from the wound in his side. This part of the church, called the presbytery, was considered the most sacred, being appropriated, during the celebration of divine service, entirely to the abbot and priests, while the congregation were confined to the body of the church: in the centre of this sanctuary, as the most attractive object, was formerly placed the splendid shrine of their canonized patron, distinguished as the first martyr in England; the precise spot being now marked by a marble slab, thus inscribed:—"S. Albanus Verolamensis Anglorum Proto Martyr xvii Junii cccxvii."

Six hollow places denote where the staves of the canopy over the shrine were originally fixed. This was an object upon which the ingenuity of artists was then displayed in its greatest extent. The shrines were usually placed in an insulated and conspicuous situation near the high altar. This of St. Alban, according to history, somewhat resembled an altar-tomb, with a lofty ornamented canopy, supported on pillars over it, representing the saint lying in great state, thus to receive the homage and adoration of all true believers. It contained the very coffin in which his bones were deposited, inclosed in another case, having on the sides embossed figures in precious metals, showing the chief acts of St. Alban's life. At the head, towards the east, was a large representation of the Crucifixion, between the statues of Mary and John, greatly ornamented with jewels. At the feet, in front of the choir, was represented the Virgin Mary, with Christ in her arms, seated on a throne highly enriched with precious stones. The pillars were formed like open-towers, and were all of plate gold, while the inside of the canopy was covered with crystal stones. It was erected by Symond, the nineteenth abbot, about the year 1180, under the direction of Master John, a goldsmith and a very excellent artist. Matthew Paris the historian, who lived one hundred years after, says that he had never seen "a shrine more splendid and noble than that at St. Albans."

On the north side of the presbytery, opposite to the monument of Humphrey Duke of Gloucester, is a very curious gallery of wood, panelled and carved in high relief: in this gallery several monks were stationed to watch the shrine; a precaution not unnecessary, considering that it was composed of the most precious and costly materials.

The back of the altar-screen occupies the west side of the sanctuary; while the east end, consisting of three pointed arches springing from clustered pillars, was formerly open to the chapel of the Virgin, which was usually attached to the east end of almost every conventual church in the kingdom. This addition to the church of St. Albans was completed during the abbacy of Hugh Eversden, between the years 1308 and 1326, in the reign of Edward II. The dimensions and proportions of this building are so just and beautiful, and its enrichments display so much elegant simplicity, that it may be referred to as a specimen of pure and cultivated taste, and must be regarded as a model that would not discredit any age. The chapel of the Virgin Mary is now completely separated from the abbey church, and is used as a school; a passage for the convenience of the inhabitants of the town having been opened through the ante-chapel. This is also rich in sculptured decoration. A very curious and ancient benitier for the reception of the holy water, in the south aisle of the church, from the style of its decoration, may be referred to the time of King John.

The effect of the venerable abbey when seen from a distance is extremely imposing: situated upon an eminence, its massive towers rise with majestic splendour above the houses of the ancient town, which is known to have had its first importance under the Romans by the name of Verulam, but to have afterwards increased, chiefly under the protecting influence of the successive abbots of this rich and powerful monastery. The almost regal splendour of those priests, who here ruled with absolute sway a large community, and who held in early times the very first place amongst the spiritual lords of the realm, by virtue of their extensive baronial territories, is easily pictured in the imagination. But as the outline of the building becomes more defined, and a nearer approach displays the ivy-mantled walls and other indications of the former extent of their lordly accommodation mouldering fast away, while the vast magnitude, combined with the simplicity of material and decoration of the sacred edifice which remains, sufficiently denotes its great antiquity,—the prospect forces upon the mind a melancholy train of reflection on the instability of human institutions.

The other parish churches of St. Albans are, St. Michael's, a vicarage, value 10*l.* 1*s.* 3*d.*, in the patronage of the Earl of Verulam; in which is the monument of Francis Lord Bacon, ob. 1626, characterized as "the wisest, greatest, meanest of mankind:" and St. Peter's, a vicarage, value 9*l.* 0*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Ely. Gorbamby, the seat of the Earl of Verulam, Lord Lieutenant of the county, was rebuilt in 1785, from designs by Sir Robert Taylor: it contains a very rich collection of portraits, which merit particular notice. The park and grounds, including about six hundred acres, are diversified, and comprise some good scenery, to which the contiguity of Pré Wood gives additional interest. Tyttenhanger, the seat of the Earl of Hardwicke, is in the parish of St. Peter's, and was rebuilt in 1654 by Sir Henry Blount, the eminent traveller. Besides several family pictures of the Blounts, here is a fine portrait of Sir Thomas Pope, by Holbein, from whom the Blounts inherited this estate. Sleep and Smallford are also hamlets of this parish.

SANDRIDGE, 3 miles N.E. from St. Albans, contains 129 houses, and 823 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Leonard, is a vicarage, value 8*l.*, in the patronage of Earl Spencer.

SARRATT, or Syret, 5½ miles N.W. from Watford, contains 65 houses, and 397 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Holy Cross, is a vicarage, value 9*l.*

SHEPHALL, in a detached portion of this hundred, 2½ miles S. from Stevenage, contains 28 houses, and 187 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 5*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. Shephallbury is the seat of Unwin Heathcote, Esq.

SAINT STEPHENS, one mile S. from St. Albans, contains 190 houses, and 1580 inhabitants, including Park Street and Windridge. It is a vicarage, value 15*l.*

WATFORD, on the river Colne, 20 miles S.W. from Hertford, and 15 from London, contains 589 houses, and 2960 inhabitants. It has a market on Tuesday, at which great numbers of sheep are constantly sold, and the quantity of corn brought to the market is very great; the Grand Junction canal affording great facilities of water carriage. The Watford canal also commences near this town, where it unites with the Grand Junction and goes to St. Albans, passing through Bushey, Aldenham and St. Stephen's. Here are annual fairs on the last Tuesday in March, 12th May, 31st August, and 29th September. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 21*l.* 12*s.* 1*d.*, in the patronage of the Earl of Essex: it is a spacious structure, and contains several very fine monuments, particularly two of the Moryson family by Nicholas Stone. Cashio, Levesdon, and Oxhey are hamlets of this parish. The manor of Cashio is supposed to have been so called, from having been the residence of Cassivelaunus, the chief of the Cassii, whence the hundred in which this domain is situated takes its name. The whole of the land in the parish of Watford seems to have been comprehended under the manor of Cashio, which in the reign of William the Conqueror belonged to the Abbot of St. Albans. The abbot and convent continued to enjoy this manor until their dissolution, when it came to the Crown. Afterwards King Henry VIII., by his letters patent dated August 20 in the 37th year of his reign, conveyed it to Richard Moryson, Esq. Cashiobury Park, the seat of the Earl of Essex, adjoins the town; it is extensive and well wooded, and is watered by the river Gade; the Grand Junction canal also passes through the park. The mansion, founded by Richard Moryson, Esq. in the reign of Henry VIII., was completed by his son Sir Charles Moryson, from which family it descended to the present noble proprietor. The alterations by Wyatt can hardly be called improvements, as far as the exterior is concerned, excepting the kitchen, built after the plan of the one now remaining at Glastonbury Abbey in Somersetshire. The collection of pictures here is large and valuable, and the gardens of Cashiobury are celebrated not only for the remarkable taste shown in the disposition, but for the abundance of exotics. Watford Place is the seat of W. Paxton, Esq.

4. Dacorum Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Buckinghamshire, Bedfordshire, and Hitchin hundred; on the east by Broadwater hundred; on the south by Cashio hundred; and on the west by Buckinghamshire.

ALDBURY, 3 miles E. from Tring, contains 133 houses, and 676 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a rectory, value 20*l.* 8*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of the Earl of Bridgewater: it contains a monument of Sir Thomas Hyde, ob. 1570.

GREAT BERKHAMSTEAD, on the river Gade, 11 miles W. from St. Albans, and 26 from London, contains 450 houses, and 2310 inhabitants. It is a large town, with a broad street of considerable length. The manufactures consist of fringe and lace, also wooden bowls and spoons; the market is on Saturday, and there are annual fairs on Shrove Monday and Whit Monday, for cattle, 5th August for cheese, and 29th September and 11th October, statute fairs. The petty sessions are held here. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 20*l.*, in the patronage of the Prince of Wales, as Duke of Cornwall: it contains several ancient monuments; as, Sir Adolph Carey, ob. 1609; Sir John Cornwallis, one of the Council to Prince Edward, ob. 1543; John Sayer, ob. 1682, &c. Here was a palace of the kings of Mercia, and it is famed for many memorable occurrences. A Parliament was held here in 697, and Ina's laws published. William the Conqueror here swore to preserve the laws made by his predecessors. The ruins of an ancient castle occupy about four acres on the north side of the town: it became the property of the Crown about the year 1215, in the reign of John. King Henry II. kept his court here; and King Henry III. granted it to his brother Richard Earl of Cornwall, who died at this castle in 1271. In 1309 Piers Gaveston Earl of Cornwall married the sister of the Earl of Gloster here; and since 1496 the castle and honour of Berkhamstead has descended to the successive Princes of Wales. Queen Elizabeth granted the lodge and park to Sir Edward Carey, constituting him at the same time high steward of the honour and manor of Berkhamstead. Ashlins Hall is the seat of James Smith, Esq.; Bartletts, of Mrs. Pechell; Kings Hill, T. Dorrien, Jun., Esq.; and Haresfoot of T. Dorrien, Esq.

BUSHEY, in a detached portion of this hundred, 2 miles S.E. from Watford, contains 300 houses, and 1507 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a rectory, value 18*l.* 2*s.* 1*d.*, in the patronage of Exeter College Oxford. Bushey House is the seat of H. Clephane, Esq.; Bushey Grove, of D. Haliburton, Esq.; and Merry Hill, of Dr. Munro. Sir James Walter, of Bushey Hall, was created baronet January 18, 1680.

CADDINGTON, partly situated in Bedfordshire, in which county the church stands, contains 211 houses, and 1170 inhabitants. On the Hertfordshire side of the parish is Markyate Cell, a priory founded by Geoffery, abbot of St. Albans, about 1145, and dedicated to the Holy Trinity: at the Dissolution it was valued at 114*l.* 16*s.* 1*d.* per annum, and the site was granted in 1548 to George Ferrers. The ancient mansion, restored under the direction of Repton, is exceedingly interesting as a specimen of early domestic architecture.

FLAMSTEAD, or Verlamstead, on the borders of Bedfordshire, 7 miles N.W. from St. Albans, contains 243 houses, and 1392 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Leonard, is a rectory, value 41*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of University College Oxford: it contains a monument of Sir Bartholomew Fouk, master of the household, ob. 1604; and several memorials of the former proprietors of Beechwood Park. An almshouse was here built and endowed by the Saunders' family. Beechwood Park, the seat of Sir John Saunders Sebright, Bart., M.P. for the county, extends into the adjoining county. In the library of the mansion is a collection of original papers, relating to the priory of Woodchurch, or St. Giles in the Wood, founded here in the reign of Stephen, and valued at the Suppression at 46*l.* 16*s.* 1*d.* per annum, when the site was granted to Sir Richard Page.

GREAT GADDESSEN, on the river Gade, 3 miles N. from Hemel Hempstead, contains 194 houses, and 1096 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a vicarage, value 10*l.* 1*s.* 10*d.*: it contains several monuments of the Halsey family.

LITTLE GADDESSEN, 2½ miles N. from the above, contains 105 houses, and 531 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a rectory, value 11*l.* 12*s.* 8*d.*

HARPENDEN, 5 miles N. from St. Albans, contains 307 houses, and 1693 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a curacy.

HEMEL HEMPSTEAD, 10 miles N. from Watford, and 23 from London, contains 735 houses, and 3962 inhabitants. The town is situated on rising ground, near the river Gade, and its contiguity to the Grand Junction canal is extremely beneficial to trade. Great quantities of corn are sold here. The market is on Thursday, and the fairs on Holy Thursday for sheep, and the third Monday in September, a statute. The town was incorporated by King Henry the Eighth, and is governed by a bailiff and capital burgesses, who have a common seal. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 16*l.* 1*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's Cathedral. Bovingdon and Flaunden are chapelries of this parish.

KENSWORTH, on the borders of Bedfordshire, 3 miles N.W. from Markyate-street, contains 120 houses, and 615 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's Cathedral.

KING'S LANGLEY, on the banks of the Gade, 5 miles N. from Watford, contains 248 houses, and 1242 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 8*l.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Ely. On the north side of the chancel is the tomb of Edmund Langley, son of King Edward III.; and Isabel his wife: there are several other ancient monuments in the church. A royal residence was built here by King Henry III.; and it is recorded that when Prince Edward, son of King Edward I., was here in 1294, his servants took up all the cheese, eggs, and other articles in the market at Dunstable for the kitchen, where was consumed more than two hundred messes a day. King James I. granted this manor, park and chase to Henry Prince of Wales, and after his death, to Charles his second son, who, after he came to the Crown, granted it to Sir Charles Moryson. A priory of friars preachers near the palace was so much increased in its revenues by successive monarchs, as to exceed all houses of this order in England. At the Dissolution it was valued at 150*l.* 14*s.* 8*d.*, and was granted in 1573 to Edward Grimston.

NORTHCHURCH, or Berkhamstead, St. Mary, 2 miles N.W. from Berkhamstead, contains 203 houses, and 1028 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 21*l.* 1*s.* 3*d.*, in the patronage of the Prince of Wales, as Duke of Cornwall.

NORTH MIMMS, in a detached portion of this hundred, 4 miles S. from Hatfield, contains 202 houses, and 1007 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 10*l.*, in the patronage of the Crown: in it is a monument of Lord Chancellor Somers. North Minnis Park is the seat of H. Brown, Esq.; Brookmans is the seat of Mrs. Gaussen. Gobions, or Gubbins, the seat of Thos. Kemble, Esq., was formerly a residence of Sir Thomas More, one of the most illustrious characters of the reign of Henry VIII.: he was the patron of Holbein the painter, and introduced him to the King. John Heywood, a dramatic writer, and native of this parish, was also first introduced by Sir Thomas More to the Princess Mary; he afterwards became a favourite of Henry VIII., who rewarded him very highly. The house has been partly rebuilt.

PUTTENHAM, on the borders of Bedfordshire, 4 miles N.W. from Tring, contains 27 houses, and 112 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 10*l.* 1*s.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Lincoln.

SHENLEY, in a detached portion of this hundred, 5½ miles N.W. from Barnet, contains 214 houses, and 1132 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Botolph, is a rectory, value 16*l.* 8*s.* 1*d.* From the parsonage, which is situated on an eminence, the prospects are extensive and highly picturesque.

STUDHAM, on the borders of Bedfordshire, in which it is partly situated, 3 miles W. from Markyate-street, which is a hamlet of the parish, contains 48 houses, and 238 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 9*l.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

TRING, on the borders of Buckinghamshire, 31 miles from London, on the road to Aylesbury, contains 554 houses, and 3286 inhabitants. It has an extensive trade in corn and straw plat, a market on Friday, and annual fairs on June 25 and September 29. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a curacy, in the presentation of Christ Church Oxford: it contains several monuments of the Anderson and Guise families. Sir Henry Anderson of Penley was created baronet July 3, 1643.

WHEATHAMPSTEAD, 5 miles N.E. from St. Albans, contains 277 houses, and 1584 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Helen, is a rectory, value 42*l.* 1*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Lincoln. Sir John Garrard of Lamer was created baronet February 16, 1622. A monument of his family is in the church.

WIGGINGTON, 2 miles S. from Tring, contains 85 houses, and 477 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, is a curacy, in the presentation of Christ Church Oxford.

5. Edwinstree Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Cambridgeshire; on the east by Essex; on the south and south-west by Braughin hundred; and on the north-west by Odsey hundred.

ALBURY, 4½ miles N.W. from Bishop's Stortford, contains 115 houses, and 596 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 9*s.* 7*d.*, in the patronage of the Treasurer of St. Paul's Cathedral London. The petty sessions for Albury division are held here. Albury Hall is the seat of J. Calvert, Esq.

ANSTEY, 3 miles S.E. from Barkway, contains 62 houses, and 440 inhabitants. The church is a rectory, value 21*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of Christ's College Cambridge.

LAYSTON, or Scheton, a quarter of a mile E. from Buntingford, contains 199 houses, and 1014 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, is a vicarage, value 14*l.* 16*s.* 3*d.*

MEESDEN, or Mesdon, on the borders of Essex, 7 miles N.E. from Buntingford, contains 33 houses, and 164 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 12*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*

BRENT PELHAM, 6 miles E. from Buntingford, contains 48 houses, and 280 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of London.

FURNEUX PELHAM, 6½ miles S.E. from Buntingford, contains 116 houses, and 566 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 9*l.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of London. Pelham Hall is the seat of John Halden, Esq.

STOCKING PELHAM, 7½ miles E. from Buntingford, contains 24 houses, and 150 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 7*l.* 10*s.* 7½*d.*

THROCKING, or Thorking, 2 miles N.W. from Buntingford, contains 13 houses, and 69 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is a rectory, value 8*l.* Wakely, 3 miles S. from this village, "is now extra-parochial, but was heretofore a parish."

WYDDIAL, 2 miles N.E. from Buntingford, contains 41 houses, and 225 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Giles, is a rectory, value 16*l.* Wyddial Hall is the seat of the Hon. Edw. Percival: it was originally built by John Goulston in 1516.

6. Hertford Hundred

Is bounded on the north and west by Broadwater hundred; on the east by Braughin hundred and the county of Essex; and on the south by Middlesex.

AMWELL, 2 miles S. from Ware, contains 205 houses, and 1110 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* This village is famous for one of the springs which gives rise to the New River for the supply of London with water, undertaken by Sir Hugh Myddelton in the reign of James I. and completed in 1613. Scott has rendered the spot interesting by his poem of "Amwell," published in 1776, which however is liable to all the objections attached to descriptive poetry.

BAYFORD, 3½ miles S. from Hertford, contains 51 houses, and 307 inhabitants. It is a curacy. Bayfordbury the seat of William Baker, Esq., occupies an elevated situation; the park is extensive and famous for its sporting establishment.

BENGEO, one mile N. from Hertford, contains 144 houses, and 731 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Leonard, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 8*s.* 6*d.*: it stands on a hill near the river Beane, whence the original name Bene Hoo.

LITTLE BERKHAMSTEAD, 4 miles S.W. from Hertford, contains 69 houses, and 439 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a rectory, value 7*l.* 8*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of the Marquess of Salisbury.

BROXBOURN, 6 miles S. from Ware, contains 87 houses, and 534 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Austin, is a vicarage, value 12*l.* 6*s.* 5*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of London. It contains many very fine ancient monuments. Sir Richard Lucy of Broxbourn was created baronet 11th March 1618. Broxbourn Bury is the seat of Jacob Bosanquet, Esq. Hoddesdon, two miles northward, is a hamlet of this parish, containing 282 houses, and 1354 inhabitants: it has a market on Thursday, and a fair on 29th June. The chapel, dedicated to St. Katherine, was rebuilt about 1790. Hoddesdon is situated on an eminence, and the country round is beautifully diversified by hanging woods, and the meandering course of the Lea. At this village was the thatched-house where Isaac Walton and his friend Sir Henry Wotton used to regale themselves after the amusement of angling in the Lea.

CHESHUNT, 6 miles S. from Hoddesdon, contains 799 houses, and 4376 inhabitants, including the hamlets of Waltham Cross and Woodside. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 26*l.*, in the patronage of the Marquess of Salisbury. Waltham Cross owes its name to the cross erected by King Edward I., in memory of his queen, Eleanor. Cheshunt Park was the residence of Oliver Cromwell, lineally descended from the Protector, and author of Memoirs &c. of the family. Theobalds was originally built by Lord Treasurer Burghley, who often entertained his royal mistress Queen Elizabeth at this his mansion. He was succeeded in the possession of it and the estate of Theobalds by his second son Sir Robert Cecil, first Earl of Salisbury, who continued to make it the place of his residence. Soon after the death of the Queen he had the honour of entertaining her successor King James the First in his way from Scotland, upon which occasion the King made divers nobles of Scotland of his Privy Council. In the year 1606 he was visited by King James and Christopher the Fourth King of Denmark. The King having become enamoured of this place, from its proximity to an extensive tract of open country favourable to the diversion of hunting (his favourite amusement), he prevailed upon his minister to exchange it with him for his palace of Hatfield in this county. The King having obtained possession of Theobalds, enlarged the park by taking in part of the adjoining chase, and surrounded it with a wall of brick measuring ten miles in circumference. The King spent most of his leisure hours in pursuing the diversion which this place afforded, and died here on the 27th March 1625. King Charles I. resided occasionally at this palace, where he received the petitions of both Houses of Parliament, and thence went to put himself at the head of his army. King Charles II. granted Theobalds to the Duke of Albemarle, and what remained of the palace was taken down in 1765 by the then proprietor, George Prescott, Esq.: amongst the rest, the room in which King James I. died, and a vestibule with a genealogical tree of the Cecils painted on the walls. Theobald's Park is now the seat of Sir George Beeston Prescott, Bart.

ESSENDON, 3 miles E. from Hatfield, contains 106 houses, and 595 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 18*l.*, in the patronage of the Marquess of Salisbury.

HERTFORD, on the river Lea, near the junction of the Beane, 21 miles from London, contains 649 houses, and 4265 inhabitants. This town, which gives name to the county, is of considerable antiquity, and is governed by a mayor, recorder, 10 aldermen, a chamberlain, 16 assistants and other officers. The arms of the town are argent, on a mount vert, a stag couchant gules. The town-hall, the sessions- and market-house are handsome buildings. The assizes and petty sessions are held here. The market is on Saturday, and there are annual fairs on Saturday fortnight before Easter, on 12th May, 5th July, and 8th November, for horses and cattle. The borough returns two members to Parliament, the right of election being vested in the inhabitants, and in such freemen only as resided in the borough when made free. The present members are Thomas Slingsby Duncombe, Esq., and John Currie, Esq. Hertford Castle belonged to the King in 1345. All the courts of law were adjourned here in the 25th, 34th and 35th years of Elizabeth's reign. King Charles I. granted it in 1631 to William Cecil Earl of Salisbury. In the town are three parishes. All Saints, with St. John united, is a vicarage, value 10*l.* 8*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. The Blue-coat School, belonging to Christ's Hospital, is in the liberty of St. John's. St. Andrew's, with St. Mary and St. Nicholas, is a rectory, value 12*l.* 7*s.* 3*d.*, in the patronage of the King as Duke of Lancaster. Little Amwell and Brickendon are liberties of All Saints parish. Brickendonbury is the seat of W. Dent, Esq., and Ball's Park of Lord John Townshend.

HERTINGFORDBURY, on the river Maran, 2 miles S.W. from Hertford, contains 127 houses, and 827 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 12*l.* 15*s.* 2*d.*, in the patronage of the King as Duke of Lancaster. Akerley Hole is a remarkable spring in this parish. Panshanger, the seat of Earl Cowper, is about a mile north-westward of the village: it is remarkable for the great oak in the park, which measures upwards of seventeen feet in circumference at five feet from the ground.

ST. MARGARET'S, or Standed le Thele, on the river Lea, 3 miles S. from Ware, contains 17 houses, and 97 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, is a curacy.

STAPLEFORD, on the river Beane, 4 miles N. from Hertford, contains 37 houses, and 212 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 8*l.* 8*s.* 6*d.*

TEWIN, 3 miles S.E. from Welwyn, contains 79 houses, and 477 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 14*l.*, in the patronage of Jesus College Cambridge. Tewin Water is the seat of Henry Cowper, Esq.

WORMLEY, 4 miles N. from Waltham Cross, and 6 miles S. from Hertford, contains 100 houses, and 492 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is a rectory, value 10*l.* 12*s.* 3*d.* Wormleybury is the seat of Sir Abraham Hume, Bart.

7. Hitchin and Pirton Hundred

Is bounded on the north and west by Bedfordshire; on the east by Broadwater hundred; on the south-east by a detached part of Cashio hundred; and on the south by Dacorum hundred.

HITCHIN, on the Hiz, 18 miles N.W. from Hertford, and 34 from London, contains 886 houses, and 4486 inhabitants, including the hamlets of Missenden, or Minsden, Preston, and Temple Dinsley. It is situated in the heart of a fine corn country, in a fertile valley, sheltered by considerable eminences. The town is divided into three wards, Bancroft, Bridge, and Tilehouse-street, and is governed by two constables, two headboroughs, &c. for each ward, who are elected in the manor-courts. The petty sessions are held here. Straw-plat is made in the town, but the chief trade is in malt and meal; and in the market on Tuesday very large quantities of grain are sold. Here are annual fairs on Easter Tuesday and Whit Tuesday for sheep, &c. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary and St. Andrew, is a vicarage, value 25*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of Trinity College Cambridge: it is a large edifice situated near the middle of the town, and contains an altar-piece by Rubens, and several ancient monuments; one to the Ratcliffe family in the south chancel, &c. Temple Dinsley was granted to the Knights Templars by Bernard de Baliol, in the reign of Stephen, and became a preceptory of that order. The Knights Hospitallers afterwards held it till the Dissolution, and in 1541 Sir Ralph Sadler obtained a grant of the house and manor for 843*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.* Hitchin Priory, the seat of E. H. Delme Ratcliffe, Esq., is on the site of a small Carmelite priory. There was another small priory of Gilbertine nuns, endowed at the Suppression with 15*l.* 1*s.* 11*d.* per annum, granted in 1544 to John Coke: the house was converted into a school in 1655 by Joseph Kemp, M.A.

ICKLEFORD, or Ickleton, on the river Pirre, 2 miles N. from Hitchin, contains 66 houses, and 442 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Katherine, is a rectory, value 8*l*. The village is situated near the Ikenild-street.

IPPOLLITTS, or Hippolits, 2 miles S. from Hitchin, contains 113 houses, and 671 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 11*l*., in the presentation of Trinity College Cambridge.

KIMPTON, or Kimeton, on the river Kime, 4 miles N.W. from Welwyn, contains 162 houses, and 266 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a vicarage, value 12*l*.

KING'S WALDEN, 4 miles S.W. from Hitchin, contains 162 houses, and 926 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a curacy: it contains several monuments of the Hale family. King's Walden the seat of William Hale, Esq., consists of a richly timbered park of about three hundred acres well stocked with deer, and the surrounding country with its varied scenery adds greatly to its attractions.

LILLEY, or Lindley, on the borders of Bedfordshire, 5 miles W. from Hitchin, contains 82 houses, and 427 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 19*l*. 8*s*. 9*d*., in the presentation of St. John's College, Cambridge.

OFFLEY, or Offley St. Legier, 3 miles S.W. from Hitchin, contains 147 houses, and 873 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen, is a vicarage, value 9*l*. In the south wall of the church is the following inscription, with the tiles under it:—"These tiles were found in this church 1777, which proves that King Offa was buried here." Offley Place is the seat of the Rev. Lynch Burroughs; it stands on the site of the old manor-house, on a bold eminence, commanding a fine and extensive view of the surrounding country. Sir John Spencer, of Offley, was created baronet March 14, 1627; and Sir Brocket Spencer was created baronet September 26, 1642.

PIRTON, 3½ miles N.W. from Hitchin, contains 119 houses, and 630 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, with the rectory of Ickleford.

8. Odsey Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Cambridgeshire; on the east by Edwinstree hundred; on the south and south-west by Broadwater hundred; and on the north-west by Bedfordshire.

ASHWELL, 4 miles N.E. from Baldock, contains 180 houses, and 915 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 22*l*. 3*s*. 6½*d*., in the patronage of the Bishop of London.

BROADFIELD, 3 miles N.W. from Buntingford, contains 3 houses, and 23 inhabitants. The church is in ruins.

BYGRAVE, 2½ miles N.E. from Baldock, contains 18 houses, and 107 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 17*l*. 9*s*. 7*d*., in the patronage of the Marquess of Salisbury.

CALDECOTT, 3 miles N. from Baldock, contains 5 houses, and 46 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen, is a rectory, value 8*l*.

CLOTHALL, or Cley-hull, 2 miles S.E. from Baldock, contains 61 houses, and 358 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 16*l*. 0*s*. 7½*d*.

COTTERED, or Coldridge, 3 miles W. from Buntingford, contains 81 houses, and 410 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 20*l*. 8*s*. 6½*d*.

HINXWORTH, or Hamsteworde, 4½ miles N. from Baldock, contains 37 houses, and 247 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a rectory, value 16*l*.

KELSHALL, 3 miles S.W. from Royston, contains 33 houses, and 108 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Faith, is a rectory, value 21*l*., in the patronage of the Bishop of Ely.

RADWELL, or Reedwell, 1½ mile N. from Baldock, contains 14 houses, and 91 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 13*l*. 6*s*. 8*d*.

REED, 3 miles S. from Royston, contains 38 houses, and 214 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 13*l*. 6*s*. 8*d*.

ROYSTON, 20 miles N. from Hertford, and 37 miles from London, contains 275 houses, and 1474 inhabitants. It is situated on the Hermen-street, and Ikenild Way, in a bottom amongst chalky downs, and partly in Cambridgeshire. Under the market-place is a subterranean crypt, or cavern, of chalk, well worthy of attention. The accidental discovery of this cavern in 1742 gave rise to a curious controversy about its antiquity and use. Dr. Stukeley in his Origines Roystonianæ endeavours to prove it an oratory of Roisia, who is supposed to have retired to this sepulchral cell about the year 1167, to have carved figures about it relative to the history of that time and her own family in particular, and to have been buried here. Charles Parkin, rector of Oxburgh in Norfolk, published an Answer to Dr. Stukeley's Origines, &c., "wherein the antiquity and imagery of the oratory, discovered at Royston, are truly stated and accounted for," 1744, 4to; in which he considers the cavern to have been the oratory of a hermitage, more ancient than the time of Roisia, the figures representing Saints, who had five altars in it, and affirms that Roisia was not buried here, but at the Priory at Chicksand in Bedfordshire, her own foundation. Doctor Stukeley then published Origines Roystonianæ, Part II., "A Defence of Lady Roisia de Vere, Foundress of Royston, against Mr. Parkin of Oxburgh," wherein his pretended Answer is fully refuted," &c. 1746, 4to. His opponent closed the controversy with "A Reply to the Objections brought by Dr. Stukeley, and Royston proved to be a Saxon Town, its Derivation, and Original, and the History of Lady Roisia shown to be a mere Fable," &c. 1748, 4to. The following account of the origin of this town is given by Sir Henry Chauncy in his History of the County:—"Dame Roise daughter of Aubrey de Vere, chief justice of England under King Henry I., and wife of Geoffery Mandeville first Earl of Essex, erected here a cross in the highway, to put passengers in mind of Christ's Passion; whence this place was called Roise's Cross, until Eustace de Merc and his nephew Ralph of Rochester built a monastery adjoining to the Cross, for canons regular, in honour of St. Thomas of Canterbury, the lately canonized martyr, granting a hundred acres of wood, and thirty acres of land, with common of pasture to the priory; and having endowed it with competent revenue for the maintenance of the canons, houses were subsequently erected, which in process of time increased to a town; and instead of Roise's Cross, it was called Roise's Town, and afterwards, by contraction, Royston. King Richard I. in 1189 granted the canons a fair for all the week of Pentecost, as also every week of the year four markets, according to the customs and liberties of the canons of Dunstable, with this privilege, that none might buy and sell there without leave of the canons. It is recorded, that in the time of King Henry VI. there was such plenty of corn in this market, that the best wheat was sold here for twelve-pence the quarter. The revenues of the priory were valued at the Dissolution at 106*l*. 3*s*. 1*d*.; and in 1540 the site of the monastery, with everything belonging to it, was granted to Robert Chester, one of the gentlemen of the privy chamber to King Henry VIII., who was knighted in 1552, and constituted sheriff of this county and Essex in 1564. Sir Robert Chester, his grandson, entertained King James I. at his house here in his progress from Scotland to London, and on 23rd July 1603 was knighted at Whitehall. This town gave title to Philip Yorke, Lord Hardwicke, Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain in the reign of George II., who was advanced to the dignities of Viscount Royston and Earl of Hardwicke, by letters patent bearing date 2nd April 1754. Of this nobleman it should be remembered, as evidence of his abilities and integrity, that during the space of nearly twenty years, in which he presided in the Court of Chancery, only three of his decrees were appealed from, and those were afterwards confirmed by the House of Lords. He had, early in life, distinguished himself as an author in The Spectator, in which No. 364, signed "Philip Homebred," is said to have been written by his lordship.

The market, celebrated for its corn, is on Wednesday: the fairs are annually on Ash-Wednesday, Wednesday in Easter-week, Wednesday in Whitsun-week, first Wednesday in July, and first Wednesday after 10th October. The petty sessions are held here. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a vicarage, value 10*l.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Killaloe. Of the former priory of the regular canons of St. Augustine, nothing now remains but the church; it is nearly perfect, and contains some ancient monuments and brasses, particularly a figure of Lord Scales.

Here was a seat built by James I. for the enjoyment of hawking and hunting. King Charles I. at the commencement of the civil wars removed from Hampton Court here: since that time it has gone to decay. Royston has given its name to the "hooded crow," or Corvus cornix of Linnæus.

RUSHDEN, or Risden, 4½ miles N.W. from Buntingford, contains 66 houses, and 333 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 1*s.* 10½*d.*, in the presentation of the Dean and Chapter of Lincoln.

SANDON, 4 miles N.W. from Buntingford, contains 107 houses, and 646 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 9*l.*, in the presentation of the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's Cathedral London.

THERFIELD, 2½ miles S.W. from Royston, contains 169 houses, and 872 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, is a rectory, value 50*l.*, in the presentation of St. Paul's Cathedral.

WALLINGTON, 3 miles E. from Baldock, contains 40 houses, and 210 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 16*l.* 15*s.* 2½*d.*, in the patronage of Emanuel College Cambridge.

YARDLEY, or Ardeley, 5 miles W. from Buntingford, contains 92 houses, and 617 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is a vicarage, value 12*l.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's Cathedral. At Yardleybury, Sir Henry Chauncy wrote his History of this county, and was here buried.

KENT.—Home Circuit.

THIS county is bounded on the north by the county of Essex and the mouth of the river Thames; on the east by the German Ocean and the Straits of Dover; on the south by the county of Sussex; and on the west by Surrey. It was inhabited by the British Cantii, and afterwards became a part of the Roman province Britannia Prima, when the principal stations were Anderida, Newenden; Dubris, Dover; Durobrivis, Rochester; Durovernum, Canterbury; Lemanis, Lymne; Regulbium, Reculver; and Rutupium, Richborough. The Roman Watling-street passed through the county from Dartford to Dover. Under the Saxon Heptarchy it formed the kingdom of Kent. In length this county extends about sixty-six miles, in breadth about thirty-six, and in circumference it is about one hundred and seventy-four miles. It contains two cities, Canterbury and Rochester, and one county town, Maidstone, thirty-six market towns, four hundred and fourteen parishes, 70,507 houses, and 426,016 inhabitants. It is in the province of Canterbury, and dioceses of Canterbury and Rochester. There were anciently numerous monasteries in Kent, as abbeys at Canterbury, Boxley, Feversham, West Langdon, Lesnes, and Dover. Priors at Aylesford, Badlesmere, Bilsington, Cumbwell, Davington, Dartford, Dover, Leeds, Mottenden, Minster, Rochester, Malling, and Tunbridge. The castles of its earlier lords were also considerable in number, remains of which are at Allington, Canterbury, Chilham, Cooling, Dover, Eynesford, Hever, Leeds, Leybourne, Lullingstone, Lymne, Mereworth, Otford, Queenborough, Richborough, Rochester, Romney, Sandgate, Sandown, Shoreham, Starborough, Stone, Tunbridge, Upnor, and Walmer. The county now returns eighteen members to Parliament, two for Canterbury, two for Dover, two for Hythe, two for Maidstone, two for Queenborough, two for Rochester, two for Romney, two for Sandwich, and two for the county, who at present are Thomas Law Hodges, Esq., and Thomas Rider, Esq. The county has long been divided into East and West Kent: the eastern division contains the Lathes of Sutton, Aylesford, and part of Scray; the western, Shepway, St. Augustine, and the remaining part of Scray. In each of the great districts of East and West Kent a court of session is held four times every year; and the justices, although appointed for the whole county, generally confine their attention to that particular district in which they reside. The descent of landed property in this county is regulated by peculiar customs, which are comprehended under the term Gavelkind, or the joint inheritance of all the sons to the estate of their fathers, &c. &c. The general aspect of Kent is very beautiful, arising from the inequality of the surface, the diversity of the scenery, and the variety of the verdure. The whole county, excepting the Marshes and the Weald, is a general cluster of small hills, two chains of which, higher than the rest, run through the middle of the county, from east to west, and extend from Surrey to the sea; these are called the upper and lower hills, and are mostly covered with coppice and woodland. The northern range is chiefly composed of chalk and flints, and the southern range chiefly ironstone and ragstone. The Weald of Kent is a considerable tract, stretching along the south side of the county, from Romney Marsh to Surrey, and is bounded on the north by a range of hills which command the whole extent. Romney Marsh is an extensive level tract of rich land connected with Welland Marsh and Denge Marsh, and is defended against the sea by an immense wall of earth, called Dimchurch Wall, which extends in length more than three miles. These marshes are appropriated to the grazing and fattening of sheep and cattle, which are bred here in immense numbers, perhaps exceeding that of any other district in the kingdom. The rivers of this county are the Bewle, Cray, Darent, Dour or Idle, Len, Medway, Nailbourne, Nethergong, Ravensbourne, Rother, Scray, Great and Little Stour, Swale, Thames, Theyse, Tun, and Wantsume. The river Cray has its source at Newell, in Orpington parish, gives name to the following villages by which it takes its course: St. Mary's Cray, Paul's Cray, Foot's Cray, North Cray, and Crayford, and falls into the Darent, a river which rises in Sussex, on the borders of this county, near Westerham, whence it passes Valence, Brasted, Chipstead, Riverhead, Shoreham, Eynesford, Farningham, South Darent, and proceeds to Dartford, where it becomes navigable, and enters the Thames near Long Reach. The Medway enters this county near Edenbridge, flows by Hever Castle and Tunbridge, through a very beautiful country: thence proceeding to Twyford Bridge and Yalding, it is joined by the Bewle and Theyse, and proceeds to Maidstone, Rochester, Chatham, and Sheerness, and enters the Thames between the Isles of Graine and Sheppey, having first united its waters with those of the Swale. The Ravensbourne rises on Keston Downs, and flowing near Hayes and Bromley to Lewisham, and near Lee is joined by the Leebourne: it becomes navigable at Deptford, and falls into the Thames. The Rother rises at Gravel Hill, near Rotherfield, in Sussex, and flowing eastward, becomes the boundary of the county, below Sandhurst and Newenden, after which it skirts the southern side of the Isle of Oxney, and forms Rye Harbour. The river anciently flowed round the northern side of the Isle of Oxney to Appledore, and thence to Romney, but its channel was altered by a tempest in the reign of Edward I., and it took a new course to Rye. The Great Stour rises near Lenham, and after being increased by several rivulets near Ashford, flows by Spring Grove to Wye, and thence to Canterbury, and proceeds to the Isle of Thanet, by Sarre to Richborough and Sandwich, and falls into the British Channel at Pepperness. From Sarre, a branch called the Nethergong, flows into the sea at Newhaven. The Little Stour rises near Liminge, is increased by the Nailbourne, skirts Barham Downs, and falls into the Great Stour at Stourmouth. The inland navigation of the county consists of the Croydon Canal, the Grand Surrey Canal, the Shorncliffe and Rye Canal, and the Thames and Medway Canal. Wilderness, near Sevenoaks, is the seat of the Marquess of Camden, K.G., Lord Lieutenant of the county.

1. Lathe of St. Augustine

Is bounded on the north and east by the sea; on the south by Shepway Lathe; and on the west by Scray Lathe. It is subdivided into twelve hundreds.

BEWSBOROUGH HUNDRED.

BUCKLAND, 2 miles N.W. from Dover, contains 131 houses, and 693 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

CHARLTON, one mile N.W. from Dover, contains 116 houses, and 791 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a rectory, value 32*l*.

WEST CLIFFE, 3 miles N.E. from Dover, contains 5 houses, and 52 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a vicarage, value 24*l*., in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury.

COLDRED, 4½ miles N. from Dover, contains 14 houses, and 125 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Pancras, is a vicarage, value 6*l*. 2*s*. 6*d*., in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

DEAL, 17 miles E. from Canterbury, and 73 from London, contains 1302 houses, and 6811 inhabitants, including Middle and Upper Deal. The town is situated on the sea-shore, having a bold open beach, and principally consists of three long streets parallel with the sea, connected by others. When a fleet of the Royal Navy, or an East or West India fleet lie in the channel of the sea adjoining this shore, called the Downs, the prospects hence are eminently beautiful, especially at sun-rise. Three or four hundred sail are not uncommonly at anchor at one time. The corporation of Deal consists of a mayor, twelve jurats, twenty-four common-councilmen, a recorder, town-clerk, and other officers. A court of general sessions of the peace, and a court of record are held here. The market on Thursday is very well supplied with every article of provision, and there are annual fairs on the 5th April and 10th October. The church, dedicated to St. Leonard, is a rectory, value 19*l*. 10*s*., in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury: it stands in Upper Deal; and in Lower Deal is a chapel, dedicated to St. George the Martyr, built in 1716. Deal Castle, near the south end of the town, was originally built by Henry VIII. Lord Carrington is now captain or governor.

DOVER, 40 miles E. from Maidstone and 72 from London, contains 1846 houses, and 10,327 inhabitants. This town is situated in a valley close to the sea, having on each side hills of a stupendous height, and overlooked by the venerable castle towards the north. It is divided into 13 wards, and is governed by a mayor, 12 jurats and 36 common-councilmen, a town-clerk and chamberlain. The sessions for the town and liberty are held in the town-hall, as also a court for the recovery of small debts. It returns two members to Parliament, a privilege conferred upon the town in the reign of Edward III., when the right of election was vested in the freemen resident and non-resident, and free burgesses inhabitants of the town. The present members are, the Right Hon. C. P. Thompson and Captain R. H. Stanhope.

There are two parishes in Dover: St. James the Apostle, a rectory, value 4*l*. 17*s*. 6*d*., in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. This church was anciently appendant to the castle, and within it are still held the Courts of Chancery and Admiralty for the Cinque Ports and their members, at which the lord warden or his deputy presides. The other parish is St. Mary the Virgin, a curacy, in the presentation of the parishioners. This is the principal church, and is a spacious and venerable edifice; the western front and tower are of Anglo-Norman architecture, and the monuments are very numerous: amongst them is a memorial of Samuel Foote the comedian. Seats for the mayor and jurats are near the altar. The name of Dover is British, and signifies a steep place. It was a port of consequence from the very earliest period of our history, and was a hill fortress previously to the invasion of Julius Cæsar. It is also presumed to have been one of the first places fortified by the Romans, and presents an existing evidence of their peculiar mode of structure in the Pharos or watch-tower on the upper part of the castle Hill. The situation of the castle, on the summit of a cliff more than 300 feet in height, would render it at all times a place of importance; and it was not overlooked by William Duke of Normandy, who immediately after the battle of Hastings took possession of it. He assigned the custody of the castle to Odo Bishop of Bayeux, his half brother, whom he created Earl of Kent. This nobleman shortly afterwards incurred the King's displeasure, who then seized the castle, and it has remained in the hands of the Crown ever since; a governor being constituted by royal authority. The Duke of Wellington, K.G. is constable of Dover Castle, lord warden and admiral of the Cinque Ports. The castle may be said to consist of two wards, an upper and lower, and occupies about thirty-five acres of ground. The lower court or ward is surrounded by an irregular wall or curtain, flanked at unequal distances by towers constructed at different periods. The oldest of these towers is said to have been built by Earl Goodwin, and bears his name. The constable's tower is the principal entrance to the lower court, and is the residence of the deputy governor of the castle. The keep or palace tower, rebuilt by Henry II., is in fine preservation. In the beautifully romantic character of its castle and cliffs, Dover is certainly unequalled; the peculiar situation of many of the houses, the view of the ocean, with the coast of France in the distance; the many descriptions of vessels passing with every tide up and down the channel, combine in the production of a series of views which for grandeur and impressive effect are not to be surpassed on the British coast. The harbour of Dover was distinguished by extraordinary privileges even before the Conquest, and remains to this day the principal place of embarkation for travellers to the continent; and besides an establishment of packets belonging to the General Post-office, there are many vessels exclusively employed in the passage from this port to the opposite coast, which frequently reach Calais, nearly twenty-three miles distant, in three hours. The passage hence is commonly performed in less time than that from Calais to Dover, on account of the tide being more advantageous in the former instance. On several remarkable occasions Dover has been visited by the earlier monarchs of England, and foreign sovereigns have occasionally landed here. King Charles II. came on shore here at his restoration, accompanied by the Dukes of York and Gloucester, and attended by many noblemen and gentlemen. Louis XVIII. embarked for France from the port in April 1814; and in June the same year the allied sovereigns of Europe landed here on their visit to the Prince Regent. Dover in the bathing season has become a very favourite residence, which has led to a great increase of building for the accommodation of its visitors, particularly on the broad beach, on account of the very interesting sea view. On the south-western side of the town, and in front of the heights, is Shakspeare's Cliff, which rises above the shore in a very peculiar and striking manner, and is so called from the sublime description of it in the play of King Lear.

EWELL, on a stream of the same name, 2½ miles N.W. from Dover, contains 48 houses, and 340 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary and St. Peter, is a vicarage, value 6*l*. 13*s*. 4*d*.

GUSTON, 3 miles N.E. from Dover, contains 37 houses, and 206 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Martin, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

HOUGHAM, 2½ miles S.W. from Dover, contains 155 houses, and 834 inhabitants, including part of the village in Folkstone hundred, Shepway Lathe. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is a vicarage, value 6*l*. 13*s*. 4*d*., in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

WEST LANGDON, 3½ miles N. from Dover, contains 19 houses, and 86 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, now a ruin, is a rectory, value 16*l*., in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. William de Auberville in 1192 founded here an abbey for White canons, in honour of the Virgin Mary and St. Thomas the Martyr, which at the Dissolution was valued at 56*l*. 6*s*. 9*d*. The site now called the Abbey demesne was granted in 1538 to the Archbishop of Canterbury.

LYDDEN, 4½ miles N.W. from Dover, contains 29 houses, and 149 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 6*l*. 6*s*., in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

ST. MARGARET, at Cliffe, on a small bay near the South Foreland, 5 miles N.E. from Dover, contains 87 houses, and 613 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 10*s.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. The church is of Anglo-Norman architecture, with a remarkable western entrance singularly enriched: the northern doorway is also curious.

POULTON, or Polton, 3 miles W. from Dover, contains 3 houses, and 29 inhabitants.

RIVER, 2½ miles N.W. from Dover, contains 96 houses, and 701 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 1*s.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

SIBBERTSWOLD, or Shebbertswell, 5 miles N.W. from Dover, contains 53 houses, and 299 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a vicarage, value 6*l.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

WHITFIELD, 3 miles N.W. from Dover, contains 40 houses, and 207 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 18*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

BLEANGATE HUNDRED.

CHISLETT, 7 miles N.E. from Canterbury, contains 191 houses, and 1135 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 29*l.* 19*s.* 9*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

HERNE, 5 miles N. from Canterbury, contains 242 houses, and 1675 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Martin, is a vicarage, value 20*l.* 16*s.* 3*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. Herne Bay is much frequented as a bathing-place, and has an annual fair on 16th April. It commands a view of the coast of Essex with the islands at its south-eastern angle.

HOATH, 6½ miles N.E. from Canterbury, contains 59 houses, and 348 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to Holy Cross, is a curacy.

RECVLVER, 10 miles N.E. from Canterbury, contains 36 houses, and 266 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 12*s.* 3*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. The edifice is now a ruin, on the verge of the sea-shore, with two lofty towers at the western end, which are deemed of some importance as a land-mark, and commonly called "The Two Sisters;" the sea makes continual encroachments, and threatens its speedy destruction. The remains of the Castle of Regulvium, the residence of the Anglo-Saxon kings, consist only of foundation walls.

STOURMOUTH, 8 miles N.E. from Canterbury, contains 40 houses, and 257 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 19*l.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Rochester.

STURRY, on the river Stour, 2½ miles N.E. from Canterbury, contains 157 houses, and 878 inhabitants, including the hamlets of Blaxland, Buckwell, Butland, and Calcot Common. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a vicarage, value 13*l.* 1*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

WALMER, 2 miles S. from Deal, contains 317 houses, and 1568 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a curacy, value 52*l.*, in the presentation of the Archbishop of Canterbury. Walmer Castle, the seat of the Duke of Wellington, K.G., lord warden of the Cinque Ports, stands on the sea-shore at some distance from the village, and commands a fine view of the Downs and coast of France.

DOWNHAMFORD HUNDRED.

ADISHAM, 3 miles S.W. from Wingham, contains 39 houses, and 305 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Holy Innocents, is a rectory, value 28*l.* 3*s.* 1*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

FORDWICH, on the river Stour, 2 miles N.E. from Canterbury, contains 53 houses, and 242 inhabitants, and is a corporation by prescription. It is governed by a mayor, jurats, and commonalty, with a high-steward, treasurer, and town-clerk. The mayor, who is coroner by virtue of his office, and the jurats, who are justices within these liberties, exclusive of all others, hold a general sessions of the peace and court of record. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 5*l.* 15*s.* 2*d.*, in the patronage of Earl Cowper, who is also Lord Fordwich. The marshes here, called Fordwich Levels, afford pasture to large flocks of sheep. Up to this town the Stour is navigable, and is celebrated for a peculiar description of trout, sometimes of ten or twelve pounds weight.

ICKHAM, 2 miles W. from Wingham, contains 89 houses, and 521 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Weld. The church, dedicated to St. John the Evangelist, is a rectory, value 29*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. Lee Priory, the seat of Captain T. B. Brydges Barrett, was chiefly built in 1782, from designs by Wyatt, whose bust is in the hall. Sir Egerton Brydges established a printing-press here in 1813, distinguished for the exquisite beauty of the works it has produced: one of these is "Speeches delivered to Queen Elizabeth on her visit to Giles Lord Chandos, at Sudeley Castle in 1594," in 1815, 4to. with many wood-cuts; as also "a list of pictures at this seat" in 1817; amongst them is the celebrated miniature of Anne of Cleves by Holbein, in a carved ivory box, and a miniature of Henry VIII. by the same artist.

LITTLEBOURNE, on a branch of the Lesser Stour, 4½ miles E. from Canterbury, contains 122 houses, and 698 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Vincent, is a vicarage, value 8*l.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury.

STODMARSH, 4½ miles N.E. from Canterbury, contains 26 houses, and 122 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Archdeacon of Canterbury. In it are monuments of the Courthope family.

WICKHAMBREUX, 4½ miles E. from Canterbury, contains 82 houses, and 469 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a rectory, value 29*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.*

EASTRY HUNDRED.

BARFREESTON, 5½ miles S. from Wingham, contains 16 houses, and 115 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 7*l.* 14*s.*, in the patronage of St. John's College Oxford. This edifice is of Anglo-Norman architecture, having been erected at the beginning of the twelfth century: it has a fine circular window in the eastern gable.

BETTESHANGER, 3½ miles S.W. from Sandwich, contains 3 houses, and 21 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 6*l.* 4*s.* 4*d.*

CHILLENDEEN, 4½ miles S.E. from Wingham, contains 26 houses, and 147 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 5*l.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

DENTON, 9 miles S.E. from Canterbury, contains 25 houses, and 196 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen, is a rectory, value 5*l.* 19*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of University College Oxford. Denton Court, the seat of Sir Samuel Egerton Brydges, Bart., was erected in the reign of Elizabeth, and has a noble gallery extending the whole length of the front. Broome Park, northward of the village, is the seat of Sir Henry Oxenden, Bart. Sir Basil Dixwell, of Brome, was created baronet 19th June 1660.

EASTRY, 3 miles S. from Sandwich, contains 163 houses, and 1062 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 19*l.* 12*s.* 1*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

EYTHORN, 5½ miles N.W. from Dover, contains 67 houses, and 390 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a rectory, value 15*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.*

HAM, 3 miles S. from Sandwich, contains 5 houses, and 26 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. George, is a rectory, value 5*l.* 6*s.* 5*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

KNOWLTON, 4½ miles S.E. from Wingham, contains 3 houses, and 34 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Clement, is a rectory, value 6*l.* 5*s.* 2*d.*, in the patronage of G. W. Hughes D'Aeth, Esq., of Knowlton Court. Sir Samuel Peyton of Knowlton was created baronet June 29, 1611. Sir John Narborough of Knowlton was created baronet 5th November 1688; and Sir Thomas D'Aeth was created baronet 16th July 1716.

SANDWICH, on the river Stour, 40 miles E. from Maidstone, and 68 from London, contains 546 houses, and 2912 inhabitants. This town is one of the Cinque Ports, and owes its rise to the decay of Richborough. It is governed by a mayor, twelve jurats, twenty-four common-councilmen, a steward, recorder, town-clerk, and other officers, and sends two members to Parliament; a privilege conferred in the reign of Edward III. The right of election is now vested in the freemen resident and non-resident, who amount to about 300. The present members are Joseph Marryatt, Esq. and Sir E. T. Trowbridge, Bart. Ship-building and rope-making are carried on here, and the exports and imports are considerable. Here is a market on Wednesday and Saturday, and an annual fair on the 4th of December. There are three parishes: St. Clements, a vicarage, value 13*l.* 16*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the Archdeacon; St. Mary the Virgin, a vicarage, value 8*l.* 1*s.*, in the patronage of the Archdeacon; and St. Peter the Apostle, a rectory, value 8*l.*, in the patronage of the Crown and the Corporation alternately. St. Bartholomew's Hospital was founded about 1244; St. John's Hospital about 1287; and St. Thomas's Hospital about 1392. Here is also a free grammar-school, founded about 1563.

TILMANSTONE, 5 miles W. from Deal, contains 41 houses, and 303 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

WALDERSHARE, 4 miles N. from Dover, contains 11 houses, and 69 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 8*s.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. Waldershare Park is the seat of the Earl of Guildford.

WOODNESBOROUGH, 2 miles S.W. from Sandwich, contains 101 houses, and 689 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 10*l.* 0*s.* 7*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Rochester.

WORD, or Worth, one mile S. from Sandwich, contains 67 houses, and 438 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a curacy.

KINGHAMFORD HUNDRED.

BARHAM, or Berham, 6 miles S.E. from Canterbury, contains 130 houses, and 912 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a curacy. On Barham Down is an ancient encampment, and it is crossed by the Watling-street. Barham Court is the seat of G. Dering, Esq.

BISHOPSBORNE, on a branch of the lesser Stour, 4½ miles S.E. from Canterbury, contains 63 houses, and 325 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 39*l.* 19*s.* 2*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. Richard Hooker was rector here from 1595 to 2nd Nov. 1600, when he died, and was buried in the church. Bourne was a manor of the Archbishops of Canterbury, whence the prefix. Archbishop Ralph received King Henry I. here on his return from the coast, a tempest having prevented his embarking for the continent. Sir Anthony Aucher, of Bourne House, was created baronet 4th July 1666.

KINGSTONE, 5 miles S.E. from Canterbury, contains 46 houses, and 301 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Giles, is a rectory, value 16*l.*

WOOTTON, 8½ miles S.E. from Canterbury, contains 20 houses, and 131 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Geddings. The church, dedicated to St. Martin, is a rectory, value 8*l.* 10*s.* 2*d.*, in the patronage of Col. John Bridges, of Wootton Court.

PRESTON HUNDRED.

ELMSTONE, 2½ miles N.E. from Wingham, contains 12 houses, and 76 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 6*l.* 7*s.* 8*d.*

ISLE OF THANET

Insula rotunda Tamarae, quam circum unda fertilis et munda, nulli est in orbe secunda.

PRESTON, 2 miles N. from Wingham, contains 79 houses, and 504 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mildred, is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 15*s.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury.

THE ISLE OF THANET, OR RINGSLOW HUNDRED.

BIRCHINGTON, 3½ miles W. from Margate, contains 119 houses, and 700 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a curacy: it contains several monuments of the Crispe family. Quex is the seat of John Roberts Powel, Esq.

ST. LAWRENCE, one mile W. from Ramsgate, contains 315 houses, and 1601 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 7*l.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. Manston Court is now a farm-house. Southward of the village is Chilton and Pegwell.

MARGATE, 44 miles N.E. from Maidstone, and 72 from London, contains 1345 houses, and 7843 inhabitants. This town is situated within a small bay, in a breach of the cliff, and has very considerably increased in opulence, beauty, and extent, within the last thirty years. It is governed by a constable, deputed by the constable of Dover Castle, and has a market on Wednesday and Saturday. A violent storm, 15th January 1808, did much damage to the town, and carried away part of the pier of the harbour, with all the bathing-rooms, &c. On the 5th April 1810, the foundation of the new pier was laid, which was completed in 1816. The first steam-vessel from London made her passage hence in 1815. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a vicarage, value 8*l.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury: it contains several ancient monuments and brasses; one of the last represents a ship in full sail, inscribed, "Here lyeth interred the body of Roger Morris, sometime one of the 6 principall M—ers of attendance of his Ma—ties Navye Royall, who departed this lyfe the 13th of October 1615." Between Margate and the North Foreland is North Down and Kingsgate, named from the landing of King Charles II. and the Duke of York in 1683, in which year the North Foreland light-house was erected: the light is here kept from sun-set to sun-rise, under the direction of the elder brethren of the Trinity House.

MINSTER, 5 miles S.W. from Margate, contains 170 houses, and 920 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 33*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. It derived its name from an Anglo-Saxon monastery, founded here by Domneva, daughter of Ermenred, son of Edwald King of Kent, afterwards called St. Mildred's Abbey. At Thorne, eastward from the village, is an ancient chapel, now a barn; and from Mount Pleasant, or King William's Mount, is an exceedingly interesting prospect.

MONKTON, 6 miles S.W. from Margate, contains 69 houses, and 348 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 13*l.* 8*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. The village derives its name from having belonged to the monastery of Christchurch at Canterbury.

ST. NICHOLAS, at Wade, 6½ miles S.W. from Margate, contains 107 houses, and 590 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 15*l.* 9*s.* 7*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

ST. PETER'S, 2 miles N. from Ramsgate, contains 461 houses, and 2101 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 9*l.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. The edifice is large, and is a well known sea-mark. Broadstairs is a hamlet of this parish: from its elevated situation the sea prospects here are extensive, and include a view of the Downs and coast of France.

RAMSGATE, 43 miles N.E. from Maidstone, and 74 from London, contains 1063 houses, and 6031 inhabitants. It is a curacy, and is governed by a constable, appointed by the mayor of Sandwich. The market is on Wednesday and Saturday. The influx of visitors in the bathing season has occasioned an increase in the buildings, and an importance has arisen from the improvements of the harbour since the year 1749, when it was commenced. The area of the harbour is nearly circular, and comprehends about 46 acres in extent. The entire length of the east pier is 2000 feet, that of the west pier about 1500 feet; these form a favourite promenade, commanding a view of the Downs and the cliffs of Calais, thirty miles distant, together with the towns of Sandwich and Deal, and the rich valleys of East Kent. Ellington, near Ramsgate, is the seat of John Garret, Esq.

SARRE, on the river Wantsume, at the western extremity of the isle, 9 miles N.E. from Canterbury, contains 39 houses, and 191 inhabitants. It is a curacy.

STONAR, one mile N. from Sandwich, contains 9 houses, and 44 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 3*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of Earl Dudley.

WOOD, 3 miles S.W. from Margate, contains 32 houses, and 212 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Acol.

WESTGATE HUNDRED.

THE CITY OF CANTERBURY, 56 miles from London, contains 2408 houses, and 12,745 inhabitants. It is governed by a mayor, recorder, twelve aldermen, and twenty-four common-councilmen, including a sheriff and town-clerk, a chamberlain, coroner, and other officers. The city is divided into six wards, Burgate, North Gate, Redingate, St. George's Gate, West Gate, and Wincheap Gate, to each of which two aldermen are appointed. A court of Burghmote for the city is held every fourth Tuesday, and a general court of quarter sessions, &c. The petty sessions for the Stowe and Wingham division are also held here. Canterbury sends two members to Parliament, and the right of election is in the citizens and freemen. The present members are the Honourable Richard Watson and Lord Fordwich. Here is a market on Wednesday, toll free, for hops, and on Wednesday and Saturday for provisions. The annual fairs are 14th May for toys, and 10th October for cattle. The city contains the following parishes:—All Saints, a rectory, in the patronage of the Crown; St. Alphege, a rectory, value 8*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop; St. Andrew, a rectory, value 22*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop, Dean, and Chapter; St. George the Martyr, a rectory, value 7*l.* 17*s.* 11*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter; Holy Cross, Westgate within, a vicarage, value 13*l.* 0*s.* 2*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop, Dean and Chapter alternately; St. Margaret, a rectory, in the patronage of the Archdeacon; St. Martin, a rectory, value 6*l.* 5*s.* 2*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop and Dean and Chapter; St. Mary Broden, a vicarage, value 4*l.* 1*s.* 5*d.*, in the patronage of H. L. Warner, Esq.; St. Mary Breadman, a rectory; St. Mary Magdalen, a rectory, value 4*l.* 10*s.*; St. Mary, North Gate, a vicarage, value 11*l.* 19*s.* 4*d.*; St. Mildred, a rectory, value 17*l.* 17*s.* 11*d.*; St. Paul, a vicarage, value 9*l.* 18*s.* 9*d.*, (this parish includes Longport and the dissolved monastery of St. Augustine); St. Peter, a rectory, value 3*l.* 10*s.* 10*d.*, the precinct of the Archbishop's palace, and the precinct of Christchurch.

In every view of this city the cathedral rises with superlative beauty: its erection was commenced by Lanfranc Abbot of Caen, whom William the Conqueror made primate of England, and was carried on during the prelacy of Anselm, his successor, under the direction of Prior Conrad, whose taste and ability excited the wonder of his contemporaries. The church was dedicated to Christ by Archbishop Ralph in 1114. After the murder of Archbishop Becket in 1170 the building was re-consecrated, a measure which led to numerous benefactions and honours characteristic of the superstition of the age. A shrine having been subsequently prepared for the canonized martyr in the centre of Trinity chapel, his remains were thence translated in 1220 with the utmost pomp in the presence of King Henry III., and the festival of the translation of St. Thomas became an anniversary of the highest splendour, attended by a grand display of the riches and greatness of the convent. It is to this festival we are indebted for one of the most curious as well as most ancient poems in the English language, The Canterbury Tales of Chaucer. The successive Archbishops, possessed of ample means, contributed to the improvement of the cathedral. During the prelacy of Archbishop Peckham many additions were made to the edifice under Prior Eastry. In 1376 a vast alteration was commenced by Archbishop Sudbury, and continued under Archbishops Arundel and Chicheley, when the nave was entirely rebuilt. Prior Chillenden, a learned and ingenious monk, directed the works. Prior Sellings, elected in 1472, rebuilt the central tower called Bell Harry, 235 feet in height, a magnificent structure, to which Cardinal Morton contributed largely. The whole of the western front, with the exception of the northern tower, was the work of Chillenden. The choir is of Anglo-Norman architecture. On the northern side of the cathedral are the cloisters, the chapter-house, and the remains of the Archbishop's palace. The treasury is a square Anglo-Norman tower at the east end, where the pastoral staff of Becket and the numerous relics described by Erasmus were deposited before the Dissolution. In the church, amongst abundant objects of interest, are monuments of the following Archbishops:—Abp. Theobald, ob. 1162, in Trinity chapel; Abp. Walter, ob. 1207, in the south aisle; Cardinal Abp. Langton, ob. 1228, in the Somerset chapel; Abp. Peckham, ob. 1292, in the martyrdom; his effigy is of oak, and was probably once covered with metal; Abp. Reynold, ob. 1327, in the south aisle; Abp. Meopham, ob. 1333, in the south aisle, at the entrance of St. Anselm's chapel; Abp. Stratford, ob. 1341, in the south aisle; Abp. Sudbury, beheaded in 1381, in the south aisle; Abp. Courtenay, ob. 1396, near that of Edward Prince of Wales; Abp. Chicheley, ob. 1443, in the north aisle; Abp. Kemp, ob. 1454, in the south aisle; Abp. Bourchier, ob. 1486, in the north aisle; Cardinal Abp. Morton, ob. 1501, in the crypt or under-croft; Abp. Warham, ob. 1534, in the martyrdom; Cardinal Abp. Pole, ob. 1558; he was the last Archbishop interred here; his monument is on the north side of Becket's Crown. The following Archbishops are recorded to have been buried here, but no memorials at present remain:—Abp. Cuthbert, ob. 759; Abp. Theogild, ob. 832, in the north transept; Abp. Odo, ob. 958, in the choir; St. Dunstan, ob. 988, in the crypt; Abp. Lanfranc, ob. 1089, behind the high altar; St. Anselm, ob. 1107, in the chapel which retains his name; Abp. Rodolph, ob. 1122, in the nave; Abp. Corbell, ob. 1136; St. Thomas à Becket, ob. 1170, in the crypt; but his shrine stood in the centre of Trinity chapel, which was thence called Becket's Crown; Abp. Richard, ob. 1184, at the end of the north aisle of the Lady chapel; Abp. Winchilsey, ob. 1313, in the south transept; Abp. Ufford, ob. 1349, in the martyrdom; Abp. Bradwardine, ob. 1349, in St. Anselm's chapel; Abp. Islip, ob. 1366, in the nave; Abp. Wittlesey, ob. 1375, in the nave; Abp. Arundel, ob. 1413, in the nave; Abp. Stafford, ob. 1452, in the martyrdom; Abp. Dene, ob. 1502, in the martyrdom. Leland states that there were ten Archbishops buried in the crypt or under-croft, where some slabs with indentations of mitred figures still remain; and many very large slabs of marble, which had evidently been inlaid with mitred figures under canopies, were removed from the nave of the cathedral in 1788 to the pavement of the chapter-house, where they produce a very interesting effect. There are numerous monumental remains of royal and eminent persons in the various chapels in this cathedral: the most prominent are those of Edward the Black Prince, with his effigies of brass, gilt and burnished; and of King Henry IV. and his Queen in Trinity chapel. The kneeling figure of Dean Wotton, ob. 1566, is also a very remarkably fine piece of sculpture. The painted glass in this cathedral is exceedingly interesting from its extreme antiquity, the windows at the eastern end in particular, which are so complicated in their design that considerable time might be employed in the investigation and description of them. They consist of a variety of circles and squares, each containing an historical subject chiefly from the Old Testament; but the Passion of St. Thomas with the Legend of his Miracles is said to form a part. Richly ornamented borders, composed of the same brilliant colours, are so interwoven with the pieces of history, that the appearance of the whole, although extremely splendid, is confused. Labels with the name or circumstance inscribed denote the particular subject; as over a walled castle is to be observed BABILONE; but from the height, and the size of the letters being small, are not sufficiently legible to develop the chain of history intended to be conveyed by their means. These windows present the finest specimens of the early state of the art of painting on glass in the kingdom. The windows of the transepts are of much more modern date, that in the north transept having been presented by King Edward IV. The cloisters situated on the north side of the church are singularly rich in decoration; the ceiling is groined, and the intersections are covered with more than 800 shields of arms of benefactors, &c. This portion of the cathedral indeed presents an heraldic assemblage unparalleled in any other church. (Vide Heraldic Notices by Willement, 4to. 1827.) Amongst the many venerable remains of architecture which this city contains, the precincts of the cathedral are far from being the least interesting. Here are to be found many examples of the ancient domestic styles, particularly in the Green Court on the north side of the cathedral church, where in the monastic ages stood the residence of the successive priors of Christchurch. As the income of the office was great, their lodging, including a hall and chapel, were spacious, and at the Reformation was appropriated to the deanery; but being destroyed by an accidental fire was rebuilt in 1570. The dean's-hall, formerly a part of this structure, was demolished during a puritanical frenzy, excited by the performance of plays in it by the King's scholars. The Green Court gate-house, of Anglo-Norman architecture, was the outer entrance to the Priory: near it are the remains of a hall, now the register's office. The entrance to this building, erected for the accommodation of pilgrims, is extremely curious, and particularly worthy of notice. St. Augustine's Abbey, in the eastern suburb of Canterbury, was founded by King Ethelbert for Black monks of the Benedictine order, and was dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul: its walls enclosed about sixteen acres of ground, with a principal front towards the west. The gate-house at one extremity of this front, a very elegant and highly enriched specimen of this description of ancient architecture, is now almost the only remain of the once celebrated abbey. The late James Wyatt adapted the general design of this gate-house in the eastern towers of Font-hill Abbey; and John Carter pronounced it "the very perfection of the art of architecture." Its great merit is the simplicity as well as the elegance of its design, resulting from the extreme chastity of its proportions; the enrichments are comprised of an abundance of beautiful mouldings rather than of sculptured ornaments, a mode of decoration peculiar to the period: another gate-house opposite to Burgate formed the opposite extremity to the western front of the abbey precinct. St. Ethelbert's Tower, part of the western front of the Abbey church, recorded to have been built in 1087, having been undermined for the sake of the very fine stone, fell down in 1822. At the Dissolution, St. Augustine's Abbey was converted to a palace by King Henry VIII. Queen Elizabeth kept her court here in 1573. It was afterwards granted to Lord Cobham, who was attainted in 1603. King James granted it to Robert Cecil Lord Essenden; and soon afterwards it became the property of Thomas Lord Wotton. King Charles I. was married here 13th June, 1625; and King Charles II. lodged here on his passage at the Restoration. The estate has descended from the Wotton family to that of Hales its present possessor. Canterbury Castle, supposed to have been built by William the Conqueror, is larger than that of Rochester, being 88 feet by 80 in dimension. The original portal was on the north side, and the state chambers on the third story, where alone are found large windows. The principal room in the centre of the edifice was 60 feet by 30; two others on the southern side were each 28 feet by 15, and one on the northern side was 20 feet by 15. In the latter end of the reign of James I. this castle was granted away from the Crown and became private property: it is now a storehouse for the gas and water-works' company of the city.

DUNKIRK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles W. from Canterbury, contains 103 houses, and 543 inhabitants. This woodland district, which is extra-parochial, comprises the ancient forest of Blean, and extends from Boughton Hill eastward to Harbledown, and from Whitstable to Chatham southward.

ST. DUNSTAN'S, a parish contiguous to the western side of the city of Canterbury, contains 128 houses, and 719 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 5*l.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop. In the Roper chapel of this church was formerly preserved the skull of Sir Thomas More, Lord Chancellor, who was beheaded in the reign of Henry VIII.: it was placed on the coffin of his daughter Margaret Roper. In this suburb is an annual fair on 9th July.

ST. GREGORY'S, an extra-parochial district, contiguous to the eastern side of the city of Canterbury, contains 64 houses, and 372 inhabitants. It comprises the site of the priory of St. Gregory, founded by Archbishop Lanfranc for regular Black Canons of the order of St. Augustine, about 1084.

HACKINGTON, or St. Stephen's, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile N. from Canterbury, contains 65 houses, and 349 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Stephen, is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 2*s.* 3*d.*, in the patronage of the Archdeacon of Canterbury. Hales Place, near this village, is the seat of Sir Edward Hales, Bart.

HARBLEDOWN, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile S.W. from Canterbury, contains 138 houses, and 678 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 9*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. Here is an hospital, founded by Archbishop Lanfranc in 1084, where was formerly preserved St. Thomas à Becket's slipper, one of the relics mentioned by Erasmus.

STAPLEGATE, an extra-parochial district contiguous to the northern extremity of the city of Canterbury, contains 38 houses, and 257 inhabitants.

THANINGTON, 2 miles S.W. from Canterbury, contains 53 houses, and 374 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Archbishop of Canterbury. A priory, dedicated to St. James, was founded here in the reign of Henry II., which at the Dissolution was valued at 32*l.* 11*s.* 1*d.* per annum: the site was granted in 1551 to Robert Dartnall.

WHITSTABLE HUNDRED.

BLEANE, 2 miles N.W. from Canterbury, contains 82 houses, and 438 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Comus and St. Damian, is a vicarage, value 10*l.*, in the patronage of East Bridge Hospital.

SEA SALTER, 5½ miles N.W. from Canterbury, contains 128 houses, and 654 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Alphage, is a vicarage, value 11*l.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury. Here is an oyster fishery.

WHITSTABLE, 6 miles N.W. from Canterbury, contains 275 houses, and 1611 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a curacy, value 22*l.* 10*s.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

WINGHAM HUNDRED.

ASH, 2 miles E. from Wingham, contains 360 houses, and 2020 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

GOODNESTONE, 2½ miles S.E. from Wingham, contains 65 houses, and 432 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Holy Cross, is a curacy. Goodnestone Park, the seat of Sir Brook William Bridges, Bart., consists of upwards of 200 acres of beautifully diversified land, the gentle undulations of lawn being bounded by eminences covered with wood. The mansion, environed by a mass of the richest foliage, is a plain edifice of brick. Sir Brook Bridges, of Goodnestone, the first baronet of this family, was created by George I. 19th April 1718.

NONINGTON, 4½ miles S. from Wingham, contains 129 houses, and 730 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

WINGHAM, 34 miles E. from Maidstone, and 62 from London, contains 190 houses, and 1085 inhabitants. Here are annual fairs on 12th May and 12th November for cattle. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Archbishop of Canterbury. A college was commenced by Archbishop Kilwardby, and endowed by his successor Archbishop Peckham, in 1286, valued at 84*l.* per annum at the Dissolution. It was granted in 1553 to Sir Thomas Palmer.

WOMENSWOULD, 5 miles S. from Wingham, contains 36 houses, and 233 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, is a curacy.

2. Lathe of Aylesford

Is bounded on the north by the river Thames and county of Essex; on the east by Scray Lathe; on the south by the county of Sussex; and on the west by Sutton Lathe. It is divided into hundreds.

BRENCHLEY AND HORSEMONDEN HUNDRED.

BRENCHLEY, 4 miles N. from Lamberhurst, contains 390 houses, and 2264 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 12*l.* 18*s.* 9*d.*

HORSEMONDEN, 2 miles N.E. from Lamberhurst, contains 147 houses, and 1224 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, is a rectory, value 26*l.* 3*s.* 9*d.*

LAMBERHURST, 14 miles S.W. from Maidstone, and 40 miles from London, is chiefly in the county of Sussex.

CHATHAM AND GILLINGHAM HUNDRED.

CHATHAM, on the river Medway, 30 miles from London, contains 2645 houses, and 15,268 inhabitants, including that part of the parish within the city of Rochester which it wholly adjoins on the eastern side. Here is a weekly market on Saturday, plentifully supplied with every article of provision, and annual fairs on 15th May and 20th October for horses and cattle. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a curacy, held by lease from the Dean and Chapter of Rochester: it was rebuilt in 1788 by the master carpenter of the dock-yard, when the marble monuments were at the same time replaced. This town has obtained consequence and celebrity for its dock-yard and arsenal, the last said to be the finest in the world, and is certainly an object of the greatest importance to the nation. Chatham dock-yard was greatly improved and enlarged as early as the reign of Elizabeth, who built Upnor Castle for its defence. King Charles I. caused additional store-houses to be erected, and extended its site; and King Charles II. paid great attention to its improvement. The dock-yard and ordnance-wharf occupy about a mile in length, and present a series of buildings on a large scale, comprising the houses of the resident commissioner and officers of the yard, spacious store-houses, some nearly 700 feet in length, and a sail-loft upwards of 200 feet. Here vast quantities of stores, constantly demanded for the supply of the British fleet, are arranged, so as to be procured on emergency with the greatest regularity and dispatch. Smiths' forges, for anchors of nearly five tons weight, and a rope-house 11,040 feet long, where cables for the largest ships are made. In the yard are four docks for repairing, and six slips for building ships. The ordnance-wharf on the southern side of the dock-yard is only separated from it by a flight of steps for the convenience of embarkation. The guns are here arranged in tiers, with the name of the ship to which they belong marked upon them, as well as their weight of metal. The fortification, known as Chatham lines, was commenced in 1750, and extends from the banks of the Medway to beyond the extremity of the dock-yard, including, besides the naval establishments, barracks for the garrison, the church of Chatham, and the hamlet of Brompton on the summit of the high ground on the south-eastern side of the yard. Gundulph Bishop of Rochester, in the reign of William II., founded St. Bartholomew's hospital, which is still existing under the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Rochester. From Chatham Hill, eastward of the town, is an extensive and beautiful prospect.

GILLINGHAM, 1½ mile E. from Chatham, contains 1041 houses, and 6209 inhabitants, which return, however, includes persons in the ordnance barracks, and on board ships lying in the river Medway. The church, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen, is a vicarage, value 15*l.* 13*s.* 11*d.*, in the patronage of Brazen Nose College Oxford, and the Governors of Middleton School. The Archbishops of Canterbury had formerly a palace here. Grange is a hamlet of this parish, and a member of the port of Hastings. Twedale and Lydsing, or Lidgen, are also hamlets.

THE CITY OF ROCHESTER, 8½ miles N. from Maidstone, and 29 from London, contains 4135 houses, and 24,063 inhabitants. It is situated on the River Medway, and is governed by a mayor, recorder, twelve aldermen, twelve common-councilmen, a town-clerk, three serjeants at mace, and a water-bailiff. The mayor and citizens hold a court of admiralty once a year for regulating the oyster fishery in those creeks and branches of the river Medway that are within their jurisdiction. The petty sessions for the northern division of the Lathe of Aylesford are held here, and the assizes are held here and at Maidstone alternately. The town-hall, erected in 1687, contains portraits of King William III., Queen Anne, Sir Cloudesley Shovell, and other eminent characters. Rochester returns two members to Parliament, a privilege conferred in the reign of Edward I.: the right of election is vested in the freemen, amounting to about 600. The present members are Ralph Bernal, Esq. and John Mills, Esq. The market is held on Friday, and there are annual fairs 30th May and 11th December for horses and cattle, &c. The bridge over the Medway is 560 feet in length, and consists of eleven arches: like old London Bridge, it is built on wooden starlings, which cause a fall of water during ebb tide both strong and rapid. It was erected in the reign of Richard II., principally at the expense of John Lord Cobham and Sir Robert Knollys, K.G., whose donations, with others, were so considerable, that the bridge has been since kept in repair by that means alone. The entrance to the bridge is from Chapel-street, so called from a chantry founded by Lord Cobham, of which building it is said there are still vestiges in part of the Crown Inn.

The bishoprick of Rochester is the smallest, and next to Canterbury the most ancient in England, having been founded by Saint Augustine about the year 604. The cathedral church was originally built by Ethelbert King of Kent, when it was dedicated to St. Andrew. It was afterwards rebuilt by Bishop Gundulph in 1080. The Bishop of Rochester is styled Chaplain to the Archbishop of Canterbury, and the Archbishop claimed, and for several centuries had, the disposal of the bishopric. In all solemn processions the Bishop of Rochester was cross-bearer to the Archbishop. The diocese contains only a small part of this county, with the parish of Iselham in Cambridgeshire, and Freckenham in the county of Suffolk, including in the whole about 98 parishes. The see is valued in the King's books at 358*l.* 3*s.* 2*d.*, and was computed to be worth 2400*l.* The arms of the see are Argent, on a saltier gules, an escallop or.

To the cathedral belong also a dean, an archdeacon, a chancellor, a treasurer, six prebendaries, a chanter, and other officers. The cathedral stands southward of the High-street. The western front, 81 feet in length, of Anglo-Norman architecture, is highly enriched, and contains statues of Henry I. and his queen. In St. William's chapel is buried Walter de Merton Bishop of Rochester, and founder of Merton College Oxford, who died in 1277. His monument having been destroyed at the time of the Reformation, the Society of Merton College rebuilt the tomb, which bears two inscriptions. This cathedral was long suffered to remain neglected, but an extensive repair has since the year 1827 been carried on under the direction of Mr. Cottingham, from funds supplied wholly by the dean and chapter. A more careful and attentive architect could not have been found, as the result has amply proved, in a more correct restoration of the architectural peculiarities of this very ancient cathedral than is usually exhibited.

Rochester Castle, one of the finest examples of the style of architecture of the Anglo-Norman era in the kingdom, stands on the banks of the Medway, being built on the brow of a hill, with its principal tower so situated as to command both the river and the adjacent country. The castle was anciently fortified with strong outworks and deep ditches, with a large area enclosed for the use of the garrison. It was built about the year 1088 by Gundulph, a monk of Bec in Normandy, Bishop of Rochester, and the most celebrated architect of his age. Little now remains of the castle except the keep or master tower, which is in dimension about 75 feet by 72; but it is only the exterior walls that enable us to judge of its former magnificence. King James I. in 1610 granted this castle to Sir Anthony Weldon of Swanscombe, whose descendants demolished the interior for the sake of the timber; the walls defy destruction. Rochester contains two parishes: St. Margaret, a vicarage, value 10*l.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter; and St. Nicholas, a vicarage, value 20*l.* 8*s.* 9*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter. The church of Strood is also within the liberties of the city. In the reign of Elizabeth Richard Watts built the alms-houses here, which continue to bear his name, and he afterwards devised the greater part of his property for the support of the charitable establishment which he had founded. Amongst the directions which he gives for the management of the alms-houses, he desires that there shall be provided "six good mattresses or flock-beds, and other good and sufficient furniture, to harbour and lodge poor travellers or wayfaring men, being no common rogues or proctors, and they the said wayfaring men to harbour and lodge therein no longer than one night."

EYHORNE HUNDRED.

BEARSTEAD, 2½ miles N.E. from Maidstone, contains 107 houses, and 566 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to Holy Cross, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 7*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Rochester.

BICKNOR, 4½ miles S.W. from Milton, contains 8 houses, and 53 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a rectory, value 5*l.* 10*s.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

BOUGHTON MALHERB, 5 miles W. from Charing, contains 52 houses, and 475 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a rectory, value 13*l.* 15*s.* Here are some remains of a curious ancient mansion, built by Sir Edward Wotton, treasurer of Calais in the reign of Henry VIII.: it was visited by Queen Elizabeth in 1573, and in expectation probably of a repetition of the Queen's condescension, the great hall was erected in 1579, part of which yet stands.

BOUGHTON MONCHELSEA, 4 miles S. from Maidstone, contains 139 houses, and 828 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Rochester.

BREDHURST, 4½ miles S.E. from Chatham, contains 15 houses, and 134 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a curacy, in the presentation of the rector of Hollingbourne.

BROOMFIELD, 5½ miles S.E. from Maidstone, contains 21 houses, and 115 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, is a curacy.

CHART SUTTON, 4 miles S.E. from Maidstone, contains 64 houses, and 500 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 12*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Rochester.

FRINSTED, 5½ miles N.W. from Charing, contains 22 houses, and 152 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Dunstan, is a rectory, value 9*l.* 11*s.* 8*d.*

HARRIETSHAM, 7 miles E. from Maidstone, contains 90 houses, and 707 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a rectory, value 11*l.* 10*s.*, in the patronage of All Souls College Oxford.

HEADCORN, 9 miles S.W. from Charing, contains 184 houses, and 1191 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a vicarage, value 15*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

HOLLINGBOURNE, 6 miles E. from Maidstone, contains 156 houses, and 1000 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory and vicarage; the rectory, value 28*l.* 15*s.* 5*d.*, and the vicarage, value 7*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, both in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. On Hollingbourne Hill is the seat of B. D. Duppa, Esq.

HUCKING, 6 miles E. from Maidstone, contains 17 houses, and 158 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, is a curacy.

LANGLEY, 4 miles S.E. from Maidstone, contains 39 houses, and 263 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 6*l.* 19*s.* 9*d.*

LEEDS, 5 miles E. from Maidstone, contains 99 houses, and 515 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Archbishop of Canterbury. Leeds Castle, the seat of Piennes Wykeham Martin, Esq., stands in a moat which covers about eleven acres of land, and includes within its walls about three more. The outworks, containing the castle mill, were erected by William de Leybourne, in the reign of Edward I.; the gate-house and bridge about the same period. In 1512 Sir Henry Guldeford, comptroller of the household to King Henry VIII., was appointed constable of Leeds, and keeper of the park. The castle being then much decayed, was restored at the King's charge. The buildings which stood southward of the two principal divisions of the castle were pulled down in 1822 and rebuilt. The present front, which possesses but little architectural merit, is fortunately but little seen from the surrounding park.

LENHAM, 4½ miles N.W. from Charing, contains 300 houses, and 1959 inhabitants. Here is a weekly market on Tuesday, and annual fairs on 6th June and 23rd October. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 13*l.* 15*s.* 2*d.* Chilson House is the seat of J. Douglas, Esq.

OTHAM, 3 miles S.E. from Maidstone, contains 63 houses, and 337 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a rectory, value 9*l.* 17*s.* 3*d.*

OTTERDEN, 3½ miles N. from Charing, contains 26 houses, and 172 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is a rectory, value 6*l.* 14*s.* 2*d.* Otterden Place is the seat of — Wheler, Esq.

STOCKBURY, 5 miles W. from Milton, contains 73 houses, and 594 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen, is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 11*s.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Rochester.

EAST SUTTON, 6 miles S.E. from Maidstone, contains 59 houses, and 312 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a curacy. Sir Robert Filmer, of East Sutton, was created baronet 24th December 1674. East Sutton Place is now the seat of the Rev. Sir John Filmer, Bart.

SUTTON VALENCE, or Town Sutton, 4½ miles S.E. from Maidstone, contains 202 houses, and 1058 inhabitants. Here is a free grammar-school. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 9*s.* 7*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Rochester.

THORNHAM, 4 miles N.E. from Maidstone, contains 64 houses, and 523 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 0*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

ULCOMBE, 6½ miles S.E. from Maidstone, contains 115 houses, and 668 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 16*l.* 5*s.* 10*d.* Ulcombe Place, late the seat of the Marquess of Ormond, was bequeathed to Charles Harward Butler Clarke, Esq. in 1821.

WITCHLING, 10 miles E. from Maidstone, contains 15 houses, and 137 inhabitants. It is a curacy.

WORMSHILL, or Wormsell, 6 miles N.W. from Charing, contains 26 houses, and 165 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Giles, is a rectory, value 10*l.*, in the patronage of the Governors of Christ's Hospital London.

HOO HUNDRED.

ALL HALLOWS, on the banks of the Thames, 7½ miles N.E. from Rochester, contains 33 houses, and 259 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 7*s.* 11*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Rochester.

HIGH HALSTOW, 5 miles N. from Rochester, contains 49 houses, and 350 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, is a rectory, value 14*l.* 5*s.* 7*d.*

HOO, 4 miles N.E. from Rochester, contains 144 houses, and 960 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Wesburgh, is a vicarage, value 18*l.* 6*s.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Rochester.

ST. MARY'S HOO, 6½ miles N.E. from Rochester, contains 30 houses, and 286 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 16*l.* 12*s.* 1*d.*

ST. JAMES, in the Isle of Grain, 9 miles N.E. from Rochester, contains 45 houses, and 254 inhabitants. It is a curacy, in the presentation of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

STOKE, 6 miles N.E. from Rochester, contains 69 houses, and 350 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 11*s.* 8*d.*

LARKFIELD HUNDRED.

ADDINGTON, 7 miles N.W. from Maidstone, contains 43 houses, and 228 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, is a rectory, value 6*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*

ALLINGTON, 2 miles N.W. from Maidstone, contains 6 houses, and 45 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is a rectory, value 6*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Earl of Romney. Allington Castle is said to have been originally built by Sir Simon de Penchester, in the reign of Edward I. Queen Elizabeth granted the estate to Sir Jacob Astley, master of the jewel-house, from whom it has descended to the Marsham family. The remains of the ancient castle are exceedingly curious and interesting.

AYLESFORD, on the Medway, 3½ miles N.W. from Maidstone, contains 192 houses, and 1136 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a vicarage, value 10*l.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Rochester. Richard Lord Grey of Codnor founded here an hospital of Carmelite or White Friars, which was granted in 1541 to Sir Thomas Wyatt, upon whose son's attainder it reverted to the Crown, and was granted by Queen Elizabeth to John Sidley.

BIRLING, 6½ miles N.W. from Maidstone, contains 82 houses, and 459 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Earl of Abergavenny.

BURHAM, 5 miles N. from Maidstone, contains 45 houses, and 236 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 8*l.*

DITTON, 3½ miles N.W. from Maidstone, contains 36 houses, and 192 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 11*l.* 15*s.*, in the patronage of the Earl of Aylesford.

LEYBOURNE, 5 miles N.W. from Maidstone, contains 53 houses, and 300 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a rectory, value 17*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* Here is a free-school. Sir Roger Leybourne erected a castle here in the reign of Richard I.: his son William Leybourne entertained King Edward I. here on 25th Oct. 1285. Leybourne Grange is the seat of Sir Henry Hawley, who was created baronet 14th May 1795.

WEST MALLING, or Town Malling, 6 miles N.W. from Maidstone, contains 219 houses, and 1205 inhabitants. It has a market on Saturday, and annual fairs 12th August, 2nd October and 17th November. The petty sessions for the upper south division of the Lathe of Aylesford are held here. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 10*l.*, in the patronage of Sir Roger Twisden, Bart. Malling Abbey was founded by Gundulph Bishop of Rochester, in the reign of William II., for nuns of the order of St. Benedict, and dedicated to the Blessed Virgin. It was destroyed by fire, and rebuilt in the reign of Richard I. At the Dissolution it was valued at 245*l.* 10*s.* 2*d.* per annum, and the site was granted in exchange to the Archbishop of Canterbury in 1540; but in the beginning of the reign of Elizabeth it was resumed, and was granted in 1569 to Henry Cobham or Brook: a great part of the building yet remains.—East Malling, one mile distant from the above, contains 219 houses, and 1403 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a vicarage, value 10*l.* 8*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of Sir Roger Twisden, Bart.

OFFHAM, 3½ miles S.E. from Wrotham, contains 46 houses, and 274 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 6*l.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

RYARSH, 5½ miles N.W. from Maidstone, contains 60 houses, and 359 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Martin, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 10*s.*, in the patronage of Sir Roger Twisden, Bart.

TROTTER'S CLIFFE, or Trosley, 2 miles N.E. from Wrotham, contains 45 houses, and 243 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a rectory, value 10*l.* 2*s.* 11*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Rochester.

WOULDHAM, 3 miles S.W. from Rochester, contains 28 houses, and 176 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 14*l.* 6*s.* 5*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Rochester.

LITTLEFIELD HUNDRED.

MEREWORTH, 5 miles S.E. from Wrotham, contains 131 houses, and 711 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is a rectory, value 14*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of Lord Le Despenser. Mereworth Castle was erected by John Fane Earl of Westmorland, who died in 1762, from a design by Colin Campbell, founded upon that of the Villa Capra of Palladio: it is built on the site of an ancient castle that had belonged to the Lords Abergavenny, and stands upon a gentle eminence, watered by a branch of the Medway, and encompassed by the most agreeable risings cultivated to the utmost perfection. In the collection of pictures at this mansion, which is numerous and valuable, is the celebrated 'Sigismunda' by Coreggio. Yotes Court, the seat of Viscount Torrington, was built in 1659 by James Master, Esq. The grounds comprise about 1000 acres.

WEST PECKHAM, 4 miles N.E. from Tunbridge, contains 81 houses, and 498 inhabitants, including Oxenheath. The church, dedicated to St. Dunstan, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 5*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Rochester. Here was a preceptory of the Knights of St. John of Jerusalem, valued at its dissolution at 63*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* per annum, and the manor was granted in 1541 to Sir Robert Southwell. Oxenheath, the seat of Sir William Geary, Bart., is finely surrounded by woods interspersed with hop-plantations and cherry-orchards, and at no great distance from the banks of the Medway.

MAIDSTONE HUNDRED.

BARMING, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles S.W. from Maidstone, contains 76 houses, and 406 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, is a rectory, value 12*l.* 17*s.* 1*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

BOXLEY, 3 miles N.E. from Maidstone, contains 201 houses, and 1166 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 12*l.* 19*s.* 2*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Rochester. William De Ippe Earl of Kent in 1146 founded here an abbey of Cistercian monks, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, where was kept the celebrated crucifix or Rood of Grace. At the Dissolution the revenues of the abbey were 218*l.* 19*s.* 10*d.* per annum, and in 1540 it was granted to Sir Thomas Wyatt. Boxley Hills command one of the finest views in the kingdom: upon one of these eminences is Kits Coty House, about a mile N.E. from Aylesford; it is composed of four huge unwrought stones, and placed so as to form a recess, which is covered by a fifth stone of an irregular form, and is generally supposed to mark the spot where Catigern, brother to Vortimer, a British king, was slain in battle.

DEPTLING, 3 miles N.E. from Maidstone, contains 58 houses, and 321 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Martin, is a vicarage, value 30*l.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

EAST FARLEIGH, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles S.W. from Maidstone, contains 200 houses, and 1143 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

LINTON, 4 miles S. from Maidstone, contains 107 houses, and 686 inhabitants, including Crockhurst. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Earl Cornwallis. Linton Park, the seat of Earl Cornwallis, is an eminence commanding an extensive prospect over the Weald of Kent. The mansion is of the Corinthian order, and was built by Cubitt.

LOOSE, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles S. from Maidstone, contains 166 houses, and 882 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

MAIDSTONE, on the river Medway, in the very heart of the county, 35 miles from London, contains 2131 houses, and 12,508 inhabitants. It consists of four principal streets, uniting at the market-place. The market, held on Thursday for provisions, hops and grain, toll free, is accounted the largest and best in the county. The fairs are first Tuesday in every month, 13th February, 12th May, 20th June, and second Tuesday in October. The government of the town is vested in a mayor, recorder, 12 jurats, 40 common-councilmen, and other officers. The petty sessions for the eastern division of the Lathe of Aylesford are held here, and the assizes are held in the court-hall here and at Rochester alternately. The borough of Maidstone returns two members to Parliament, a privilege conferred by King Edward VI., and further confirmed by Queen Elizabeth, the right of election being vested in the freemen; the present members are Abraham Wildey Roberts, Esq., and Charles James Barnett, Esq. Some degree of celebrity was given to this town in the reign of Edward III., when John Ufford, then Archbishop of Canterbury, began to build a palace here for the prelates of that see: he died during the progress of its erection, but the edifice was completed by Archbishop Islip within a year or two after his consecration in 1349. Archbishop Courtenay, son of the Earl of Devonshire, in the reign of Richard II. founded here a college of secular priests, to which was added an hospital previously founded by Boniface Archbishop of Canterbury in 1260: it was valued in the whole at 212*l.* 5*s.* 3*d.*, and was granted in 1549 to Lord Cobham. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Archbishop of Canterbury. The interior of this edifice is exceedingly imposing in its architectural character, and contains many objects of great interest. In the chancel are stalls of the brethren of the college, twenty-eight in number, all of carved oak; beneath the seats are heads, foliage, &c., with the arms of Archbishop Courtenay, which mark the date of their construction. There are also several ancient monuments: the principal are those of the family descended from the Lords of Astley Castle in Warwickshire; John Astley, master of the jewel-house to Queen Elizabeth, ob. 1596; Sir John Astley, master of the revels to King James and King Charles, ob. 1639; and Jacob Lord Astley of Reading, ob. 1652. In the High-street of the town is an ancient mansion called by tradition Astley House; it has bay-windows and carved cornices, but it is doubtful if it was the actual residence of the family. On the road leading to Chatham, at the distance of half a mile from the town, are very large and commodious barracks, which together with those of Ashford and Hythe form the grand military depôt of this part of the kingdom. The river Medway is navigable as high up as Tonbridge, whence great quantities of fine timber, which grow in the Wealds, find an easy carriage. At Maidstone the trade becomes more considerable, the tide flowing as high as the bridge; vessels are hence freighted to London with corn, paper and hops; the last a great source of wealth to the inhabitants of the town, being the principal commodity of the county. Near this town is also the most extensive manufacture of paper perhaps in Europe. The Mote, the seat of the Earl of Romney, is situated about a mile south-eastward from the town, and was in early times the estate of the potent family of Leybourne, whose castellated mansion moated round gave rise to its present denomination. At the foot of the knoll, on which the modern mansion stands, winds a branch of the Medway, which is here crossed by a light and elegant bridge. In this park His Majesty George III. reviewed the Kentish volunteers on the 1st August, 1799; and upon the spot where the royal tent was placed is now a circular Doric temple, erected to commemorate the event.

SHAMWELL HUNDRED.

CHALK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles S.E. from Gravesend, contains 82 houses, and 424 inhabitants, including the parish of Denton, in which there is no church, as well as East and West Chalk. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 3*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

CLIFFE, on the banks of the Thames, 5 miles N. from Rochester, contains 146 houses, and 673 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Helen, is a rectory, value 50*l.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

COBHAM, 5 miles W. from Rochester, contains 116 houses, and 646 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen, is a vicarage; in it are monuments of the Brook family. Cobham Hall, the seat of the Earl of Daruley, was chiefly built by Brook Lord Cobham, in the reign of Elizabeth, as appears by the dates from 1582 to 1599 cut in several places. A gallery in the north wing, 136 feet by 24, contains a valuable collection of pictures; at the end of which is an apartment in which Queen Elizabeth is reported to have slept in one of her progresses through this county. In the great hall, 50 feet by 36, the ceiling bears the arms of Charles Duke of Richmond and Lennox, K.G., and the motto, "Avant D'Arnley." The park and woods are very extensive, and many of the trees are very picturesque; of these the most remarkable is a chestnut-tree, known by the name of the Four Sisters, which measure more than 30 feet in circumference: eastward of the house is an eminence commanding a most striking and interesting view of Rochester Castle, cathedral, dock-yards, and various other objects comprehended in the course of the Medway, to Sheerness and the Nore. John Lord Cobham made the parish-church collegiate, and founded a college, which was rebuilt by William Lord Cobham, for twenty poor people.

COOLING, or Cowling, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles N. from Rochester, contains 15 houses, and 124 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a rectory, value 14*l.* The gate-house of Cooling Castle, an ancient seat of the Cobhams, is still standing; the castle was originally square in plan; it was flanked by towers and surrounded by a moat, which is partly filled up.

CUXTON, 3 miles W. from Rochester, contains 31 houses, and 384 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 14*l.* 15*s.* 5*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Rochester.

FRINDSBURY, 2 miles N. from Rochester, contains 279 houses, and 1562 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 10*l.* 3*s.* 11*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Rochester. In this parish is Upnor Castle on the banks of the Medway, where there is a magazine of powder for the use of the royal navy.

HALLING, on the Medway, 4 miles S. from Rochester, contains 50 houses, and 346 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Rochester.

HIGHAM, or Lillechurch, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles N.W. from Rochester, contains 87 houses, and 568 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 10*s.*, in the patronage of St. John's College Cambridge. A Benedictine priory was founded here about 1151 by King Stephen, whose daughter Mary became one of the nuns; it was suppressed in 1521 by Fisher Bishop of Rochester, and the next year granted by the King to St. John's College.

SHORNE, 4 miles S.E. from Gravesend, contains 115 houses, and 776 inhabitants, including Merston. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a vicarage, value 13*l.* 1*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Rochester.

STROOD adjoins the city of Rochester, and contains 454 houses, and 2764 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Dean and Chapter of Rochester.

TOLTINGTROUGH HUNDRED.

GRAVESEND, the first port in the river Thames, 22 miles from London, and 16 N.W. from Maidstone, contains 646 houses, and 3814 inhabitants. This town, conjointly with Milton, is governed by a mayor, 12 jurats, and 24 common-councilmen. The town-hall, built in 1764, has an open space beneath, in which the poultry market is kept. The weekly markets are held on Wednesday and Saturday, and there are annual fairs on 23d April for toys, and 24th October for horses, &c. The East and West India trade, and outward bound ships in general, are here supplied with live and dead stock and vegetables; a considerable portion of the adjacent land being under garden culture for that purpose, and also for the supply of the London market: the asparagus here is remarkably fine. This town is also well supplied with fish; a number of smacks are engaged in the cod and haddock fishery, and most of the Dutch turbot vessels lie off Gravesend and send their cargoes to Billingsgate in small boats. The Corporation of London claims the right of conservancy on the river Thames and Medway within certain limits; and two courts of conservancy for the county are generally held every year at Gravesend, which is usually called the extremity of the port of London, although its rights extend to the North Foreland. Its immediate jurisdiction extends to about a mile below this town, beyond which coals pay no duty to the city. The church, dedicated to St. George, is a rectory, value 15*l.*, in the patronage of the Crown: it was rebuilt in 1733. Milton adjoins the east side of the town, and is within the liberty of the Corporation of Gravesend: it contains 462 houses, and 2769 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a rectory, value 16*l.* 5*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown and the Bishop of Rochester. Here was formerly a chapel, which at the Dissolution was granted to Sir Henry Wyatt: from a garden near its site is a fine view of that part of the Thames called the Hope, with a distant prospect of the Essex hills on the opposite coast.

IFIELD, 3 miles S.E. from Gravesend, contains 12 houses, and 55 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Shinglewell. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, is a rectory, value 4*l.* 7*s.*

LUDESDOWN, 5 miles S.W. from Rochester, contains 35 houses, and 235 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a rectory, value 11*l.* 11*s.* 3*d.*

MEOPHAM, 6 miles S. from Gravesend, contains 111 houses, and 833 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a vicarage, value 16*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury: it was built by Archbishop Courtenay, who died in 1396.

NORTHFLEET, on the river Thames, 1½ mile W. from Gravesend, contains 351 houses, and 1964 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Botolph, is a vicarage, value 21*l.*, in the patronage of the Crown: it is situated on a hill of chalk, commanding extensive views over the county of Essex on the opposite side of the river. It is now much frequented in the bathing-season.

NURSTED, or Nutsted, 4½ miles S.W. from Gravesend, contains 6 houses, and 33 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mildred, is a rectory, value 4*l.* 15*s.*

THE LOWEY OF TONBRIDGE.

HADLOW, 3 miles N.E. from Tonbridge, contains 277 houses, and 1757 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 13*l.* Near Hadlow are the seats of Walter May, Esq., and the Rev. P. Money Penny.

TONBRIDGE, or Tunbridge, on the Medway, 13 miles S.W. from Maidstone, and 30 miles from London, contains 1155 houses, and 7406 inhabitants. At the entrance of this town from London is a causeway consisting of several bridges over various streams, which here join the river Medway; and near the principal bridge, built in 1776, is a wharf for the reception of the timber brought hither from the Weald, and afterwards sent down the Medway. Here is a market on Friday, and the first Tuesday in every month for cattle and sheep. The annual fairs are on Ash Wednesday and 5th July. The petty sessions for the lower south division of the Lathe of Aylesford are held here. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a vicarage, value 20*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.*: it is a large edifice, and contains some good monuments of different families. A priory of Black Canons, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen, was founded here by Richard de Clare Earl of Hertford about the latter end of the reign of Henry I.: its revenue was valued at 169*l.* 10*s.* 3*d.* per annum, and it was dissolved at the instigation of Cardinal Wolsey in 1525, who then had a grant of the estates. The free grammar-school, founded by Sir Andrew Judd, lord mayor of London in 1551, is situated at the north end of the town, and is under the patronage of the Skinners' Company of London. The Rev. Vicesimus Knox was master from about 1779 to 1812, when he resigned in favour of his son the Rev. Thomas Knox. There are still remains of the once extensive castle, the seat of the Earls of Gloucester, lords of Tonbridge. The gate-house or entrance tower is one of the most interesting structures of that description, and appears from the style of its architecture to have been erected early in the reign of Henry III. The north front is remarkable for the high arches over the portal, containing the earliest example of machicolations and grove for the portcullis. The state chamber on the third story of this entrance tower appears to have been very magnificent and of great dimensions, including the whole area of the tower. From the upper part of this tower may yet be traced the remains of a covered way leading to the keep, a round tower on the summit of an artificial mount, the walls of which are in part left. From the ancient Earls of Gloucester this castle descended to the Stafford family, and upon the attainder of Edward Duke of Buckingham in 1521 it fell to the Crown. Queen Elizabeth granted it to her kinsman and lord chamberlain Henry Lord Hunsdon K.G., but it does not appear to have been inhabited since the fall of the Duke of Buckingham. The hamlets of Hilden and Southborough are in this parish.

Tonbridge Wells is situated partly in Tonbridge and Speldhurst parishes in this county, and partly in that of Frant in the county of Sussex, and consists of Mount Ephraim, Mount Pleasant, Mount Sion, and the Wells, which altogether form a considerable place; but the last is the centre of business and pleasure, where are situated the assembly-rooms, public parade and chapel, dedicated to King Charles the Martyr, which was originally built about 1685, but was enlarged in 1703. The springs, seven in number, were first enclosed by Lord Abergavenny; and the goods manufactured here, called Tonbridge ware, are well known in every part of the kingdom. The rides in the neighbourhood include a variety of picturesque scenes, amongst which the high rocks on the Sussex side are much admired. Bounds is the seat of the Earl of Caledon. Somer Hill, the seat of James Alexander, Esq., M.P., is an eminence rising amidst the most abundant fertility and extensive woodlands, upon which formerly stood a lodge, the residence of the bailiff of the chase in the forest of Tonbridge, a retainer of the lords of the castle. Queen Elizabeth granted it to Sir Francis Walsingham, K.G., from whom it descended to the Earl of Clanricard, advanced by King James I. to the English titles of Viscount Tonbridge and Lord Somerhill, 3rd April 1624; and by King Charles created Earl of St. Albans, &c. 23rd August 1628: he built the present mansion, and died here in 1635. It is large, and retains a fine old character: the western front overlooks the town of Tonbridge and a beautiful tract of country.

TWYFORD HUNDRED.

WEST FARLEIGH, 3 miles S.W. from Maidstone, contains 58 houses, and 364 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 10*s.* 5*d.*, in the presentation of the Dean and Chapter of Rochester.

HUNTON, 4½ miles S.W. from Maidstone, contains 116 houses, and 683 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 16*l.* 13*s.* 1½*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury: this was the rectory of Dr. Beilby Porteus, afterwards Bishop of London. Hunton Court is the seat of Thomas Turner, Esq.

NETTLESTEAD, 5 miles S.W. from Maidstone, contains 34 houses, and 255 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 12*l.* 10*s.* 10*d.*

EAST PECKHAM, 5½ miles N.E. from Tonbridge, contains 278 houses, and 1724 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a vicarage, value 14*l.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury.

TESTON, 4 miles S.W. from Maidstone, contains 48 houses, and 259 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 10*s.* Sir William Boteler of Teston was created baronet July 3, 1641; and Sir Charles Middleton, September 4, 1781. Barham Court is the seat of Lady Barham. It is situated in the road from Tonbridge to Maidstone, one of the most picturesque in the county, and commands a rich prospect over the vale.

WATERINGBURY, 5 miles W. from Maidstone, contains 176 houses, and 915 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a vicarage, value 5*l.*, in the presentation of the Dean and Chapter of Rochester. In this parish are the hamlets of Lilly and Pizein Well. Sir Thomas Style of Wateringbury was created baronet April 21, 1627. Wateringbury Place is the seat of Colonel Jones.

YALDING, 5 miles S.W. from Maidstone, contains 354 houses, and 2414 inhabitants. It is situated at the confluence of the Bewley and Theyse rivulets with the Medway. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and Paul, is a vicarage, value 20*l.* 18*s.* 9*d.*

WASHLINGSTONE HUNDRED.

ASHURST, 4½ miles W. from Tonbridge Wells, contains 31 houses, and 208 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 5*l.* 4*s.* 7*d.*

BIDBOROUGH, 2 miles S.W. from Tonbridge, contains 34 houses, and 192 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is a rectory, value 5*l.* 4*s.* 4½*d.*

CAPLE, 3 miles S.E. from Tonbridge, contains 48 houses, and 330 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Thomas à Becket, is a curacy.

PEMBURY, 3½ miles S.E. from Tonbridge, contains 149 houses, and 891 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 8*s.* 8*d.*, in the presentation of the University of Oxford.

SPELDHURST, 2½ miles N.W. from Tonbridge Wells, contains 297 houses, and 2297 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 15*l.* 5*s.*

TUDELEY, 2¼ miles E. from Tonbridge, contains 57 houses, and 546 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 4*l.* 16*s.* 0½*d.*

WROTHAM HUNDRED.

IGHTHAM, 1½ mile S.W. from Wrotham, contains 158 houses, and 867 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 15*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.* In this parish are the remains of a vast entrenchment, called Oldbury Camp; its form is very irregular, approaching nearest to that of an oval: but the boundaries are very imperfect. It occupies the entire summit of the hill, and is surrounded by a ditch encompassing an area of about 137 acres. Ightham Court is the seat of — James, Esq.

SHIPBOURNE, 3½ miles N. from Tonbridge, contains 67 houses, and 402 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Giles, is a curacy. Fair Lawn, the seat of John Simpson, Esq., is a large, substantial, and convenient edifice, adorned with very extensive shrubberies and pleasure-grounds, and most excellent gardens, and seated in a finely wooded park, the smooth verdure of which may account for its name. This estate belonged to Sir Henry Vane, treasurer of the household to King Charles I., and descended to the eccentric Lord Vane, who married the widow of Lord William Hamilton, and daughter of Francis Hawes of Purley in Berkshire: the singular charms of this lady placed her in the very first rank of admired and fashionable beauties during twenty years. The story of "A Lady of Quality" in the novel of Peregrine Pickle was written by her. The father of the poet Smart was possessed of an estate in the neighbourhood of Fair Lawn, and acted as steward to Lord Barnard. His son Christopher, probably named after his Lordship, was born at Shipbourne in 1722, and was a poet of some celebrity: he was introduced to the literary and fashionable world by Lord Barnard, and testified his gratitude for the patronage he received, by "An Ode to Lord Barnard," printed with his works: he died May 18, 1770.

STANSTEAD, 2 miles N. from Wrotham, contains 51 houses, and 292 inhabitants. It is a curacy.

WROTHAM, 10½ miles N.W. from Maidstone, and 24 miles from London, contains 408 houses, and 2357 inhabitants, including the townships of Hale, Nepicar, Plaxtol, Winfield, and Roughway. It has an annual fair on the 4th of March. The church, dedicated to St. George, is a rectory and vicarage; the rectory, with the chapel of Stanstead, is valued at 50*l.* 8*s.* 1½*d.*, and the vicarage at 22*l.* 5*s.* 10*d.*: both are in the patronage of the Crown. It is a large and handsome building, consisting of three aisles, a cross aisle, and an elegant chancel containing several curious brasses. The parish is very large, including almost the whole hundred to which it gives name. Wrotham was formerly the residence of the Archbishops of Canterbury, till the time of Archbishop Islip, who pulled down the chief part of the buildings for the sake of the materials, to complete the palace begun at Maidstone by his predecessor John Ufford. On Wrotham Heath are druidical remains. Sir John Rayney of Wrotham was created baronet January 22, 1642. St. Clere is the seat of John Larking, Esq.

3. Lathe of Scray

Is bounded on the north by the mouth of the river Medway and the North Sea; on the east by the Lathe of St. Augustine; on the south-east by Shepway Lathe; on the south-west by Sussex; and on the west by the Lathe of Aylesford.

EAST BARNFIELD HUNDRED.

HAWKHURST, 5 miles S.W. from Cranbrooke, containing 382 houses, and 2250 inhabitants, is situated on a pleasing eminence on the river Rother, commanding a fine prospect of the country about it, reaching to the coast. It is a large parish, extending into the county of Sussex. Here were formerly five crosses, or watch-houses, and a beacon, all of which but two are destroyed. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is a vicarage, value 12*l.* 10*s.*, in the presentation of the Dean and Canons of Christ Church Oxford. Here was interred Richard Kilburne, author of the "Topographie of Kent." Elford is the seat of R. Winch, Esq.; Lillesden, the seat of Captain Burrige; and Hall House, the seat of Mrs. Jennings.

BARCLAY HUNDRED.

BIDDENDEN, 5 miles N.E. from Cranbrooke, contains 218 houses, and 1544 inhabitants. The clothing manufacture first gave occasion to the population of this part of the country in the reign of Edward III., then introduced by the Flemings; but it has failed for many years past. Here is a free grammar-school. Two maiden sisters left some land adjoining to the glebe, of the rent of 20*l.* a year, which is held by the churchwardens, and the produce distributed in bread to the poor on Easter-day, each loaf being impressed with a representation of the donors. The fairs are on April 5th and November 8th, for cattle and horses. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 35*l.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. The hamlets of Standen and Wachenden are in this parish.

BLACKBOURNE HUNDRED.

APPLEDORE, on the river Rother, 6 miles S.E. from Tenterden, contains 90 houses, and 559 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a vicarage, value 21*l.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. It is built on the foundation of a fort or castle, which had been erected by the Danes, who sailed up to this town in the year 893, which it is supposed was destroyed by

The French in 1380. It was formerly a maritime town, but is now a small village, inhabited by graziers and others employed in the marshes. The fairs are on January 11 and June 22.

HIGH HALDEN, 3 miles N. from Tenterden, contains 83 houses, and 724 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 19*l.* 4*s.* 7*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

KENARDINGTON, 6 miles E. from Tenterden, contains 36 houses, and 196 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 12*l.* 1*s.* 0½*d.*

SHADOXHURST, 4½ miles S. from Ashford, contains 39 houses, and 244 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a rectory, value 7*l.* 13*s.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

WOODCHURCH, 5 miles N.E. from Tenterden, contains 171 houses, and 1095 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 26*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. Sir Edward Hales, of Woodchurch, was created baronet June 29, 1611.

BOUGHTON-UNDER-BLEAN HUNDRED.

BOUGHTON-UNDER-BLEAN, 3 miles E. from Feversham, contains 215 houses, and 1237 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 4*s.* 9½*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. In 1384 here was an hospital and chapel, dedicated to St. Nicholas, founded by Thomas at Hurst.

GRAVENEY, 3 miles N.E. from Feversham, contains 34 houses, and 194 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 12*l.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

HERNHILL, 4 miles E. from Feversham, contains 83 houses, and 477 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a vicarage, value 15*l.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

SELLING, 3½ miles S.E. from Feversham, contains 68 houses, and 573 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*

CALEHILL HUNDRED.

CHARING, 14 miles E. from Maidstone, contains 192 houses, and 1103 inhabitants. Here is a free-school, and fairs on April 29 and October 29. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a vicarage, value 13*l.*, in the presentation of the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's Cathedral. The Parsonage is the seat of Captain Johnson; and Pett Place, the seat of George Sayers, Esq.

LITTLE CHART, 7 miles N.W. from Ashford, contains 29 houses, and 303 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 13*l.* 10*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. Here are many monuments of the Darells. Cale Hill is the seat of H. Darell, Esq.

EGERTON, 9 miles N.W. from Ashford, contains 122 houses, and 890 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a curacy.

PLUCKLEY, 8½ miles N.W. from Ashford, contains 86 houses, and 663 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Pevington. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a rectory, value 20*l.* 1*s.* 5½*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. Surrenden, erected by Sir Edward Dering, who was created baronet February 1, 1627, is described by Philipot, in his History of Kent, to be "as eminent for its magnificence and beauty as for its contrivance and curiosity." The mansion stands on the brow of a hill, forming part of a range extending westward into the county of Surrey, in the midst of rich pasture and noble woods, and commanding a beautiful and varied prospect of a large extent of country: it is the seat of Sir Edward Dering, Bart.

SMARDEN, 8 miles N.E. from Cranbrooke, contains 184 houses, and 1038 inhabitants. Here is a free-school: the market is on Friday, and the fairs on 29th September and 10th October. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 24*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

WESTWELL, 5½ miles N. from Ashford, contains 107 houses, and 867 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 13*l.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. The east window of this church is full of singularly beautiful stained glass, very ancient, which has lately been carefully restored by Willement.

CHART AND LONGBRIDGE HUNDRED.

ASHFORD, on the river Stour, 20 miles S.E. from Maidstone, and 54 from London, contains 469 houses, and 2773 inhabitants. The town is situated on rising ground, overlooking the Weald: it is governed by a mayor, and has a court held every three weeks for the recovery of small debts. The petty sessions for Ashford division of Scray Lathe are held here. The market is on Saturday, and there are annual fairs on the first Tuesday in every month for cattle, on 17th May, 2nd August for wool, &c., 9th September and 23rd October for horses and cattle. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 18*l.* 4*s.* 2*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Rochester. The edifice was entirely rebuilt about the latter end of the reign of Edward IV., chiefly at the expense of Sir John Fogge, of Repton, comptroller of the household, who also founded a college in the town. The church contains a great many monuments deserving attention, the principal of which are in the south transept, chiefly in memory of the Snyths of Westenhanger, which are in excellent preservation, having been restored by the late Chief Baron Smyth.

BETHERSDEN, 5½ miles S.W. from Ashford, contains 142 houses, and 1001 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Beatrix, is a vicarage, value 12*l.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

BROOK, 4 miles E. from Ashford, contains 24 houses, and 162 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 7*l.* 7*s.* 3*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury.

GREAT CHART, 2 miles W. from Ashford, contains 117 houses, and 659 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 25*l.* 6*s.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury: in it are several monuments of the Toke family, and also painted glass in the windows of the north and south aisles. Godinton, the seat of Nicholas Roundell Toke, Esq. is an Elizabethan mansion, on the banks of the Stour: the grounds are adorned by groves of remarkably fine chesnut-trees, and an eminence in the park is particularly distinguished as The Godinton Toll. The hall and staircase of the mansion are particularly interesting. In the hall-windows are four armorial compartments by Willement, beautifully executed in stained glass.

HINXHILL, 2½ miles E. from Ashford, contains 22 houses, and 146 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 7*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of Sir J. Honeywood, Bart.

HOTHFIELD, 3 miles N.W. from Ashford, contains 74 houses, and 438 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 17*l.* 5*s.*, in the patronage of the Earl of Thanet. Hothfield Park, the seat of the Earl of Thanet, is on an eminence commanding an extensive view of a fine country, watered by the Stour, and several streams which rise about Charing and Westwell. The mansion was rebuilt about 1770.

KENNINGTON, 2 miles N.E. from Ashford, contains 65 houses, and 447 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 12*l.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

KINGSNORTH, or Kingsnoth, 3 miles S. from Ashford, contains 48 houses, and 372 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 11*l.* 9*s.* 9*d.*

MERSHAM, 3½ miles S.E. from Ashford, contains 89 houses, and 776 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a rectory, value 26*l.* 16*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. Mersham Hatch, the seat of Sir Edward Knatchbull, Bart., has been in possession of the family ever since the year 1486. The present mansion is a large brick edifice, situated in a park, about 3½ miles in circuit, in a finely diversified part of the county, producing great quantities of hops and fruit: corn-fields and meadow-lands extend over hill and dale, and if viewed from the chalk-hills northward of the village, present a scene of picturesque fertility. Sir Norton Knatchbull of Mersham was created baronet 4th August 1641.

SEVINGTON, 3 miles S.E. from Ashford, contains 13 houses, and 86 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 8*l.* 14*s.*

WILLESBOROUGH, 2 miles S.E. from Ashford, contains 73 houses, and 483 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury: it contains some fine ancient painted glass. It has been said that Otway founded the tragedy of the Orphan on a fact that happened in this parish.

CRANBROOKE HUNDRED.

CRANBROOKE, on a branch of the Medway, 14 miles S. from Maidstone, and 48 from London, contains 473 houses, and 3683 inhabitants. This town is governed by a constable, whose liberty extends into Benenden, Beddenden, Frittenden, Headcorn, Staplehurst, and Hawkhurst, neighbouring parishes. The petty sessions for the lower division of Scray Lathe are held here. The earliest woollen manufactory in the kingdom was established here by Flemings, in the reign of Edward III., but the trade has been long removed to the northern and western parts of England, where labour is cheaper; and the chief dependence of this town is upon its market, one of the largest in the county, held on Saturday; there are also fairs on 30th May and 19th September for horses and cattle. A free grammar-school was erected here by charter in the reign of Elizabeth, and a writing-school, founded in 1573. The church, dedicated to St. Dunstan, is a vicarage, value 19*l.* 19*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. At Sissinghurst, about 3 miles northward from the village, was a noble mansion, built by Sir John Baker, who died in 1558. Sir Henry Baker, of this family, was created baronet 29th June 1611. The gate-house only of the ancient seat is now left.

FRITTENDEN, 4½ miles N.E. from Cranbrooke, contains 116 houses, and 799 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 15*l.* 18*s.* 9*d.*, in the patronage of Thomas Law Hodges, Esq., M.P. for the county. The parishes of Goudhurst and Staplehurst are chiefly in Marden hundred.

FEVERSHAM HUNDRED.

BADLESMERE, 3½ miles S. from Feversham, contains 16 houses, and 113 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Leonard, is a rectory, value 5*l.* 2*s.*, in the patronage of Lord Sondes. Bartholomew Lord Badlesmere, steward of the household to Edward II., obtained license in 1319 to found a house of regular canons on his demesne here.

BUCKLAND, 3 miles N.W. from Feversham, contains 3 houses, and 22 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 5*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*

DAVINGTON, 2 miles N.W. from Feversham, contains 31 houses, and 151 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen, is a curacy. A Benedictine nunnery was founded here in 1153 by Fulk de Newenham. Their revenues were 21*l.* 13*s.* 10*d.* per annum. It was deserted in 1535, and granted by the Crown in 1546 to Sir Thomas Cheney.

EASTLING, 5 miles S.W. from Feversham, contains 58 houses, and 406 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 16*l.*, in the patronage of the Earl of Winchilsea.

FEVERSHAM, or Faversham, on a branch of the Swale, 19 miles N. from Maidstone, and 47 from London, contains 683 houses, and 4208 inhabitants, including the out-liberty. The corporation of this town consists of a mayor, recorder or steward, town-clerk, two chamberlains, eleven jurats, and twenty-four common-councilmen. The petty sessions for the upper division of Scray Lathe are held here. London is supplied hence with corn, hops, apples, cherries, and oysters, and some of these commodities are also exported to Holland and the Baltic. The manufacture of gunpowder is also carried on in the neighbourhood. The markets are held on Wednesday and Saturday, and there are annual fairs on February 25th and August 12th for linen and woollen drapery. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 26*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury. The spire of this edifice being raised upon flying buttresses like that of St. Nicholas at Newcastle, is a very pleasing object when viewed from the sea or the road to Canterbury, distant about half a mile. The outline is beautiful, but its detail will not bear examination: it was erected by G. Dance about 1755. Stephen and Maud his Queen founded here a Benedictine abbey, dedicated to our Holy Saviour in 1147, and in which they were both buried,—the King in 1154, and the Queen in 1151; but their monuments were destroyed at the Reformation. The revenue of the abbey was valued at 286*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.*, and the site was granted in 1539 to Sir Thomas Cheney. At Feversham King James II. was captured as he was attempting an escape from the kingdom after the arrival of the Prince of Orange in 1688.

GOODNESTON, 2 miles E. from Feversham, contains 13 houses, and 66 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, is a rectory, value 5*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.*

ISLE OF HARTY, 4½ miles N. from Feversham, contains 7 houses, and 45 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Thomas the Apostle, is a rectory, value 20*l.* 6*s.* The grounds here are entirely pasture, on which are constantly feeding about four thousand sheep. The island is about 2 miles in length, and 1½ in breadth.

LEAVELAND, or Leveland, 4 miles S.W. from Feversham, contains 11 houses, and 69 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is a rectory, value 4*l.*, in the patronage of Lord Sondes. It was built in the year 1222.

LUDDENHAM, 3 miles N.W. from Feversham, contains 32 houses, and 178 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 12*l.* 8*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

NEWNHAM, 4½ miles S.W. from Feversham, contains 67 houses, and 356 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

NORTON, 3½ miles W. from Feversham, contains 15 houses, and 98 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 10*l.* 18*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Rochester. Norton Court, is the seat of Stephen Rumbold Lushington, Esq.

OARE, or Ore, on a branch of the Swale, 2 miles N. from Feversham, contains 34 houses, and 197 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

OSPRING, one mile S.W. from Feversham, contains 148 houses, and 912 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a vicarage, value 10*l.*, in the patronage of St. John's College Cambridge, to which college the Maison Dieu, founded here by King Henry III. about the year 1235, was granted by Henry VIII. at the instigation of Bishop Fisher in 1515.

PRESTON, one mile S.E. from Feversham, contains 66 houses, and 351 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Katherine, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

SHELDWICK, 2½ miles S. from Feversham, contains 95 houses, and 545 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury. Lees Court is the seat of Lord Sondes: it was erected by Sir George Sondes, K.B., from a design by Inigo Jones, of the Ionic order. Having been instrumental in enforcing the claim of ship-money for King Charles I., after the Restoration he was created Earl of Feversham, Viscount Sondes of Lees Court, and Lord Throwley. He died at this seat in 1677.

STALISFIELD, 2 miles N.E. from Charing, contains 48 houses, and 340 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

STONE, one mile S.W. from Feversham, contains 10 houses, and 75 inhabitants. It is a curacy.

THROWLEY, 4 miles S.W. from Feversham, contains 94 houses, and 607 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 11*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the prebendary of Rugmere in St. Paul's Cathedral: it formerly belonged to a priory, a cell to the abbey of St. Bertin at St. Omer's in Artois, and afterwards to the abbey of Sion, and was granted in exchange for lands in Marybone. In the chancel are many ancient monuments for the family of Sondes of Lees Court.

FELBOROUGH HUNDRED.

CHALLOCK, 4 miles N. from Ashford, contains 48 houses, and 381 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Cosmus and St. Damian, is a curacy.

CHARTHAM, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles S.W. from Canterbury, contains 137 houses, and 855 inhabitants, including the chapelry of Horton. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 41*l.* 5*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

CHILHAM, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles S.W. from Canterbury, contains 185 houses, and 1025 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 18*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* In the chancel is a monument by Chantrey of James Wildman, Esq. Chilham Castle, the seat of James Beckford Wildman, Esq., was erected in the reign of Charles I., by Sir Dudley Digges, Knt., Master of the Rolls, whose monument is in the church, as appears by an inscription on the entablature over the principal entrance: THE LORD IS MY HOUSE OF DEFENCE, AND MY CASTLE DUDLEY DIGGES—MARY KEMPE. It stands in a beautiful and commanding situation, upon an eminence, rising with a gentle ascent on the north side of the river Stour. Upon the extreme verge of the hill, which rises very abruptly on the side next the river, stands the keep, the only remains of the ancient castle of Chilham: it is apparently of Anglo-Norman construction, the principal feature of which is an octagonal tower, about 40 feet in diameter in the outward extent, and about 25 feet within the walls, being about eight feet in thickness. The ground-floor of this tower is now used as a brew-house, and is about 30 feet high, having over it what is supposed to have formerly been the principal state-chamber, panelled with oak. There were originally narrow loop-holes in four sides of this octagonal tower, but three of them have been enlarged and modernized. The great stairs of communication with the state-chamber, &c. occupy an area of about twelve feet diameter; they are continued up to the roof of the castle, which is covered with lead, affording a most pleasing and extensive view of the circumjacent country. The external walls of the keep are about five feet thick, enclosing an area nearly quadrangular, of about ninety feet diameter, having four turrets, now ruined, one at each angle, with a very narrow rampart, and a slight parapet round the walls. Sir Maurice Digges of Chilham Castle was created a baronet March 6, 1666.

GODMERSHAM, on the banks of the Stour, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles N. from Ashford, contains 68 houses, and 414 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 3*s.* 9*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. On the south side is some very curious painted glass, forming a wide border to the window. On the north side of the church are the remains of Godmersham Priory, built by Thomas Goldstone, Prior of Christchurch, who died in 1517. Godmersham Park, the seat of Edward Knight, Esq., is most beautifully situated in a part of the county delightfully varied in its surface, being surrounded by eminences chiefly covered with wood, while the intermediate plains are rich, and productive in a high degree. The house was built about the year 1732 by Thomas Knight, Esq. on the site of an old mansion, which had been the residence of his ancestors for many generations. Thomas Knight, Esq., of Godmersham, who died in 1794, bequeathed his fine collection of medals, and a series of English coins, to the University of Oxford.

MOLDASH, or Molash, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles N.E. from Charing, contains 47 houses, and 378 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a curacy.

MARDEN HUNDRED.

GOUDHURST, 4 miles N.W. from Cranbrooke, contains 385 ouses, and 2579 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 26*l.* 19*s.* 2*d.*, in the presentation of the Dean and Chapter of Rochester: it was rebuilt about 1640. Here are two free grammar-schools, and an annual fair is on 26th August. This parish comprehends the whole of the hundred of West or Little Barnfield. Bedgebury is the seat of Mrs. Cartier.

MARDEN, 5 miles N. from Goudhurst, contains 354 houses, and 2051 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 18*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

STAPLEHURST, 5 miles N. from Cranbrooke, contains 236 houses, and 1513 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 26*l.* 5*s.* 10*d.*, in the presentation of St. John's College Cambridge.

MILTON HUNDRED.

BAPCHILD, one mile E. from Sittingbourne, contains 60 houses, and 307 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is a vicarage, value 8*l.*, in the presentation of the Dean and Chapter of Chichester.

BOBBING, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile W. from Milton, contains 41 houses, and 325 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, is a vicarage, value 30*l.* 16*s.*

BORDEN, 2 miles S.W. from Sittingbourne, contains 79 houses, and 650 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 10*s.*

BREDGAR, or Bradgare, 3 miles S.W. from Sittingbourne, contains 58 houses, and 508 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a vicarage, value 9*l.* A small college was here founded in 1392 to the honour of the Holy Trinity, and was granted in 1537 to the Archbishop of Canterbury in exchange.

LOWER HALSTOW, 4 miles N.W. from Milton, contains 35 houses, and 220 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 2*s.*, in the presentation of the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury. Standgate Creek is the place appointed for vessels performing quarantine.

HARTLIP, 6 miles S.W. from Chatham, contains 51 houses, and 300 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 10*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Rochester.

IWADE, 3 miles N.W. from Milton, contains 22 houses, and 145 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Archdeacon of Canterbury. Chetney Hill is in this parish.

KINGSDOWN, 4 miles S. from Sittingbourne, contains 11 houses, and 75 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Katherine, is a rectory, value 5*l.* 9*s.* 2*d.*

MILSTEAD, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles S. from Sittingbourne, contains 29 houses, and 191 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary and St. Cross, is a rectory, value 8*l.* 15*s.*

MILTON, next Sittingbourne, 13 miles N.E. from Maidstone, and $39\frac{1}{2}$ miles from London, contains 317 houses, and 2012 inhabitants. It is situated on a creek running into the Swale, and is governed by a portreeve. The market is on Saturday, and the fair on the 24th July. The famous Milton oysters are found here. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is a vicarage, value 13*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.*, in the presentation of the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury. In ancient times the kings of Kent had a palace here, which was burnt down by Earl Goodwin.

MURSTON, one mile N.E. from Milton, contains 20 houses, and 141 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 10*l.* 14*s.* 2*d.*

NEWINGTON, 3 miles W. from Milton, contains 103 houses, and 629 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 14*l.*, in the patronage of Eton College. In it are many ancient monuments.

RAINHAM, 3 miles E. from Chatham, contains 164 houses, and 1030 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, is a vicarage, value 14*l.* 4*s.* 7*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. It is a handsome building, consisting of two broad aisles and two chancels, with a high beacon tower at the west end. The high chancel belongs to the parsonage of Rainham, and the north chancel to the Earl of Thanet: they both contain several old monuments.

RODMERSHAM, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles S.E. from Sittingbourne, contains 41 houses, and 307 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*

SITTINGBOURNE, 12 miles N.E. from Maidstone, and 40 from London, is situated on the high road to Canterbury, and contains 294 houses, and 1537 inhabitants. In the year 1598 this town was incorporated, by the name of a mayor and jurats, with the addition of various privileges, empowering it to send two members to Parliament, and granting it a weekly market; but this charter does not appear ever to have been used. The fairs are on Whit Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, 10th October and four succeeding days. Several of our monarchs have been entertained here, particularly Henry V. on his triumphant return from France; and George I. and II. during their progress to, and return from, their German dominions. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a vicarage, value 10*l.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. Sittingbourne is the seat of — Bradley, Esq.

TONG, 1½ mile N.E. from Sittingbourne, contains 29 houses, and 216 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Giles, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*

TUNSTALL, 2½ miles S. from Sittingbourne, contains 26 houses, and 160 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a rectory, value 14*l.* 8*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. The old manor-house of the Cromers at Tunstall was taken down by Sir Robert Vyner, and the materials used in the erection of his house in London, which was afterwards the General Post-office in Lombard-street.

UPCHURCH, 6 miles E. from Chatham, contains 67 houses, and 414 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 11*l.*, in the presentation of All Soul's College Oxford. The spire is used as a good sea-mark. The hamlets of Halliwell, Ham and Otterham are in this parish.

ROLVENDEN HUNDRED.

BENENDEN, 2 miles S.E. from Cranbrooke, contains 274 houses, and 1746 inhabitants. Here is a free-school, and fairs on May 15 and August 4. The church, dedicated to St. George, is a vicarage, value 17*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.* Hemstead Park is the seat of Thomas Law Hodges, Esq., M.P. for the county.

ROLVENDEN, 2½ miles S.W. from Tenterden, contains 157 houses, and 1403 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 10*l.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Rochester.

SELBRITTENDEN HUNDRED.

NEWENDEN, 4½ miles S.W. from Tenterden, contains 17 houses, and 151 inhabitants. It has a bridge over the Rother, which divides it from Sussex, and is governed by a bailiff and under-bailiff. Here is a strong chalybeate spring. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 7*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

SANDHURST, 6 miles S.W. from Tenterden, contains 134 houses, and 1182 inhabitants. It has an annual fair May 25. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a rectory, value 20*l.* in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

THE ISLE OF SHEPPEY

Is separated from the rest of the county by the Swale, an arm of the sea, and is in length about 11 miles, and in breadth about 6, being in circumference about 22 miles: it consists chiefly of marsh and pasture land, and is famous for its fine mutton. The sea undermines and gains ground on the cliffs, celebrated for fossils and pyrites, upon the north and north-eastern sides. The King's ferry is the entrance to the island most frequented.

EAST CHURCH, 5½ miles E. from Queenborough, contains 97 houses, and 705 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory and vicarage, value 13*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* Here is a fair on 31st May. The parish extends partly into the Isle of Elmley, which is separated by a narrow water called The Dray: this island is about three miles in length and two miles in breadth, and contains 4 houses, and 23 inhabitants. The church of Elmley, dedicated to St. James, is a rectory, value 5*l.*, in the patronage of All Soul's College Oxford. Sir Michael Livesey of East Church was created baronet 11th July 1627.

LEYSDOWN, 8 miles E. from Queenborough, contains 20 houses, and 132 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Clement, is a vicarage, value 10*l.* 10*s.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

MINSTER, 3½ miles E. from Queenborough, contains 1228 houses, and 7597 inhabitants. Here is an annual fair the Mouday before Easter. The church, dedicated to St. Mary and St. Sexburgh, is a curacy. Sexburgh, widow of Ercombert, King of Kent and mother of King Egbert, obtained land in this island of her son, whereon she founded and endowed a monastery about the year 675: it was rebuilt by William Archbishop of Canterbury in 1130. At the Dissolution the annual revenue was 129*l.* 7*s.* 10*d.*, and the site was granted in 1537 to Sir Thomas Cheney.

QUEENBOROUGH, 16 miles N.E. from Maidstone, and 45 from London, contains 160 houses, and 881 inhabitants. The town is situated on a creek of the river Medway, and is governed by a mayor, 4 jurats, 2 bailiffs, a constable, town-serjeant, and a water-bailiff. It is a distinct liberty, under the jurisdiction of its own magistrates. The guildhall, in which the general sessions and quarterly courts are held, has under it a commodious market-place. The market is on Monday, and there is a fair on 5th August, at which the price of wool for the county is usually fixed. Queenborough returns two members to Parliament, a privilege conferred by Queen Elizabeth, and the right of election is vested in the corporation only, who amount to about 70. The mayor is the returning officer. The present members are John Capel, Esq., and Sir Colquhoun Grant. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is a curacy, in the presentation of the corporation. Here is a very lucrative oyster fishery for the supply of the metropolis; and many persons are here employed in the manufacture of copperas.

SHEERNESS is a chapelry to Minster, containing 58 houses, and 817 inhabitants, but has derived consequence from its royal fort and docks. It is situated at the north-western extremity of the Isle of Sheppey at the entrance of the river Medway. The fort, erected by King Charles II., has been since that period greatly augmented and strengthened. The garrison is commanded by a governor, &c., and the ordnance branch is under the direction of a storekeeper, &c. The dock adjoins the fort, and was originally intended for repairing ships partially damaged, and for building frigates, &c. from 40 guns downwards. These establishments have been much reduced since the peace. On the shore a number of old ships of war have been stationed as breakwaters, which present a singular appearance. The chapel is a modern edifice, erected by Government for the use of the garrison, and is under the ecclesiastical jurisdiction of the church of Minster. Here is a market on Saturday.

WARDEN, 6½ miles E. from Queenborough, contains 3 houses, and 21 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a rectory, value 4*l.* 17*s.* 8*d.*

TENTERDEN HUNDRED.

TENTERDEN, 18 miles S.E. from Maidstone, and 56 from London, contains 527 houses, and 3259 inhabitants. The town is situated on elevated ground near a branch of the river Rother, and consists of three principal streets forming the roads to Cranbrook, Rye, and Appledore. It has derived considerable affluence from the extensive grazing business which is carried on in the neighbouring marshes. There is a weekly market on Friday, and an annual fair on the first Monday in May for cattle, wool, &c. It is an ancient borough, incorporated first as the barons of the town and hundred, and lastly by Queen Elizabeth. The corporation consists of a mayor, 12 jurats, 12 common-councilmen, a chamberlain, and town-clerk. The town hall was rebuilt in 1792. The parish is in the cinque port liberty of Hastings. The church, dedicated to St. Mildred, is a vicarage, value 33*l.* 12*s.* 11*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury. It is a large and handsome fabric, with a lofty tower, which from its elevated situation is seen for many miles round. The popular saying that Tenterden steeple was the cause of Goodwin Sands, was occasioned by its having been erected with the money collected by the Bishop of Rochester for fencing out the sea in East Kent.

TEYNHAM HUNDRED.

DODDINGTON, 4 miles S. from Sittingbourne, contains 68 houses, and 451 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

LINSTEAD, 3 miles S.E. from Sittingbourne, contains 139 houses, and 890 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 3*s.* 11*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. Linstead Lodge is the seat of Lord Teynham.

TEYNHAM, 4 miles E. from Sittingbourne, contains 100 houses, and 600 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 10*l.*, in the patronage of the Archdeacon of Canterbury. The first cherries introduced into England are said to have been planted in this village about 1520 by Richard Haynes, gardener to the King. The high grounds in the neighbourhood command a view of the junction of the Thames and Medway with the sea, the ships at the Nore, &c.

WYE HUNDRED.

BOUGHTON ALUPH, 4 miles N.E. from Ashford, contains 75 houses, and 453 inhabitants, including the hamlets of Dane, Goatlands, Hebbinge, and Wilmington. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 5*s.* In the chancel window is some ancient painted glass.

CRUNDALE, 7 miles S.W. from Canterbury, contains 29 houses, and 250 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 11*l.* 10*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the Rev. Sir John Filmer, Bart.

EASTWELL, 3½ miles N. from Ashford, contains 16 houses, and 134 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 9*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Earl of Winchilsea. In the east window of the chancel are the arms and badges of Cardinal Kemp Archbishop of Canterbury, and Kemp Bishop of London, the arms and badges of Henry Prince of Wales, and a large quartered shield of the arms of Sir Moyle Finch in 1615. In the church is also a monument of Sir Heneage Finch, Speaker of the House of Commons, ob. 1631, and of Sir Moyle Finch, and his wife Elizabeth Countess of Winchilsea, who died in 1633. An ancient altar-tomb in the church is traditionally assigned to Richard Plantagenet, the son of King Richard III., who was employed as a bricklayer in the erection of the noble mansion of Sir Thomas Moyle, Chancellor of the Court of Augmentations in the latter end of the reign of Henry VIII. Eastwell Place, the seat of the Earl of Winchilsea and Nottingham, is a large and elegant mansion, in one of the most picturesque situations in the county. The park presents a bold irregular surface, having the more lofty eminences clothed with wood, and commanding views over a vast extent of country: it is well stocked with deer, and the grounds abound with game of every species. A high hill in the north-western part of the park is covered with fine timber, forming eight avenues, called the Star Walks, which diverge from an octangular plain on the top of the hill.

WYE, on the banks of the Stour, 4 miles N.E. from Ashford, contains 269 houses, and 1508 inhabitants. It has a weekly market on Thursday, and annual fairs 24th March, 29th May, 30th September, and 9th November. A college was founded here by John Kemp, a native of this town, and then Archbishop of York; in 1431 it was valued at 93*l.* 2*s.* per annum, and after the surrender the site was granted in 1544 to Walter Buckler: it is now a school. The church, dedicated to St. Martin and St. Gregory, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Earl of Winchilsea, &c. It is supposed to have been built by Cardinal Kemp, who founded the college, and contains many ancient monuments: some also were destroyed by the fall of the steeple in 1686.

4. Lathe of Shepway

Is bounded on the north by the Lathe of St. Augustine; on the east and south by the sea; and on the west by the Lathe of Scray.

ALOESBRIDGE HUNDRED.

BRENZETT, 4½ miles W. from Romney, containing 44 houses, and 238 inhabitants, is partly situated in the liberty of Romney Marsh. The church, dedicated to St. Eanswith, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 18*s.* 11½*d.* In the north chancel is a monument of John Fagge, Esq. ob. 1639.

Vol. I.

BROOKLAND, 5 miles W. from Romney, contains 79 houses, and 487 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Augustine, is a vicarage, value 17*l.* 12*s.* 8½*d.*, in the presentation of the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury.

FAIRFIELD, 6 miles W. from Romney, contains 9 houses, and 86 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Thomas à Becket, is a curacy, value 50*l.*, in the patronage of the Earl of Guildford.

BIRCHOLT FRANCHISE AND BARONY.

ALDINGTON, 5½ miles W. from Hythe, containing 88 houses, and 735 inhabitants, is situated partly in Romney Marsh. The church, dedicated to St. Martin, is a rectory, value 38*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

BIRCHOLT, 4 miles E. from Ashford, contains 5 houses, and 33 inhabitants. The church is in ruins.

BRABOURNE, 5½ miles E. from Ashford, contains 117 houses, and 599 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 11*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

HASTINGLEIGH, 6½ miles N.E. from Ashford, contains 26 houses, and 194 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 10*l.* 5*s.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

SMEETH, 5 miles S.E. from Ashford, contains 54 houses, and 393 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin Mary, is a curacy.

FOLKESTONE HUNDRED.

ALKHAM, 4 miles W. from Dover, contains 83 houses, and 509 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Anthony, is a vicarage, value 11*l.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

CAPEL LE FERNE, 2½ miles N. from Folkestone, contains 27 houses, and 195 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a curacy.

CHERITON, 2½ miles N.E. from Hythe, contains 205 houses, and 1121 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Martin, is a rectory, value 16*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.* The pleasant bathing village of Sandgate is partly in this parish, and partly in that of Folkestone.

FOLKESTONE, 35½ miles E. from Maidstone, and 70 miles from London, contains 894 houses, and 4541 inhabitants. It is pleasantly situated on irregular ground near the sea. The church, which occupies the most elevated spot, stands directly on the cliff, while the other parts of the town are principally built on the acclivity of the hill, the summit of which commands an extensive view over a fine country, with the coast of France, from Blanchness to Boulogne. Steam-boats are seen crossing the Straits. The openness of the adjacent country, the salubrity of the air, and the commodiousness of the sea-shore, cause this town to be much frequented as a bathing-place. The corporation consists of a mayor, twelve jurats, twenty-four common-councilmen, a recorder, chamberlain, and town-clerk. Folkestone is noted for the multitude of fishing-boats belonging to its harbour. It has a good coasting trade, and a considerable business in ship-building, the cutters in particular being esteemed some of the fastest sailers in the kingdom. Here are a free-school, a custom-house, and a strong battery, mounting six heavy guns. The market is on Thursday, and the fairs are on June 28 and September 25. The church, dedicated to St. Mary and St. Eanswith, is a vicarage, value 10*l.* 0*s.* 2½*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. The sea has made great encroachments on this coast. Here were formerly a castle, four churches, and a monastery.

HAWKINGE, 2 miles N. from Folkestone, contains 16 houses, and 132 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 7*l.* 7*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

NEWINGTON next Hythe, 2½ miles N. from Hythe, contains 76 houses, and 498 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to Nicholas, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.*

SWINGFIELD, 5 miles N. from Folkestone, contains 47 houses, and 304 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a curacy, value 20*l*. Here was a preceptory of Knight's Templars, founded previously to the year 1190, and valued at 87*l*. 3*s*. 3*d*.; it was at the Dissolution granted to Sir Anthony Aucher. It is said that at this place King John resigned his crown to the legate Pandulph.

H

HAM HUNDRED.

ORLESTONE, 5½ miles S. from Ashford, contains 83 houses, and 453 inhabitants. It is partly in the liberty of Romney Marsh. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 4*l*. 15*s*. 9*d*.

WAREHORN, 7 miles S. from Ashford, contains 72 houses, and 493 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Matthew, is a rectory, value 19*l*., in the presentation of the Crown.

HAYNE HUNDRED.

POSTLING, 3 miles N. from Hythe, contains 23 houses, and 175 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 6*l*. 8*s*. 1½*d*., in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

SALTWOOD, one mile N. from Hythe, contains 72 houses, and 570 inhabitants. Here is a free-school. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a rectory, value 34*l*., in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. Saltwood Castle, the gate-house of which still remains, was rebuilt by Archbishop Courtney, in the reign of Richard II.

HYTHE HUNDRED.

WEST HYTHE, 3 miles S.W. from Hythe, contains 16 houses, and 119 inhabitants. It is situated partly in Worth hundred, in this Lathe, and partly in Romney Marsh. The church is in ruins.

HYTHE, 31 miles S.E. from Maidstone, and 65 miles from London, contains 382 houses, and 2181 inhabitants. This town, at present without a harbour, is still ranked as one of the principal cinque ports; it returned barons to Parliament as early as the reign of Edward III., and furnished its quota of five ships towards the naval armament. Besides a progressive decay, Hythe has been reduced by conflagration and pestilence, and now chiefly consists of one long street running parallel with the sea, with lesser ones touching off: some of the older houses exhibit curious specimens of domestic architecture, having overhanging floors, grotesque corbels, and ornamented gables. The market is on Thursday, and there are annual fairs July 10 and December 1 for horses, cattle, shoes, clothing, and pedlery. The civil government consists of a mayor, twelve jurats, two chamberlains, a town-clerk, and twenty-four common-councilmen. This town returns two members to Parliament, a privilege obtained in 1368, the right of election being vested in the mayor, jurats, common-council, and free-men, who amount to about 70. The present members are John Loch, Esq. and Stewart Marjoribanks, Esq.

The military canal, formed during the revolutionary war with France, in order to impede the progress of an enemy, in the event of a landing being effected upon this shore, extends from Shorne Cliff in nearly a straight direction along the coast to Hythe, after which it crosses the Romney road, and finally terminates at Cliff End in Sussex, a distance of about twenty-three miles. In addition to this, a range of Martello towers was built on the beach, at irregular distances; they present a singular appearance, being built upon one uniform plan and of similar height and dimensions; the roof is vaulted and bomb-proof. In the centre of the platform, on the summit of the tower, is a twenty-four pounder, mounted on a traversing carriage, and of course capable of being pointed in any direction which may be required, as well as elevated, so as to rake and command the coast. The building is always placed as near as possible to the water, unless some eminence within the range of the guns presents a more commodious situation. There are few of these forts exposed to any but very distant, or random shot, from ships or gun-boats, even if such should presume to approach. This description of fortification, of which the idea may perhaps have been borrowed from the castles which King Henry VIII. caused to be erected, was deemed of so much importance in the late war, for defence against the landing of an enemy, that very large sums were expended upon the construction of Martello towers along the whole line of coast. At this point they are all built of brick, of a circular form, with the walls of great thickness; they extend from the vicinity of East Were Bay to near Dymchurch; the largest is at Burmarsh, near the commencement of Dymchurch wall.

The church, dedicated to St. Leonard, is a curacy; it stands upon a considerable elevation on the acclivity of a hill above the town; the chancel, the oldest part, appears to have been erected as early as the time of Henry III. Beneath the church is a curious crypt, containing an immense quantity of bones, forming a very regular pile, between seven and eight feet high, and twenty-eight feet long, traditionally, but very improbably, said to be the remains of an invading army of Danes, that was discomfited upon this shore; a circumstance not corroborated by any historical testimony. The churchyard commands a fine view of the sea and the coast of France. Hythe has lately been much frequented as a bathing resort during the summer season, and also as a place of embarkation to France, the distance hence to Boulogne being supposed less than from Dover to Calais.

LONINGBOROUGH HUNDRED.

ACRISE, 4½ miles N.W. from Folkestone, contains 28 houses, and 186 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Martin, is a rectory, value 7*l*., in the patronage of the Crown. This parish extends into Folkestone hundred. Acrise Place is the seat of Thomas Papillon, Esq.

ELHAM, or Eleham, 6 miles N.W. from Folkestone, contains 187 houses, and 1168 inhabitants. It is situated on the Little Stour, and has annual fairs on Palm Monday, Easter Monday, Whit Monday, and 20th October. The petty sessions for the upper division of the Lathe of Shepway are held here. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 20*l*., in the presentation of Merton College Oxford, but the incumbent is nominated by the Archbishop of Canterbury. Sir Thomas Williams of Eleham was created baronet November 2, 1674.

LYMINGE, 4½ miles N. from Hythe, contains 108 houses, and 718 inhabitants, including the part which is extra-parochial. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary and St. Eadburgh, is a rectory, value 21*l*. 10*s*., and a vicarage, value 10*l*. 18*s*. 9*d*.

PADDLESWORTH, 3½ miles N.W. from Folkestone, contains 9 houses, and 44 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Oswald, is a curacy.

NEWCHURCH HUNDRED.

BILSINGTON, 6 miles S. from Ashford, contains 38 houses, and 299 inhabitants. It is partly situated in Romney Marsh. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a curacy, value 30*l*. A priory of Black canons was here founded by John Mansell, Provost of Beverley in 1253, to the honour of the Virgin Mary; it was valued at 81*l*. 1*s*. 6*d*., and was granted to the Archbishop of Canterbury in 1538. Bilsington Priory is the seat of Thomas Can Rider, Esq.

RUCKINGE, 6½ miles S. from Ashford, contains 46 houses, and 331 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen, is a rectory, value 14*l*. 13*s*. 4*d*., in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

OXNEY HUNDRED.

EBONY, 4 miles S.E. from Tenterden, contains 19 houses, and 151 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a curacy.

STONE, 5½ miles S.E. from Tenterden, contains 53 houses, and 425 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 8*l*. 14*s*. 4½*d*., in the presentation of the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury.

WITTERSHAM, 4½ miles S. from Tenterden, contains 141 houses, and 911 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a rectory, value 15*l*. 8*s*. 6½*d*., in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

STOUTING HUNDRED.

ELMSTED, 8 miles N.E. from Ashford, contains 67 houses, and 454 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a vicarage, value 6*l*. 13*s*. 4*d*., in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

MONKS HORTON, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles N.W. from Hythe, contains 35 houses, and 186 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 7*l.* 10*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. Mount Morris was the seat of the eccentric Lord Rokeby, who died in 1800.

STANDFORD, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles N.W. from Hythe, contains 31 houses, and 229 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a curacy.

STELLING, 6 miles S. from Canterbury, contains 53 houses, and 295 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a curacy. This parish is partly in Loningborough hundred.

STOUTING, 8 miles E. from Ashford, contains 37 houses, and 236 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 7*l.* 17*s.* 11*d.*

STREET HUNDRED.

BONNINGTON, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles S.E. from Ashford, contains 20 houses, and 152 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Rumwald, is a rectory, value 10*l.* 12*s.* 8½*d.* This parish is partly in Romney Marsh.

HURST, or Falconer's Hurst, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles W. from Hythe, contains 5 houses, and 30 inhabitants. It is partly in the liberty of Romney Marsh. The church is in ruins.

LYMPNE, or Linne, 4 miles W. from Hythe, contains 60 houses, and 467 inhabitants. It is partly in Romney Marsh. The church, dedicated to St. Stephen, is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 1*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Archdeacon of Canterbury. Close to the church are the ruins of an ancient castle; and below it is Studfall Castle, a remarkable Roman remain.

SELLINGE, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles N.W. from Hythe, contains 57 houses, and 469 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 4*s.* 5*d.*, in the presentation of the Crown. Sellinge is the seat of — Blake, Esq.

ROMNEY MARSH LIBERTY,

Including the whole of Langport, Martin Pountney, and Worth Hundreds.

BROOMHILL, or Promhill, 3 miles N. from Rye, contains 7 houses, and 56 inhabitants. It is situated partly in Langport hundred, and partly in the county of Sussex. There is no church.

BURMARSH, 4 miles S.W. from Hythe, containing 17 houses, and 94 inhabitants, is locally situated in the hundred of Worth. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 20*l.* 10*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

DYMCHURCH, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles N. from Romney, contains 82 houses, and 551 inhabitants, including the parish of Blackmanstone. It is situated in Worth hundred, on the sea-shore, being preserved from the ravages of the sea by groins constructed of earth and timber. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a rectory, value 7*l.* 2*s.* 8½*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

EAST BRIDGE, 5 miles N. from Romney, containing 4 houses, and 18 inhabitants, is in Worth hundred. The church is demolished.

HOPE, All Saints, one mile W. from Romney, containing 5 houses, and 48 inhabitants, is in Langport hundred. The church is in ruins.

IVY CHURCH, or Ivechurch, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles W. from Romney, containing 28 houses, and 252 inhabitants, is in Martin Pountney hundred. The church, dedicated to St. George, is a rectory, value 44*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

LYDD, 36 miles S.E. from Maidstone, and $70\frac{1}{2}$ from London, contains 290 houses, and 1437 inhabitants. It is a corporation by prescription, and is governed by a bailiff, jurats, commons, and a chamberlain. The bailiff, who is coroner by virtue of his office, and the jurats, who are justices within this liberty, exclusive of all others, hold a court of general sessions of the peace and gaol delivery, together with a court of record. The market is held on Thursday, and a fair on the first Monday in September. The inhabitants are chiefly engaged in fishing and other maritime employments. On the point of land called Dungeness are a lighthouse, 110 feet high, on the model of the Edystone; a fort, and several ranges of barracks for soldiers. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 55*l.* 12*s.* 1*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. Lydd is situated in Langport hundred.

ST. MARY'S, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles N. from Romney, containing 14 houses, and 103 inhabitants, is in Newchurch hundred. It is a rectory, value 23*l.* 3*s.* 9*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. Sir Peter Dennis, of St. Mary's, was created baronet October 28, 1767.

MIDLEY, 3 miles S.W. from Romney, containing 5 houses, and 33 inhabitants, is in Martin Pountney hundred. The church is demolished.

NEW CHURCH, 4 miles N.W. from Romney, containing 32 houses, and 281 inhabitants, is locally situated in New Church hundred. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a rectory, value 8*l.* 4*s.* 2*d.*, and a vicarage, value 19*l.* 16*s.* 0½*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

ORGARSWICK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles N. from Romney, containing one house, and 10 inhabitants, is in Worth hundred. The church is demolished.

ROMNEY, 36 miles S.E. from Maidstone, and 70 miles from London, contains 157 houses, and 962 inhabitants. This town, a borough, and formerly a sea-port, is situated on a hill, in the middle of Romney Marsh: it is yet considered as one of the cinque ports, though the haven has for many ages been filled up, and become dry land. The houses, chiefly of brick, are ranged in a principal street, with another crossing it, in which stands the Hall, or Brotherhood House, rebuilt some years ago. This town first arose on the decrease of Old Romney, the privileges of which were most probably transferred hither when the port began to decay. The chief trade of the inhabitants is grazing cattle on Romney Marsh, which is a remarkably fertile tract of land, embracing upwards of 50,000 acres, defended from the encroachments of the sea by Dymchurch Wall, an immense embankment, on which there is a good road for carriages. The corporation consists of a mayor, twelve jurats, a chamberlain, recorder, town-clerk, and twenty-six common-councilmen. The market is held on Saturday, and the fair August 22. This town returns two barons to Parliament, a privilege conferred in 1368: the mayor is the returning officer. The present members are William Miles, Esq. and Sir Edward C. Dering, Bart. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 16*s.* 3*d.*, in the presentation of All Souls College Oxford. It has a large and curious tower at the west end, and the whole building is exceedingly interesting. Amongst the aquatic birds that resort to this part of the coast are the great sea-swallow, the Shrewsbury tern, the black tern, the pie, godwit, and sanderling.

OLD ROMNEY, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile W. from Romney, contains 21 houses, and 153 inhabitants. It consists only of a few houses, surrounding the church, which is dedicated to St. Clement, value 15*l.* 19*s.* 2*d.*, and in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. The ruin of this ancient town was occasioned by the devastation of the sea in the reign of Edward I., when the waves, driven in by a violent tempest, overflowed a vast tract of country.

SNARGATE, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles W. from Romney, containing 15 houses, and 93 inhabitants, is in Aloesbridge hundred. The church, dedicated to St. Dunstan, is a rectory, value 17*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

SNAVE, 4 miles N.W. from Romney, containing 13 houses, and 108 inhabitants, is locally situated in Aloesbridge hundred. The church, dedicated to St. Augustine, is a rectory, value 19*l.* 7*s.* 11*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

5. Lathe of Sutton at Hone

Is bounded on the north by the river Thames and the county of Essex; on the east by the Lathe of Aylesford; on the south by Sussex; and on the west by Surrey. It is subdivided into hundreds.

AXTON, DARTFORD, AND WILMINGTON HUNDRED.

ASH, or North Ash, 4 miles N. from Wrotham, contains 92 houses, and 505 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a rectory, value 9*l.* 18*s.* 4*d.* South Ash is a hamlet of this parish.

DARENT, 2½ miles S.E. from Dartford, contains 94 houses, and 574 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 18*s.* 11*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Rochester. South Darent is a hamlet of this parish.

DARTFORD, on the river Darent, 20 miles N.W. from Maidstone, and 15 from London, contains 609 houses, and 3593 inhabitants. Here is a market on Saturday, which is considerable for corn, and an annual fair on 2nd August for horses, cattle, &c. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is a vicarage, value 18*l.* 11*s.* 3*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Rochester. There are two burial-grounds, one contiguous to the church, and the other on the top of the hill northward of the road to Rochester, and situated higher than the tower of the church. King Edward III., about the year 1355, founded a priory here, which was endowed with 380*l.* 9*s.* per annum. It was made a residence by King Henry VIII. after the Suppression.

EYNESFORD, 5 miles S. from Dartford, contains 196 houses, and 1077 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Martin, is a vicarage, value 12*l.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. Crockenhill is a hamlet of this parish. There are still considerable remains of a castle at Eynesford.

FARNINGHAM, 4 miles S. from Dartford, contains 97 houses, and 586 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 5*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

FAWKHAM, 5 miles S.E. from Dartford, contains 31 houses, and 168 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 6*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.*

HARTLEY, 6 miles S.E. from Dartford, contains 31 houses, and 161 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 7*l.*

HORTON KIRBY, 4 miles S. from Dartford, contains 88 houses, and 537 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.*

KINGSDOWN, 3 miles N.W. from Wrotham, contains 70 houses, and 438 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Edmund, is a rectory, value 9*l.* 1*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Rochester.

LONGFIELD, 5 miles S.E. from Dartford, contains 14 houses, and 113 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen, is a rectory, value 5*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Rochester.

LULLINGSTONE, on the Darent, 5½ miles S. from Dartford, contains 5 houses, and 41 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Botolph, is a rectory, value 7*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of Sir Perceval Hart Dyke, Bart.: in it are several very curious ancient monuments of the Hart and Dyke families, and a sumptuous monument of Sir John Peche, Lord Deputy of Calais, founder of Lullingstone Castle, and sheriff of this county in the 10th year of the reign of Henry VII., which is enriched with a running device of peaches, in allusion to his name. The gate-house of the castle yet remains, with his arms and motto, "Prest à faire," over the arch of the entrance. The present mansion, the seat of Sir Perceval Hart Dyke, Bart., to whom the estate has descended, was erected in the reign of Queen Anne.

RIDLEY, 3 miles N. from Wrotham, contains 10 houses, and 74 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 3*l.* 14*s.* 9*d.*

SOUTH FLEET, 4 miles S.W. from Gravesend, contains 125 houses, and 577 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a rectory, value 31*l.* 15*s.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Rochester.

STONE, 2 miles E. from Dartford, contains 95 houses, and 514 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 26*l.* 10*s.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Rochester.

SUTTON-AT-HONE, 2½ miles S. from Dartford, contains 157

houses, and 863 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a vicarage, value 10*l.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Rochester. The Knights Hospitalers of St. John of Jerusalem had a commandery here, founded by Robert Basinge.

SWANSCOMBE, 4 miles E. from Dartford, contains 163 houses, and 908 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a rectory, value 25*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of Sidney College Cambridge. This village has derived celebrity from being assigned as the spot where the march of William the Conqueror was impeded by the men of Kent, till he had consented to grant them a full confirmation of all their ancient laws and privileges.

WILMINGTON, one mile S. from Dartford, contains 124 houses, and 653 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Rochester.

BLACKHEATH HUNDRED.

CHARLTON, 8 miles E. from London, contains 294 houses, and 1626 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Luke, is a rectory, value 10*l.* 7*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Rochester, by lapse. Here is an annual fair on St. Luke's day, called Horn fair. Charlton Place, the seat of Sir Thomas Maryon Wilson, Bart., was built about 1612 by Sir Adam Newton, secretary to Henry Prince of Wales, created baronet by King James I. 2nd April 1620. It is a large brick edifice, surmounted by an open-worked parapet. The saloon has its original ceiling ornamented with the arms and feathers of the Prince of Wales. The gallery in the north wing is about 76 feet by 16: in it are the badges of the families of Newton and Puckering, and in the window the arms and matches of the Ducie family. The stables are of the same period as the mansion, and have the letters A.N. repeated on the walls. The park and pleasure-grounds, commanding beautiful views of the Thames, consist of about 70 acres. Cherry Garden House, in its vicinity, is said to have been built by Inigo Jones for his own residence. Morden College, founded by Sir John Morden, Bart. in 1608, is in this parish, and the liberty of Kidbrook, formerly a parish, adjoins it. Sir William Hervey was created by Charles I. Lord Hervey of Kidbrooke.

DEPTFORD, on the banks of the Thames, 4 miles from London, contains 3642 houses, and 19,862 inhabitants. Deptford is divided into upper and lower towns, the last formerly called West Greenwich and Deptford Strond, and consists of two parishes, St. Nicholas and St. Paul. St. Nicholas is a vicarage, value 12*l.* 17*s.* 3*d.*, and St. Paul is a rectory: the last church was built in 1730. This town derived its chief importance from a royal dock and store-houses, the large private docks for ship-building, and from the establishment of the corporation of the Trinity House. The royal dock, or King's-yard, was established in the beginning of the reign of Henry VIII., and is under the immediate inspection of the Navy Board. The extent of the yard includes about thirty-one acres, which are occupied by two wet docks, three slips for men-of-war, a barn, two mast-ponds, a model-loft, mast-house, &c. &c. Near the King's-yard is the Victualling-office, containing a mill for grinding corn, granaries, bakehouses, &c. The Trinity House of Deptford Strond was incorporated by Henry VIII.; and Trinity Hospital is also for decayed pilots, masters of ships and their widows. North-west of Deptford is the Red House, a collection of store-houses.

The bridge over the Ravensbourne, which here falls into the Thames, was built by King Charles I. in 1628. Sayes Court was the seat of Sir Richard Brown, created baronet 1st Sept. 1649, and afterwards of John Evelyn, Esq., one of the founders of the Royal Society.

ELTHAM, 8½ miles S.E. from London, contains 313 houses, and 1883 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a vicarage, value 3*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.* Here are remains of a palace, originally built by Antony Bec Bishop of Durham, who gave it to Eleanor Queen of Edward I. Edward II. resided here, whence his son, born in the palace, was called John of Eltham. The great hall, built by Edward IV., is now used as a barn. King Henry VII. erected a handsome front to this palace, of which there now remains a portion, consisting of three gables. There is also part of Well Hall, built about 1555, now standing. Sir Thomas Fytche, of Eltham, was created baronet 7th Sept. 1688; and Sir William James of Eltham was created baronet 2nd July 1778. Mottingham is a hamlet of this parish.

GREENWICH, on the banks of the Thames, 5 miles from London, contains 3007 houses, and 20,712 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Alphage, is a vicarage, value 21*l.*, in the patronage of the Crown. Here is a magnificent hospital, founded by King William III. in 1694, on the site of a royal palace, for aged and disabled seamen, which consists of four distinct piles of building, and having a grand front towards the river, 865 feet in length. The ground plan of the whole edifice forms nearly a square, of which King Charles's building (erected by that monarch for a residence) occupies the north-western angle, Queen Anne's the north-eastern, King William's the south-western, and Queen Mary's the south-eastern: in the two last are the great hall and chapel. In the hall is a valuable collection of pictures of naval subjects, presented to the Hospital by His Majesty George IV. Greenwich Park was disjoined from the palace when the last was converted into a hospital, and still continues vested in the Crown: it consists of 188 acres, walled round by King James I. The tower in this park, erected by Humphrey Duke of Gloucester, and repaired by King Henry VIII., was pulled down in 1675, by order of King Charles II., who founded the present Royal Observatory on its site. The prospects hence, as well as from One Tree-hill, are uncommonly fine, particularly of the metropolis, the county of Essex, and the windings of the Thames.

LEE, on the south side of Blackheath, 7 miles from London, contains 119 houses, and 737 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, is a rectory, value 3*l.* 11*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. It was rebuilt in 1815. Near the entrance of the churchyard is the monument of Lord Dacre, who died in 1794, remarkable for the frequent visits paid to it by his affectionate widow during her lifetime. She died in 1808.

LEWISHAM, on the Ravensbourne, 6½ miles from London, contains 1409 houses, and 8185 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Sydenham. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 23*l.* 19*s.* 2*d.*, in the patronage of the Earl of Dartmouth, who is also Viscount Lewisham: it was rebuilt in 1777. In the churchyard is a monument of Dermody the poet, who died in 1802. In this parish is Oak of Honour Hill, upon which Queen Elizabeth is said to have dined.

WOOLWICH, on the river Thames, 8 miles E. from London, contains 2520 houses, and 17,008 inhabitants. Here is an extensive dock-yard, near which is the Royal Arsenal, the grand dépôt of naval ordnance. The Military Academy, about one mile from the town, was erected from designs by Wyatt; there are also artillery barracks on the northern brow of the common. Here is a market on Friday. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 7*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Rochester. Sir William Green, of Woolwich, was created baronet June 10, 1786.

BROMLEY AND BECKENHAM HUNDRED.

BECKENHAM, 10 miles from London, contains 196 houses, and 1180 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. George, is a rectory, value 16*l.* 18*s.* 9*d.* Beckenham Place is the seat of John Cator, Esq. The park, watered by the Ravensbourne, is well wooded.

BROMLEY, 10 miles from London, and 28 miles N.W. from Maidstone, contains 486 houses, and 3147 inhabitants. It has a market on Thursday, and annual fairs on 14th Feb. and 5th Aug. for horses, cattle, and sheep. The petty sessions for Bromley division are held here. The Bishop of Rochester has a palace near the town, the only one now belonging to the see: it was almost entirely rebuilt by Bishop Thomas in 1774. St. Blaise's Well in the grounds is chalybeate. A college was founded in the town by Bishop Warner, about 1666, for elergymen's widows, and the support of a chaplain. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Bishop of Rochester. The edifice underwent an efficient and thorough repair in 1830, when much attention was paid to its architectural character. Bromley Hill is the seat of Lord Farnborough; Bickley, of John Wells, Esq.; and Sunderidge Park, of Samuel Scott, Esq.

CODSHEATH HUNDRED.

BRASTED, 4½ miles W. from Seven Oaks, contains 159 houses, and 970 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Martin, is a rectory, value 22*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

CHEVENING, 3½ miles N.W. from Seven Oaks, contains 143 houses, and 812 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Botolph, is a rectory, value 21*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. Chevening Place is the seat of the Countess Stanhope. The grounds were much improved by the late Earl; who was celebrated also for his improvement of the printing-press. Near it is Combe Bank, the seat of William Manning, Esq. From the summit of Morants Court Hill is a prospect including some of the richest scenery in the county.

HALSTEAD, 4½ miles N.W. from Seven Oaks, contains 42 houses, and 243 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, is a rectory, value 5*l.* 17*s.* 11*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

KEMSING, 4 miles N.E. from Seven Oaks, contains 70 houses, and 359 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 19*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Earl of Plymouth.

LEIGH, 3 miles W. from Tonbridge, contains 115 houses, and 876 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 18*s.* 9*d.*

OTFORD, on a branch of the Darent, 3 miles N. from Seven Oaks, contains 115 houses, and 630 inhabitants. It is a curacy. Here was anciently a palace of the Archbishops of Canterbury, which was rebuilt by Archbishop Warham in the reign of Henry VIII., some of the decorations of which are preserved at the village inn.

SEAL, 2½ miles N.E. from Seven Oaks, contains 241 houses, and 1320 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a curacy.

SEVEN OAKS, 16 miles W. from Maidstone, and 23 from London, contains 362 houses, and 2114 inhabitants. The town is situated on an eminence in the road from Bromley to Tonbridge, and has a market on Saturday, and annual fairs 10th July and 22nd October for hogs, and third Tuesday in every month for cattle. It is governed by a warden and assistants, and the petty sessions for the lower division of the Lathe of Sutton at Hone, are held here. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a rectory and vicarage; the first, value 13*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, and the last, value 15*l.* 3*s.* 1*d.* Kippington, the seat of Thomas Austen, Esq., was built about 1750. Knole, the seat of the Earl of Plymouth, was built about 1485, and considerably altered about 1603. It was originally a seat of the Archbishops of Canterbury, but fell to the Crown. Queen Elizabeth granted it to the Sackville family, from whom it descended to the present noble proprietor. Here is preserved a very extensive and highly interesting collection of portraits. Riverhead and Weald are populous liberties of this parish. At Riverhead, is Montreal, the seat of the Earl Amherst, who is also Lord Holmsdale, the name of the valley in which it is situated. The house derives its name from the success of the first peer of this family; and over the entrance is a basso-relievo of the town of Montreal, in Canada.

SHOREHAM, 4½ miles N. from Seven Oaks, contains 162 houses, and 891 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a vicarage, value 14*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Westminster.

SUNDRIDGE, 3½ miles W. from Seven Oaks, contains 194 houses, and 1129 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 22*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. The parish is divided into the Upland and the Weald.

LESSNESS HUNDRED.

CRAYFORD, 22 miles N.W. from Maidstone, and 13 miles from London, contains 315 houses, and 1866 inhabitants. It is situated on the river Cray, which produces excellent trout, and falls into the Darent a little below the town. Here are some considerable calico-printing grounds, and a manufactory for slitting iron and rolling it into hoops. In this and the adjoining parishes are a number of deep caverns, artificially cut out of the chalk-pits. Crayford has a fair on September 12. The church, dedicated to St. Paulinus, is a rectory, value 35*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* Holby Hill is the seat of Captain Ash; May Place, the seat of His Excellency the Spanish Ambassador; Baldwins, the seat of — Minett, Esq.; and Mount Pleasant is the seat of Lady Anne Dashwood.

ERITH, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles N. from Crayford, contains 223 houses, and 1363 inhabitants. It is pleasantly situated on the Thames, and in the summer sends a great quantity of fruit to London, particularly cherries. Here is an establishment of the customs, of a surveyor and two watermen, who have charge of the haven, which the river Thames forms here. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.*

PLUMSTEAD, 2 miles E. from Woolwich, contains 461 houses, and 2386 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 18*s.* 4*d.*

The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 13*l.* 4*s.* 7*d.* The hamlets of Blendon, Bridgen, Halfway-street, Hurst, Upton, and Welling, are in this parish. Blendon Hall is the seat of J. Smith, Esq.; Lamienby, of Neil Malcolm, Esq.; Danson, of John Johnson, Esq.; and Mount Mascal, of M. Atkinson, Esq.

CHELSEFIELD, 7 miles S.E. from Bromley, contains 128 houses, and 756 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 24*l.* 14*s.* 2*d.*, in the patronage of All Souls' College.

CHISELHURST, $11\frac{1}{2}$ miles from London, contains 264 houses, and 1586 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a rectory, value 16*l.* 3*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Rochester. Camden Place, the seat of Thomson Bonar, Esq., derived its name from its former possessor, Camden, the author of "Britannia," and hence the Marquess of Camden takes his title. Frognaal is the seat of Viscount Sidney.

FOOT'S CRAY, on the river Cray, 12 miles from London, contains 40 houses, and 221 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 8*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. Foot's Cray Place, the seat of Lord Bexley, was built in 1752, after a design, founded upon that of the villa Capra, of Palladio: it stands in a commanding situation, on a gentle rise from the river.

ST. MARY'S CRAY, 2 miles S. from the above, contains 144 houses, and 874 inhabitants. Here is a market on Wednesday, and a fair on 2nd February. It is a curacy.

NORTH CRAY, one mile E. from Foot's Cray, on the same river, contains 42 houses, and 245 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a rectory, value 8*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. North Cray Place is the seat of — Coventry, Esq.

CUDHAM, or Cowdham, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles S.E. from Bromley, contains 124 houses, and 683 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a vicarage, value 13*l.* 2*s.* 2*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

DOWN, 6 miles S.E. from Bromley, contains 69 houses, and 340 inhabitants. It is a curacy.

FARNBOROUGH, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles S.E. from Bromley, contains 91 houses, and 553 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Giles the abbot, is a curacy. Sir Charles Long, of Bromley Hill, was created Lord Farnborough 13th June 1826. High Elms is the seat of Sir J. W. Lubbock, Bart.

HAYES, 2 miles S. from Bromley, contains 80 houses, and 429 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 6*l.* 18*s.*, in the patronage of the Rector of Orpington. Hayes Place is the seat of Mrs. Salter Dehaney.

KESTON, 5 miles S. from Bromley, contains 50 houses, and 252 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 6*l.* 10*s.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. Holwood Hill, the seat of John Ward, Esq., is built on the site of the residence of the Right Hon. William Pitt, on a beautiful eminence, commanding one of the most agreeable prospects in this county. The high and distant woodlands of Knole, Seven Oaks, Tonbridge, and the hills of Sussex, form an extensive amphitheatre of forest scenery and downs, as far as the eye can reach. Julius Cæsar's camp is partly within the grounds, and at its base is the source of the Ravensbourne.

NOCKHOLT, 5 miles N.W. from Seven Oaks, contains 83 houses, and 407 inhabitants. It is a curacy.

ORPINGTON, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles S. from Foot's Cray, contains 129 houses, and 754 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 11*l.* 10*s.* 5*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. Sir Percival Hart entertained Queen Elizabeth at his seat at Orpington on 22nd July 1573, when the Queen named it "Bank Hart." At Newell, a little westward of this village, the river Cray takes its rise.

WEST WICKHAM, 3 miles S.W. from Bromley, contains 86 houses, and 555 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a rectory, value 11*l.* 10*s.* 10*d.* Wickham Court, the seat of Sir Charles Farnaby, Bart., was built in the reign of Henry VII., and is a very curious specimen of the architecture of that early period. In it are some portraits of the Lennard family.

SOMERDEN HUNDRED.

CHIDDINGSTONE, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles W. from Tonbridge, contains 164 houses, and 1096 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 28*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

MIDDLESEX.—Home Circuit.

THIS county is bounded on the north by Hertfordshire; on the east by Essex; on the south by Surrey; and on the west by Buckinghamshire. Previously to the Roman invasion, Middlesex was included in the district inhabited by the Trinobantes, or Trinovantwys; and after the subjugation of the island, was included in the division named Flavia Cæsariensis, when Londinium became a principal station, and Sullonicæ, on Brockley, was also a Roman station. The Roman roads in this county appear to have concentrated in London, whence they branched off as from a centre, nearly in the direction of the principal points of the compass. The Watling-street from Dover is presumed to have continued along Stone-street in Southwark to Dowgate and the present Watling-street; quitting the city at Aldersgate, it skirted the station of Sullonicæ towards Verulam. Another road, by some called Ikenild-street, is supposed to have led eastward down Old-street, and crossed the river Lea at Old Ford to Duroleiton, or Leyton in Essex. The Hermen-street passed under Cripplegate, and led northwards through Islington and Highbury to Enfield and Hertfordshire. Another Roman road from London went through Brentford, Hounslow, and Staines, in the same course as the present turnpike road to Bath. The county derives its present name from its relative situation to the three ancient surrounding kingdoms of East, West, and South Saxons. Its greatest length is twenty-three miles, and its greatest breadth about seventeen miles; in circumference it is about one hundred and fifteen miles. It contains two cities, London and Westminster, eleven market towns, two hundred and thirty-four parishes, 152,969 houses, and 1,144,531 inhabitants. It is in the province of Canterbury, and diocese of London. Besides the monasteries in London, there were priories at Kilburn, Hounslow, and Sion. Hampton Court, and Holland House at Kensington, are ancient residences. Middlesex returns eight members to Parliament, four for the city of London, two for the city of Westminster, and two for the county, who at present are George Byng, Esq. of Wrotham Park, and Joseph Hume, Esq. Middlesex is a well cultivated county: the least productive parts, as Hounslow Heath, Finchley Common, and Enfield Chase, are now inclosed; and the quantity of manure procured from the metropolis is of great service in improving the land, from which cause the produce is always earlier within a few miles of London than at a more considerable distance. In the art of hay-making, the Middlesex farmers are superior to those of any other part of the kingdom: the districts near London usually afford two crops of hay every year; those in the more remote parts yield but one. The corn grown in this county is nearly confined to wheat and barley; rye and oats are cultivated only in small quantities. The fruit-gardens of this county, exclusive of those attached to private houses, are supposed to occupy about three thousand acres, and are principally situated in the parishes of Hammersmith, Brentford, Isleworth, and Twickenham. Besides the quantity of fruit raised from these gardens, the London markets receive additional supplies from gardens on the Surrey side of the Thames; and much is also brought from Kent, Essex, Berkshire, and other counties. The nursery-grounds lie in the neighbourhood of Chelsea, Brompton, Kensington, Hackney, Dalston, Bow, and Mile End. The taste for elegant and rare plants has become so prevalent, that the rearing them for sale forms a considerable object of commerce; and the English gardeners have attained such celebrity for the cultivation of exotics, that a great exportation is made to France, Spain, Portugal, Italy, Russia, and other countries. The kitchen-gardens in the vicinity of the metropolis are estimated to comprise above ten thousand acres. The rivers of this county are the Brent, the Colne, the Crane, the Lea, the Exe, or Echel, the Moselle, and the Thames, besides the artificial stream called the New River. The Thames enters Middlesex at the point where it receives the waters of the Colne, a short distance above Staines, and forms the southern boundary of the county in a devious course of about forty-three miles; and being navigable the whole way adds to the convenience and wealth of the numerous towns and villages situated on its banks. At Hampton, the Thames makes a bold reach round the park and gardens of Hampton Court; hence passing Teddington, (said to be a corruption of Tide End Town,) the majestic stream flows onward to Twickenham, Isleworth, and Brentford. At Isleworth it receives the Crane; and at Brentford, the river, contracted by a line of islands, is also enlarged by the Brent and the Grand Junction canal. Chiswick, Hammersmith, and Fulham, and the populous village of Chelsea, border the river in its course to Westminster and the port of London, whence the Thames rolls onward to the sea, between the shores of Kent and Essex. The tides flow up the river to the distance of between seventy and eighty miles from its mouth, and occur twice in every twenty-four hours nearly. The fall of water from Oxford to Maidenhead is about twenty-five feet every ten miles; from Maidenhead to Chertsey twenty-two feet every ten miles; from Chertsey to Chiswick sixteen feet every ten miles; and from Chiswick to London, about one foot per mile: afterwards the fall diminishes gradually till the river unites with the sea. The Colne river enters this county in several channels at its north-western extremity, and flowing along the western border, passes Harefield, Uxbridge, and Cowley, towards Colnbrook and Longford, being divided into six or seven branches, the principal of which flow into the Thames at Staines. The river Brent enters Middlesex near Finchley, takes a circuitous direction by Hendon, Kingsbury, Twyford, Greenford, and Hanwell, to the town of Brentford, where it unites with the Thames. The Crane rises near Pinner, and assuming a winding course, flows under Cranford Bridge, and crossing Hounslow Heath falls into the Thames at Isleworth. The Lea river bounds the whole eastern side of Middlesex, and falls into the Thames at Bow. The Serpentine River in Hyde Park is chiefly supplied by a stream which rises near West End, Hampstead, and passing Kilburn and Bayswater, through Kensington Gardens to Hyde Park, flows by Knightsbridge into the Thames at Chelsea. This county is intersected by the Grand Junction, Paddington, and Regent's canals. The first joins the Thames at Brentford, and passing Sion Hill and Osterley Park, is carried through a rich corn district to West Drayton, Cowley, Uxbridge, and Harefield, beyond which it quits the county. By means of collateral cuts, this canal has become the most important inland navigation in the kingdom, affording a direct communication between London and the manufacturing towns of Warwickshire, Staffordshire, Lancashire, Derbyshire, and other counties. The Paddington canal branches off from the Grand Junction near Cranford, and is of very great importance from its connection with the trade of London. The sides of the basin at Paddington are occupied with warehouses, a quay, and market-places for hay, straw, and cattle. The Regent's canal also connects the Grand Junction with the Thames. After passing through the Regent's Park, where it supplies the ornamental lakes, it crosses the Hampstead and Kentish-town roads to a tunnel under the hill at Pentonville; after which it passes near the Rosemary Branch, where a branch is carried across the City Road, and the canal crosses the Kingsland and Haggerstone roads to the Cambridge Heath road, crossing Mile End and Commercial roads to Limehouse. The Duke of Portland is Lord Lieutenant of the county.

1. Edmonton Hundred

Is bounded on the north and west by Hertfordshire; on the east by Essex; and on the south by Ossulston hundred.

EDMONTON, 7 miles N. from London, contains 1334 houses, and 7900 inhabitants. The parish is divided into four wards, distinguished by the names of Bury-street, Church-street, Fore-street, and South-street, and includes a part of Enfield Chase. It is beautifully situated, and surrounded by the residences of opulent merchants. Here is a fair on 14th September, which lasts three days. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 18*l.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's Cathedral. Bush Hill is the seat of Isaac Currie, Esq.; and Bush Hill Park of William Mellish, Esq. The New River runs through the grounds, and near the house is a fine clump of firs, called "The Bishops." Grove Hall is the seat of Robert Ray, Esq.; and near it Milford House, the seat of the late Robert Mushett, Esq. of the Royal Mint. Upper Edmonton is separated from Edmonton by Duck-lane. Southgate is a hamlet of Edmonton: in the chapel is the monument of its founder Sir John Weld, who died in 1622. Culland's Grove is the seat of Sir W. Curtis, Bart.

ENFIELD, 10 miles N. from London, contains 1309 houses, and 8227 inhabitants. This parish is very large, and is divided into three districts, viz.: the town quarter, containing Enfield village, Baker-street, Forty Hill, Clay Hill, the Chase Side, &c.; Green-street quarter, containing Green-street, Ponder's End, South-street, Enfield Highway, Enfield Wash, and Tuckey-street; Bull's Cross quarter, containing Bull's Cross, Bullsmore-lane, and White Webbs. Here is a market on Saturday, and annual fairs on 23rd September and St. Andrew's day; also a grammar-school. In the town, opposite the church, are some remains of a mansion, built by Sir Thomas Lovel, K.G., in the reign of Henry VII.: he died here in 1524. Henry VIII. is said to have purchased it. Edward VI. went hence to the Tower on his accession to the throne; and in April 1557 the Princess Elizabeth was escorted from Hatfield to Enfield, "that her grace might hunt the hart." Enfield Park was part of the royal demesne. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a vicarage, value 26*l.*, in the patronage of Trinity College Cambridge. In the church is a fine monument, with inlaid brass, of Joyce Lady Tiptoft, who died in 1446. Another brass, in memory of William Smith, and Jane his wife, who served King Henry VIII., Edward VI., Queen Mary, and last, Queen Elizabeth: he died 29th September 1592. There are also many interesting monuments of more modern date. Enfield Chase is said to have extended from Housditch, nearly twelve miles northwards. When this chase was disafforested by Act of Parliament in 1779, it was found to contain 8349 acres, a part of it being allotted to different neighbouring parishes, and another part reserved for the use of the Crown, which last was afterwards sold. Forty Hall, the seat of James Meyer, Esq., is on the site of a mansion, built by John Tiptoft Earl of Worcester, steward of the household to King Edward IV., and patron of Caxton the printer; and was re-built by Sir Nicholas Raynton, from a design by Inigo Jones: it stands on the north side of Four Tree Hill. Upon the Chase are three lodges, East Lodge, West Lodge, and South Lodge. Trent Place was built by Sir Richard Jebb, Bart., physician to the King, who died in 1787. The park contains about 261 acres: within it, amongst oaks and beeches of great size and age, is Camalet Moat, the reputed site of the mansion of the Mandevilles, Earls of Essex.

SOUTH MIMS, 4 miles N.W. from Barnet, contains 357 houses, and 1906 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Giles, is a vicarage, value 12*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. This church was formerly rich in painted glass: four windows still remain in different degrees of preservation; they were painted in 1526: it also contains several ancient curious monuments. A part of Enfield Chase is in this parish. Bridgefoot is the seat of E. Vincent, Esq.; and Durham Park is the seat of John Trotter, Esq. The road hence to Ridge Hill was altered, under the direction of Telford, by authority of Parliament.

HADLEY, or Monken Hadley, one mile N.E. from Barnet, contains 156 houses, and 926 inhabitants. This village is situated much higher than any other in the vicinity of London; and the views hence over Enfield Chase (part of which is included in the parish), the river Thames and the county of Kent, are uncommonly beautiful. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a donative, in the patronage of the lords of the manor. Over the western entrance is a tablet bearing the date 1494: it contains a monument of Sir Roger Wilbraham, Master of Requests, ob. 1616, designed by Nicholas Stone. Here also were buried Sir William Stamford, ob. 1558; Dr. Monro, ob. 1792; and Mrs. Hester Chapone, ob. 1801. On the tower are the remains of an ancient beacon. The ancient prefix to the name of the village probably arose from the manor belonging to the Abbey of Walden, to which it was granted by Mandeville Earl of Essex.

TOTTENHAM, 4 miles from London, contains 976 houses, and 5812 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Hallows, is a vicarage, value 14*l.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's Cathedral; it is situated on an eminence almost surrounded by the Mose, a rivulet which rises on Muswell Hill: here was buried William Bedwell, vicar of the parish, and author of "A Brief Description of the Towne," in 1631; he died in 1632. The vestry attached to the east end of the north aisle was erected by Lord Coleraine in 1697, and beneath is the burial-place of the Hare family. Bruce Castle, now a school upon a much approved plan, was the manor-house, and derived its name from Bruce, the Scottish king, once lord of this manor. Near the house is a curious old brick tower. The parish of Tottenham is divided into four districts, distinguished by the names of the High Cross, Middle, Lower, and Wood Green Wards. There is an overseer and a constable for each ward, and two church-wardens for the whole parish. At the end of Page Green is "The Seven Sisters," a remarkable clump of elms. The ancient Cross, it appears from Bedwell's description, was originally of wood, and was rebuilt of brick about 1600. In 1812 it was covered with cement, under the direction of Shaw. Tottenham Park is the seat of — Wright, Esq.: and Mount Pleasant is the seat of William Heathcote, Esq.

2. Elthorne Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Hertfordshire; on the east by Gore hundred and Ossulston hundred; on the south-east by Isleworth hundred; on the south by Spelthorne hundred; and on the west by Buckinghamshire.

BRENTFORD, 7 miles W. from London, contains 360 houses, and 2036 inhabitants, exclusive of Old Brentford, which is in Ealing parish. It is situated on the northern bank of the river Thames, and principally consists of one street, about a mile long. This being the county town, members of Parliament are here elected for the county: the petty sessions for Brentford division and the hundred of Isleworth are held here. The principal trade is in malt: there is also a very extensive distillery, and manufactures of bricks, tiles, and earthenware. The market is on Tuesday, and the fairs on the 17th, 18th, and 19th of May; 12th, 13th, and 14th of September. At this town the river Brent falls into the Thames, after uniting with the Grand Junction canal. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is a curacy, value 150*l.*, in the presentation of the rector of Hanwell. Here were buried William Noy, Attorney-General 1634; John Horne, whose son John Horne Tooke was curate here for eleven years, 1766; and Dr. William Howell Ewin, his monument by Flaxman, 1804. The church of Old Brentford, dedicated to St. George, is a curacy. In a chapel at the western end of this town was founded in the year 1446, by John Somerset, Chancellor of the Exchequer, and the King's chaplain, a friary, consisting of a master and several brethren. It was granted in 1547 to Edward Duke of Somerset. Boston House is the seat of J. Clitherow, Esq.

COWLEY, 1½ mile S. from Uxbridge, contains 59 houses, and 349 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is a rectory, value 11*l.*

CRANFORD, 2½ miles N.W. from Hounslow, contains 42 houses, and 288 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Dunstan, is a rectory, value 16*l.*, in the patronage of the Earl of Berkeley. Thomas Fuller, historian of the Worthies of England, and rector of Cranford, was here buried in 1661; on the north wall of the chancel is his monument. Sir Charles Scarborough, physician, was also interred here 1693. The philosophical John Wilkins, afterwards Bishop of Chester, was rector of Cranford. Cranford Park is the seat of the Countess of Berkeley.

WEST DRAYTON, 6 miles N.W. from Hounslow, contains 120 houses, and 608 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Martin, is a vicarage, value 13*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* In it are three monuments of the De Burghs, by Bacon. Here was buried William first Lord Paget, 1563.

GREENFORD, 6 miles N. from Hounslow, contains 78 houses, and 415 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Holy Cross, is a rectory, value 20*l.*, in the patronage of King's College Cambridge. Here is a charity-school, founded by its rector the Rev. Edward Beetham in 1776. This was the rectory of John de Feckenham, last abbot of Westminster.

HANWELL, 11½ miles W. from St. Paul's Cathedral, contains 164 houses, and 977 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 20*l.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of London. Hanwell Park is the seat of Sir John Copley; Hanwell Cottage, the seat of Miss Caswall; and Lawn House, the seat of — Lawson, Esq.

HAREFIELD, 4 miles N. from Uxbridge, containing 229 houses, and 1228 inhabitants, is pleasantly situated on a rising ground. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a curacy. Here was buried John Pritchett Bishop of Gloucester, 1680. Harefield Place was the residence of Lord Chief Justice Sir Edward Anderson, who in 1601 was here visited by Queen Elizabeth, and afterwards the seat of Lord Keeper Egerton, and his wife the Countess Dowager of Derby. Here she was honoured with a visit from Queen Elizabeth, whom she received with all the pageantry of those days. Milton's "Arcades" was first performed at Harefield Place, in 1633, by the Countess of Derby's grandchildren. She was buried in the church under a splendid monument in 1637. This seat afterwards became the property of the Newdigates, who have monuments in the church; amongst which are those of Sir Richard, Lord Chief Justice, 1678, and Sir Roger, the last baronet, founder of the Newdigate prize, Oxford, 1806. Harefield Place is now the seat of Sir Christopher Baynes, Bart. Harefield Lodge is the seat of the Hon. Charles Manners Tollemache; it commands a beautiful and extensive prospect. Harefield Park is the seat of Major Stuart; and Harefield Grove, the seat of W. Flower, Esq.

HARLINGTON, 4 miles N.W. from Hounslow, contains 73 houses, and 472 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a rectory, value 24*l.*; it is an ancient structure, consisting of a chancel and a nave: on the steps leading to the chancel, on the north side, is a monument to the memory of Gregory Lovell, Esq. lord of the manor, and patron of the church; he died in 1545. Dawley House, now demolished, was a seat of the celebrated Viscount Bolingbroke.

HARMONDSWORTH, or Hermondesworth, 6 miles N.W. from Hounslow, contains 132 houses, and 1076 inhabitants. Here is one of the largest barns in England, whose supporting pillars are of stone, and supposed to be of great antiquity. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 12*l.* Here was an alien priory of Benedictine monks subject to the abbey of the Holy Trinity at Rouen. The King in 1391 gave the abbot there leave to alienate and sell this manor to William Wickham Bishop of Winchester, who made it part of the endowment of his college near Winchester; whence, by way of exchange, it came to the Crown in 1543, and in 1547 was granted to Sir William Paget.

HAYES, 3½ miles S.E. from Uxbridge, contains 267 houses, and 1530 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 20*l.* The rectory of Hayes is valued at 40*l.* In the church is a monument of Sir Edw. Fenner, ob. 1611. The principal hamlets in this parish are Botwell, Hayes End, Wood End, and Yeading. Hayes was an ancient occasional residence of the Archbishops of Canterbury. Hayes Park is the seat of — Wood, Esq.; and Hayes End Park the seat of Robert Willis Blencowe, Esq.

HILLINGDON, one mile S.E. from Uxbridge, contains 537 houses, and 2886 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a vicarage, value 16*l.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of London. In the churchyard is a yew-tree, which, by the parish books, appears to be above two hundred years old. Hillingdon Grove is the seat of — Crickett, Esq.; Hillingdon Lodge, the seat of F. Bent, Esq.; and Hillingdon House, the seat of R. H. Cox, Esq.; it was erected in 1717, and is placed on a gentle ascent: the grounds, of considerable extent, are romantic and picturesque, and are embellished by a fine piece of water. Uxbridge is a hamlet of this parish.

ICKENHAM, 2 miles N.E. from Uxbridge, contains 48 houses, and 281 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Giles, is a rectory, value 13*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of London. The manor of Ickenham has been in the possession of the family of Shordiche since the year 1348: they have several monuments in the church. Swakeleys, the seat of Thomas T. Clarke, Esq., was built in the reign of Charles I., and is a curious architectural composition of brick, with decorations of stone, carved in a fantastic character. In the church is a monument, by Banks, to the memory of John George Clarke, barrister-at-law, who died at Swakeleys, 28th of June 1800. In 1665 the mansion was the property of Sir Robert Vyner, Bart., Lord Mayor of London.

NORTHOLT, 2½ miles S. from Harrow, contains 56 houses, and 455 inhabitants.

NORWOOD, 2 miles N. from Hounslow, containing 195 houses, and 1124 inhabitants, is pleasantly situated on the Grand Junction canal. It is a curacy.

PERRIVALE, 3 miles S. from Harrow, contains 5 houses, and 25 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*

RUISLIP, or Riselip, 3½ miles N.E. from Uxbridge, contains 239 houses, and 1343 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Martin, is a vicarage, value 12*l.*, in the presentation of the Dean and Canons of Windsor: it has many curious old monuments; among others, one to the memory of Mary Lady Bankes, wife of the Hon. Sir John Bankes, Lord Chief Justice; she is celebrated in history for her courageous defence of Corfe Castle against the Parliamentary army, and died 11th April 1661. The rectory of Riselip having been given with the manor by Ernulph de Hesding to the abbey of Bec, in Normandy, was afterwards appropriated to the priory of Okeburn. After the suppression of alien priories, the rectory came to Windsor College, but the manor was granted to the University of Cambridge in 1437, and in 1547 to King's College there.

SOUTHALL, on the road to Oxford, 9 miles W. from London, contains 117 houses, and 697 inhabitants. It has a market on Thursday for the sale of cattle.

UXBRIDGE, 15 miles from London, containing 506 houses, and 2750 inhabitants, is a hamlet to the parish of Hillingdon. It is situated on the river Colne and the Grand Junction canal, over each of which it has a bridge. The houses are chiefly disposed in one long street, near the centre of which is the market-house. This town is noted for its great corn-market, and a considerable number of waggon loads of meal are carried hence every week to London; on the river are many flour-mills, and a quantity of malt is made in the town and neighbourhood. Uxbridge is governed by two bailiffs, two constables, and four head boroughs. The petty sessions for the hundred of Elthorne are held here. The market is on Thursday, and the fairs are on July 31st and October 10th. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, is a curacy; it was built in the reign of Henry VI. The Treaty House was so called from having been the place where the commissioners of Charles I. and the Parliament met in 1644. In the vicinity are the remains of a camp and Belmont House.

3. Gore Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Hertfordshire; on the east and south-east by Ossulston hundred: and on the south-west and west by Elthorne hundred.

EDGWARE, on the road to St. Albans, 8 miles N.W. from London, contains 109 houses, and 551 inhabitants. The petty sessions for the hundred of Gore are held here. The market is on Thursday, and an annual fair on Holy Thursday for horses and cattle. All the western side of the street is in the parish of Little Stanmore or Whitchurch. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Earl of Coventry.

HARROW, 10 miles N.W. from London, contains 596 houses, and 3017 inhabitants, including the hamlets of Harrow Weald, and Greenhill. This village is situated on one of the highest hills in the county, which, rising out of a rich vale, is in a manner insulated: the views from it are extremely beautiful, and hardly equalled by any other spot in the kingdom. The free grammar-school, founded in the reign of Elizabeth by John Lyon of Preston, in this parish, is amongst the first public seminaries in the kingdom. The founder required parents to furnish the scholars with bow-strings, shafts, &c., and a silver arrow is still annually shot for on the 4th of August by a certain number of the scholars, habited as archers. The school was rebuilt about 1812. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 33*l.* 4*s.* 2*d.* It is an ancient and very curious edifice. In it are buried John Lyon, yeoman, founder of the school, ob. 1592; Sir Arthur Ayte, secretary to the Earl of Essex, ob. 1604; Sir Samuel Garth, M.D. poet, ob. 1719; also Thomas Brian, ob. 1730; Thomas Thackeray, ob. 1760; and Robert Sumner, ob. 1771,—three head masters of the school. Apperton, Kenton, Preston, Roxey, and Wembley are hamlets of this parish.

HENDON, on the river Brent, 7 miles from London, contains 450 houses, and 3100 inhabitants. This village is pleasantly situated, and is dispersed over a considerable tract of ground, comprising Church End, Brent-street, Lawrence-street, Page-street, Dole-street, Burrows, Dallis, the Hyde, Mill Hill, Highwood Hill, Child's Hill, Hocomb Hill, Golders, or Goldhurst Green, and Golder's Hill. The inhabitants are exempt from all tolls at fairs, markets, &c., by ancient charters, confirmed by William and Mary in 1692. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 15*l.*, in the patronage of the lord of the manor. Here were buried Sir William Rawlinson, ob. 1703; Edward Fowler Bishop of Gloucester, ob. 1714; and Sir Joseph Ayloffe, the antiquary, ob. 1781. Hendon Hall is the seat of J. Deffell, Esq.; Hendon House is the seat of Matthew Price, Esq.; and Hendon Place is the seat of Lord Tenterden: the last is a handsome edifice, consisting of a centre and two wings. The grounds are finely undulated, watered by the Brent, and contain some noble timber. Mill Hill commands a variety of most delightful views, in which the churches of Harrow and Hendon are conspicuous objects, and in the distance may be discerned the towers of Windsor Castle. Hendon is the largest parish within ten miles of London.

KINGSBURY, 8 miles N.W. from London, contains 66 houses, and 360 inhabitants. It was the residence of Anglo-Saxon princes, whence the name. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's Cathedral. Here Dr. Goldsmith is said to have lodged whilst composing his History of Animated Nature.

PINNER, 2½ miles N.W. from Harrow, contains 181 houses, and 1076 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a curacy. Here was buried Sir Bartholomew Shower, author of "Cases and Reports," ob. 1701. Pinner Hill is the seat of Mr. Serjeant Pell; Pinner Wood, of Mr. Serjeant Sellon; Pinner Park, of J. D. Hume, Esq.; Pinner Green, of W. Boyd, Esq.; Pinner Lodge, of J. Tannier, Esq.; and Pinner Grove, of Lady Milman.

STANMORE, 10 miles N.W. from London, contains 180 houses, and 990 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Evangelist, is a rectory, value 10*l.*; it is a brick structure, having been rebuilt in 1632: in the chancel is a fine monument, by Nicholas Stone, of its founder Sir John Wolstonholme, Bart., ob. 1639. Charles Hart, the tragedian, was also buried here: he died in 1683. The views from the more elevated parts of this parish are very extensive and highly interesting; a group of remarkable trees on the common are actually said to be a land-mark from the German Ocean. Stanmore Hill was the residence of James Forbes, Esq., F.R.S., author of Oriental Memoirs, &c., published in 1813. The house was built by the Duke of Chandos as a dowry-house for his Duchess, and enlarged by Mr. Forbes, who erected in the gardens an octagonal temple to contain various groups of Oriental sculpture. Bentley, or Benethley, Priory, the residence of the Earl of Aberdeen, President of the Society of Antiquaries, is partly in the parish of Harrow. It was built or enlarged by the late Marquess of Abercorne, after designs by Soane, and is said to occupy the site of a religious house suppressed in the early part of the reign of Henry VIII., and granted to the monks of St. Gregory's Priory at Canterbury. It contains a fine collection of works of art, comprising antique busts, portraits, and pictures by the old masters. The elevated situation of the mansion commands rich and extensive prospects, and the grounds abound with ornamental scenery.

WHITCHURCH, or Little Stanmore, adjoining Edgware on the west, contains 112 houses, and 712 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is a curacy: it is an elegant little structure, and contains almost all that now remains of the magnificence of Canons. The body of the church was built by the Duke of Chandos, but the tower is ancient: the interior is highly decorated; the organ is placed in a recess behind the altar, and is viewed through a Corinthian colonnade, which produces a fine effect. The sides of the church are painted with scriptural subjects, and at the west end is a gallery, erected for the use of the Duke and his family. At the east end of the church is a sepulchral chapel, containing several costly monuments of the Brydges family. Canons, the princely seat of the Grand Duke, as he is here still called, which he built in 1712, was after his decease pulled down, and the materials sold by auction in 1747;—remarkably verifying the prophetic lines in Pope's Epistle to Lord Burlington. The house built on its site was afterwards the residence of Dennis O'Kelly, Esq., owner of the famous horse Eclipse, whose bones lie in Canons Park. Canons Park is now the seat of Lady Plumer: it had descended to the Duke of Chandos from Sir Thomas Lake, Secretary of State to James I., who died in 1630, and is buried in the church.

4. Isleworth Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Elthorne hundred; on the south and east by the county of Surrey; and on the west by Spelthorne hundred.

HESTON, 1½ mile N. from Hounslow, contains 447 houses, and 2810 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Leonard, is a vicarage, value 11*l.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of London. The custom of Borough English is retained in this parish. It is noted for fine wheat, and in the reign of Elizabeth the bread for the Royal table was required to be furnished hence. Osterley Park, the seat of the Earl of Jersey, anciently belonged to the convent at Sion. Queen Elizabeth granted it to Sir Thomas Gresham, who built a noble mansion here in 1577, in which he entertained the Queen. In the reign of Charles I. it was the seat of Sir William Waller, the Parliamentary General, and so continued until his death in 1668: it was rebuilt in 1760 by Francis Child, Esq., from whom the estate descended to the present noble proprietor. It is a magnificent structure, extending 140 feet from east to west, and 117 feet from north to south: on the east front is an Ionic portico. The picture-gallery, 136 feet by 27, contains a collection of valuable pictures: there is also an excellent library. The park, finely wooded, is six miles in circumference, and is enlivened by two fine sheets of water: on the northern bank of the lower lake is a menagerie.

HOUNSLOW, on a branch of the river Colne, 10 miles W. from London, is partly in the parish of Heston, and partly in that of Isleworth, in which the population is included. Here are a market on Thursday, and annual fairs on Trinity Monday and on Monday after 29th September, for horses, cattle, and sheep. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is a curacy: in it is buried Henry Elsynge, writer on Parliament, ob. 1654. Here was a priory of friars of the order of the Holy Trinity, for the redemption of captives, founded as early as the reign of Edward I.: the revenue at the Dissolution was 80*l.* 15*s.* per annum, and the site was granted in 1558 to William Lord Windsor. Hounslow Heath, now inclosed, bore vestiges of several ancient camps, particularly that of the Earl of Gloucester, when at the head of the Londoners in 1267, and that of Charles I. in 1642. Here in 1647 was a general rendezvous of the Parliamentary forces under General Fairfax. In 1686 King James II. encamped here, after the suppression of the Duke of Monmouth's rebellion. In 1793 barracks were erected on the north side of the heath: about the middle are powder-mills and copper flatting mills.

ISLEWORTH, on the banks of the Thames, 8½ miles W. from London, contains 899 houses, and 5269 inhabitants, including the hamlets of Brazill, Mill Lane, Brentford End, Rails Head, Sion Hill, Smallbury Green, Whitton, Whitton Dean, Worton, and Wyke Green. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 18*l.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Canons of Windsor: in it are monuments for Anne Dash, founder of alms-houses, ob. 1750, executed by Halfpenny; and George Keate, the poet, ob. 1797, by Nollekens. At Sion King Henry V. in 1414 founded a monastery of the order of St. Augustine, consisting of eighty-five persons, answering to our Blessed Saviour's thirteen Apostles, including St. Paul and seventy-two disciples; it was dedicated to Jesus Christ, the Virgin Mary, and St. Bridget: it was well endowed, and at the suppression the revenues were valued at 1944*l.* 11*s.* 8*d.* per annum. The site was granted in 1547 to Edward Duke of Somerset, and in 1553 to John Dudley Duke of Northumberland. Sion House, built on its site by the Protector, became the residence of Lord Guildford Dudley, and Lady Jane Grey, who was here when the Duke her father prevailed on her to accept the crown; and hence she was conducted to the Tower. The estate reverted to the Crown, and was granted to Henry Percy Earl of Northumberland, whose son Algernon, who succeeded to the estate in 1632, employed Inigo Jones to complete the edifice. It is now the seat of the Duke of Northumberland, K.G., and great alterations were made in the house in 1762 by Robert Adam. The entrance from the great western road is by an arched gateway in the centre of an open colonnade, displaying a fine lawn in the approach to the house. An exact counterpart of this gate of entrance was presented by the late Duke of Northumberland to John I., King of Portugal, and sent to Rio Janeiro, His Grace being at the whole expense of the freight, and of a person sent out to superintend the erection: it is fixed at "the Chacre," the country residence of the King, about three miles from Rio Janeiro. The grounds of Sion House form a fine lawn, extending from Isleworth to Brentford. Two of the fronts of the mansion command very beautiful scenery, the Thames appearing to unite with the gardens: on a Doric column is a statue of Flora. Sion Hill was built by the celebrated Duchess of Marlborough, and the grounds were laid out by Brown: they contain an observatory. At Whitton Park Sir Godfrey Kneller resided, and died there in 1717: it is now the seat of Sir John Cam Hobhouse. Whitton Place was built by Archibald Duke of Argyll, and was altered by Sir William Chambers, Architect to George III.: it is now the seat of Mrs. Gostling.

TWICKENHAM, on the banks of the Thames, 10 miles W.

from London, contains 738 houses, and 4206 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 11*l.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Canons of Windsor. It is a modern structure of the Doric order. Pope was buried here, and a monument was erected to his memory by Warburton Bishop of Gloucester. Below Twickenham Park, the seat of Joseph Todd, Esq., the river Crane falls into the Thames. Marble Hill was built from a design of the Earl of Pembroke for the Countess of Suffolk; and Lord Bathurst and Mr. Pope are said to have laid out the gardens: it is situated on a beautiful lawn open to the Thames, and adorned on each side by a fine grove of horse-chestnut trees. Ragman's Castle is the seat of Mrs. Hinrich, and Marble Hill Cottage the seat of Timothy Brent, Esq. Pope's Villa has been much enlarged and altered since it was the residence of the poet. Strawberry Hill, erected by the Hon. Horace Walpole, afterwards Earl of Orford, is situated on an eminence commanding views of Richmond Hill, Ham, and Kingston: it contains a very good collection of pictures, a curious library, and many pieces of sculpture. In a wood adjoining the garden is a building erected to contain a mosaic monument, said to have been the work of Petro Cavalini. The vicinity of Twickenham is remarkable for the fertility of its well-cultivated garden-grounds, and supplies the London markets with large quantities of vegetables and fruit, particularly strawberries.

5. Ossulston Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Edmonton hundred and Hertfordshire; on the east by the county of Essex; on the south by the river Thames and Surrey; and on the west by Gore and Elthorne hundreds. It is also separated into the four divisions of Finsbury, Holborn, Kensington, and the Tower; and contains the cities of London and Westminster.

FINSBURY DIVISION.

FINCHLEY, 7 miles N. from London, contains 359 houses, and 2349 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 20*l.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of London. In the chancel are many monuments of the Allen family, lords of the manor; a brass of — White, citizen and grocer of London, ob. 1610; and a monument of — Kinge, one of His Majesty's auditors, ob. 1618; a slab against the south wall, to the memory of William Seward, F.R. and S.A., ob. 1799. In the churchyard is a monument of — Shelley, miniature painter, and founder of the Society of Artists in Water-Colours, ob. 1808. Finchley-common, now inclosed, contained 1010 acres of land, partly in this parish and partly in the parishes of Fryern Barnet and Hornsey.

FRYERN BARNET, 8 miles N. from London, contains 102 houses, and 534 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's Cathedral, to whom the manor was granted at the dissolution of monasteries: it originally belonged to the priory of St. John of Jerusalem. Here is an alms-house, founded by Lawrence Campe, citizen and draper of London, in 1612.

HIGHGATE, 4 miles N. from London, is partly in the parish of Hornsey, and partly in St. Pancras parish, where the population is entered. It is situated on one of the highest hills in the county. The summit of the hill commands an extensive prospect over Essex, Surrey, and Kent on one side, and Hertfordshire, Bedfordshire, and Buckinghamshire on the other; the metropolis and the Thames are also seen to great advantage. The chapel here is dedicated to St. Michael: in it was buried Sir Francis Pemberton, ob. 1699. Highgate derives its name from the following circumstance: at an early period a road eastward of the Old Watling Street, long the main communication between the metropolis and the North of England, was carried by permission through the Bishop of London's estate; at the extremity of this property gates were erected, where a toll was required for the privilege of passing the road, when the most elevated of these gates gave name to the village. The gatehouse remained till 1769; and its site is now marked by a tavern, with the sign of the Gate-House. Norden, who published an Historical and Chorographical Description of Middlesex in 1593, mentions Highgate, and remarks, "Upon this hill is most pleasant dwelling, yet not so pleasant as healthful, for the expert inhabitants there report that divers that have been long visited with sickness not curable by physicke, have in a short time repayed their health by that sweet salutarie aire." "At this place," he continues, "Cornwallies, esquire; hath a verie faire house, from which he may with great delight behold the stately citie of London, Westminster, Greenwich, the famous river Tamyse, and the cuntrye towards the south very faire." At this house Sir William Cornwallis was, it is presumed, visited by Queen Elizabeth in June 1589; and on the 1st of May 1604 it was the scene of a royal festival, for which Ben Jonson wrote a dramatic interlude. Sir Roger Cholmondeley, Lord Chief Justice, built a free-grammar school in 1562, to which a chapel was added in 1565 by Edmund Grindal Bishop of London, whose arms, together with those of the founder, are in painted glass in one of the windows. The school was endowed with funds sufficient for the education of forty boys, to be chosen from Highgate, Holloway, Finchley, and Kentish Town; and the governors were incorporated by a charter from Queen Elizabeth. In order to avoid the steep acclivity of the hill, a new road, and Highgate archway, was commenced in 1812; the road passes the eastern side of the hill, and is about a mile and a half in extent, and the archway continues the road to Hornsey, affording a beautiful view. Holly Lodge is the seat of the Duchess of St. Alban's; and Fitz Roy Farm of A. Roberts, Esq.; the house was rebuilt by Lord Southampton.

HORNSEY, 6 miles N. from London, contains 640 houses, and 4122 inhabitants, including the hamlets of Crouch End, Muswell Hill, Stroud Green, and part of Highgate. Through this village, which is situated in a valley, the New River flows in a beautiful serpentine manner. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 22*l.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of London. In the church was buried Samuel Buckley, editor of Thuanus, ob. 1741. About a mile southward of the village is Hornsey-wood House, commanding an extensive prospect. Muswell Hill also is remarkable for the variety and extent of the views. The well whence it derives its name is the source of the river Mose; and near it stood formerly a chapel, dedicated to our Lady of Muswell, and belonging to the priory of St. John of Jerusalem in Clerkenwell.

ISLINGTON, 2 miles N. from London, contains 3495 houses, and 22,417 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 30*l.*: it was rebuilt in 1754. This parish is very extensive, including Upper and Lower Holloway, three sides of Newington Green, and part of Kingsland. The southern part of the village is within the parish of St. James, Clerkenwell. St. John's Church, Upper Holloway, was built by Barry in 1828. St. Paul's Church, Ball's Pond, was also built by Barry in 1828; and Trinity Church, Cloudesley-square, by the same architect in 1829. The commissioners built the churches on plans submitted by the parish. Sadler's Wells originated in a mineral spring discovered by Mr. Sadler about 1680. The theatre here was erected about 1766, by Mr. Roßoman, and was long celebrated for rope-dancing, tumbling, &c. Islington Wells, now called Islington Spa, or New Tunbridge Wells, was in repute at the time of Sadler's discovery. In 1733 it was visited by the Princess Amelia, for the purpose of drinking the waters, and furnished a title to an interlude by Colman, called "The Spleen, or Islington Spa," acted at Drury-lane in 1776. Canonbury-House, at the northern extremity of the parish, was a residence of the priors of St. Bartholomew. White Conduit-house derived its name from a conduit belonging to London Charter-house.

STOKE NEWINGTON, 2½ miles N. from London, contains 398 houses, and 2670 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Newington-Green, which consists of a handsome square, surrounded with houses, one of which, on the south side, is said to have been a residence of Henry VIII.; and near it is King Harry's Walk. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 10*l.*, in the patronage of the Prebendary of Newington in St. Paul's Cathedral: it was rebuilt in 1562. Behind the church is a grove of tall trees, known by the name of Queen Elizabeth's Walk. Stamford Bridge, over Hackney Brook, a branch of the river Lea, is in this parish. The Palatine Houses, southward of the village, were built in 1709 for the reception of some distressed Palatines, who sought an asylum in this country.

HOLBORN DIVISION.

HAMPSTEAD, 4 miles N. from London, contains 1047 houses, and 7263 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John, is a curacy, in the patronage of the lord of the manor: it is a brick edifice, rebuilt in 1747. In it is a monument of Frances, wife of Lord Erskine, ob. 1800, by Bacon; and of Dorothea, mother of Joanna Baillie, dramatist of the Passions, who resided in the village. Hampstead is situated on the acclivity of a gentle eminence; and on the summit of the hill is the heath, remarkable for the extent of view over the city of London and the adjoining counties, as well as for the salubrity of the air. Before the commencement of the last century, Hampstead became a popular resort for its wells, the water of which was sold in flasks. Concerts and balls, held weekly at the principal tavern, were then the Ton. At the Upper Flask Inn, about the same time, were kept the summer meetings of the celebrated Kit Cat Club. A cottage, on Haverstock-hill, which had been occupied by Sir Charles Sedley, who was a distinguished gallant in the court of Charles II., became celebrated as a temporary residence of the gay and lively Sir Richard Steele, in 1712, who had at this time completed the Tatler: he joined Addison, also a member of the Kit Cat, in the Spectator, which was projected on the idea of a club: Pope also, who had just commenced his translation of the Iliad, was a frequent visitor of Sir Richard Steele at this cottage. This assemblage of wit and talent conferred a degree of celebrity on the spot; and, in memory of its inmate, the house has ever since retained the name of Steele's Cottage. The situation of Hampstead, naturally very beautiful, has contributed to render it a large and populous village. Besides the views of the metropolis, and of the distant country, which are to be seen in every direction from most parts of the village, the home landscape, consisting of broken ground, divided by inclosure, and well planted, is extremely picturesque. Branch Hill Lodge was formerly the seat of Thomas Parker Earl of Macclesfield. Amongst numerous villas on this side of Hampstead is Rosslyn House, the seat of Lord Loughborough, afterwards Earl of Rosslyn. His Lordship made considerable additions to the old house, called Shelford Lodge; and from him it has derived its present appellation. Belsyze, a manor-house of the Dean and Chapter of Westminster, has been the residence of many persons of consequence. Sir Armigal Wood, the first Englishman who made discoveries in America, died at this house in 1568, and was buried in the chancel of the old church at Hampstead. It was long afterwards the seat of Charles Henry Lord Wotton, who died in 1704, and of his half-brother Philip, second Earl of Chesterfield, who died in 1713. In 1720 it became a house of public entertainment, and obtained great notoriety in the publications of that period. Since the year 1745 the mansion was rebuilt, and was latterly the retirement of the Right Honourable Spencer Percival, the Prime Minister: it is now the seat of William Everett, Esq.

The election of members of Parliament for this county was usually held on Hampstead Heath, from the time of King Charles II. till 1701, when the first announcement appears of its taking place at Brentford; and while it was a place of fashionable resort, races were held here. Sir Thomas Wroth had a grant of the manor of Hampstead in 1550; John Wroth, his descendant, sold it to Sir Baptist Hickes in 1620; and it was purchased in 1707 by Sir William Langhorne, Bart., from whom the property has descended through the family of Maryon to Sir Thomas Maryon Wilson, of Charlton, in Kent, who in 1829 introduced into Parliament a bill for the inclosure of the heath;—but it is to be hoped that a spot which so remarkably contributes to the health and ornament of the metropolis will be suffered to remain in its present state. The royal forest of Middlesex formerly covered this part of the county, in which the citizens of London had right of free chase, confirmed by several regal charters, and in which privilege originated the civic office of common hunt, now abolished. The remains of this forest are still to be seen in Ken Wood, the seat of the Earl of Mansfield. This estate was purchased in 1755 of the Earl of Bute; and the house was nearly rebuilt after designs by Adam: it has since been enlarged under the direction of Saunders. The pleasure-grounds, including the wood, whence it takes its name, are beautifully situated, and art has been successfully employed in making them still more picturesque: a shrubbery in the garden front, and a serpentine piece of water, enliven the scene.

PADDINGTON, one mile from London, on the road to Edgware, contains 1139 houses, and 6476 inhabitants. It is a curacy, in the presentation of the Bishop of London. The present church was built in 1791. The canal and basin have much increased the prosperity of this village: it communicates with the Grand Junction canal at Bull's Bridge. Westward of the church are Craven Hill and Westbourne Green, and north-eastward is Primrose Hill. On little Primrose Hill is a reservoir for the supply of water to the neighbourhood of the Regent's Park, elevated 175 feet above the level of the Thames, whence the water is brought above Hammersmith.

KENTISH TOWN, 3 miles from London, on the road to Highgate, is a hamlet of Pancras parish. Its name is said to be derived from the prebendal manor of Cantelows, or Kentish Town. The chapel here was erected in 1784, from a design by Wyatt. Camden Town, built on the estate of the Marquess of Camden, and Somers Town, on the estate of Earl Somers, are also hamlets of Pancras parish; and both are now completely united with London.

KENSINGTON DIVISION.

ACTON, 5 miles W. from London, contains 326 houses, and 1929 inhabitants, including the hamlets of East Acton and Friars Place. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 14*l.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of London. Near East Acton are mineral wells, which were in considerable repute about the middle of the last century; and assemblies were held there during the season. At the entrance of the village of Acton is a conduit, erected by Thomas Thorne in 1612. Berrymead Priory was the seat of E. F. Akers, Esq.; Friars Place, of W. Learmouth, Esq.; and Fordbrook-house, of — Duval, Esq.

CHELSEA, on the banks of the river Thames, 3 miles from London, contains 3602 houses, and 26,860 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Luke, is a rectory, value 13*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of Earl Cadogan, who is also Viscount Chelsea. In the church are monuments of Lord Chancellor Sir Thomas More's two wives, with an inscription by himself; Jane, wife of the ambitious John Dudley Duke of Northumberland, ob. 1555; Gregory Lord Dacre, ob. 1594; Lady Jane Cheyne, ob. 1669, by Bernini. In the churchyard were interred Sir Hans Sloane, President of the Royal Society and College of Physicians, ob. 1753; Philip Miller, author of the Gardener's Dictionary, ob. 1771; John Baptiste Cipriani, the painter, ob. 1785, &c. A new church was founded in 1820, and erected from designs by Savage. The principal object of attention in this village is the Royal Military Hospital, founded by King Charles II., continued by James II., and completed in the reign of William and Mary in 1692: it was erected from designs by Sir Christopher Wren. There is a tradition that this hospital is indebted for its establishment to Nell Gwynn, the mistress of the King, who might certainly have employed her influence towards the advancement of a measure so honourable to her royal protector. Its origin has also been ascribed to Sir Stephen Fox, one of its most liberal benefactors. The edifice consists of three courts, the principal of which is open to the south; in the centre of this court is the statue of the royal founder. The eastern and western wings of this court are each 365 feet in length, and 40 feet wide, and are chiefly occupied by the wards of the pensioners. At the extremity of the eastern wing is the house of the governor, which contains a state apartment, adorned with portraits of King Charles I., his queen, and two sons, Charles Prince of Wales, and James Duke of York; a portrait of King Charles II., of William III., and of George III. and Queen Charlotte. On the southern front is a Doric portico and colonnade, with the following inscription on the frieze: "In subsidium et levamen emeritorum senio belloque fractorum, condidit Carolus Secundus, auxit Jacobus Secundus, perfecere Gulielmus et Maria Rex et Regina mdcxc." This part of the building is divided into a chapel and hall, with a central vestibule, terminated by a eupola of considerable altitude. The chapel is 110 feet in length, and 30 in breadth. The altar-piece is the Resurrection, by Sebastian Ricci. The hall, of the same dimensions as the chapel, contains an equestrian portrait of King Charles II., by Verrio, inscribed "Carolo Secundo Regi optimo hujus Hospitii fundatori, Dominoque suo clementissimo Ricardus Jones comes de Ranelagh hanc tabulam posuit."

The eastern and western courts are principally occupied by the officers of the establishment. The north front is of great extent, and from the judicious adjustment of its parts produces a very impressive effect: before it is an inclosure, planted with avenues of limes and horse-chestnuts. The ground southward of the building contains the gardens, which extend to the river, and finish with an elevated terrace. The hospital being considered as a military station, the pensioners accordingly mount guard, and perform other garrison duties.

The Botanical Garden, belonging to the Society of Apothecaries of London, was originally established in 1673. Near the middle of the garden is a marble statue of Sir Hans Sloane, by Rysbrach, erected in 1733, which, as it was erected during the lifetime of their great benefactor, may be presumed to be a good likeness. The garden is laid out in divisions, in which the plants, shrubs, and trees are arranged systematically. On its northern side is a library and greenhouse; with hothouses, &c.; and on the side of the garden next the Thames are two large cedars of Lebanon.

CHISWICK, on the Thames, 7 miles from St. Paul's, contains 654 houses, and 4236 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 18*s.* 4*d.*, in the presentation of the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's. Here were buried William Bordall its vicar, who built the church tower, 1435; Barbara Villiers, Duchess of Cleveland, 1709; Mary Countess of Fauconberg, third daughter of Oliver Cromwell, 1713; William Kent, architect, 1748; James Ralph, 1762; William Hogarth, painter, 1764; Philip James de Loutherbourg, painter, 1812; and Thomas Tomkins, 1816; monument by Chantrey. Near the village are the gardens of the Horticultural Society of London.

Chiswick House was built in 1729 by Richard Earl of Burlington, the accuracy of whose taste for architecture is evinced in all the edifices which he designed, and which are deservedly reckoned amongst the most choice specimens, after the Italian model, in England; the wings were subsequently added by the late Duke of Devonshire. The ascent to the house is by a double flight of steps, under a portico composed of six fluted Corinthian columns, which here exhibit all the richness of which that graceful order is capable: on one side of the entrance is a statue of Palladio, and on the other one of Inigo Jones. From the centre of the roof rises an octagon, covered with a low dome of lead. A passage leads from the portico to the saloon, or octagonal room, whose roof is superbly panelled and enriched; the ceilings are particularly fine, and those of the rooms in the southern angles very remarkable for their brackets, which are large and numerous, and the space in which they are disposed so small, that they form clusters, and produce a singular effect. A valuable collection of pictures nearly covers the walls of the different apartments. An avenue of stately cedars of Lebanon extend from the principal front to the public road, and the gardens are ornamented with temples, statues, obelisks, &c.; some of the statues are antiques, but most of the sculpture is the performance of Scheemaker. In this mansion died the Right Hon. Charles James Fox, 1806, and the Right Hon. George Canning. In Chiswick parish are the hamlets of Stanford Brook, Strand on the Green, Little Sutton, and Turnham Green. Sutton Court House is the seat of Colonel Cavendish.

EALING, 7 miles W. from London, contains 1116 houses, and 6608 inhabitants, including Old Brentford. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 13*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of London. At Ealing is the seat of Spencer Percival, Esq. The manor-house is the seat of — Clifton, Esq.; Gunnersbury House, the seat of A. Copland, Esq.; Elm Grove is the seat of Lady Carr; Hanger Hill, the seat of George Wood, Esq.; Hanger Vale, J. R. Wood, Esq., and W. Agar, Esq.; Hanger-hill House, Mrs. Shum; Castle Bear Hill, General Wetherall; and Castle Bear Lodge once the seat of His late Royal Highness the Duke of Kent.

FULHAM, 4 miles S.W. from London, contains 987 houses, and 6492 inhabitants. It is situated on the banks of the Thames, over which it has a wooden bridge, connecting it with Putney on the Surrey side. Fulham may be denominated the great fruit and kitchen garden north of the Thames, for the supply of the London market. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 10*l.*: the rectory, value 26*l.*, is in the patronage of the Bishop of London. This church has been the burial-place of all the prelates of the see of London since the Restoration, except Bishop Porteus, who was interred by his own desire at Sundridge in Kent. Here are monuments of Sir William Butts, Physician to King Henry VIII., 1545; Sir Thomas Smith, 1609; John Viscount Mordaunt, by Bushnel and Bird, 1675; Dorothy Lady Clarke, by Gibbons, 1695.

The palace of Fulham has, from a very early period, been the summer residence of the Bishops of London. The house is of brick, and was built by Bishop Fitzjames in the reign of Henry VII., as appears by that Bishop's arms on a stone over a door leading from the offices in the south wing. In the library is a collection of portraits of the Bishops of London. The gardens are very curious; they first became remarkable in the time of Bishop Grindall, who was one of the earliest encouragers of botany, and the first person who imported the tamarisk tree into this country, about the year 1560. Bishop Compton made them still more celebrated, by the introduction of many new plants, shrubs, and forest trees, from North America. Near the porter's lodge is a row of limes of great age, most probably planted by Bishop Compton about the time of the Revolution, when the fashion of planting avenues of limes was introduced into this country from Holland. The house, gardens, and a large field called the Warren, consisting in the whole of about thirty-seven acres, are surrounded by a moat, over which are two bridges. Sandford manor-house, in this neighbourhood, was formerly of some note, from having been the residence of the celebrated Nell Gwynn. Fulham Park is the seat of — Fisher, Esq.; Broom House, the seat of the Countess Dowager of Lonsdale; Munster House, the seat of J. W. Croker, Esq.; and Peterborough House, the seat of A. T. Sampayo, Esq. In Fulham parish are the hamlets of Parson's Green and Walham Green. A new church has been here erected, by Taylor, dedicated to St. John: it was consecrated in 1828.

HAMMERSMITH, 4 miles W. from London, containing 1406 houses, and 8809 inhabitants, is in Fulham parish. A very beautiful and elegant suspension-bridge has lately been erected over the Thames at this spot. The church, dedicated to St. Paul, is a curacy, value 100*l.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of London. In it is a bronze bust of Charles I., under which, in a marble urn, is the heart of the loyal donor Sir Nicholas Crispe. Here were buried Sir Samuel Morland, the celebrated mechanist, 1696; George Bubb Doddington Lord Melcombe, 1762; Thomas Worlidge, 1766; and Arthur Murphy, 1805. Brandenburg House, built by Bubb Doddington, and afterwards the residence of the celebrated Margravine of Anspach, was lately pulled down. In this parish are the hamlets of Brook Green, Pallenswick or Stanbrook Green, and Shepherd's Bush.

KENSINGTON, 2 miles W. from London, contains 1984 houses, and 14,428 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary Abbots, is a vicarage, value 18*l.* 8*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of London: it was rebuilt about 1691. At the east end of the south aisle is a monument of Edward, eighth Earl of Warwick and Holland, ob. 1759, with his effigies, seated and reposing on an urn. Sir William Humble, of Kensington, was created baronet 17th March 1687; and Sir Thomas Colby of Kensington was created baronet 18th June 1720. The hamlets of Brompton, Earl's Court, the Gravel Pits, and part of Little Chelsea are in this parish; but the palace at Kensington, and about twenty houses on the north side of the road, are in the parish of St. Margaret Westminster; on the south side, the parish of Kensington extends beyond the Gore, which was anciently called Kyng's Gore. The principal houses between that and Knightsbridge are in the parish of St. Margaret Westminster. Kensington Palace was a seat of the Earl of Nottingham, of whom it was purchased by King William III. in 1691. Many additions were made to the edifice for His Majesty, and the south front was entirely rebuilt under the direction of Sir Christopher Wren and Hawksmoor; the north front is probably original. A road was then made to the palace through St. James's and Hyde Parks, and further additions were made in the reign of Queen Anne, and also by Queen Caroline in the reign of George II., when the west front was rebuilt by Kent. The palace was the frequent residence of King William and Queen Mary, of Queen Anne, and of Kings George I. and II.; and, excepting King George I., who died at Hanover, all expired within its walls; as did Prince George of Denmark, consort of Queen Anne, in 1708. The great staircase leading to the state apartments, in which a very extensive and curious collection of pictures is now deposited, is lighted by three windows on the west front: the opposite sides are painted, by Kent, to represent a magnificent gallery and colonnade of the Ionic order. The gallery is occupied by figures supposed to be spectators on a court day, all of whom are presumed to be portraits of persons well known in the reign of George II., consisting of ladies, pages, yeomen of the guard, &c., amongst whom are a highlander, a quaker, and Peter the wild boy, found in the woods near Hamlen in Hanover in 1725; a youth standing outside the balustrade is called a page of the Countess of Suffolk; and another young man, Mr. Ulric, one of the pages of the King; two persons in Turkish habits are Mahomet and Mustapha, who were taken prisoners by the Imperialists in Hungary, and afterwards entered into the service of King George I. The gallery opens upon the presence-chamber, now filled with pictures. The ceiling of this room is painted by Kent, after the manner of fresco paintings at Herculaneum. The suite is continued through the privy-chamber, the Queen's drawing-room, the Queen's dining-room, the Queen's dressing-room, the Queen's gallery, the King's great drawing-room, and the King's gallery,—this noble room being 94 feet by 21, and lighted by nine windows; the cube-room, Queen Caroline's bed-room, Queen Caroline's dressing-room, the private closet, and the Denmark staircase, situated at the northern extremity of the palace. It was the opinion of the late Mr. West, that the Kensington collection was most curious and valuable, from the number of original portraits, and the antiquity and rarity of many of the specimens of the early masters here preserved. Besides the state apartments, are those of Her Royal Highness the Princess Sophia, of Her Royal Highness Victoria Maria Louisa Duchess of Kent, and her daughter the Princess Victoria, who was born here 24th May 1819. Here also are the apartments of His Royal Highness the Duke of Sussex, whose library is not only the most curious, but the most extensive in the peculiar department to which it is chiefly devoted. Here are nearly 300 theological MSS. of the 12th, 13th, 14th, and 15th centuries, with some as early as the 10th century, and above 500 early-printed books relative to the Holy Scriptures. The principal ornament of Kensington Palace is the gardens, which are disposed with admirable taste. They originally consisted of only 26 acres: Queen Anne added 30 acres, which were laid out by Wise; but the principal addition was made by Queen Caroline, who inclosed nearly 300 acres of Hyde Park, which were planted by Kent, and were afterwards improved by Brown, distinguished landscape-gardeners. The gardens are three miles and a half in circumference, with a broad walk extending from the palace along the south side of the gardens, and across the Serpentine river by the new bridge, by Rennie, a promenade occasionally fashionable. The green-house, at the northern extremity of the west front of the palace, is a noble structure. Campden House, near Kensington, was built in 1612 by Baptist Hicke Viscount Campden. Here the Princess Anne of Denmark resided for five years with her son William Duke of Gloucester, presumptive heir to the Crown. Holland House, the manor-house of Abbots Kensington, was built in 1607 by Sir Walter Cope, and descended, through his daughter Isabel, to her husband Henry Rich Earl of Holland, in the reign of Charles I. It is built of brick, with stone dressings. Addison resided here after his marriage with Charlotte Countess Dowager of Warwick; and about 1746 it became the residence of Henry Fox, created Lord Holland in 1763. His Lordship afterwards purchased the estate, by virtue of an Act of Parliament, in 1766. A library occupies the whole length of the western wing, about 110 feet in length; and in the space between the cases and the ceiling are portraits of distinguished living and modern characters. In the house are portraits of the Lennox, Digby, and Fox families, and many well-executed busts by Nollekens. The actual model of the statue of the Right Hon. Charles James Fox, executed by Westmacott, and erected in Bloomsbury-square, stands in the entrance-hall. There are about 200 acres of land attached to the house, of which about 7 or 8 are pleasure-grounds. Brompton chapel was built about 1769. This hamlet was the residence of Oliver Cromwell, and Brompton Park House is built on the spot where it stood. Gloucester Lodge was the residence of the Right Hon. George Canning. Near Queen's Elms is a Botanical Garden, founded by William Curtis, author of Flora Londinensis and the Botanical Magazine. A new church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, has been here erected, by Donaldson: its architecture is of the lowest order, and only should be mentioned as a warning to imitators of the ancient style, who attempt to build without comprehending the beauties that may be elicited from attention to its peculiarities. It was consecrated in 1829.

WILSDON, or Willesden, 5 miles N.W. from London, contains 234 houses, and 1413 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 14*l.*, in the presentation of the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's. Here are seven prebends belonging to St. Paul's. Sir William Roberts of Wilsdon was created baronet November 8, 1661. In this parish are the hamlets of Holsdon Green, Neasdon, East Twyford, and Church End.

TWYFORD, or West Twyford, contains 3 houses, and 33 inhabitants. The church is a curacy. Twyford Abbey is the seat of Thomas Willan, Esq.

TOWER DIVISION.

BROMLEY ST. LEONARD'S, 3 miles E. from London, contains 842 houses, and 4360 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a donative. William Bishop of London, in the reign of William the Conqueror, founded here a Benedictine priory, dedicated to St. Leonard, which was valued at 121*l.* 16*s.* at the Dissolution, and was granted in 1540 to Sir Ralph Sadler.

HACKNEY, 3 miles N.E. from London, contains 3715 houses, and 22,494 inhabitants, including the hamlets of Clapton, Homerton, Dalston, Shacklewell, Kingsland, &c. It is one of the Tower hamlets, and is within the bills of mortality. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a vicarage, value 20*l.*: it was rebuilt in 1796. Clapton chapel was built in 1777. This hamlet was the birth-place of Howard the philanthropist in 1726, whose paternal mansion was sold in 1785, and afterwards pulled down. Homerton chapel, built in 1729, by Stephen Ram, is used as a meeting-house for Dissenters. At Kingsland was an ancient hospital, called Le Lokes, belonging to the governors of St. Bartholomew's London. The hospital was destroyed in 1761; but the chapel is still used. Shacklewell manor-house belonged to the Herons, and was sold in 1700 to Francis Tyssen, Esq.

LIMEHOUSE, or Limehurst, 3 miles E. from London, contains 1683 houses, and 9805 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Anne, is a rectory, in the patronage of Brazenose College Oxford: the edifice was built in 1724. The north side of the churchyard is bounded by the Commercial-road from Whitechapel to the West India Docks, situated on Poplar Marsh, or the Isle of Dogs: round the docks is an extensive range of warehouses for storing goods. The northern or import dock, occupying 30 acres, is capable of containing 200 or 300 sail; the southern or export dock contains 24 acres. There is also a canal intended to facilitate the navigation.

SHADWELL, 2 miles E. from London, contains 1682 houses, and 9557 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Paul, is a rectory, in the patronage of the Dean of St. Paul's: it was rebuilt in 1820, by Walters. The steeple is beautiful, and in correctness of design as well as in the simple harmony of its several parts, this church has been truly said not to yield to any of modern erection. The parish, formerly a hamlet of Stepney, was called Chadwelle, and is supposed to have derived its name from a spring, dedicated to St. Chad, within the churchyard.

STEPNEY, or Stebenith, 2 miles E. from London, contains 8386 houses, and 40,163 inhabitants, including the four hamlets into which the parish is divided, consisting of Mile End Old Town, Mile End New Town, Ratcliff, and Poplar and Blackwall. Each of these has distinct officers, and all are situated within the precinct of the Tower hamlets. In 1664 King Charles II., at the Earl of Cleveland's request, instituted a weekly court of record within the manor, and by the same patent granted a weekly market and an annual fair, with profits arising from tolls, &c., to Sir William Smith, Bart. The market is now held in Whitechapel; the hay-market and the fair are kept at Bow. The church, dedicated to St. Dunstan and All Saints, is a rectory and vicarage. The rectory is valued at 10*l.*, and the vicarage at 33*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of Brazenose College Oxford: in it is a monument, by Westmacott, to the memory of Benjamin Kenton, ob. 1800, and who left 63,550*l.* to charitable uses. Blackwall, at the eastern extremity of this parish, is the site of the East India Docks, for the reception of ships employed in the service of the East India Company; completed in 1806. Stepney chapel was built in 1820, and was the first edifice erected in the vicinity of the metropolis under the commissioners for building new churches. This building, though not faultless, does great credit to the taste of Mr. Walters, its architect, whose lamented death has deprived the profession of one who would have been an honour to it. Poplar chapel was built in 1654. Poplar canal or cut joins the river Lea near Bow, and is about 1½ mile in length. The new church lately erected at Poplar is admirable for its style of architecture. At Mile End is a hospital belonging to the Corporation of the Trinity House at Deptford, founded in 1695. In the centre of the area is a statue of Capt. Robert Sandys, a liberal benefactor, who died in 1701: more eastward is Bancroft's alms-house, founded in 1735, with a liberal establishment. In this parish are also alms-houses belonging to the drapers', skimmers', and vintners' companies; and others founded by Judge Fuller in 1592. The London Hospital was founded in 1740, and great additions have subsequently been made to this excellent institution, which is considered to be one of the most extensive in the kingdom, supported by voluntary contribution alone. The Pavilion theatre has recently been opened.

STRATFORD LE BOW, or Bow, on a branch of the river Lea, 2 miles E. from London, contains 404 houses, and 2349 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, in the patronage of Brazenose College Oxford, and was made parochial in 1740.

7. Spelthorne Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Elthorne hundred and Isleworth hundred; on the east and south by Surrey; and on the north-west by Buckinghamshire.

ASHFORD, on the river Exe, or Echel, 2 miles E. from Staines, contains 67 houses, and 331 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a curacy: it was rebuilt in 1796. Ashford Lodge is the seat of T. Denton, Esq.

BEDFONT, or Belfound, 3½ miles S.W. from Hounslow, contains 142 houses, and 771 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Hatton. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. In the churchyard are two yews cut in topiary work, amongst which are figures representing the date of 1704.

FELTHAM, 4 miles S.W. from Hounslow, contains 154 houses, and 962 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Dunstan, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* Feltham Park is the seat of Sir W. Cooper.

HAMPTON, or Hampton-upon-Thames, 16 miles S.W. from London, contains 357 houses, and 2288 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 10*l.* in the patronage of the Crown. In the chancel is a monument of Sibel Penn, nurse of King Edward VI., ob. 1562; and of Edmund Pigeon, yeoman of the jewel-house to Queen Elizabeth,—no date; and Nicholas Pigeon, his son, clerk of the robes, ob. 1619, &c. &c.: the monuments in the church are numerous. Cardinal Wolsey built the palace of Hampton-Court, and gave it to the King in 1526, who enlarged the building, and created the honour of Hampton-Court. King Edward VI. was born here 12th October 1537; and his mother Queen Jane Seymour died here on the 14th of the same month. King William pulled down a great part of the old palace, and employed Sir Christopher Wren in 1690 to build the Fountain Court, which contains the state apartments: on the south side of this quadrangle are the King's staircase, painted by Verrio, opening upon the guard-chamber; the King's first and second presence chambers, the audience-room, the King's drawing-room, the state bed-chamber and closet: on the north is the King's gallery, originally fitted up for the reception of Raphael's cartoons. The eastern side of this quadrangle contains the Queen's gallery, the state bed-chamber, the drawing-room, the audience-room, and the room in which George I. and George II. frequently dined in public. Towards the west are the King's private dining-room, his bed-room, &c. North-westward of the Fountain Court is the chapel, part of Henry VIIIth's building, but was filled up in its present state by Queen Anne, with carving by Gibbons, &c.: the original ceiling remains. Hampton Court Palace, in its present state, consists of three principal courts, and exceeds in extent of plan any of the royal palaces. The western, or entrance court, is divided into suites of apartments, occupied by persons having grants for life from the Crown. The middle, or clock court, has on the south side an Ionic colonnade, designed by Sir Christopher Wren. On the north side is the great hall: this room is 105 feet 6 inches in length, and 39 feet 8 inches in breadth. The rich timber-framed roof is 59 feet in height; at the west end is part of the ancient screen, but the front of the gallery is gone. This hall was used as a theatre by King George I., but the fillings up are now entirely removed. Adjoining the hall at the east end is a curious room, part of the original building. The collection of pictures in the palace is numerous and interesting. The gardens, containing about 44 acres, were laid out by London and Wise, in King William's reign, and still retain the fashion of that period. At the entrance of the great walk, in front of the palace, are two marble vases, enriched with basso-relievos. The kitchen-garden contains twelve acres. In a grape-house is a vine of the black Hamburgh kind, which occupies the whole house, and is much celebrated for its size and produce. The original stock of this vine is now at Mr. Welsted's at Valentines in Essex. Hampton Court park extends hence to Hampton Wick, and is bounded on the south by the river Thames: the other parks go by the general name of Bushey Park. The Queen's Lodge was the residence of His present Majesty when Duke of Clarence: on the outside of the park wall, a little southward of the gate leading to Teddington, in a lane, is a tumulus of considerable size. Hampton Court bridge, a light wooden structure, was erected in 1753. A piece of pasture ground, near the river, which is called "the Toying place" in an old survey, is probably the site of the Toy Inn, near the bridge.

HANWORTH, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles S.W. from Hounslow, contains 103 houses, and 552 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. George, is a rectory, value 11*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* In the east window are the royal arms, with the initials J. R. Adam de Brome, founder of Oriel College Oxford, was rector of this church in 1315.

Hanworth was a royal seat in the reign of Henry VIII.: towards the end of his reign it was settled in dower upon Queen Katherine Parr, who resided here after the King's death with her second husband Sir Thomas Seymour, Lord Admiral, and the Princess Elizabeth, whose education was entrusted to her care. William Earl of Pembroke was keeper of the wardrobe, and of the Park at Hanworth, in the first year of Queen Mary. In the month of September 1600, Queen Elizabeth paid a visit to the scene of her juvenile pastimes: she dined at Hanworth, and partook of the amusement of hunting in the park. About the year 1627 it became the property of Sir Francis afterwards Lord Cottington. In the month of August 1635 he entertained the Queen and her whole court at Hanworth; and in 1637 he had a grant of free-warren and license to inclose 100 acres within his park. On the death of Lord Cottington the manor was sold in 1670 to Sir Thomas Chamber: it afterwards came into the possession of Lord Vere, and descended to the Dukes of St. Alban's: the house was burnt down in 1797. Hanworth Park is now the seat of — King, Esq.; and Hanworth Little Park is the seat of Mrs. Dalrymple.

LALEHAM, 2 miles S. from Staines, contains 89 houses, and 499 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a curacy: the altar-piece, by Harlowe, was presented by himself; the subject is Peter walking on the sea. Laleham Park is the seat of the Earl of Lucan.

LITTLETON, 3 miles S.E. from Staines, contains 23 houses, and 149 inhabitants. The Middlesex side of Chertsey bridge stands in this parish: the present bridge, which is toll free, was built at the expense of the counties of Surrey and Middlesex, and finished in 1785, after a design by Payne; it consists of five principal and two collateral arches. The church, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen, is a rectory, value 14*l.*: on the chancel floor is a brass plate in memory of Blanche wife of Sir Hugh Vaughan, who died in 1553. Littleton Hall is the seat of Thomas Wood, Esq.

SHEPERTON, 4 miles S.E. from Staines, contains 158 houses, and 782 inhabitants. It is pleasantly situated on the Thames, and is much resorted to by the lovers of angling. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a rectory, value 26*l.* In the parsonage-house, which is very ancient, the learned Erasmus spent much of his time with his preceptor William Grocyn, then rector here. A small part of this parish is on the Surrey side of the river Thames. Near Walton bridge are the celebrated Coway Stakes, placed to oppose Cæsar's passage of the river.

STAINES, on the banks of the Thames, $16\frac{1}{2}$ miles from London, contains 396 houses, and 1957 inhabitants. The houses are principally disposed on each side of the street, whence a stone bridge has recently been erected to Egham on the Surrey side of the river. The town is governed by two constables and four headboroughs, appointed by the King's stewards, it being a lordship of the Crown. The market is on Friday; and the fairs are on May 11 and September 19. Staines is the boundary of the jurisdiction of the corporation of London on the river, which is marked by a stone, round the upper part of which is inscribed, "God preserve the city of London, A.D. 1280." The church, built in 1829 from a design by John Burges Watson, and dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 12*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.* in the patronage of the Crown. Sir Henry Bard of Staines was created baronet October 8, 1644.

STANWELL, 2 miles N.E. from Staines, contains 237 houses, and 1225 inhabitants. Here is a free-school. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 9*l.*, in the patronage of the Crown. The manor of Stanwell was the residence of the family of Fitz Other, or Windsor, from the time of Edward the Confessor till the year 1543, when King Henry VIII. thought fit to make an exchange with Andrews Lord Windsor; for this purpose he sent a message that he would dine with him at Stanwell, where a magnificent entertainment was accordingly provided. The King then informed him that he liked his seat so well that he was resolved to have it, though not without a beneficial exchange. Lord Windsor made answer, that he hoped His Highness was not in earnest, since Stanwell had been the residence of his ancestors for so many ages: the King, with a stern countenance, replied, that it must be; commanding him on his allegiance to repair to his Attorney-general and settle the business without delay. The Attorney-general showed him a conveyance, ready prepared, of Bordesley Abbey, in the county of Worcester, with all its lands and appurtenances, in exchange for the manor of Stanwell. Being constrained through dread of the King's displeasure to accept of this exchange, he was commanded to quit Stanwell immediately, though he had laid in his Christmas provisions for the keeping of his wonted hospitality there, all which he left in the house, saying, they should not find it bare Stanwell. King James in 1603 granted the manor and demesne lands to Sir Thomas, afterwards Lord Knyvet. The Lady Mary, daughter of the King, was placed under his care, and died at Stanwell in 1607. Lord Knyvet died in 1622; and in the church is a handsome monument of veined marble to his memory, and that of Elizabeth his wife, whose effigies are represented as large as the life, in kneeling attitudes. The manor afterwards came into the possession of John Gibbons, Esq., who was created baronet April 21, 1752. Stanwell Place is the seat of Sir John Gibbons, Bart.; and Stanwell Cottage, the seat of Captain Drury.

SUNBURY, $14\frac{1}{2}$ miles S.W. from London, contains 317 houses, and 1777 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 13*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, in the presentation of the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's. Sunbury Place is the seat of — Grooby, Esq.; Sunbury Villa, the seat of J. Collingridge, Esq.; and Sunbury Park, the seat of G. H. Giroux, Esq.; Kempton Park is the seat of — Manners, Esq.; and Charlton House, the seat of Carmichael Smith, Esq.

TEDDINGTON, on the river Thames, 12 miles S.W. from London, contains 168 houses, and 863 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a donative. The manor-house is the seat of — Hamilton, Esq.; Teddington Grove, the seat of Nugent Kirkland, Esq.; and Teddington Place, the seat of Calvert Clarke, Esq.

IMPROVED MAP of LONDON for 1833, from ACTUAL SURVEY.

THE CITIES OF LONDON AND WESTMINSTER.—Home Circuit.

LONDON.

THE situation of London, defined by its cathedral, is in the latitude of $51^{\circ} 30' 49''$ north: its longitude is $5' 47''$ west from the Royal Observatory at Greenwich. Its population, according to the Census of 1821, was found to be in the city of London, within the walls, 7,938 houses, and 56,174 inhabitants; without the walls 9,232 houses, and 69,260 inhabitants. The immediate site of London is about sixty miles westward from the sea, in a pleasant and spacious valley, stretching along the banks of the Thames, which river, as it flows through the city, forms a bold curve. On the northern side the ground rises with a quick ascent, and then more gradually, but unequally, heightens to the north-west and west, which are the most elevated parts. On the southern side the ground is nearly level, and was anciently a morass of several miles in extent, but was reclaimed by means of the artificial embankment of the river. The average breadth of the stream in this part of its course is from four to five hundred yards, its general depth, at low water, is about twelve feet, but at spring tides it rises sometimes to fourteen feet above that level. The tides commonly flow to the distance of fifteen miles above London-bridge.

From the neighbourhood of Tothill-fields on the south, to that of the Tower on the east, the buildings following the natural bend of the river, rise in a sort of amphitheatrical form, and are defended from the winds of the north by the rising grounds about Islington and Highbury, and the hills of Highgate and Hampstead. Below the Tower, and extending to the extremity of the county of Middlesex, along the river Lea, in the vicinity of Wapping, Limehouse, Poplar, &c., the ground is in general flat, and the houses are exposed to the easterly winds. The western and higher parts of the metropolis stand pleasantly open to the genial breezes of that quarter. The southern or Surrey side lies low and level, particularly in the neighbourhood of Lambeth and St. George's Fields.

The extent of what is generally called London from west to east, or from Knightsbridge to Poplar, is seven miles and a half; its breadth from north to south is very irregular, but may be described as varying from two to four miles. The outward line or circumference is at least thirty miles, and the area of the whole metropolis comprehends about nine square miles. The principal mercantile streets range from west to east, and in that direction London is intersected by two great thoroughfares; the one, which may be called the southern line, commences at Hyde Park Corner, and under the successive names of Piccadilly, Regent-street, Waterloo-place, Pall Mall East, Trafalgar-square, Duncannon-street, Strand, Fleet-street, Ludgate-hill, the southern side of St. Paul's churchyard, Watling-street, Cannon-street, Eastcheap, and Tower-street, and thence to East Smithfield, Ratcliff Highway, Upper and Lower Shadwell, &c., extends to Limehouse. The northern line begins with Oxford-street, and under the different appellations of High-street St. Giles's, Broad-street, Holborn, Skinner-street, Newgate-street, Cheapside, Cornhill, Leadenhall-street, Aldgate, and Whitechapel, extends to the Mile-End-road into Essex. At Church-lane, Whitechapel, the Commercial-road branches off south-eastward, and continues to the West India Docks,—a distance of about two miles.

The principal thoroughfare which crosses London from north to south enters it at Kingsland, and continues along Shore-ditch, Norton Falgate, Bishopsgate-street, Gracechurch-street, King William-street, London-bridge, Wellington-street, the Borough High-street, Blackman-street, and Newington Causeway. There are other roads into Surrey and Kent over the several bridges, which meet at the Obelisk in St. George's Fields, and again diverge near the Elephant and Castle,—a well known site. Regent-street, leading from Portland-place on the north, to Waterloo-place on the south, is perhaps one of the finest streets in Europe. London, independently of its various local and judicial divisions, may be considered as comprehending three great districts, viz. the West end of the town, the City, and the East end of the town. The west end of the town, in its general acceptation, extends from the vicinity of the Strand to Brompton, Hyde Park, Paddington, and the Regent's Park: it is the most uniform part of the metropolis, and contains the town residences of the nobility and gentry, the seats of Legislature, the offices of Government, and the Court. The city, which includes some portion of its liberties, forms the centre of the metropolis and trading part of the town, excepting the silk manufacture, which is chiefly confined to the vicinity of Spitalfields. The east end of the town is a large district, comprising the warehouses and residences of the commercial and shipping interest; and the immediate banks of the river in this quarter are occupied by docks, wharfs, timber-yards, &c.

London is computed to contain more than sixty squares, many of which are extremely spacious; and the central areas of most are enclosed by palisades, and laid out in walks and shrubberies, for the recreation of the inhabitants. In short, London, according to Dr. Colquhoun, is not only the first commercial city that is known at present to exist, but is also one of the greatest and most extensive manufacturing towns perhaps in the universe, combining in one spot every attribute that can occasion an assemblage of moving property, unparalleled in point of extent, magnitude, and value, in the whole world.

BRITISH AND ROMAN LONDON.

As the metropolis of the kingdom, a brief account of its origin is necessarily inserted, and the following statement will explain its relative importance. Amongst the Britons were ninety-two cities, of which thirty-three were more celebrated and conspicuous. Two municipal, Verulamium, St. Alban's; and Eboracum, York: these municipia were towns whose inhabitants possessed in general all the rights of Roman citizens, excepting those which could not be enjoyed without an actual residence at Rome. Nine cities were colonial, namely, Londinium, London; Camalodunum, Colchester; Rutupis, Richborough in Kent; Thermæ, Bath; Isca, Caerleon; Deva, Chester; Glevum, Gloucester; Lindum, Lincoln; and Camboricum, Cambridge. These were different kinds of colonies, each entitled to different rights and privileges: but we have no criterion to ascertain the rank occupied by those of Britain. Ten cities were under the Latian law, which consisted of privileges granted to the ancient inhabitants of Latium. These are not distinctly known, but appear principally to have been the right of following their own laws, an exemption from the edicts of the Roman Prætor, and the option of adopting the laws and customs of Rome. Twelve were stipendiary, a class which paid their taxes in money in contradistinction from those of lesser consequence, which gave a certain portion of the produce of the soil, and were called Vectigales; these included the more celebrated cities of Britain. There is every reason to suppose that the Romans possessed themselves of London in the reign of Claudius, about a hundred and five years after the first invasion of our island by Cæsar; but there is no mention of the place till the reign of Nero, when Tacitus speaks of it as not having been distinguished as a colony, but famous for its great concourse of merchants and its commerce. There is known to have been a great trade carried on with the Gauls in the days of Cæsar; that celebrated invader assigning as his reason for attempting the conquest of this island, the vast supplies given to his Gaulish enemies, and which interrupted his conquests on the continent. When the Romans became masters of London, they enlarged the precincts and altered its form. The time in which the wall was built is very uncertain. Maitland, the historian of London, ascribes its foundation to Theodosius, who was governor of Britain A.D. 369: the ancient course of the wall began with a fort near the present site of the Tower, was continued along the Minories and the back of Houndsditch, across Bishopsgate-street, in a straight line by London Wall to Cripplegate, then returned southward by Crowder's-well-alley to Aldersgate, thence along the back of Bull-and-Mouth-street to Newgate, and again along the back of the houses in the Old Bailey to Ludgate; soon after which it probably finished with another fort near the former site of the King's printing-house in Blackfriars; hence another wall ran near the river side along Thames-street, quite to the fort on the eastern extremity. The walls were three miles and one hundred and sixty-five feet in circumference, guarded at certain distances on the land side with fifteen towers, some of which were remaining within these few years. The walls when perfect are supposed to have been about twenty-two feet high, and the towers forty. London-wall, near Moorfields, was the last entire part left of that ancient precinct. A barbican stood a little without the walls, north westward of Cripplegate. The gates which received the great military roads were four; the Anglo-Saxon Watling street passed under one on the site of Newgate: vestiges of the road above Holborn-bridge have been discovered in its course to Dowgate, Durgate, or the Watergate, where there was a ferry to connect the road on the Surrey side of the river, whence it was continued to Dover. The Hermen-street passed under Cripplegate, and a vicinal way led through Aldgate by Bethnal-green to Oldford, over the river Lea to Duroleiton, the modern Layton in Essex. A plan of Roman London is given by Dr. Stukeley, whence it has been frequently copied; there is also an improved plan in the Gentleman's Magazine for 1829. The Prætorium and its adjuncts are supposed to have occupied the whole space between the Poultry and the eastern end of Cornhill. The present diverging streets show that this part has been completely un-Romanized. The vicinity of the Prætorium is proved by the discovery of Roman tessellated pavements, and other remains at the Lothbury-gate of the Bank, at St. Mary Woolnoth's church, Lombard-street; in and near Birchin-lane; near Sherborne-lane; the site of the Old Post-office, and along Lombard-street. Concerning the ancient streets of London, the best mode of conjecture is by taking those for the oldest which are of the greatest continuity and advance into the adjacent country. Thames-street from Blackfriars to the Tower is one; Lothbury seems to have been formed for the convenience of passing from the British part of the town by Ludgate, Cripplegate, or Aldersgate to Bishopsgate, without interfering with the Via Prætoria; and in nearly a parallel line it answers on the north side to Watling-street on the south, Finsbury-marshes interrupting any direct progress outside the walls; Holborn, Gray's-Inn-lane, and St. John-street, are other ancient ways. White-chapel, Mile-end, Bow, &c. are unquestionably primæval continuations from Aldgate. There were doubtless other communications unnoticed in any plans extant, for it is to be remembered that there were formerly two distinct sorts of roads, Viæ Patriæ, and Viæ Militares, and that this distinction originated with the frequent Roman practice of cutting the latter parallel with the former, when an old Via Patria was not converted into a Via Militaris,—a change which seems to have taken place with the Watling-street, the apparently principal thoroughfare of all Great Britain.

ANGLO-SAXON LONDON.

The history of London during the Anglo-Saxon æra is scanty: being a walled town it was of course a place of importance, our ancestors holding those which were open in less estimation. The very fact of its having been walled in at the decline of the empire by the Romans, shows that it was then a place of consequence, no doubt as an emporium of commerce. There are two desiderata attached to the history of London during the Anglo-Saxon æra; one is the historical silence as to the period when the possession of it was permanently vested in the Northern invaders; the other is connected with Canute's ditch. It is presumed that the first is not mentioned because it was simply evacuated by the Britons, when their communication with the circumjacent country was cut off. At the end of the sixth century it was a confirmed part of the Anglo-Saxon dominions, under Ethelbert King of Kent, who in the year 604 appointed Mellitus to the see of London.

During the wars between Edmund Ironside and Canute, the latter in the year 1016 having fitted out a considerable fleet to reduce London, the chief support of his competitor, found on his arrival that he could not pass the bridge, the citizens having strongly fortified it; he therefore set about cutting a canal through the marshes on the southern side of the river Thames, that he might invest the city on all sides, and by preventing supplies from entering to facilitate its reduction. This canal is presumed to have commenced at Deptford, proceeded to Newington Butts, and joined the Thames at Lambeth, or Vauxhall, or Chelsea. The Saxon Chronicle states, that the Danish ships advanced from Greenwich to London, and that the Danes dug then a great ditch on the south half of it, and dragged their ships to the west half of the bridge, and after that besieged the city; so that no one could go in or out, anno 1016. With this account other Chronicles agree, but the historians of London have omitted an important point. It was impossible that London could be invested by merely cutting a canal from Deptford to Vauxhall. This trench was only intended for the purpose of getting the ships up to Westminster; and having so done, Canute landed his army, and invested the city by digging a second foss on the land side, supposed by Leland to be in the suburb of St. Giles's; the ships were reserved for retreat under disaster.

In Castle Baynard ward was an ancient residence of the Anglo-Saxon Kings of England, situated on the southern side of St. Paul's Cathedral, and extending to the river. This palace was erected either by Alfred, Edward, or Athelstan; probably by the last, whose name of Adelstan, as it was called by an imperfect Norman utterance, is still preserved in the corrupted pronunciation of Adel-hill, near the spot where the palace stood. The windows of one of the southern apartments opened upon the river Thames, not then confined by quays and wharfs to its present narrowed stream. Northward the palace extended as far as the close of the cathedral. The north-eastern angle of the keep-tower is supposed to have occupied the spot now King's Head-court, and No. 26 on the southern side of St. Paul's Churchyard. The city wall running in a straight line from Ludgate to the Thames, served, it is probable, as the western boundary. An undoubted allusion to this palace as the abode of royalty occurred in the reign of Canute, in whose presence the perfidious Edric, after a very summary process, expiated his treason with his life, and his body was thrown out of the window into the river Thames. This Anglo-Saxon palace was forsaken by King Edward the Confessor, who removed his residence to the new foundation at Westminster

It was certainly destroyed by fire with the cathedral in the year 1087, and was not rebuilt. Subsequently to the Norman Conquest, the Tower Royal, situated at the northern end of the street, now so called, was a spacious, strong, and magnificent mansion, belonging to the Kings of England, but its origin cannot now be traced; although it is supposed to have been founded by King Henry I., and was certainly inhabited by King Stephen. In Richard the Second's reign it was called the Queen's Wardrobe; according to Stowe, who says, King Richard having in Smithfield overcome and dispersed the rebels, he, his lords and all his company, entered the city of London with great joy, and went to the Lady Princess his mother, who was then lodged in the Tower Royal, called the Queen's Wardrobe. King Richard III. granted this palace to the first Duke of Norfolk.

It is a remarkable fact, that Domesday Book, which is usually so minute in regard to our principal towns and cities, is deficient in respect to London. It only mentions a vineyard in Holborn, belonging to the Crown, and ten acres of land near Bishopsgate, viz. the manor of Norton Falgate, belonging to the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's: yet certainly, observes Sir Henry Ellis, in his introduction to that valuable record, no mutilation of the manuscript has taken place; since the account of Middlesex is entire, and is exactly coincident with the abridged copy of the survey taken at the time, and now lodged in the office of the King's Remembrancer in the Exchequer.

The etymology of the name of London is involved in incertitude. Lundenburgh was its Anglo-Saxon appellation. Tacitus calls it Londinium, and Colonia Augusta. Ammianus Marcellinus mentions the city as an ancient place, once called Lundinium, but when he wrote, Augusta: the same author styles it Augusta Trinobantum. Bede calls it Londonia; and King Alfred, in his translation of the passage in Bede, Lunden-ceaster. According to W. Owen, the learned editor of the Welsh Archaeology, its primitive appellation was Llyn Din, or the Town on the Lake; and this appearance might have been exhibited when all the low grounds on the Surrey side of the river Thames were overflowed, as well as those extending from Wapping Marsh to the Isle of Dogs, and still further for many miles along the Essex shore. The transition from Llyn Din to London would be of easy growth. The name of Augusta is evidently Roman; and the opinion is, that it obtained the appellation Augusta when it became the capital of the British province, and in consequence only of its having become so. Tacitus states that London was so called from its situation, and Augusta from its magnificence.

London Stone is a remarkable fragment of antiquity, now standing against the southern wall of St. Swithin's church, in Cannon-street. The earliest record of it, according to Stow, is at the end of "a fayre written Gospell Booke given to Christes Church in Canterbury by Ethelstane King of the West Saxons," where a parcel of land belonging to that church is described "to ly neare unto London Stone." It is also noticed in a record of a fire, which, in the first year of the reign of Stephen, 1135, "began in the house of one Ailwarde, neare unto London Stone," and consumed a considerable part of the city.

When Jack Cade, who headed an insurrection, and assumed the name of Mortimer, in the year 1450, had forced his way into the city, he struck his sword upon London Stone, and exclaimed, "Now is Mortimer Lord of this city;" as if, says Mr. Pennant, that had been a customary way of taking possession. Antiquaries seem, with Camden, to consider this stone as a milliary, whence the Romans began the admeasurement of their roads as from a centre. This opinion is said to be confirmed by the coincidence which its distance bears with the neighbouring stations mentioned in Antoninus's Itinerary. But Sir Christopher Wren supposed that "by reason of its large foundation it was rather some more considerable monument in the forum; for in the adjoining ground to the south, upon digging for cellars after the great fire, were discovered some tessellated pavements, and other remains of Roman workmanship and buildings." It was removed from the edge of the kerb-stone, where it had been placed in 1742, to its present situation against the church-wall, in the year 1798.

LONDON PRIOR TO THE REFORMATION.

London, for some ages before the Reformation, contained an extraordinary number of religious edifices and churches, which occupied nearly two thirds of the entire area. Independently of St. Paul's Cathedral and the Abbey at Westminster, the following friaries and abbeys existed immediately prior to that epoch: Black Friars, between Ludgate and the Thames; Gray Friars, near Old Newgate, now Christ's Hospital; Augustine Friars, now Austin Friars, near Broad-street; White Friars, near Salisbury-square; Crouched, or Crossed Friars, St. Olave's, Hart-street, near Tower-hill; Carthusian Friars, now the Charter House; Cistercian Friars, or New Abbey, East Smithfield; Brethren de Sacco, or Bon Hommes, Old Jewry.

Priorities: St. John of Jerusalem, Clerkenwell; Holy Trinity, or Christ Church, on the site of Duke's-place, and near Aldgate; St. Bartholomew the Great, near Smithfield; St. Mary Overies, Southwark; St. Saviour's, Bermondsey.

Nunneries: Benedictines, or Black Nuns, Clerkenwell; St. Helen's, Bishopsgate-street; St. Clare's, Minories; Holy Well, between Holywell-lane and Norton Falgate.

Colleges, &c.: St. Martin's le Grand; St. Thomas of Acres, Westcheap; Whittington's College and Hospital, Vintry Ward; St. Michael's College and Chapel, Crooked-lane; Jesus Commons, Dowgate.

Hospitals, having resident Brotherhoods: St. Giles's in the Fields, near St. Giles's church; St. James's, now St. James's Palace; Our Lady of Rounceval, near Charing Cross; Savoy, Strand; Elsing Spital, now Sion College; Corpus Christi, in St. Lawrence Pountney; St. Passey, near Bevis Marks; St. Mary Axe; Trinity, without Aldgate; St. Thomas, Mercer's Chapel; St. Bartholomew the Less, near Smithfield; St. Giles and Corpus Christi, without Cripplegate; St. Mary of Bethlehem, on the eastern side of Moorfields; St. Mary Spital, without Bishopsgate; St. Thomas, Southwark; Lok Spital, or Lazar, Kent-street, Southwark; St. Katherine's, below the Tower.

Fraternities: St. Nicholas, Bishopsgate-street; St. Fabian and St. Sebastian, or the Holy Trinity, Aldersgate-street; St. Giles, Whitecross-street; The Holy Trinity, Leadenhall; St. Ursula le Strand; Hermitage, Nightingale-lane, East Smithfield; Corpus Christi, St. Mary Spital; the same at St. Mary, Bethlehem, and St. Mary, Poultry.

The archiepiscopal and episcopal residences were, Lambeth Palace; York Place, or Whitehall; Durham House, Strand; Inns of the Bishops of Bath, Bangor, Chester, Llandaff, Worcester, Exeter, Lichfield, and Carlisle, all but one in and near the Strand; Bishop of Hereford's Inn, Old Fish-street; Ely House, Holborn; Bishop of Salisbury's, near Salisbury-square, Fleet-street; Bishop of St. David's Inn, near Bridewell Palace; Bishop of Winchester's House, Southwark, near St. Mary Overies; Bishop of Rochester's Inn, adjacent thereto, and the hostelry of the prior of Lewes, Southwark; besides the numerous residences of abbots and priors, mostly called Inns; not a vestige of any of the latter is however now known to remain.

The first Act of Parliament for the pavement and improvement of the city was passed in 1540, in the reign of Henry VIII., which described the streets to "be very foul, and full of pits and sloughs, very perilous and noyous, as well for all the king's subjects on horseback as on foot with carriages." The streets first paved under the statute were, Aldgate High-street, Shoe-lane, Fetter-lane, Gray's Inn-lane, Chancery-lane, and the way leading from Holborn-bar towards St. Giles's in the Fields, as far as any habitations on both sides of the same street.

The next Act for paving London referred particularly to Chiswell-street, Whitecross-street, Golden-lane, Grub-street, Long-lane, St. John's-street from Smithfield-bars up to the Pound; Cowcross, from the said bars; the way leading without Temple-bar westward by and to Clement's Inn gates, and New Inn gates to Drury-place, and that stretching to the sign of the Bell, at Drury-lane end; the bridge called Strand Bridge, and the way leading thither from Temple-bar; and the lane called Foscue-lane, leading from the garden and teneament of the Bishop of Lichfield, called the Bell and Proctors, down to Strand-bridge. It is evident from this Act, that the streets afterwards named Butcher-row, Holywell-street, and St. Clement's, were not then built. Holywell-street must have been so denominated from its proximity to St. Clement's Well, at which many miraculous cures were supposed to have been performed. Some writers consider this well to have been in St. Clement's-lane, which at least must have been one of the avenues to it. At this time Golden-lane was literally a green avenue, between cottages and gardens. Whitecross-street derived its name from a conduit which stood there, surmounted by a white cross. Chiswell-street was an open road, between detached wooden houses, shaded with trees, as was probably also the case with Beech-lane. Bishopsgate-street-without was also, in a considerable degree, composed of detached wooden and brick houses, with trees intermingled, and standing at a distance from each other. About this era some fresh supplies of water were conveyed to the city from the springs near Perilous Pool, near the City-road, since called Peerless Pool, Hackney, Muswell-hill, Hampstead-heath, and St. Mary-le-Bone; and in 1546 new conduits were erected in Coleman-street and Lothbury.

LONDON IN THE TIME OF QUEEN ELIZABETH.

From Aggas's view and plan of London, in the beginning of the reign of Elizabeth, it appears that the most crowded part of the city extended from Newgate-street, Cheapside, and Cornhill, to the banks of the Thames. Beyond Lothbury, from Basinghall-lane to Bishopsgate, with the exception of Coleman-street, a great portion of the ground was uncovered, and apparently occupied by gardens. Similar void spaces, but separated by buildings, occurred between Bishopsgate-street and the Minories; at the extremity of which, next to Tower-hill, stood a cross. Goodman's Fields was only an extensive enclosure; and East Smithfield and St. Katherine's extended but very little beyond St. Katherine's church. The north side of Whitechapel, and behind Houndsditch, was occupied by gardens and fields, lying entirely open from the back of St. Mary Spital. Houndsditch was only a single row of houses, extending from St. Botolph's, Aldgate, to Bishopsgate-without; thence a regular street extended to Shoreditch church, which terminated the avenue. Westward from Bishopsgate, besides gardens and enclosures, were a few buildings; the principal was a long range called the Dog House, where the city hounds were kept; hence a part of the City-road has been distinguished as Dog House-bar. On the site of what is now Finsbury-square stood several windmills; hence the avenue called Windmill-hill, and afterwards Windmill-street. In Old-street, from St. Luke's church to Shoreditch, there were no houses, and only two or three stood in the fields beyond. Finsbury-court, or Manor-house, stood on the south side of Chiswell-street, nearest Mooffields: the houses were not connected with Whitecross-street. Goswell-street was merely indicated by a road leading to St. Alban's; and Islington could hardly be seen. Clerkenwell was mostly occupied by the precincts of the monastery and the church, with the exception of some large houses in St. John's-lane, St. John's-street, and Cow-cross; at the back of which, towards the Fleet river, running on one side of Saffron-hill, and towards Ely House, the ground was entirely vacant, or filled with gardens; a great part of which, including the site of Red Lion-street, Clerkenwell, remained in this state until the commencement of the reign of George I. The precincts of the monastery of St. John of Jerusalem occupied ten acres in this vicinity. At that time there were houses on both sides of the way, from Holborn-bridge to Red Lion-street; but further up, to about Hart-street, the road was entirely open. A garden wall commenced there, and ran almost as far as Broad St. Giles's, and the end of Drury-lane, where a small cluster of houses, mostly on the right, formed the principal part of the village of St. Giles, which, in process of time, was called "The Ruins of St. Giles," and were taken down upwards of sixty years since, to make room for Bedford chapel, and the new streets adjacent. The precincts of the old hospital at St. Giles's were spacious, and surrounded with trees.

Beyond this, both to the north and west, all was country. From Oxford-road southward to Piccadilly, and thence along the highways named the Haymarket and Hedge-lane, not a house was standing, excepting three or four near the site of Carlton House. St. Martin's-lane had only a few houses beyond the church, abutting on the Convent garden, which extended quite into Drury-lane. No houses then stood in Drury-lane from near Broad St. Giles's, to Drury house at the top of Wych-street. Nearly the whole of the Strand was a continued street, mostly formed of spacious mansions, the residence of noblemen and prelates, with their large grounds and gardens extending towards the Thames, which have since given names to the streets built upon their sites; as Howard-street, Norfolk-street, Essex-street, Durham-yard, York-street, &c. Spring Gardens were literally gardens, reaching as far as where the Admiralty Office now stands. Along King-street, to St. Margaret's church and the Abbey, the houses stood closely; and from Whitehall to Palace-yard they were also thickly clustered on the banks of the Thames. Adjacent to Abingdon-street were several buildings, and some others stood opposite to Lambeth Palace. On the Surrey side, the plan exhibits only a single house at a small distance from the Archbishop's residence; but more northward, near a road that took the same direction from Westminster as the present Bridge-road, were six or seven buildings; nearly opposite to which was a stage landing-place. All beyond these, to the banks of the Thames opposite to Whitefriars, was entirely vacant; there a line of houses, with gardens and groves behind them, commenced, and was continued with little intermission beyond Bankside, to the vicinity of Winchester House, Christ church, and the next parish, then occupied by the theatre and gardens, called Paris Gardens. Further eastward, but behind the houses, and nearly opposite the Broken wharf and Queenhithe, were the circular buildings and enclosures appropriated to bull- and bear-baiting, amusements to which Queen Elizabeth seemed partial. Southwark, down the Borough High-street, was tolerably clustered with houses, and London-bridge was completely encumbered with them. Along Tooley-street to Battle-bridge, near King's Cross, they stood thickly; but were much thinner from Horsleydown to where the plan ends, nearly opposite to St. Katherine's, below the Tower of London. Such was London about the period of Queen Elizabeth's accession to the crown of England. In the time of King Edward III., the shops in London appear to have been detached and separate tenements, or at least separate properties unconnected with houses. The shops, or rather stalls or stands, in Cheapside, St. Lawrence Jewry, the Old Jewry, and those next to those of the goldsmiths', are reputed to have been the most splendid in London. The domestic conveniences, however, had but little correspondence with this outward appearance: the general use of woollen was unfavourable to cleanliness, and the want of chimneys both inconvenient and prejudicial. The fires were made in the halls, against a reredoss or screen; and the smoke generally found a passage through the openings of the roof. The windows, also, were principally latticed; the use of glass was generally confined to religious houses, churches, and palaces.

THE PLAGUE AND FIRE OF LONDON.

The year 1665 became memorable in London by the direful ravages of the great plague, the most dreadful that ever infested this kingdom, and which swept away sixty-eight thousand five hundred and ninety-six persons. Its virulence was most rife between the months of May and October, yet its appearance was noticed as early as December 1664, and it had not entirely ceased till January or February 1666.

This was soon followed by the most important event, perhaps, that ever happened in the metropolis, whether it be considered in reference to its immediate effects, or to its remote consequences, the great fire of 1666, which broke out about one o'clock in the morning of the 2nd of September, and being impelled by strong winds, raged with irresistible fury nearly four days and nights, nor was it entirely mastered till the fifth morning after it began. This destructive conflagration commenced in Pudding-lane, near New Fish-street, and within ten houses of Thames-street, into which it spread within a few hours; nearly all the contiguous buildings being of timber, lath, and plaster, and the whole neighbourhood presenting little else than confined passages and narrow alleys. There not being either a sufficient aid of engines or of water, the flames soon reached Gracechurch-street, towards the north-west, and the Three Cranes in the Vintry towards the south-west, including Cannon-street and the lanes and courts in the way; and either by communication of the flakes from such a vast body of fire, or by any of the other means which have been suspected, the flames burst out in divers and distant places; and the conflagration became so general that there was not a building left standing from the west end of Tower Wharf, in the east, to the Temple church, in the west; nor from the north end of Mincing-lane, in Fenchurch-street, from the west end of Leadenhall-street, and from the south-west end of Bishopsgate-street, as far as the entrance into Threadneedle-street, to Holborn-bridge on the west in a direct line; besides the damage done in Throgmorton-street, Lothbury, Coleman-street, Basinghall-street, Cateaton-street, Aldermanbury, Addle-street, Love-lane, Wood-street, Staining-lane, Noble-street, and Silver-street; at length it stopped at Pye-corner, near West Smithfield. This dreadful fire, within the walls, consumed almost five sixths of the whole city; and without the walls, it cleared a space nearly as extensive as the one sixth part left unburnt within. Scarcely a single building that came within the range of the flames was left standing. Public buildings, churches, and dwelling-houses, were alike involved in one common fate; and making an allowance for irregularities, it may be fairly stated, that the fire extended its ravages over a space of ground equal to an oblong square, measuring upwards of a mile in length, and half a mile in breadth. The ruins of the city comprised four hundred and thirty-six acres in extent; of the twenty-six wards fifteen were utterly destroyed, and eight others left shattered and half burnt; four hundred streets were consumed, thirteen thousand two hundred dwelling-houses, the cathedral church of St. Paul, eighty-eight churches, besides chapels, four of the city gates, Guildhall, the Royal Exchange, Custom House, and Blackwell Hall, many public structures, hospitals, schools, and libraries, fifty-two of the Companies' halls, and a great number of other edifices; together with four bridges, and the prisons of Newgate and the Fleet, and the Poultry and Wood-street compters. Notwithstanding all this destruction, only six persons lost their lives. The loss occasioned by the fire of London, as this tremendous conflagration has been emphatically denominated, amounted to the vast sum of 10,730,500*l.* sterling. A great loss was sustained by the stationers and booksellers; the immediate vicinity of St. Paul's was then, more particularly than at present, the chief seat of the trade; and when the fire was making its approaches, all those who dwelt near flew with their stock of books, MSS., &c., and placed them in the vaults under the cathedral: the church was consumed, but the treasure in the crypts remained untouched, until the stationers, too eager to ascertain the state of their property, caused an aperture to be made into the glowing pit; a stream of wind consequently rushed in, and with explosive rapidity consumed the whole.

"Heavens, what a pile! whole ages perish'd there;
And one bright blaze turn'd learning into air."

The following is a list of those churches destroyed by the fire, which have not been rebuilt. Allhallows, Honey-lane; the church was situated where part of Honey-lane market now is.

Allhallows the Less was situated in Thames-street, near Cole harbour, now a burying-ground.

St. Andrew Hubbard was situated where the King's Weighhouse now is.

St. Anne, Blackfriars, was situated in Ireland-yard, now a burying-ground.

St. Benet Sherehog was situated in Pancras-lane, near Bucklersbury, now a burying-ground.

St. Botolph, Billingsgate, was situated in Thames-street, over against Botolph-lane, late a burying-ground, now built on.

St. Faith was under the late cathedral of St. Paul, where the parishioners have now a place to bury in.

St. Gabriel, Fenchurch, was situated in Fenchurch-street; the ground where it stood laid into the highway or street.

St. Gregory was situated in St. Paul's churchyard, near where Queen Anne's statue now stands.

St. John the Baptist was situated on Dowgate-hill, the corner of Cloak-lane, now a burying-ground.

St. John the Evangelist was situated in Watling-street, the corner of Friday-street, now a burying-ground.

St. John Zachary was situated at the corner of Noble-street, now a burying-ground.

St. Lawrence Pountney was situated on Lawrence Pountney-hill, now a burying-ground.

St. Leonard Eastcheap was situated near Eastcheap on Fish-street-hill, now a burying-ground.

St. Leonard, Forster-lane, was situated on the west side of Forster-lane, late a burying-ground, now part of the site of the present Post-office.

St. Margaret Moses was situated in Passing-alley, near Friday-street, late a burying-ground, now Little Friday-street.

St. Margaret, New Fish-street, was situated where the Monument now stands.

St. Martin Pomeroy was situated in Ironmonger-lane, on a part of the ground now the churchyard.

St. Martin Orgars was situated in Martin's-lane, where there is now a French church.

St. Martin Vintry was situated at the lower end of College-hill in Thames-street, now a burying-ground.

St. Mary Bothaw was situated in Turnwheel-lane, now a burying-ground.

St. Mary Colechurch was situated in the Old Jewry, where the Mercers' school was, and Frederic-place now is.

St. Mary Magdalene, Milk-street, was situated where part of Honey-lane-market now is.

St. Mary Mounthaw was situated on Labour-in-vain-hill, now a burying-ground.

St. Mary Staining was situated on the north side of Oat-lane, now a burying-ground.

St. Mary Woolchurch was situated where the Mansion-house now stands.

St. Michael le Quern was situated in Paternoster-row, in the High-street of Cheapside, where a conduit formerly stood.

St. Nicholas Acon was situated in Nicholas-lane, now a burying-ground.

St. Nicholas Olave was situated on Bread-street-hill, now a burying-ground.

St. Olave, Silver-street, was situated on the south side of Noble-street, now a burying-ground.

St. Pancras, Soper-lane, was situated in Pancras-lane, near Queen-street, now a burying-ground.

St. Peter Cheap was situated at the corner of Wood-street, Cheapside, now a burying-ground.

St. Peter, Paul's Wharf, was situated at the bottom of Peter's-hill, in Thames-street, now a burying-ground.

St. Thomas the Apostle was situated in the street or highway near the burying-ground the corner of Cloak-lane.

The Holy Trinity was situated where there is now a Lutheran church.

Whilst the city lay in ruins, various temporary edifices were raised for the public accommodation; and as soon as the general consternation had subsided, the rebuilding of the city became the first object of consideration. On the 13th of September the King held a court of Privy Council at Whitehall, in which many judicious regulations were determined on for the immediate re-edification of the city. The proclamation that was issued in consequence, provided for an increased breadth in the streets, for the erection of all new buildings either with brick or stone, for an open wharf by the river side, for the removal of noisome trades, and for various other circumstances that the nature of the business required. One of the first Acts that was passed was for erecting a Court of Judicature, consisting of the Justices of the Courts of King's Bench, Common Pleas, and Barons of Exchequer, for settling all differences that might arise between landlords and tenants in respect to any of the destroyed premises. Shortly afterwards the Parliament passed an Act for the expeditious rebuilding of the city; some of the principal clauses enacted that all the new buildings should have party-walls, and be erected within three years; that the Corporation should have full power to widen streets, passages, &c., and make new ones; and that the conflagration should be commemorated by a column. Various orders and regulations were afterwards made both by the Common Council and the Privy Council for making improvements in the city. Amongst the several plans that were proposed at this time for improving the capital, were two that acquired much celebrity: the first was designed by Sir Christopher Wren, and the other by John Evelyn, Esq., neither of which however was adopted. The city was principally rebuilt within little more than four years after its destruction.

The Monument, erected from designs by Sir Christopher Wren, on the site of St. Margaret's church, New Fish-street, is a fluted column of the Doric order. It is built of Portland stone, and stands upon a pedestal forty-feet in height and twenty-one feet square; the altitude of the whole is two hundred and two feet, being the exact distance westward from the precise spot where the fire began. Over the capital is an iron balcony encompassing a cone thirty-two feet high, supporting a blazing urn of gilt brass. The diameter of the shaft or body of the column is fifteen feet, and the ground plinth or lowest part of the pedestal is twenty-eight feet square. Within is a staircase of black marble containing three hundred and forty-five steps. The west front of the pedestal is enriched with an allegorical alto relievo by Gabriel Cibber, denoting the destruction and restoration of the city under the superintendence of King Charles II. On the north front is a Latin inscription relating the extent of the conflagration; on the south front is one concerning the rebuilding of the city, and on the east front is the following:—

This pillar was begun, Sir Richard Ford, Knt., being Lord Mayor of London, in the year 1671;—carried on in the mayoralties of Sir George Waterman, Knt., Sir Robert Hanson, Knt., Sir William Hooker, Knt., Sir Robert Viner, Knt., Sir Joseph Sheldon, Knt.,

Lord Mayors;—and finished, Sir Thomas Davies being Lord Mayor, in the year 1677.

Round the pedestal was an inscription, which, upon James II.'s accession to the crown, was immediately erased, but soon after the Revolution it was again restored. However, on December 6, 1830, it was decreed by the Court of Common Council that the objectionable inscription should be expunged, which was accordingly done.

WARDS AND PARISHES.

The division of the city of London into wards or aldermanries is very ancient. According to the Liber Albus it was in the year 1285 divided into twenty-four wards, each of which was empowered to choose its own alderman and common-council.

1. Aldersgate Ward.

This ward takes its name from a gatehouse which formerly stood about thirty yards southward from St. Botolph's church, and is very extensive, being divided into Aldersgate ward within and Aldersgate ward without the walls. It is bounded on the north and east by Cripplegate ward, and on the south and west by Farringdon ward. It contains eight precincts, four in each division, and is governed by an alderman, two deputies, one within the gate, the other without, eight common-councilmen, fourteen inquest-men, &c.; the jurymen serve in the several courts in the month of August. The principal streets are Aldersgate-street and Goswell-street. Aldersgate-street is long, extending northerly from the situation of the gate to Barbican. On the western side of the street stood a residence of the Marquis of Dorchester, afterwards of Lord Petre, of whom it was purchased by the Bishop of London, and became known as London House: the ancient edifice was destroyed by fire, and the Albion Club-house now stands on its site. Southward of London House stood the mansion of the Earls of Westmorland, the site of which is now occupied by Westmorland-buildings. Northward of London House is an old building, formerly the Half-moon tavern, celebrated as the resort of the wits of the sixteenth century. The old front has suffered little alteration. On the eastern side of Aldersgate-street is Shaftesbury, or, as it is sometimes called, Thanet House, erected by Inigo Jones: the front is enriched with Ionic pilasters, but the entablature has been removed. Little Britain was formerly called Bretagne-street, from the mansion of the Duke of Bretagne, which stood near St. Botolph's church, but has been demolished. This street was also the residence of several of the nobility. The Earl of Peterborough's house stood near the southern part of Bartholomew's Hospital, and the whole eastern side of the street was occupied by a mansion belonging to Lord Montagu, the name of which is preserved in Montagu-court. Bull-and-mouth-street, part of which is in this ward, takes its name from an inn originally known by the sign of the Boulogne Mouth or Harbour, of which the present appellation is supposed to be a corruption. This inn was rebuilt in 1830 in a very handsome and creditable manner. At the corner of this street, in Aldersgate-street, was the mansion of the Earls of Northumberland: King Henry IV. granted this house in the seventh year of his reign to his queen Joane, and it then acquired the name of her Wardrobe. St. Martin's le Grand, which is considered as a part of this ward, is a distinct liberty, subject to the Dean and Chapter of Westminster: it was originally a college, founded in A.D. 700 by Withred, King of Kent, but was rebuilt and endowed about A.D. 1056 by Ingelricus, a noble Anglo-Saxon, and his brother Edwardus, for a dean and secular canons, and was dedicated to St. Martin, to which the epithet of Le Grand was afterwards added on account of the extraordinary privileges granted to the college by different monarchs. This place was occasionally the residence of the kings of England, as appears from a writ of Edward I., which is dated hence 20th October, in the first year of his reign. The same king's court appears to have been held here in 1293. William Mulse, dean of this college, in the reign of Edward III. was chief chamberlain of the Exchequer and keeper of the King's treasure and jewels. The college was surrendered to King Edward VI. in 1548; and in the same year the church of the college was demolished, and houses erected on its site, which were immediately occupied by non-freemen, notwithstanding the high rent, in consequence of their being exempt from the jurisdiction of the city. The street of St. Martin's le Grand, the eastern side of which is entirely occupied by the Post-office, one of the largest public edifices now existing in the city of London, erected in 1829, extends from Newgate-street to the spot where Alders Gate formerly stood; one of the original gates belonging to the city. It was rebuilt in the year 1616, William Parker, merchant-tailor, having bequeathed a thousand pounds towards the expense. In a large compartment over the archway, on the north side, was an equestrian figure of King James I. in bas-relief, above which were the royal arms. On the south side of the gatehouse was the figure of the same king in his robes seated in a chair of state, also in relief: this gatehouse was much damaged by the fire in 1666, but was repaired in 1670. In this ward are also Goldsmiths'-hall in Forster-lane, and Coachmakers'-hall in Noble-street. Aldersgate ward contains the following parishes:—St. Anne and St. Agnes, a rectory, value 8*l.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of London and the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's alternately. The parish was formerly denominated St. Anne's in the Willows, from the number of trees of that species growing near the church, which was destroyed in the fire of 1666, when the present church was erected and the parish of St. John Zachary united to it, the church of which formerly stood at the north-west corner of Maiden-lane, the site of which is now a cemetery for the use of the parishioners. St. Botolph without, Aldersgate, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Dean and Chapter of Westminster: the church stands on the west side of Aldersgate-street, and escaped the fire of London, but has since that period been rebuilt. St. Leonard, Forster-lane, is a rectory, value 26*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*: the church stood on the west side of Forster-lane, the site of the present Post-office, but being destroyed by the fire of London, the parish is united to that of Christ's Church in Newgate-street. St. Mary Staining, a rectory, value 5*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown and the parishioners alternately: the church, before the fire of London, stood on the north side of Oat-lane, and being destroyed was not rebuilt, but the parish was united to that of St. Michael in Wood-street, and the site of the church is now used as a burial-place for the parishioners. St. Olave, Silver-street, is a rectory, value 7*l.* 7*s.* 11*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's and Eton College alternately: the church was situated on the south side of Noble-street, but not being rebuilt after the fire of London, the parish was united to St. Alban in Wood-street.

2. Aldgate Ward.

This ward, on the eastern side of the city, takes its name from the ancient gatehouse. It is bounded on the north and east by Portsoken ward; on the south by Tower-street ward; and on the west by Langbourne, Lime-street, and Bishopsgate wards. It is divided into seven precincts, and is governed by an alderman, a deputy, six common-councilmen, including the deputy, six constables, eighteen wardmote inquest-men, a beadle, &c. The jurymen, who are returned by the wardmote, are to serve as jurors in the several courts in Guildhall in the month of January.

The principal streets in this ward are Aldgate High-street, Leadenhall-street as far as Lime-street; Fenchurch-street as far as Fishmongers'-alley inclusive; Jewry-street and Crutchedfriars as far as Seething-lane; Shoemaker-row; Bevis Marks to Camomile-street; St. Mary Axe and Lime-street to Cullum-street. Ald Gate, or Eald Gate, which gave name to the ward, was one of the four original gates of the city, and through which the Roman way led to Old Ford. It was rebuilt in 1609, when the statue of King James I. was placed on the east front, with the lion and unicorn couchant at his feet. On the western side of the gate was a statue of Fortune, under which were the royal arms. Over the arch of the gatehouse was inscribed "Senatus Populusque Londinensis. Fecit 1609. Humphry Wild, Maior." Aldgate High-street commences where the gatehouse formerly stood, and extends westward as far as the pump at the junction of Leadenhall-street and Fenchurch-street: it is a great thoroughfare. Northward of this street formerly stood the Augustine priory of the Holy Trinity, founded by Maud, Queen of Henry I. in 1108. This priory, said to have been the richest in England, was the first that was dissolved by Henry VIII. in 1531, who granted it to Sir Thomas Audley. He converted the priory into a mansion, where he resided when he was Lord Chancellor. His daughter and heiress married Thomas Duke of Norfolk, who, after the death of Sir Thomas Audley in 1544, inherited it, when it acquired the name of Duke's-place, which it still retains. No remains of the edifice are left, but a public-house bears the sign of the Howard Arms. The liberty of Duke's-place formerly enjoyed peculiar privileges, in which the inhabitants were protected by the power of the Howard family.

By one of their privileges retail shops are kept here by persons who are not freemen of the city. In Duke's-place is a Jews' synagogue, besides which are three other synagogues in this ward. Beneath a house at the south-eastern corner of Leadenhall-street are the remains of a chapel, dedicated to St. Michael, which was suppressed on the foundation of the priory of the Holy Trinity. The length of the crypt of this chapel is forty-eight feet, and its breadth is sixteen feet. At the north-eastern corner of Mark-lane is Blind-Chapel-court, formerly the manor of Blanch Apleton, in which foreigners were permitted to have shops, by the 3rd of Edward IV., and nowhere else within the city or suburbs. London-street was built on the site of the Old London Tavern, the first house of that description in the city. Eastward of Fenchurch-buildings is Northumberland-alley, so called from a mansion occupied by two successive Earls of Northumberland, one of whom lost his life in the battle of St. Alban's, the other in that of Towton. Being afterwards deserted by the Percy family, the gardens were made into bowling-alleys, &c. Crutched Friars is so called from a house of the Crossed or Crouched Friars here situated, which was founded in the year 1298, by Ralph Hosier and William Sabernes. After the Dissolution it was granted by Henry VIII. to Sir Thomas Wyatt, who built a mansion on its site. The Friars' hall was converted into a glass-house, the earliest manufacture of that article in England: it was destroyed by fire in 1575. On the site of this monastery now stands a warehouse for teas belonging to the East India Company, entered by an archway, and enclosing a court of 150 feet by 60 in dimensions. In this ward is Ironmongers'-hall, on the north side of Fenchurch-street; it consists of the following parishes:—St. Andrew Undershaft, a rectory, value 25*l.* 11*s.* 3*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of London. The church stands on the north side of Leadenhall-street, at the corner of St. Mary Axe: it obtained the appellation of Undershaft from a May-pole, which was annually set up on May-day, opposite the southern door of the church, and was higher than the church steeple. After the insurrection of the London apprentices on Evil May-day in 1517, the shaft was hung up under the penthouses of the neighbouring buildings, where it remained till 1549, when Sir Stephen, a popular preacher at Paul's Cross, declaimed against it as an idol, which so inflamed the fanatical congregation, that the same afternoon the pole was lowered from the hooks, and sawed in pieces, each man taking for his share the part which had lain over his door. The present church was rebuilt about the year 1502, chiefly at the expense of William Fitz Williams, sheriff of London in 1507, but the north aisle and the north side of the nave were erected by Stephen Jenyns, lord mayor in 1508. His arms are sculptured above all the pillars in that side of the church, which was not completed till 1532. The east window contains the portraits of King Edward VI., of Queen Elizabeth, King James I., and Kings Charles I. and II. In this church is the monument of John Stow, the historian of London, who died 5th April 1605, and that of Sir Thomas Offley, lord mayor in 1556. The name of the church of St. Mary Axe is still preserved in the street so called: it was dedicated to the Virgin Mary, and was designated "at the Axe" from a well known sign opposite to the east end of it. The parish was united to St. Andrew Undershaft about 1565.

St. Katherine Coleman is a rectory, value 5*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of London. The church is situated in Fenchurch-street, and received the addition to its name from a garden called formerly Coleman Haw: it was rebuilt in 1734.

St. Katherine Cree, or Christchurch, in Leadenhall-street, is a vicarage, not in charge, in the patronage of Magdalen College Cambridge. The church, dedicated to St. Katherine, received the name of Cree or Christ from its contiguity to the priory of the Holy Trinity, originally called Christchurch. The present structure was erected in 1630. In the eastern window are the arms of King George I., with this inscription; "The Gift of the Right Hon. Sir Samuel Stauier, Knight, Alderman, and native of this Ward, Lord Mayor of this City in the First Year of the Reign of King George."

St. James's, in Duke's-place, is a curacy, in the presentation of the lord mayor and aldermen. The church was erected in 1622.

3. Bassishaw, or Basinghall Ward.

This is a very small ward, and is bounded on the east and south by Coleman-street ward, on the west by Cripplegate and Cheap wards, and on the north by Cripplegate ward. It is divided into two precincts, and is governed by an alderman, his deputy, four common-councilmen, seventeen wardmote inquestmen, &c. The jurymen, who are returned by the wardmote, are to serve as jurors in the several courts in the month of March.

Basinghall-street derives its name from a mansion of the family of Basing, several of whom served the chief offices of the city in the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries. Its original name was Basings Haw, but descending to Thomas Bakewell, it was afterwards called Bakewell-hall, and corruptly, Blackwell-hall, and being purchased by the corporation, it was used as a weekly market for woollen cloths, said to be the greatest in the world. When it was rebuilt, after the fire of London, the profits of the warehouses for cloth were applied towards the support of Christ's Hospital, the governors of which had at that time the sole management of the warehouses. It has been long disused, and the site is now occupied by the Court of Bankruptcy, Court of Requests, Comptrollers' and Land Tax Offices, and others connected with the city. Other public buildings in this ward are Masons'-hall, Weavers'-hall, Girdlers'-hall, and Coopers'-hall. There is only one parish in the ward, St. Michael the Archangel, a rectory, value 17*l.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's. The present church, usually called St. Michael Bassishaw, was rebuilt, after the fire of London, in the year 1679.

4. Billingsgate Ward.

Is situated on the river side, and is bounded on the south by the Thames; on the east by Tower-street ward; on the north by Langbourn ward; and on the west by the ward of Bridge Within. It is divided into twelve precincts, and is governed by an alderman, ten common-councilmen, fourteen wardmote inquestmen, &c. The jurymen, who are returned by the wardmote, are to serve as jurors in the several courts in the month of May. The principal streets in this ward are part of Thames-street, Botolph-lane, St. Mary-hill, Rood-lane, and Pudding-lane. The situation of this ward near the river, the Custom-house, &c. gives it great advantage in trade. Billingsgate, whence the ward derives its name, is of considerable note from being the only port for fish in the city of London, and the greatest market for that article perhaps in the world. In 1699 the Act of Parliament was passed which made it a free port for fish to be sold here every day in the week, Sunday excepted, and for permitting the resale of fish so bought in every part of the city. The King's Weigh-house was erected, after the fire of London, in Little Eastcheap; it before stood on Cornhill, but the custom of weighing has fallen into disuse. In this ward is Butchers'-hall, in Pudding-lane; and Waterman's-hall, which formerly stood in Cold Harbour, was removed to St. Mary's Hill in the year 1786. In Billingsgate ward are the following parishes:—St. Andrew Hubbard, a rectory, value 16*l.*, in the patronage of the parishioners and the Duke of Northumberland alternately. The church, which stood in Little Eastcheap, was destroyed by the fire of London, and the parish was afterwards united to that of St. Mary at Hill.

St. Botolph's Billingsgate, a rectory, value 23*l.* 16*s.*, in the patronage of the Crown and the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's alternately. The church formerly stood in Thames-street, opposite to Botolph-lane, which was named from it; but being destroyed in the fire of London, was not rebuilt. The parish was afterwards annexed to that of St. George, Botolph-lane, a rectory, value 8*l.* The church stands on the west side of the lane, and was rebuilt after the fire.

St. Margaret Pattens, a rectory, united with St. Gabriel Fenchurch, value 10*l.*, in the patronage of the Crown and the lord mayor and aldermen alternately. The church, standing at the south-east corner of Rood-lane, was rebuilt after the fire of London. Rood-lane was so called from a rood or cross which formerly stood in the churchyard, but on the 22nd of May 1538, soon after the Reformation, the populace broke the rood to pieces, and demolished the tabernacle in which it was erected.

St. Mary at Hill, a rectory, value 36*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* The church stands on the west side of the street so called, and although considerably injured by the fire of London, it was not rebuilt. After its repair the parish of St. Andrew Hubbard was annexed to it. Annually, on the Sunday after Midsummer-day, the fraternity of Fellowship Porters, according to ancient custom, attend this church in the morning, and during the reading of the Psalms they approach the altar two and two, on the rails of which are placed two basins to receive the offerings made by them for the benefit of the aged and infirm members of their fraternity, in which act they are generally followed by the whole congregation.

This ward was so named from the gate which formerly stood between Camomile-street and Wormwood-street, and divided it into two parts; a division which is yet continued under the appellations of Within and Without. Bishopsgate-ward Within contains five precincts, and Without four precincts. It is bounded on the east by Aldgate ward, Portsoken ward, and part of the Tower liberty; on the south by Langbourn ward; on the west by Broad-street ward; and on the north by Shoreditch. It extends from the bars at the northern end of Bishopsgate-street, near Spital-square, on both sides of the way, as far as the pump at the corner of St. Martin Outwich, and down Gracechurch-street, as far as Lombard-street. This ward has an alderman, two deputies, one within the gate, the other without, six common councilmen, thirteen wardmote inquestmen, &c. The jurymen, who are returned by the wardmote, are to serve in the several courts in Guildhall in the month of December.

The principal streets and places in this ward are Bishopsgate-street, Gracechurch-street, Crosby-square, Great and Little St. Helen's, Old Bethlehem, Devonshire-square, and New Broad-street. Grace- or Grass-church-street, was so called from a grass market formerly held here: that part of the street which is in this ward begins at Eastcheap and ends at Bishopsgate-street. The principal entrance to Leadenhall herb market is in this ward. Bishopsgate-street was named from a gate of the city, the original erection of which is attributed to Erkenwald Bishop of London, about A.D. 675. The Hanseatic merchants, by a grant of Henry III. of privileges to that body, were bound to keep the gatehouse in repair, and it was rebuilt by them in 1479: the company was dissolved about 1551, and the gatehouse was again rebuilt, at the expense of the city, in 1731. The street is long and spacious; and as it all escaped the fire of London, there are still remaining a few specimens of ancient domestic architecture, particularly the house once Sir Paul Pindar's, and the White Hart tavern, upon the front of which is the date of 1480. On the eastern side of Bishopsgate-street is Crosby-square, so called from a mansion erected about the year 1465 by Sir John Crosbie, a member of the Grocers' Company, who lies buried in the adjacent church of St. Helen: the edifice was, some time after his decease, inhabited by the Duke of Gloucester, afterwards King Richard III., and is alluded to by Shakspeare in the play of that name. The great hall, which constitutes the principal remains, has suffered from the division of its interior into several stories: the basement story of the mansion has long been occupied as wine-vaults by Mr. Thomas Moule; they extend under several houses in the square: the great hall is 87 feet by 28 feet in dimensions, on the plan, and 36 feet in height; the ceiling of this room exhibits a specimen of ancient carpentry of great excellence; it is constructed of chestnut, and is striking from its splendid richness in perspective: an oriel window at the western end is connected with the hall by a lofty arch, and its stone-groined ceiling is intersected by beautiful ribs, embellished with bosses of foliage, and armorial bearings of the Crosbie family. An adjoining room, called the council-chamber, is remarkable for its ceiling of the same vaulted form as that of the hall, but is more simple in its enrichments. The mansion is supposed to have originally consisted of two courts, divided by the hall, the outer one the smaller; the inner, about 90 feet by 60 feet in dimension, situated a little to the S.E. of the outer court. The original entrance to the inner court was, it is believed, under the southern end of the hall, as at present. The buildings subsequently erected in Crosby-square in all probability occupy the line of the original apartments and offices which surrounded the quadrangle.

Sir John Spencer, who purchased this mansion in the reign of Elizabeth, "made great reparations," and kept his mayoralty, in 1594, at Crosby Place.

The restoration of Crosby-hall is contemplated, under the superintendence of a committee of gentlemen interested in its preservation, for which subscriptions have been opened with a spirit that promises the utmost satisfaction. In Great St. Helen's are almshouses, founded by Sir Andrew Judd, 1619, for six poor freemen, of which the Skinners' Company are trustees: the houses have been rebuilt, since their original foundation, at the expense of the company. In Little St. Helen's, on the site of the ancient priory, was Leather-sellers'-hall, now destroyed, and St. Helen's-place has been erected on part of the ground. In Bishopsgate-street is the office of the Marine Society, instituted, in 1756, by Jonas Hanway, Esq. The society was incorporated in 1772, and it has a vessel lying between Deptford and Greenwich, fitted for the reception of 100 boys, who are instructed in navigation. On the north side of Bishopsgate church is Alderman's Walk, near which are buildings called Old Bethlehem. On this spot formerly stood a priory, founded in 1246 by Simon Fitz Mary, sheriff of London, and dedicated to St. Mary of Bethlehem. On its suppression in 1546, it was converted to a hospital for the cure of lunatics, afterwards removed to Moorfields. Near Half Moon-alley was the London workhouse, established in 1649, and incorporated in 1662, the lord mayor being appointed president; the house was afterwards occupied by a paperhanger, and was pulled down about 1830: on its site are now a stonemason's premises. The London workhouse has been removed to the Surrey side of the river, near Blackfriars'-bridge. On the eastern side of Bishopsgate-street is Devonshire-square; on this spot was formerly a mansion erected by Jasper Fisher, one of the six clerks in Chancery, which afterwards belonged to the Earls of Oxford, and lastly to the Duchess of Devonshire, whose name is preserved, in the square built on its site. North-eastward from Devonshire-square was a place anciently called Tassel Close, used by the crossbow-makers for the practice of shooting at the poppinjay. It afterwards served as an artillery-ground for the exercise of great and small artillery, and was used by the gunners of the Tower. The Artillery Company received a charter from King Henry, which was confirmed by Queen Elizabeth; and in 1622 an armoury was erected here for five hundred stand of arms, but upon the removal of the company to their present ground, this spot was known as the Old Artillery Ground, and being afterwards built upon, the name is preserved in Artillery-street. Northward of this field, where Duke- and Steward-streets are now situated, stood the priory and hospital of St. Mary, founded in 1107 by Walter Brune. To this spital the lord mayor, aldermen and sheriffs repaired annually to hear sermons, which were always on the subject of the Resurrection of Christ, delivered by eminent divines from a pulpit cross in the churchyard of the hospital; opposite to which was a house, two stories high, for the reception of the lord mayor and his company. This custom was kept up till the year 1642, when the pulpit was broken down and the preaching discontinued: it was so far revived at the Restoration, that the Spital sermons have been since preached at St. Bride's in Fleet-street. New Broad-street, and Broad-street-buildings, are principally erected on the site of a street called Petty France, from having been first inhabited by people of that nation.

Bishopsgate ward contains the following parishes:—St. Ethelburg, a rectory, value 11*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of London. The church stands in Bishopsgate-street, near the corner of Little St. Helen's; it escaped the fire of London.

St. Helen, a vicarage, not in charge. The parish church formerly belonged to the priory of St. Helen, founded by William FitzWilliam in 1212: it escaped the fire of London, and contains several very curious ancient monuments; amongst which, are those of Sir Julius Cæsar, ob. 1635; Sir John Spencer, ob. 1594; Sir William Pickering, ob. 1542; Sir Thomas Gresham, ob. 1579; and Sir John Crosbie, ob. 1475. Here is also the monument of Francis Bancroft, who left large sums for charitable purposes in trust to the Drapers' Company.

6. Bread Street Ward.

This ward takes its name from one of the principal streets in it, where formerly was held the bread-market, in which bakers were obliged to sell bread openly, and not in shops. The ward is bounded on the north and north-west by the ward of Farringdon Within, on the east by Cordwainers' ward; on the south by Queenhithe ward; and on the west by Castle Baynard ward. It is divided into thirteen precincts, and has an alderman, a deputy, twelve common-councilmen, thirteen wardmote inquestmen, &c. The jurymen, who are returned by the wardmote, are to serve in the several courts in Guildhall in the month of April.

The principal streets and places in the ward are Watling-street, Bread-street, Friday-street, Distaff-lane, Basing-lane, part of the eastern side of the Old 'Change, the northern side of Old Fish-street and Trinity-lane, and part of the southern side of Cheapside, extending from Friday-street to Bow churchyard. In this part of Cheapside formerly stood Goldsmiths'-row, built by Thomas Wood, sheriff of London in 1491; the houses, ten in number, timber-framed and uniformly constructed; they were ornamented on the front, with the Goldsmiths' arms, and with his badge of a woodman frequently repeated, which were cast in lead, and painted and gilt. The whole front of this row was repainted and gilt in the year 1593.

Gerrard's-hall Inn, Basing-lane, is built upon the remains of a mansion formerly belonging to the family of Gysors, and it is reasonably supposed that the present name is no more than a corruption of Gysor's-hall: there are still some vaulted remains of the old mansion, which extend under the adjoining house to the inn. Cordwainers'-hall is on the north side of Distaff-lane. In Bread-street ward are the following parishes:—Allhallows, in Bread-street, a rectory united with St. John, value 37*l.* 13*s.* 9*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. The present church was erected in 1684, when the parish was annexed to that of St. John the Evangelist; the church of the latter formerly stood at the corner of Friday-street and Watling-street, but was not rebuilt after the fire of London. St. Mildred, in Bread-street, a rectory united with St. Margaret Moses, value 16*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown and W. Storketh, Esq., alternately: the present church was erected in 1683. The church of St. Margaret Moses stood at the corner of Little Friday-street, opposite to Distaff-lane, but was not rebuilt after the fire of London.

7. Bridge Ward.

This ward derived its name from its situation and connection with Old London-bridge, which, when it was covered with houses, formed three of the precincts. The ward began at the southern end of the bridge, and its boundary was carried direct north up Fish-street-hill and Gracechurch-street as far as Lombard-street, including all the courts on the eastern side, and all the lanes and courts on the western side of Thames-street to Old Swan-lane, and part of Crooked-lane, which, together with the church of St. Michael, are now entirely cleared by the improved approaches to the new bridge.

Bridge ward is bounded on the south by Southwark and the river Thames; on the north by Langbourn ward; on the east by Billingsgate ward; and on the west by Candlewick and Dowgate wards. It is divided into fourteen precincts, and has an alderman, his deputy, fifteen common-councilmen, including the deputy, sixteen wardmote inquestmen, &c. The jurymen, who are returned by the wardmote, are to serve in the several courts in Guildhall in the month of July.

The principal streets in the ward are, Fish-street-hill, part of Gracechurch-street, Upper and Lower Thames-street, Eastcheap, and King William-street.

Fishmongers'-hall, now rebuilding at the foot of London-bridge, and the Monument, erected to commemorate the Fire of London, are in this ward.

The following parishes are in Bridge ward:—St. Benet Grace, or Grass church, a rectory, value 18*l.* 1*s.* 3*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's and the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury alternately. The church stands at the south-western corner of Fenchurch-street: it was rebuilt after the fire of London, when the parish was united to that of St. Leonard Eastcheap, the church of which had also been destroyed; the latter was sometimes called St. Leonard Milk church, from the name of its original founder William Melker.

St. Magnus the Martyr, by London-bridge, is a rectory, value 69*l.* 5*s.* 5*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury by lapse. The body of the present church was erected in 1676; but the steeple, by Sir Christopher Wren, was not added till several years after. The church of St. Margaret in New Fish-street was destroyed by the fire of London, and the parish added afterwards to St. Magnus. On the site of the old church the Monument was erected by Sir Christopher Wren. The chapel of St. Thomas the Martyr, built upon Old London-bridge, by Peter of Colechurch, founder of the bridge, before the year 1209, and in which he was buried, was in the parish of St. Magnus. Upon most of the ancient bridges of the kingdom a chapel was erected, for the purpose of obtaining donations from travellers for the purpose of repairing the bridges. Penant, in his very interesting account of London, says, "I well remember the street on London-bridge narrow and dangerous to passengers from the multitude of carriages: frequent arches of strong timber crossed the street from the tops of the houses, to keep them together and from falling into the river. Most of the houses were tenanted by pin- and needle-makers, and ladies were wont to drive from the St. James's end of the town to make cheap purchases. On the bridge were three openings on each side with balustrades, which gave passengers a sight of the water and shipping, and in one part had been a draw-bridge useful either by way of defence or for the admission of ships into the upper part of the river." At the northern end of the old bridge, Peter Corbis, a Dutchman, in the year 1582 constructed an engine to force the water of the Thames into pipes for the supply of the adjacent parts of the city, which machine was afterwards improved; but the whole was removed some time before the taking down of the bridge. The most curious building upon London-bridge in the time of Queen Elizabeth was Nonesuch-house, it was entirely of wood, framed in Holland, and being brought over in pieces, was united here with wooden pegs only, no nails being used in the whole fabric: it stood between the seventh and eighth arches of the old bridge from the Southwark end, and its situation continued to be pointed out after its destruction by the names of the Draw-lock and the Nonesuch-lock being given to those arches. Like most of the other buildings, this celebrated edifice overhung the eastern and western sides of the old bridge, and presented from the river two fronts not inferior in pictorial beauty to those exhibited towards Southwark and the city; the carving and enrichments of its turrets and numerous windows were exceedingly curious and interesting. Nonesuch-house is represented in a well known picture painted by J. Scott, but in a very dilapidated state, as it appeared previously to its being taken down in 1758.

8. Broad-street Ward.

This ward obtained its appellation from a street of the same name, which, before the fire of London, was one of the widest within the walls of the city. It is bounded on the north and east by Bishopsgate ward; on the south by Cornhill and Wallbrook wards; and on the west by Coleman-street ward. It is divided into ten precincts, and extends from Helmet-court in Wormwood-street, along London-wall; thence to St. Margaret's church in Lothbury; then south-westward to St. Mildred's-court in the Poultry, where the boundary passes along Threadneedle-street, and crossing Finch-lane to St. Martin's Outwich, keeps eastward of Broad-street, and terminates in Helmet-court. The ward is governed by an alderman, his deputy, nine common-councilmen, thirteen wardmote inquestmen, &c. The jurymen, who are returned by the wardmote, are to serve in the several courts in Guildhall in the month of August.

Within the limits of the ward are included Old Broad-street, Threadneedle-street, Bartholomew-lane, Throgmorton-street, Winchester-street, Austinfriars, and part of London Wall.

In Broad-street, Gresham College and Almshouses, founded by Sir Thomas Gresham in 1575, formerly stood; the site is now partly occupied by the Excise Office. In this street is also the Old South Sea-house. Austin Friars is built on the site of a priory founded by Humphry Bohun Earl of Hereford and Essex, which was dedicated to St. Augustine; the church of this priory was granted to a congregation of Germans, and other strangers, in 1550, by King Edward VI. Successive princes have confirmed the grant to the Dutch, by whom it is still used as a place of worship, under the name of The Temple of the Lord Jesus. At the west end of the Dutch church, as it is usually called, is a library, containing several manuscripts; amongst which, are the letters of Calvin, Peter Martyr, and other celebrated Reformers. The ministers exchange churches every first Sunday in the month with the Walloon congregation for the administration of the eucharist, their own church in Threadneedle-street being too small.

Winchester-street is erected on the site of the gardens of the priory of St. Augustine. Part of the house, gardens, and cloisters, belonging to this priory, were granted to Sir William Paulett, Lord Treasurer to King Henry VIII., who erected a stately mansion on the spot; it afterwards devolved to his son the Marquess of Winchester: part of this house still remains. Winchester-street is particularly deserving of attention, as exhibiting more curious specimens of ancient domestic architecture than are to be found in any other street in the city. Pinner's-hall, an old building at the upper end of Pinner's-court in Winchester-street, was also part of the Augustine priory, and was converted into a glass-house before it became the property of the Pinmakers' Company.

Threadneedle, or Threeneedle-street, contains several buildings of importance. The Walloon or French Protestant church was built on the site of the chapel of the hospital of St. Anthony of Vienna, founded in 1231, which after the Dissolution was granted to the foreign Protestants. At the north-eastern extremity of the street is the South Sea-house; Merchant-Tailors'-hall is on the same side; and at its western extremity is the Bank of England, an extensive and magnificent edifice. In Throckmorton-street is Drapers'-hall, built on the site of a mansion erected by Thomas Cromwell Earl of Essex, in the reign of Henry VIII., which was forfeited to the Crown by his attainer, and afterwards purchased by the Drapers' Company: the hall was rebuilt after the fire of London. At the upper end of Chapel-court in Bartholomew-lane is the Stock Exchange, erected in 1801; and more northward is the Auction Mart. Almost at the extremity of this ward are four streets environing the Bank of England, Bank-buildings, Bartholomew-lane, Lothbury, and Princes-street.

The following parishes are in this ward:—Allhallows London-wall, a rectory with St. Augustine, value 8*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. The church, which was rebuilt in 1766, stands a little westward of Broad-street in London-wall, and the rectory-house is in the churchyard. St. Bartholomew the Apostle, near the Royal Exchange, is a rectory, value 18*l.* 1*s.* 8*d.* The church, which was rebuilt after the fire of London, stands at the south-east corner of Bartholomew-lane. St. Benedict, or St. Benet Fink, a curacy, in the presentation of the Dean and Canons of Windsor. The church, which was rebuilt in 1673 after being destroyed in the fire of London, stands at the south-western end of Threadneedle-street: it received its additional name of Fink from a benefactor or former rebuilder of the church. St. Christopher-le-Stock, a rectory, value 14*l.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of London; the church formerly stood on the site of the office for transferring the 3 per cent. reduced stock in the Bank of England, but was taken down about 1782; the directors of the Bank having previously purchased the whole parish. St. Martin's Outwich, or Oteswich, a rectory, value 13*l.* 9*s.* 9*d.*, in the patronage of Merchant Tailors' Company: the church stands at the corner of Threadneedle-street, in Bishopsgate-street; it was rebuilt in 1796. St. Peter-le-Poor, in Broad-street, a rectory, value 5*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's: the church was rebuilt in 1791.

9. Candlewick-street Ward.

This ward takes its name from the street now called Cannon-street, but formerly Candlewright, or Candlewick-street, from its being principally inhabited by the makers of tallow and wax candles. It is bounded on the east by Bridge ward; on the south by Dowgate ward; on the west by Wallbrook ward; and on the north by Langbourne ward. It is a small ward, but is divided into seven precincts, and has an alderman, his deputy, seven common-councilmen, twelve wardmote inquestmen, &c. The jurymen, who are returned by the wardmote, are to serve in the several courts in Guildhall in the month of December.

The principal streets in this ward are Great Eastcheap and the western end of Cannon-street. Great Eastcheap, immortalized by Shakspeare, took its name from one of the markets formerly held here for the supply of the eastern part of the city, and removed to Leadenhall-square. Here also stood the Boar's Head Tavern, the resort of Sir John Falstaff and Prince Hal. The memory of this tavern, which was destroyed in the great fire, is preserved by a sculptured sign with "I. T. 1668," inscribed on it. The parishes in this ward are St. Clement, near Eastcheap, a rectory, value 13*l.* 2*s.* 1*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of London and the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's. The church, which stands in Clement's-lane, was rebuilt in 1686, after the fire of London, when the parish of St. Martin Orgars was annexed to it: the latter is a rectory, value 19*l.* 16*s.* 3*d.* The church stood on the east side of St. Martin's-lane, near Cannon-street, and was denominated from Ordgarus the supposed founder. The remains of the church continued to be used as a place of worship by French Protestants. St. Mary Abchurch, a rectory with St. Lawrence, value 20*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of Corpus Christi College Cambridge. The church stands in Abchurch-lane, and was rebuilt after the fire of London: the altar-piece is curiously carved. The church of St. Lawrence Pounteney was situated in the lane of the same name, and received its additional appellation from Sir John Pounteney, Lord Mayor in the reign of Edward III. St. Michael in Crooked-lane, is a rectory, value 26*l.* 8*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. The church, which was rebuilt after the fire of London, stood on the southern side of Eastcheap, but was taken down in 1830 to complete the approach to London-bridge, the road from which, called King William-street, now proceeds in a straight line over Thames-street and the site of the late church, branching off on each side to Fish-street and Eastcheap. From the latter a new street is already in progress, and will be continued to the Mansion-house, &c.; the name it is supposed will be Arthur-street.

10. Castle Baynard Ward.

This ward takes its name from a castle formerly situated on the banks of the Thames; it was erected by Ralph Baynard in the reign of William the Conqueror, and by virtue of this possession he was hereditary standard-bearer of London. This castle was afterwards given by the king to Robert, a younger son of Richard Fitz Gilbert, progenitor of the Earls of Clare, from whom the family of Fitz Walter descended. The old castle was destroyed by fire in 1428, and was rebuilt by Humphrey Duke of Gloucester: it was the residence of Richard Duke of Gloucester when he assumed the title of King Richard III. King Henry VII. frequently lodged here; and hence the Privy Council proclaimed Queen Mary in 1553, at which time Baynard's Castle was the property and residence of William Earl of Pembroke, K.G. No trace at present remains of this ancient building, the scene of so many eventful transactions. The same fate has attended the castle of Montfitchet, and another castle built by King Edward II., which being afterwards appropriated for the residence of the Pope's legates in England, was called Legates' Inn; and also Beaumont's inn, afterwards Huntingdon-house, built in Thames-street opposite St. Peter's-hill, in 1463; the town mansion of the Scrope family, on the western side of Paul's Wharf; Berkeley's inn, in Adel-street; and the house of the priors of Great Ogbourne in Wiltshire, which formerly stood in Castle-lane.

This ward is bounded on the east by Queenhithe and Breadstreet wards; and on the west and north by the ward of Farringdon Within: it is divided into ten precincts, and has an alderman, ten common-councilmen, fourteen wardmote inquestmen, &c. The jurymen, who are returned by the wardmote, are to serve in the several courts of Guildhall in the month of September.

The principal streets in the ward are the west end of Thames-street, St. Peter's-hill, Benet's-hill, Sermon-lane, part of St. Paul's churchyard, Ave Maria-lane, Warwick-lane, &c.

On the eastern side of St. Benet's-hill stands the Heralds' College, originally incorporated in the reign of Richard III., 1483; but Derby-house, in which the office was originally kept, being destroyed by the fire of London, it was rebuilt in 1683: the entrance, under an arch, leads into a quadrangular court, round which are the offices of the college, a court of honour, and a library. This college has the care of all matters relating to family distinction, under the Earl Marshal. Garter King of Arms records the genealogies of all newly created peers, &c.: Clarenceux King of Arms is the chief herald of the south, east, and west of England, as Norroy is of the north. There are also six heralds and four pursuivants. Chapters of Arms are held only once a month, but a herald and pursuivant constantly attend at the college. Besides their salaries the heralds are entitled to fees of honour, and fees for proving pedigrees, or exemplifications of arms, changes of surnames, &c. The visitations of the various counties of England by the heralds commenced in 1528, and were continued till 1686. Most of the originals of these are now in the British Museum, and of which a catalogue has been printed and published several times: other visitations were sold to the Earl of Egmont, and are carefully preserved in the library at Enmore in Somersetshire;—but see the Bibliotheca Heraldica for full information on these subjects. The College of Arms, or Heralds' Office, bear for arms Argent, a cross gulcs between four falcons, the dexter wings expanded azure, derived from the arms of Sir John Wrythe, Garter King of Arms in the reign of Henry VII., who had been Falcon Herald previously to his promotion to that office. Supporters, two lions rampant guardant argent. Crest, from a ducal coronet a falcon rising azure. The three principal officers in the college bear also their arms of office impaled on the dexter side, and each of them has a coronet, which they may bear over their arms.

Knight-Rider-street is said to have been so named from the knights passing this way from the Tower Royal to the tournaments in Smithfield.

In Castle Baynard ward are the following parishes:—St. Andrew by the Wardrobe, a rectory with St. Anne, in the precinct of Blackfriars, value 17*l.* 10*s.*, in the patronage of the Crown and the parishioners alternately. The church stands on the eastern side of Puddledock-hill, and was rebuilt in 1670; it was originally denominated

St. Andrew juxta Baynard Castle, but the office of the king's wardrobe being removed to Carter-lane, on the present site of Wardrobe-court, the appellation of the church was changed. St. Benet, or St. Benedict, Paul's Wharf, a rectory with St. Peter, value 13*l.* 19*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's. The church, situated on St. Benet's-hill, was rebuilt after the fire of London from a design by Sir Christopher Wren; and the church of St. Peter, Paul's Wharf, not being rebuilt, the parish was annexed to this. St. Mary Magdalene, Old Fish-street, a rectory, value 19*l.* 5*s.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's: the church, situated on the northern side of Knight-Rider-street, was rebuilt in 1685; the affix to its name arises from its site in the Fish-market, the principal part of which was in this street. After the fire of London, the ground on which the church of St. Gregory by St. Paul's formerly stood, was laid into St. Paul's churchyard, and the parish was united to that of St. Mary Magdalene. Behind the site of the demolished church is St. Paul's College, appropriated to the petty canons of St. Paul's Cathedral, who were incorporated in 1394. Facing the college, on the site of London House-yard, formerly stood the Bishop of London's palace, destroyed by the fire of London.

11. Cheap Ward.

This ward, in the very centre of the city, derives its name from the Anglo-Saxon Chepe, a market: that held in Cheapside, the British Forum, was called West Cheap, to distinguish it from another market called East Cheap. The ward, or subdivision, is bounded on the east by Broad-street and Wallbrook wards; on the north by Bassishaw and Coleman-street wards; on the west by Queenhithe and Cripplegate wards; and on the south by Cordwainer-street ward: it includes the Poultry, the east end of Cheapside, Bucklersbury, part of Pancras-lane, Queen-street, and Bow-lane on the southern side, part of the Old Jewry, Ironmonger-lane, King-street, Lawrence-lane, Honey-lane-market, and the principal part of Cateaton-street.

This ward is divided into nine precincts, and has an alderman, twelve common-councilmen, twelve wardmote inquestmen, &c.; the jury-men, who are returned by the wardmote, are to serve in the several courts in Guildhall in the month of February.

When the old stocks market was held, the eastern end of Cheapside was inhabited by poulterers, whence it received the name of the Poultry. Almost opposite to the market, on the course of the Wall brook, formerly stood a slaughter-house for beasts and for the scalding of swine; the site of which, for many years afterwards, retained the name of Scalding-alley; it is now St. Mildred's-court. The Old Poultry Compter, as well as the Compter in Giltspur-street, are supposed to have derived their name from the persons who were committed to these prisons being obliged to account for the cause of their imprisonment before they could be discharged: the prison has been removed, and a chapel erected on its site. Grocers'-alley,—formerly Coneyhope-lane, or the rabbit-market,—is so called from its leading now to Grocers'-hall, erected on the site of a mansion of the Fitz Walter family, who sold it in 1411. The Old Jewry was the residence of Jews prior to their banishment in the reign of Edward I. On their readmission into England they settled near Aldgate; and this, their ancient abode, received the appellation of Old Jewry. Between this street and Ironmonger-lane is Mercers'-hall and chapel, situated on a spot once occupied by a hospital dedicated to St. Thomas of Acors, which was founded here in the reign of Henry II.: on its dissolution by Henry VIII. it was purchased by the Mercers' Company. At the northern extremity of King-street is Guildhall, founded in 1411, in which all affairs belonging to the Corporation of London are transacted. The original Guildhall, which stood in Aldermanbury, was supposed to have been erected in the reign of Edward the Confessor. Stow the historian remembered its ruins, and says it was in his time a carpenter's yard.

On the eastern side of Guildhall-yard was formerly a chapel, dedicated to Mary Magdalene and All Saints, commonly called London College, founded about the year 1368. This college was suppressed by Henry VIII., and was granted in 1551 to the Corporation. The chapel escaped the fire of London, and divine service was for a length of time afterwards performed here: it was then converted into a Court of Requests, and was rebuilt in 1822 for that purpose. Contiguous to the chapel, on the south, was also a library, erected by the executors of Sir Richard Whittington and William Bury. The Protector Somerset seized the books, with which it was said to have been well furnished. The style of architecture of Guildhall chapel was that of the reign of Henry VI., when it was rebuilt: on its western front were ornamental tabernacles of much later date, containing statues of King Edward VI., King Charles I., and his Queen Henrietta Maria; a doorway upon this front was copied in a restoration of the interior of the Guildhall. Honey-lane market is the smallest in the city; it occupies the site of two churches burnt down in the fire of London, St. Mary Magdalene and Allhallows. Bucklersbury, properly Bucklesbury, was so called from the lord of the manor, of the name of Buckle, who resided in a mansion called the Old Barge, on the site of Barge-yard, and to which place, according to tradition, barges came from the Thames up the Wall brook, where its navigation was open. Opposite to Barge-yard, on the northern side of Bucklersbury, was a royal mansion, called Sewetes Tower. In the year 1344 King Edward III. constituted this tower his exchange for bullion, but in 1358 it was granted to the Dean and Canons of St. Stephen's Westminster. At the western end of the Poultry formerly stood the great conduit, erected for supplying water, which was conveyed hither from Paddington by leaden pipes under ground.

In Cheap ward are the following parishes:—Allhallows Honey-lane, united since the fire of London to St. Mary-le-Bow, a rectory, value 19*l.* 3*s.* 9*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury, who presents twice, and of the Grocers' Company, who present once in three times to the living. St. Benet Sherehog, united since the fire of London to St. Stephen's Wallbrook, a rectory, value 8*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* The name is said to have been derived from Benedict Shorne, a fishmonger, who rebuilt the church, which was originally dedicated to St. Osyth: it stood in Pancras-lane, but was entirely destroyed during the great fire. St. Lawrence Jewry, a vicarage, with St. Mary Magdalene in Milk-street, value 18*l.* 0*s.* 5*d.*, in the patronage of Baliol College Oxford and the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's alternately. The church, which stands on the northern side of Cateaton-street, was rebuilt after the fire of London: it derived the epithet of Jewry from its situation amongst the Jews, and also to distinguish the church from that of St. Lawrence Pounteney, which is now demolished. St. Martin Pomary, a parish in this ward, is a rectory, value 12*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. The church formerly stood in Ironmonger-lane, and originally near an orchard, whence its distinctive appellation Pomary: being destroyed by the fire of London, it was not rebuilt, and the parish was annexed to that of St. Olave Jewry. St. Mildred the Virgin, in the Poultry, is a rectory with St. Mary Colechurch, value 18*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown and the Mercers' Company alternately. The present church was erected after the fire of London, when the parish of St. Mary Colechurch was united to this, the church of which stood at the south-western corner of the Old Jewry, before the fire. St. Pancras Soper-lane, is a rectory, united since the fire of London to St. Mary-le-Bow; its church derived its additional name from its vicinity to Soper-lane, now Queen-street, Cheapside.

12. Coleman-street Ward.

Coleman-street, from which this ward takes its denomination, is supposed to have been so called from the principal proprietor of that part of the city. The ward is bounded on the south by Cheap ward; on the east by Bishopsgate and Broad-street wards; on the north by Cripplegate ward and the manor of Finsbury; and on the west by Bassishaw ward. It begins at the corner of Wallbrook in the Poultry, and extends to the end of Ironmonger-lane on the southern side of the street, and to the end of Basinghall-street on the northern side. In a northern and southern direction the ward extends from Moorgate to the gardens of Grocers'-hall. It is divided into six precincts, and has an alderman, his deputy, six common-councilmen, thirteen wardmote inquestmen, &c. The jury-men, who are returned by the wardmote, are to serve in the several courts in Guildhall in the month of August.

Near the north-eastern corner of the Old Jewry stood the first synagogue, which was destroyed at the time of the massacre of the Jews in 1262. Queen Eleanor granted the site to certain Brethren de Sacco, or Bonhoinmes, in 1272. After their suppression, the site was assigned in 1305 to Robert Fitz Walter, whose mansion, now Grocers'-hall, it adjoined. At the northern end of the Old Jewry stood in ancient times a royal mansion: King Henry VI. granted the office of keeper of his palace in the Old Jewry to John Stent for his life; and King Richard III. committed the keeping of the Prince's Wardrobe, as it was then called, to John Kendall, by his patent, dated 12th December 1483, and left him to dwell in the same. In 1548, 2nd Edward VI., it was sold, under the name of the Prince's Wardrobe, to Sir Anthony Cope of Hanwell Oxon, who had been Vice-chamberlain to Queen Katherine of Arragon. The house of Sir Robert Clayton, who was lord mayor in 1680, was used as the London Institution.

Lothbury, or Loathbury, is said by Stow to have derived its disdainful name from the loathsome noise made by the founders in the operation of turning their brass candlesticks to make them smooth and bright. The street is now inhabited by merchants of a superior class, excepting the southern side, which is occupied by the buildings of the Bank of England. On the northern side of the street is Founders'-court, leading to Founders'-hall. At the northern extremity of this ward, on the site of Moorfields, is Finsbury Circus, the north side of which is occupied by the college of the London Institution, founded in 1815, and erected from a design by Brooks. In East-street, with a front towards Bloomfield-street, is the metropolitan Roman Catholic chapel, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, built from designs by Neuman, and consecrated in 1820: the altar, with its columns and other works in marble, was executed by Cornelli of Milan, and the paintings of the altar by Aglio, an Italian artist: the pulpit was the gift of Lord Arundell. A Roman Catholic chapel in White-street, in the same neighbourhood, was discontinued on the opening of St. Mary's chapel, and has since been taken by the committee of the City of London National Schools. Albion chapel, Moorgate, erected from designs by Jay, is occupied by a Presbyterian congregation. Finsbury chapel was erected from designs by Brooks. There is also a Unitarian chapel in Finsbury, of the Ionic order. The parish churches in Coleman-street ward are St. Margaret in Lothbury, a rectory, value 13*l*. 6*s*. 8*d*., in the patronage of the Crown; the present edifice was erected in 1690, and is situated on the ancient water-course of Wallbrook: the font in this church is sculptured with representations of the Garden of Eden and Fall of Man; the Salvation of Noah and his Family in the Ark; the Baptism of Christ by St. John the Baptist; and of Philip baptizing the Eunuch: the cover of the font bears the figure of St. Margaret, with the three duties of religion, Faith, Hope, and Charity. St. Olave in the Old Jewry, a vicarage, with St. Martin, value 10*l*. 18*s*. 6*d*., in the patronage of the Crown: the church, of very ancient foundation, was originally called St. Mary Upwell, from a well under the eastern end; the present structure was erected soon after the fire of London. St. Stephen's in Coleman-street, a vicarage, value 11*l*., in the patronage of the parishioners: the church was rebuilt about four years after the fire of London. To the pavement on the south side of the church there is an ascent of several steps through an archway, over which is sculptured a representation of the Resurrection. Near the north-eastern corner of Coleman-street is Armourers'-hall.

13. Cordwainers'-street Ward.

This ward took its appellation from a street now called Bow-lane, which had anciently the name of Cordwainers'-street, from curriers, shoemakers, and other workers in leather residing in it. Its origin is from Cordova in Spain, the leather there prepared being called Cordovan leather; and all leather since prepared in a similar manner has obtained the same name.

The shoemakers here were succeeded by hosiers, when the name of the street was changed to Hosier-lane; and these in their turn being superseded by other trades, the present name was taken from the church at its northern end. The ward is bounded on the east by that of Wallbrook; on the north by Cheap ward; on the west by Bread-street ward; and on the south by Vintry ward. It included the following streets, or parts of them; viz. Watling-street, Bow-lane, Queen-street, Pancras-lane, Size-lane, Budge-row, and little St. Thomas Apostle. It is divided into eight precincts, and has an alderman, nine common-councilmen, fourteen wardmote inquestmen, &c. The jury-men, who are returned by the wardmote, are to serve in the several courts in Guildhall in the month of December.

Northward of Bow church, immediately in front of it in Cheap-side, stood the Crown-shed, or sild, in which the royal family took their station to see the processions, joustings, &c. After the fall of a wooden stage in the year 1329, a stone building was erected. The event alluded to happened upon the arrival of several ambassadors from foreign nations in England, when King Edward III.

ordered a solemn tournament, of thirteen knights on a side, to be performed in Cheapside for their entertainment. The streets were covered with sand to prevent the horses from slipping; and a grand scaffold, in the form of a tower, was erected for the accommodation of the Queen and the ladies of the court, which during the celebration fell suddenly to the ground, but with no greater misfortune than putting the Queen and the ladies into a fright. The King would have punished the builder severely, but his royal consort interceded and obtained his pardon. The Crown sild, as it was called, continued to be used by the royal family till the reign of Henry IV., who in 1410 sold it to Stephen Spilman and others. In Bow-churchyard stood one of the public grammar-schools founded by King Henry VI.; it remained until the year 1737, although the purposes for which it was erected had long been discontinued.

The principal buildings in this ward are its three parish churches, St. Mary-le-Bow, St. Mary Aldermary, and St. Antholin's; the first of which is the most distinguished, and stands in Cheapside, near the north-western corner of Bow-lane: it is a rectory, one of the peculiars belonging to the Archbishop of Canterbury, value 33*l*. 12*s*. 3*d*.; with All-Hallows, Honey-lane, and St. Pancras, Soper-lane, in the patronage of the Crown and the Grocers' Company. The church, originally founded in or before the reign of William the Conqueror, was dedicated to the Virgin Mary, and received the additional epithet of Le Bow in West Cheap, from being the first church in London built upon bows, or stone arches, or from the arches on the summit of the old steeple, rebuilt in 1512, which contained five lanterns for lights, one at each angle of the tower, and one at the summit, to give light to passengers in the street; and thus it continued until it was destroyed with the other buildings in the city by the fire of London. The present noble structure was built from designs by Sir Christopher Wren; the steeple, entirely of Portland stone, was finished in 1680; it is surmounted by a dragon, eight feet ten inches long, one of the supporters of the armorial ensigns of the city; the entire height is two hundred and twenty-one feet from the ground. This part of the structure is light and elegant, and is sometimes said to embrace the five orders of architecture, but fancy is more apparent in it than an adherence to regular orders. More credit is due to the architect than to the builder, the masonry being executed in an indifferent manner both as to materials and workmanship, whilst the geometrical skill of Sir Christopher is highly conspicuous. His original intention was to have built a façade towards the street extending to Bow-lane, but probably the expence prevented its being carried into execution. The steeple has had many repairs; the dragon was taken down in 1760, when the upper part of the steeple was repaired by Staines, afterwards Sir William, and lord mayor. In 1818 it was again taken down and rebuilt precisely on its original plan, under Gwilt, in a manner which gave perfect satisfaction to the committee. Considerable part of the new work, where the weather had made the greatest inroads, has been replaced with granite. There are but few monuments in the church worthy of notice; but amongst them is one of Bishop Newton, who wrote on the Prophecies, and who was nearly thirty years rector of the parish. Dr. William Van Mildert, now Bishop of Durham, was instituted in 1796, and was the first clergyman prosecuted for non-residence. The celebrated lectures founded by the Honourable Robert Boyle have been generally preached at this church: the object of the sermons is to prove and establish the Christian religion, against Pagans, Jews, Mahometans, Atheists, and Deists.

Near the middle of Bow-lane, on the eastern side, is the parochial church of St. Mary Aldermary, which is a rectory, with St. Thomas the Apostle, value 41*l*., in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury and the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's alternately. The additional epithet of Alder or Elder Mary, arose from its being the oldest church in the city dedicated to the Virgin. The tower of the church was rebuilt in 1626 on the old plan; and although the body of the church was destroyed by the fire of 1666, the tower remained entire: that part of the church which was consumed was rebuilt by the munificence of Henry Rogers, as appears by a Latin inscription over the western door. In Budge-row, near the eastern end of Watling-street, at the corner of Size-lane, stands the parish church of St. Anthony, corruptly called St. Antholin's, or St. Antlin's: it is a rectory, with St. John the Baptist, value 20*l*. 2*s*. 8*d*., in the patronage of the Crown and the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's alternately. The church being destroyed by the fire of London, was rebuilt in 1682.

14. Cornhill Ward.

This ward is so called from the principal street in it, which in ancient times was a market for corn. It is bounded on the east by Bishopsgate ward; on the north by Broad-street ward; on the west by Cheap ward; and on the south by Langbourn ward. It is of very small extent, but is divided into four precincts, and has an alderman, his deputy, six common-councilmen, including the deputy, sixteen wardmote inquestmen, &c. The jury men, who are returned by the wardmote, are to serve in the several courts in Guildhall in the month of January. On the northern side of Cornhill are several lanes and courts; as Finch-lane, Freeman's-court, Sweeting's-alley, Castle-alley, and Bank-street, most of which are inhabited by merchants of eminence. On the southern side are Birchin-lane, 'Change-alley, Pope's-head-alley, &c.

Pope's-head-alley was so named from a noted tavern bearing that sign:—wine was here sold in the reign of Henry VI. for one penny a pint, and bread given into the bargain. In the reign of Charles II. tea was sold only by Thomas Garraway in Exchange-alley, which is still noted for the coffee-houses called Garraway's, Baker's, &c., intended for the accommodation of merchants and brokers, who assemble from all parts of the world. In the centre of the street between Cornhill, Leadenhall-, Bishopsgate- and Gracechurch-streets, stood the water Standard, a conduit erected in 1582, to which water was conveyed from the works erected by Peter Morris at the northern end of Old London-bridge. The bourse or meeting place for merchants was anciently situated in Lombard-street, till Sir Thomas Gresham in the year 1567 erected a spacious edifice for this purpose in Cornhill, which was no sooner finished than Queen Elizabeth honoured it with the title of the Royal Exchange. This building being consumed in the fire of London, the present edifice was completed in 1669, as appears from an inscription above the inner side of the southern entrance. The vaults underneath the Exchange are used as magazines for pepper by the East India Company. Sir Thomas Gresham in 1581 also founded a college for lectures in astronomy, divinity, music, geometry, law, physic, and rhetoric; the lecturers were first chosen in 1597, and a salary assigned; the lectures to be read during Term time in the Royal Exchange. The parish churches in this ward are St. Michael's and St. Peter's. St. Michael's in Cornhill is a rectory, value 35*l.* 1*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Drapers' Company: it was rebuilt after the fire of London. The tower of this church is very beautiful: in the chancel Robert Fabian, Alderman, the historian, was buried in 1511.

St. Peter's in Cornhill is a rectory, value 39*l.* 5*s.* 7*d.*, in the patronage of the lord mayor and aldermen. The church stands near the south-eastern corner of Cornhill; and if an inscribed tablet of brass hanging in the church can be relied on, it is one of the most ancient of the Christian churches in Britain: this tablet however is supposed to have been a fabrication, about the time of Henry VI. The old edifice was destroyed by the fire in 1666, soon after which the present structure was erected.

15. Cripplegate Ward.

This ward takes its name from a gate so named on account of the number of cripples who formerly begged here. It was rebuilt in 1491, and was repaired in 1663, but has long been removed. The ward of Cripplegate is bounded on the east by Bassishaw and Coleman-street wards; on the north by the parish of St. Luke Old-street; on the west by Aldersgate ward; and on the south by Cheap ward. It consists of two parts, Cripplegate Within, and Cripplegate Without the walls of the city, and is divided into thirteen precincts, viz. nine within the walls, and four without, and is governed by an alderman; and within the gate, by eight common-councilmen, fifteen wardmote inquestmen, &c. The jury men, who are returned by the wardmote, are to serve in the several courts in Guildhall in the month of March. Sion College in London Wall was built on the site of Elsing Spital, founded in 1329, and dedicated to the Virgin Mary, by William Elsing, mercer, who became the first prior. Long after its dissolution, in the reign of Henry VIII., Sion College was founded by Dr. Thomas White, vicar of St. Dunstan's in the West: it was incorporated in 1630; the fellows are all the incumbents of parishes within the city and its liberties: the Bishop of London is the visitor; and the arms are, Argent, on a chevron between three griffins' heads erased, sable, a leopard's head, or. The seal bears the emblem of the Good Samaritan, with the motto Vade et fac similiter.

To this college belongs a very spacious library, founded by the Rev. John Simpson, rector of St. Olave Hart-street, and one of the executors of Dr. White's will. The whole edifice was rebuilt after the fire of London, when the library was enlarged by numerous benefactions. It is one of the eleven libraries which, under the Act of Queen Anne for the encouragement of literature, can claim a copy of every book published.—Grub-street is celebrated as the supposed residence of unfortunate authors, which has arisen from that term being used to designate the lowest species of composition: it was the actual residence of Henry Welby, Esq. of Lincolnshire, for forty years, without been seen; he died in 1636, and was buried in the church of St. Giles Cripplegate. Silver-street is so called from having been formerly inhabited by working silversmiths. At the end of Curriers-court in London Wall, is Curriers'-hall. On the southern side of Maiden-lane is Wax-chandlers'-hall; and at the corner of Staining-lane is Haberdashers'-hall. In Adel-street are Brewers'-hall and Plasterers'-hall; and on the western side of Monkwell-street is Barbers'-hall, designed by Inigo Jones. Nearly opposite to this hall are almshouses, founded in 1575 by Sir Ambrose Nicholas, lord mayor. At the north-western corner of Monkwell-street is Lamb's-chapel-court; on the site of St. James's chapel, or the Hermitage in the Wall, which belonged to the abbey of Garendon in Leicestershire. After the Dissolution it was granted to William Lambe, one of the gentlemen of the chapel royal of Henry VIII., who bequeathed the chapel to the Clothworkers' Company. The parish churches within this ward are, St. Alban Wood-street, a rectory, with St. Olave in Silver-street, value 16*l.* 8*s.* 11*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's and Eton College alternately: it formerly belonged to the abbey of St. Albans in Hertfordshire. The church stands on the eastern side of Wood-street, at the corner of Love-lane, on the site of a palace of the Anglo-Saxon King Athelstan: it was rebuilt after the fire of London, in better taste than most of the other churches in the city. The church of St. Olave formerly stood at the corner of Silver-street, but being destroyed by the great fire was not rebuilt; on its site is a burial-place. St. Alphage Aldermanbury, is a rectory, value 8*l.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of London. St. Alphage was an Anglo-Saxon Archbishop of Canterbury, who suffered martyrdom at Greenwich A.D. 1012. The church escaped the fire of London, but was rebuilt in 1770; it stands at the corner of Aldermanbury in London Wall, near Sion College. St. Mary Aldermanbury is a curacy, in the presentation of the parishioners. The church stands between Love-lane and Adel-street, and was rebuilt in 1676, ten years after the fire of London, which destroyed the old church. On the southern side of this edifice was formerly a conduit, originally erected in 1438, for supplying water from Tyburn: it was pulled down in 1730. St. Mary Magdalen, in Milk-street, is a rectory, value 19*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.*, united since the fire of London to St. Lawrence Jewry: the church anciently stood at the western end of the present Honey-lane market. St. Michael, in Wood-street, is a rectory, value 18*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, united with St. Mary Staining: the church stands on the western side of Wood-street, and was rebuilt after the fire of London.

16. Dowgate Ward.

This ward received its name from an ancient gate in the original wall of the city that ran along the northern side of the river Thames. It was called the Dowr-, or Water-gate, and led to a Roman trajec-tus or ferry. The ward is bounded on the east by Candlewick and Bridge wards; on the north by Wallbrook ward; on the west by Vintry ward; and on the south by the river Thames. It is divided into eight precincts, and has an alderman, eight common-councilmen, fourteen wardmote inquestmen, &c. The jury men, who are returned by the wardmote, are to serve in the several courts in Guildhall in the month of October. The ward is nearly square on the plan, and contains within its boundaries Dowgate Hill and Dock, the Steel-yard, Lawrence Pountney-hill, Duxford- or Ducksfoot-lane, Suffolk-lane, Bush-lane, Chequer-yard, and Cloak-lane. At the eastern extremity of this ward, on the river side, is Old Swan-lane and stairs, the ancient Eb-gate. Westward is Cold Harbour, a narrow lane, formerly the site of a mansion, of which mention is made 13 Edward II., when it was let by the name of the Cold Harbrough, in the parish of All Saints ad Faenum: it afterwards became the property of Sir John Pountney, whence it was called Pountney's Inn, and was sold by him to Humphry Bohun Earl of Hereford. In 1397 John Holland Duke of Exeter lodged here, and here entertained his brother-in-law King Richard II. After passing through various hands it became the residence of Cuthbert Tunstall Bishop of Durham, the king having taken Durham House in the Strand into his own hands. In 1553 he was deprived of his bishopric, when Edward VI. granted this house to the Earl of Shrewsbury; it then had the name of Shrewsbury House. At the bottom of this lane, and fronting the Thames, formerly stood Watermen's-hall, now removed to St. Mary-hill. Westward of Cold Harbour is the Steel-yard, a great repository of imported bar iron. The wharf was anciently allotted to the Hanseatic merchants for landing and storing up wheat and other grain, cables, masts, tar, hemp, and other merchandise, imported by the Easterlings; and here stood the hall of the German merchants, called the Staple Hoff, or House of General Trade, from the contraction of which name to Stael Hoof, its appellation Steel-yard is derived; and not from the steel landed here, which formed but a single article of a very extensive commerce. After several revocations and renewals of their charter, the house in 1597 was shut up by Queen Elizabeth, and the German merchants expelled the kingdom. Nearly at the western extremity of this ward, is a lane formerly called Friar's-lane, but now Joiners'-hall-buildings: the hall of the Joiners' Company was destroyed by fire in 1811. On the northern side of Thames-street, in Elbow-lane, is the hall of the Innholders' Company; at a short distance from which is the hall of the Dyers' Company, in Little Elbow-lane. On the western side of Dowgate-hill is Skinners'-hall; northward of which is Tallowchandlers'-hall; opposite to Skinners'-hall is Chequer-yard, which leads to Bush-lane; at its north-eastern angle is Plumbers'-hall. From Bush-lane is a passage into Suffolk-lane, on the eastern side of which stands Merchant Tailors' School, founded in 1651: it was originally kept in a house which had belonged to the Duke of Buckingham, called the Manor of the Rose. Several of the scholars are annually sent to St. John's College Oxford, which was founded by Sir Thomas White chiefly for their use. The examinations called Doctors' Days are held twice every year; and on the 11th of June is held a public examination by the President and Fellows of St. John's College Oxford. The only parish church in this ward is Allhallows the Great, in Thames-street, a rectory, value 41*l.* 18*s.* 1*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. The name anciently was Allhallows ad Fœnum, in the Ropery, from its vicinity to a hay wharf and its situation amongst ropemakers. The present church was erected from designs by Sir Christopher Wren in 1683. Allhallows the Less, which stood eastward of this church, was not rebuilt after the fire of London, when the two parishes were united.

17. Farringdon Ward.

This ward was named from William Farrendon, a goldsmith, whose family were the possessors of it for many years, from the time of King Edward I. It is bounded on the east by Cheapside and Castle Baynard wards; on the north by Aldersgate and Cripplegate wards, and the liberty of St. Martin's le Grand; on the west it is bounded by the ward of Farringdon Without; and on the south by the river Thames. The ward is divided into eighteen precincts, and is governed by an alderman, his deputy, twelve common-councilmen, eighteen wardmote inquestmen, &c. The jurymen, who are returned by the wardmote, are to serve in the several courts in Guildhall in the month of September. The eastern extremity of this ward takes in that part of Cheapside where formerly stood the Cross, a little westward of Bow church: it was one of the crosses originally erected by King Edward I. in memory of his deceased Queen Eleanor in 1290, but had been rebuilt in 1442 by John Hatherley, Lord Mayor, &c., when it was enriched with sculptures, figures representing the Resurrection of Christ, the Virgin Mary, St. Edward the Confessor, &c. &c. In 1643 the puritanical parliament ordered the demolition of all crosses; and the destruction of Cheapside cross was committed to the care of Sir Robert Harlow, who, attended by a troop of horse and two companies of foot, executed his orders most effectually. The Nag's Head Tavern, almost opposite to the cross, was the supposed scene of the consecration of the Protestant bishops at the accession of Elizabeth. A view of this tavern is to be found in a print of Cheapside, showing the public entry of Mary de Medicis, on a visit to her daughter Queen Henrietta Maria, in the reign of Charles I. In Lawrence-lane is another tavern of much antiquity, called the Blossom's Inn, from the very rich border of flowers which adorned the sign of St. Lawrence, agreeably to the legend of his martyrdom, which relates that flowers sprang up on the very spot. At the corner of Wood-street, formerly stood a church dedicated to St. Peter; and in 1401 a license was granted to erect a shed before this church in Cheapside, called the Long Shop; on the site of this building four shops with rooms over them were afterwards erected, which at present remain. Westward from Wood-street is Gutter-lane, on the western side of which is Embroiderers'-hall. Near Foster-lane, in Cheapside, is Saddlers'-hall, situated in a small court, with a gatehouse in front. On the south side of Cheapside is the Old 'Change, where formerly stood the King's Office for receiving bullion in exchange for coin: it was farmed to the citizens of London, who here received the old coining irons, and delivered new ones to all the mints in England. Newgate-street took its name from the gatehouse formerly standing at its western end. On the north side of this street is Bagnio-court; the bagnio here was the first introduced into the capital; it was succeeded by the Hummums in Covent-garden, a corruption from Hummaun, the public bath at Kutaya in Turkey in Asia; Hummaun also signifies a spring. In front of a house at the entrance of Bull-head-court is a sculptured sign of the Porter and Dwarf, portraits of William Evans and Jeffery Hudson, both in the service of King Charles I.: the former seven feet six inches, and the latter three feet nine inches in height. Westward in the same street is only a passage leading to Christchurch; but a new front, with a spacious entrance to the Hospital, is about to be erected. The convent of Grey friars, to which Christchurch anciently belonged, was founded in 1225. Weever in his Funeral Monuments, says that in the church of the Grey friars were buried four queens, four duchesses, four countesses, one duke, two earls, eight barons, and thirty-five knights; in all, six hundred and sixty-three persons of rank were here interred before the dissolution of the convent. In the choir of the church were nine tombs of marble, enclosed with iron palisades, one tomb coped with iron, and one hundred and forty marble slabs; all which were sold by Sir Martin Bowes, Lord Mayor in 1545, for fifty pounds. Christ's Hospital, on the site of this monastery, was originally granted to the City by Henry VIII. in 1537, and confirmed in 1552 by charter of King Edward VI., who endowed it with lands belonging to the Savoy. Opposite to the new entrance to this hospital, on the south side of Newgate-street, is Warwick-lane, which derives its name from the ancient inn of Richard Nevile, the king-making Earl of Warwick: the memory of the earl is preserved by a sign sculptured in stone at the corner of the street. In this lane, on the western side, is the Old College of Physicians, built from designs by Sir Christopher Wren: on the front is a statue of King Charles II.; and over the gatehouse is a statue of Sir John Cutler. The college was originally situated in Knight Rider-street, and afterwards removed to Amen-corner; this edifice in Warwick-lane was erected after the fire of London, and the college was removed to Pall-Mall East in 1825. Eastward of Warwick-lane is Newgate-market. Before the fire of London this market was held in Newgate-street, at which time Butcherhall-lane was filled with slaughter-houses; and Blowbladder-street was remarkable for bladders hanging in the shop-windows. Further eastward is Pannier-alley, the northern end of which almost faces the southern front of the Post-office. Against one of the houses here, is a sign of the Boy and Pannier, and beneath, the following inscription:—

When you have sought the city round,
Yet still this is the highest ground.
August 27, 1688.

Paternoster-row, the chief seat of the extensive book trade of London, is parallel with Newgate-street on the south; and Canon-alley leads thence into St. Paul's churchyard, in the centre of which is the cathedral church of St. Paul. The cathedral was originally encompassed by a wall, which extended from the north-eastern corner of Ave Maria-lane eastward along Paternoster-row to the northern end of the Old 'Change in Cheapside, whence it ran southward to Carter-lane, and passing on the north side of it to Creed-lane, turned up to Ludgate-street. To this wall there were six gate-houses, the principal of which stood near the end of Creed-lane in Ludgate-street; the second was at St. Paul's-alley, in Paternoster-row; the third at Canon-alley; the fourth, called the Little-gate, was at the entrance from Cheapside; the fifth, called St. Austin's, led from Watling-street; and the sixth was fronting the southern door of the church, near Paul's Chain. In the middle of the churchyard, within the northern side of the close, stood a pulpit-cross, at which sermons were preached weekly; and here was held the Folkmote, or general convention of citizens. At the north-western corner of the churchyard was the bishop's palace, contiguous to which, on the east, was Pardon church-haw, where Gilbert Becket founded a chapel in the reign of Stephen. The chapel was rebuilt in the reign of Henry V. by Thomas Moore, Dean of St. Paul's, who also built a cloister, on the walls of which was painted the Dance of Death, a common subject, which, from the sentences originally written in German by Machaber, was frequently denominated the Machabry. On the eastern side of the churchyard was a clozier, or bell-tower, wherein were four great bells, called Jesus' bells, as belonging to Jesus chapel in St. Faith's church. On the anniversary of the conversion of St. Paul, held in the cathedral, a fat buck was annually received with great formality at the steps of the choir by the canons in their sacred vestments, with garlands of flowers on their heads. Camden, who was an eye-witness of this solemnity, says, that the horns of the buck were carried on a pike in procession round the choir, with horns blowing, &c.: on the buck being offered at the high altar, a shilling fee was ordered by the Dean and Chapter for the foresters who brought it, which concluded the ceremony: this custom originated in the reign of Edward I., by a grant from Sir William le Baud, in 1274. King James I. appointed Sunday, March 26th, 1620, to be present at divine service in St. Paul's Cathedral: His Majesty came hither on horseback, attended by the principal nobility and officers of his Court, and was met by the lord mayor, aldermen, and livery, in their formalities, at the western door. When the King entered the church he kneeled near the brazen pillar and prayed; then he was received under a canopy, supported by the dean and residentiaries, the prebends and dignitaries, with the whole company of singing-men, advancing before His Majesty to the choir, which on this occasion was hung with rich tapestry. Here the King heard an anthem, and then proceeded to the Cross, where the Bishop of London preached a sermon from a text given him by His Majesty, Psalm cii. 13, 14, which sermon was afterwards circulated with considerable effect in the promotion of public zeal through the whole kingdom. After divine service was ended, the King and the whole Court were entertained at the bishop's palace. At the same time it was agreed to issue a commission under the great seal to raise money for carrying the repairs of the church into execution: but it was found, says our authority, that the ruin of the bishop and principal dignitaries was chiefly aimed at, and therefore the commission came to nothing. Inigo Jones, surveyor-general to King Charles I., afterwards erected a portico of the Corinthian order at the western end of the cathedral. The whole was destroyed by the fire of London, after which it was rebuilt by Sir Christopher Wren, and will be found described under the See of London. Fronting the eastern end of the cathedral is St. Paul's School, founded in 1509 by Dr. John Colet, Dean of St. Paul's, rebuilt in 1670, and again in 1824. At the western end of St. Paul's churchyard is Ludgate-street, which extends westward to Farringdon-street, and Bridge-street Blackfriars: on the northern side of this street, in Stationers' court, is Stationers' hall; and adjoining St. Martin's church formerly stood Lud-gate, opposite to which, within the walls of the city, was situated the house of the Dominicans, or Friars Preachers, called the Convent of the Black Friars, founded about the year 1276, by Robert Kilwarby, Archbishop of Canterbury: its precinct, which was very extensive, was surrounded by a wall with four gates, and contained a number of shops, let to non-freemen, who were subject only to the King, the superior of the house, and their own justices. The privileges of the Black Friars' precinct were preserved long after the dissolution of monasteries. In the reign of Elizabeth it was celebrated for three things,—the theatre, a number of puritans, and the sale of feathers; the two latter professions being often united in the same persons. At present it is included in this ward, by the name of the precinct of St. Anne Blackfriars, the church of which being destroyed by the fire of London, was not rebuilt, and the parish was annexed to that of St. Andrew Wardrobe, in Castle Baynard ward. In the priory church, which was very large, were held several parliaments and other meetings. The Black Parliament was begun at Blackfriars in 1524; and in 1529 Cardinals Wolsey and Campeius sat at Blackfriars to annul the marriage of King Henry VIII. In the month of October of the same year the Parliament which condemned Wolsey in a præmunire met here. Within this precinct, on the eastern side of Water-lane, stands Apothecaries' hall. The parishes in this ward are the following:—St. Augustine, in Watling-street, a rectory, with St. Faith, value 19*l.* 16*s.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of St.

Paul's: the old church was destroyed by the fire of London, on the site of which, at the corner of Watling-street and the Old 'Change, the present edifice was erected. The church of St. Faith the Virgin, originally a distinct building, was demolished about the year 1256, to enlarge the cathedral, when a place of worship was granted to the parishioners in the eastern part of the crypt of St. Paul's, under the choir, where divine service continued to be performed until the cathedral was destroyed by the fire of London; after which, this parish being united to St. Austin's, the parishioners were considered to be no longer in want of a church: it is a rectory, value 23*l.* 17*s.* 1*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's. Part of the churchyard belonging to St. Faith's parish was taken to enlarge the street at the eastern end of St. Paul's churchyard; the remainder lies within the enclosure, and serves as a burial-place for the parishioners of St. Faith. Christchurch, in Newgate-street, is a vicarage, with St. Leonard, value 26*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the governors of Christchurch Hospital and the Dean and Chapter of Westminster alternately. The church originally belonged to the convent of Grey Friars or Franciscans, but at the Dissolution it was granted to the corporation of London for a parish church, in lieu of the churches of St. Ewen, near the corner of Eldenness, now Warwick-lane, and St. Nicholas in the shambles, both which were then demolished; and as much of St. Sepulchre's parish as laid within Newgate was added to the newly-erected parish called Christchurch. The old church was destroyed by the fire of London, after which the present was erected. St. Martin, in Ludgate-street, is a rectory, value 33*l.* 17*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of London. The church stands at a short distance westward from Stationers' court; the tower is surmounted by a spire one hundred and sixty-eight feet in height, and at the same time elegant in its proportions.

St. Matthew, Friday-street, is a rectory, with St. Peter, value 21*l.* 7*s.* 3*d.*, in the patronage of the Duke of Buccleuch and the Bishop of London alternately. The old church was destroyed by the fire of London, and the present structure was afterwards erected upon its site. St. Peter, Westcheap, anciently belonged to the abbot and convent of St. Albans; but after the suppression of the monastery King Henry VIII. granted it to the Earl of Southampton, from whence it has descended to the Duke of Buccleuch: the church not being rebuilt after the great fire, the parish was united to that of St. Matthew. St. Vedast, in Foster-lane, is a rectory, with St. Michael le Querne, value 33*l.* 5*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury and the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's alternately. The church was not entirely destroyed by the fire of London, but it received very considerable damage, and was afterwards repaired. The old steeple remained till the year 1694, when it was rebuilt at the expense of the parishioners. This tower and spire is one of Sir Christopher Wren's best designs; the beautiful pyramidal form is more striking, and exhibits better effect, than similar edifices usually produce, particularly since the situation has been exposed by the formation of the court-yard on the southern front of the Post-office. The church of St. Michael le Querne, or at Corn, stood at the western end of Cheapside, fronting the street, near which was formerly a corn-market, that extended westward to the shambles or flesh-market; but not being rebuilt after the great fire, its site was laid into the street, in pursuance of the Act for rebuilding the city of London.

18. Langbourn Ward.

This ward takes its name from a rivulet which had its source at a spring near Church-row, adjoining to the church of St. Catherine Coleman, in Fenchurch-street: this bourn flowed westward from the spring through Lombard-street, as far as the church of St. Mary Woolnoth, where turning southward it gave name to Shirebourn-lane, as dividing this ward from that of Wallbrook, into which the rivulet discharged itself. By the spreading of this stream near the spring-head in Fenchurch-street, the ward was sometimes denominated Fenny-about. It is bounded on the east by Aldgate ward; on the south by Tower-street, Billingsgate, Candlewick, and Bridge ward Within; on the west by Wallbrook ward; and on the north by Aldgate and Lime-street wards. It is divided into twelve precincts, and is governed by an alderman, his deputy, ten common-councilmen, seventeen wardmote inquestmen, &c. The jury-men, who are returned by the wardmote, are to serve in the courts in Guildhall in the month of November. One of the principal streets in this ward is Lombard-street, which obtained its name from the Italian merchants, or Lombards, who settled here as early as the reign of Edward II., and were the original bankers. These Lombard bankers were in general Jews. In this street are several lanes filled with the houses of merchants and respectable traders; those on the southern side are St. Swithin's-lane, Shirborne-lane, Abchurch-lane, St. Nicholas-lane, and St. Clement's-lane; those on the northern side are Pope's-head-alley, 'Change-alley, Birchin-lane, and George-yard. The Post-office was formerly situated in Lombard-street, and occupied the whole space between Abchurch-lane and Shirborne-lane, whence it was removed to the building erected by Smirke in St. Martin's le Grand in 1827. The house in which the office was held from the time of Queen Anne still remains. It is one of those built immediately after the great fire. It was for some years the residence of Sir Robert Vyner, a jovial citizen, the very knight who, on one occasion during his mayoralty, being Bacchi plenum, plucked his sovereign by the sleeve and insisted the King should "stay and take t'other bottle." Sir Robert Vyner, like other citizens of renown, had a frugal mind; for when it became necessary to rebuild his house in London, he purchased an old manor-house of the Cromers, at Tunstall in Kent, which he forthwith pulled down, and prudently conveyed the materials to London to be used in the erection of his new mansion; and this he raised upon the exact spot where the house had formerly stood, in the same narrow Lombard-street which existed before the fire. So many additions to the old edifice were made for the greater convenience of transacting the important business of the Post-office, that at this time the walls of the original mansion are not very easily to be discerned; but in the court-yard is a large door-way, used as the entrance to the Secretary's office while it was the Post-office, which may be perhaps the identical portal where the royal carriage waited whilst His Majesty so gaily returned to the table of his host, singing a line of an old song, "He that is drunk is as great as a king." The rooms of the ancient mansion are spacious, and exhibit a certain degree of grandeur in the architectural enrichments, much like the works of Sir Christopher Wren, who it is not improbable designed the building. Amongst all the additions to the house of Sir Robert Vyner, for the purpose of transacting the business of the Post-office, the most important was the Inland-office, constructed from designs by the late J. T. Groves: this has been entirely removed; and in the change about to take place in forming the new street from London-bridge to the Mansion-house, the rest of the building is likely soon to share the same fate. More eastward, in Lombard-street, are the Phoenix Fire-office, and the Pelican Insurance-office. In Fenchurch-street are several streets and lanes, which are well inhabited: on the southern side are Philpot-lane, Rood-lane, Mincing-lane, and Mark-lane; and on the northern side are Lime-street, Cullum-street, &c. On the northern side of Fenchurch-street, at the upper end of Culver-court, is a hall belonging to the Hudson's Bay Company; and on the western side of Lime-street is Pewterers'-hall. Nearly opposite the west end of Fenchurch-street, in Gracechurch-street, is White-hart-court, on one side of which is the principal meeting-house of the Quakers in the city of London. The parishes in Langbourn ward are Allhallows Lombard-street, a rectory, value 22*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury. The church stands at the east end of the north side of the street, and was the very last rebuilt after the fire of London had destroyed the old church: it was not completed till the year 1694. Allhallows Staining is a rectory, not in charge, in the patronage of the Grocers' Company. The church is situated near the northern end of Mark-lane: the epithet of Stane, now corrupted to Staining, is supposed to have been given to the church on account of its being built with stone, and to distinguish it from the other church, dedicated in the same manner to All Saints. The rectory, which formerly belonged to the abbot and convent of Grace near the Tower, and devolving to the Crown at the Dissolution, was sold by King James I. in 1607 to George Bingley; and coming afterwards into the possession of Lady Slany, was by her bequeathed to the Grocers' Company. The church escaped the fire of London, but was taken down, and has been rebuilt since that period. St. Dionys Backchurch, in Lime-street, is a rectory, value 25*l.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury. The church stands near the south-western corner of Lime-street, behind the houses in Fenchurch-street, whence the epithet of Backchurch was added to that of St. Dionys. The church was destroyed by the fire of London, and was rebuilt in 1674, excepting the tower, which was erected about ten years afterwards. St. Edmund the King, Lombard-street, is a rectory, in the patronage of the Crown, value 21*l.* 14*s.* 2*d.*, in the patronage of the

and the Archbishop of Canterbury alternately. The church is situated between Birchin-lane and George-yard, and was erected on the remains of the old church, which was destroyed by the fire of London: it stands due north and south, the altar being placed at the northern end of the church. This parish is united with that of St. Nicholas Acons, the church of which before the great fire stood on the western side of Nicholas-lane. St. Gabriel, Fenchurch-street, is a rectory, value 12*l.*, united since the fire of London to St. Margaret Pattens. The church, which formerly stood in the middle of the street, was not rebuilt. St. Mary Woolnoth is a rectory, with St. Mary Woolchurch-haw, value 25*l.*, in the patronage of the Crown and J. Thornton, Esq. alternately. The church stands on the southern side of Lombard-street; and it was formerly near a woolstaple, which is indicated by the addition of noth, corrupted from neath or near. The Woolstaple, or place for weighing wool, stood formerly in the churchyard of St. Mary Woolchurch-haw, eastward of Stock's-market, and of the present Mansion-house. The church was not entirely destroyed by the fire of London, and after that event the old walls were repaired. It was one of the fifty new churches appointed by Parliament to be erected within the Bills of Mortality in the year 1719: and in digging the foundation of the new edifice, there were found a number of bones of animals, some tessellated work, and a variety of Roman earthen vessels; and at the bottom was discovered a well, full of rubbish, which being removed, a very fine spring of water arose. A pump has been placed at the west end of the church. The edifice was built from designs by Hawksmoor, in a bold and majestic style, and is seen to advantage in consequence of the modern improvements. Many houses have been removed at the entrance of Lombard-street, which formerly obscured the view of this really noble edifice.

19. Lime-street Ward.

The street which gave name to this ward is supposed to have been so called from persons making or selling lime here. It is bounded on the north and east by Aldgate ward; on the west by Bishopsgate ward; and on the south by Langbourn ward. It is divided into four precincts, and is governed by an alderman, his deputy, four common-councilmen, including the deputy, sixteen wardmote inquestmen, &c. The jurymen, who are returned by the wardmote, are to serve in the several courts in Guildhall in the month of November. There is neither a church nor a whole street in this ward. The church of St. Augustine in the Wall is demolished, and the parish is united with Allhallows London Wall, and St. Mary Axe; another parish is united with St. Andrew Undershaft. Leadenhall-market is situated on the southern side of Leadenhall-street: its site was anciently a manor-house belonging to the Nevilles, and was purchased by the munificent Whittington in the year 1409, who afterwards presented it to the City. In 1419, Sir Simon Eyre erected a public granary on the spot, and also built a chapel. It is at present supposed to be the most extensive market for provisions in Europe. The whole consists of three courts or yards, the Beef-market, the Green-yard, and the Herb-market; it was partly rebuilt in 1730; this is called The New Market, or Nashe's Rent; there is also a part called The Old Bacon-market. On the same side of Leadenhall-street, more eastward, is the East India House, rebuilt in 1799: it occupies the site of a house and gardens formerly belonging to the Earls of Craven, of whom the Company rented it prior to the year 1726, when the old East India House was built; but the first association for prosecuting trade between England and India was formed in London in the year 1599, who in the following year were incorporated as the Governor and Company of merchants of London trading to the East Indies. In 1804, about ten feet below the surface of the street, in front of the East India House, was discovered a Roman tessellated pavement, about nine feet square. In the centre is a figure of Bacchus, holding a thyrsus and goblet, and sitting on a tiger. Fragments of an urn were found at the same time.

20. Portsoken Ward.

This ward takes its name from being situated entirely without the walls of the city; Port Soken signifying a franchise or liberty at the gate. It was anciently a knighten guild, being held by thirteen knights by grant by King Edgar. In 1115 these knights surrendered their soke to the priory of the Holy Trinity within Aldgate, from which time the prior of that convent was admitted an alderman of London, and as such sat in court; but after the dissolution of the priory in 1531, the ward was governed by a secular person, elected by the citizens as usual in other cases. The ancient bounds of the knighten guild were of greater extent than those of the ward, and included all East Smithfield and St. Katherine's, with the mills founded in the reign of Stephen, together with the outward stone wall and ditch of the Tower; but part of these were afterwards withheld by the Constables of the Tower. The ward is now bounded on the east by the parishes of Spitalfields, Stepney, and St. George's in the East; on the north by Bishopsgate ward; on the west by Aldgate ward; and on the south by Tower-hill. It has an alderman, his deputy, and five common-councilmen, including the deputy. The jurymen, who are returned by the wardmote, are to serve in the several courts in Guildhall in the month of January. The ward is divided into five precincts, and the principal streets within its limits are Whitechapel as far as the Bars, the Minories, and Houndsditch. Whitechapel, the principal entrance into London from the county of Essex, &c., takes its name from the church of St. Mary Matfellow, originally a chapel of St. Dunstan's parish, Stepney, which from its colour was called the White Chapel. The southern side of this street is a large market for butchers' meat, and beyond the Bars is a market for hay and straw three times a week. Parallel to the old city wall, between Whitechapel and Little Tower-hill, is the Minories, a street so called from a convent of nuns of the order of St. Clare or Minoresses, founded in 1293 by Blanch of Navarre, wife of Edmund Earl of Lancaster. After its suppression the King granted the convent to several persons, who inhabited it. It was once the residence of the Bishops of Bath and Wells, who had it in lieu of their palace in the Strand. In 1552 Henry Grey Duke of Suffolk possessed it, by grant from King Edward VI.; on the Duke's attainder it reverted to the Crown. Soon after the Restoration it was rebuilt, and called the King's House: King Charles II. granted it to William Legge, one of the grooms of the bed-chamber in 1661, who died there in 1672. The western side of the Minories has been rebuilt with uniform houses, and streets have been made leading into Crutched Friars. On the western side also are America-square, the Crescent, and the Circus, of comparatively modern erection. On the eastern side of the Minories is a passage leading to the Little Minories, in which is the parish church of the Holy Trinity, a curacy, in the presentation of the Crown. This church stands on part of the site of the convent of Minoresses: it was rebuilt in 1706, and contains monuments of the Legge family, now Earls of Dartmouth. This parish being the Close of the monastery, is a particular liberty, exempt from the jurisdiction of London, although part of Portsoken ward.

Houndsditch also runs parallel to the city wall, and extends from Whitechapel to Bishopsgate-street. It was first paved in the year 1503. At the south-eastern corner of this street stands the parish church of St. Botolph Aldgate, a curacy: it is one of four churches in London, dedicated to Botolph, a British saint, the reputed founder of Boston in Lincolnshire; the other churches in this city of his name were Aldersgate, Billingsgate, and Bishopsgate. This church was rebuilt in 1744.

Nearly half of this parish, called the Liberty of East Smithfield, is in the Tower division of the hundred of Ossulston in Middlesex. In the reign of Henry III. this place was an open field, in which was held an annual fair, from the eve of Pentecost to the octaves of the Holy Trinity,—fifteen days. It is now divided into lanes, courts, &c. southward of Rosemary-lane, which is commonly known as Rag-fair; on the north side of this lane is a building called the Clothes Exchange.

Part of Whitechapel only is in the ward of Portsoken. On the southern side of this street stands the parish church of St. Mary Matfellow, or St. Mary Whitechapel, a rectory, in the patronage of Brasenose College Oxford: it was rebuilt about 1674. This parish, exempt from arch-diaconal jurisdiction, is subject only to the Bishop or his commissary; and in testimony of their obedience to the mother church, the parishioners anciently went in solemn procession annually at the feast of Pentecost to St. Paul's Cathedral, and made oblation. In 1541, when the conventual church of St. Peter Westminster was erected into a cathedral by Henry VIII., with the county of Middlesex, in which this parish is situated, for its diocese, the inhabitants repaired thither as they had formerly done to St. Paul's: this practice was abolished upon their agreeing to offer fifteen-pence at the high altar of Westminster during divine service, at the accustomed festival. In this parish is the London Hospital, one of the most extensive charitable foundations in the kingdom, supported by voluntary contribution alone: it was instituted in 1740.

Near the western end of this hospital was formerly Whitechapel-mound, which originated in the quantity of rubbish deposited here after the great fire of London. The mound has been removed nearly thirty years since, and rows of houses are built on its site. Westward, on the same side of the road, are alms-houses, founded by William Meggs, for twelve widows; nearly opposite to which is a free-school, founded in 1680, by the Rev. Ralph Davenant, rector of this parish. The parish of St. Mary Whitechapel extends to Goodman's-fields and Rosemary-lane. Goodman's-fields was a farm belonging to the convent of Minoresses, or nuns of St. Clare. Goodman, the farmer who occupied the grounds, here kept "thirty or forty kine" to supply this part of the town with milk. The farm has long been covered with buildings, but a square in the centre still retains the name of Goodman's fields; it is surrounded by Mansell-street, Ayliffe-street, Leman-street, and Prescott-street.

Between East Smithfield and Tower-hill once stood a religious house, founded by King Edward III., called by the several names of the New Abbey, the Abbey of Grace, and East Minster. On its site, after the Dissolution, was erected the King's Victualling-office; but the commissioners having removed to Somerset-place, it was afterwards used as a tobacco warehouse. In Well-street, near the eastern end of Rosemary-lane, stood the Royalty Theatre, built in 1786, which was destroyed by fire about 1826; on the site of which was afterwards erected the theatre intended to be called the Brunswick Theatre, in which performances commenced 25th February, 1828. It existed only three nights; and on 28th February, during a rehearsal, the whole theatre fell to the ground: the architect was Stedman Whitwell. Welclose-square has in its centre the Mariner's church, originally erected in 1746 as a Danish church. Further eastward is Princes-square, in which is a Swedish church. The southern extremity of this parish is bounded by the Tower of London. In the ward of Portsoken and in the parish of St. Botolph Aldgate are two schools, one within the freedom of the city, founded by Sir John Cass, alderman; the other in the liberty of East Smithfield, founded by Sir Samuel Starling in 1673, upon Little Tower-hill.

21. Queenhithe Ward.

This ward takes its name from a water-gate or harbour, called anciently Edred's Hithe, afterwards Queenhithe, and Ripa Reginae, the revenues of it being settled upon Eleanor of Provence, Queen of Henry III. In his reign orders were issued to the Constable of the Tower to seize the vessels of the cinque ports and others laden with corn and fish, if the cargoes were not brought to the Queen's hithe to be unloaded. It came into the possession of the citizens of London, by grant from Richard Earl of Cornwall to John Gisors, then mayor, which grant was confirmed on 26th February, 1246; and since the time of King Edward I. the charge of the haven has been committed to the sheriff. The ward is bounded on the east by Dowgate ward; on the north by Bread-street and Cordwainer-street wards; on the west by Castle Baynard ward; and on the south by the river Thames. It is divided into nine precincts, and is governed by an alderman, six common-councilmen, thirteen wardmote inquest-men, &c. The jurymen, who are returned by the wardmote, are to serve in the several courts in Guildhall in the month of October. The principal streets in this ward are Knight-Rider-street, Old Fish-street, Thames-street, Great and Little Trinity-lanes, Bread-street-hill, and Lambeth-hill. Thames-street runs through the centre of this ward, and contains several lanes that lead to Wood wharf, Broken wharf, Brooker's wharf, Brook's wharf, Queenhithe, &c., on the river side. On the western side of Little Trinity-lane is Painter-stainers'-hall; and on the western side of Lambeth-hill is Blacksmiths'-hall. The parishes in this ward are St. Mary Mount-haw, a rectory, value 6*l.* 10*s.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Hereford. The church being destroyed, it has been united since the fire of London to St. Mary Somerset, a rectory, value 10*l.* 10*s.* The church is situated in Thames-street, opposite to Broken wharf.

The additional epithet of Somerset is supposed to be a corruption of Somers Hithe, a small port, so called from its owner Somers. It was rebuilt soon after the great fire. The church of St. Mary Mount-haw stood on the eastern side of Fish-street-hill; the site is now a burial-place for the parishioners. The addition of Mount-haw arose from its having been originally a domestic chapel, attached to the mansion belonging to Monthaut or Moutalt, a baronial family of Norfolk, but purchased by the Bishop of Hereford about 1234, who settled it on the see. St. Michael, at Queenhithe, is a rectory, value 16*l.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's and the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury alternately. The church is situated in Thames-street, immediately opposite to Queenhithe, whence the addition to its name. It was destroyed by the fire of London, after which the present edifice was erected: the height of the tower and spire is one hundred and thirty-five feet. The parish is now united to that of St. Trinity the Less, the church of which being burnt, was not rebuilt. Some German merchants purchased the site and erected a Lutheran church, still used. St. Nicholas Cole Abbey is a rectory with St. Nicholas Olave, value 18*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown and the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's alternately. The church stands on the southern side of Old Fish-street, at the corner of Labour-in-vain-hill: it was rebuilt after the fire of London, and was the first church completed after that event. The church of St. Nicholas Olave stood on the western side of Bread-street-hill, where the burial-ground now is. St. Peter, near Paul's wharf, is a rectory, value 9*l.* 4*s.* 2*d.*, united since the fire of London to St. Benet.

22. Tower-street Ward.

This ward, in the eastern part of the city, takes its name from a street leading in a direct line to the Tower of London. It is bounded on the east by Tower-hill and part of Aldgate ward; on the north by Langbourn ward; on the west by Billingsgate ward; and on the south by the river Thames. The precincts of this ward are twelve, and it is governed by an alderman, twelve common-councilmen, thirteen wardmote inquestmen, &c. The jurymen, who are returned by the wardmote, are to serve in the several courts in Guildhall in the month of May. Within the boundaries of Tower-street ward are contained a great number of streets, the principal of which are Tower-street, part of Thames-street, Seething-lane, Mark-lane, Hart-street, Idol-lane, St. Dunstan's-hill, Harp-lane, &c. On the southern side of Thames-street is the Custom-house; it was destroyed by fire in 1814, and was rebuilt in 1817, from designs by David Laing; and towards the river is a wharf more than forty feet in width. The first Custom-house in London was built in 1559; it was burnt down in 1718, and rebuilt the same year. At the west end of Thames-street is Idol-lane, between which and St. Dunstan's-hill is the Coal Meters'-office, in which are entered all ships that arrive in the port of London with coals. Further eastward is Harp-lane, on the eastern side of which is Bakers'-hall. Opposite Custom-house Quay is Water-lane, which leads up a winding hill to Tower-street. In this lane formerly stood the Trinity-house, now removed to Tower-hill. On the northern side of Tower-street is Mincing-, or Minching-lane, on the eastern side of which, near the northern end, is Clothworkers'-hall. Mark-, or Mart-lane, is next to Mincing-lane, and derived its name from a mart or free market kept here. On the eastern side of it, near Tower-street, is the Corn Exchange; on the opposite side of the street is a new Corn Exchange, erected in 1828, from designs by George Smith. Seething-lane also leads out of Tower-street to Hart-street and Crutched-friars. In Hart-street stood the house of Sir Richard Whittington, lord mayor, which formerly surrounded a court. The parishes in this ward are the following:—Allhallows Barking, a vicarage, value 36*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown: it formerly belonged to the abbess and convent of Barking in Essex, whence its present name. It is one of the few churches in the city which escaped the fire of London; and underwent a considerable repair in 1814. The church stands at the south-eastern corner of Seething-lane, Tower-street. St. Dunstan's-in-the-East is a rectory, value 60*l.* 7*s.* 11*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. The church stands on St. Dunstan's-hill; it suffered greatly by the fire of London, but was not entirely destroyed: the tower and spire were erected from designs by Sir Christopher Wren about 1678, after the model of that of St. Nicholas at Newcastle-on-Tyne; it is one hundred and twenty-five feet high. The body of the church was rebuilt, in the pointed style of architecture, in 1820, from designs by David Laing. The eastern window, of painted glass, contains figures of Jesus Christ and the Evangelists, in five lights, with the arms of the Archbishop of Canterbury, the royal arms, and those of the city of London, in the head of the arch; but they are undeserving of praise. St. Olave, in Hart-street, is a rectory with St. Nicholas, value 17*l.* 14*s.* 2*d.* This church escaped the fire of London; since which time it has had several repairs and additions. St. Peter ad Vincula, within the Tower, a rectory, value 18*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown, is also considered to be within the boundaries of this ward. It had long been a matter of doubt whether the Tower of London was in the city, but it was finally determined in the year 1615 upon the trial of the murderers of Sir Thomas Overbury, who was poisoned in a chamber situated on the western part of the ancient wall of London, which extended through the Tower; when it was adjudged that all that portion of the Tower of London which is within the said wall, or on the western part of it, is within the city, within the ward of Tower-street and parish of All Saints Barking, and that the rest of the Tower of London, eastward of the ancient wall, is within the county of Middlesex. The murderers were therefore tried in London.

23. Vintry Ward.

The name of this ward is derived from the Vintry on the banks of the river Thames, where the merchants of Bordeaux landed their wine. This spot, below Southwark-bridge, was at the southern end of Three Cranes-lane, so called from the cranes with which the wine was landed. In Thames-street, opposite College-hill, stood the Vintry, where the wine was afterwards stowed. Henry Picard, who had been lord mayor in 1356, here entertained the Kings of England, Scotland, France, and Cyprus, in 1363. This ward is bounded on the east by Wallbrook and Dowgate wards; on the north by Cordwainers' ward; on the west by Queenhithe ward; and on the south by the river Thames. It is divided into nine precincts, and is governed by an alderman, nine common-councilmen, fourteen wardmote inquestmen, &c. The jurymen, who are returned by the wardmote, are to serve in the several courts in Guildhall in the month of April. The principal streets in Vintry ward are part of Thames-street, Great St. Thomas Apostle, Garlick-hill, and College-hill, but only the lower part of Queen-street Cheapside is in this ward. At the southern extremity of this street is Southwark-bridge, executed from the designs and under the direction of John Rennie; it was completed in 1819. At the foot of the bridge, in Thames-street, stands Vintners'-hall, erected on the site of the house of Sir John Stody, lord mayor in 1357, who gave his manor of the Vintry to the company. The parish church of St. Martin Vintry formerly stood eastward of the hall, on the open space at the foot of the bridge; the church was destroyed in the fire of London, and the parish is now united to that of St. Michael Royal. On the southern side of Cloak-lane is Cutlers'-hall. The church of St. Thomas Apostle stood on the north side of the street of that name before the fire of London; but not being rebuilt, the parish is united to that of St. Mary Aldermary. The Tower Royal, formerly situated at the northern end of the street, now called by that name, was a spacious mansion belonging to the Kings of England. Vide p. 67 ante. The parish churches in this ward are the following:—St. James the Less, Garlick-hithe, a rectory, value 17*l.* 14*s.* 7*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of London. This church received its additional appellation from its vicinity to a Garlick-market and wharf on the bank of the river, to which Garlick-hill formerly led; it was rebuilt after the fire of London, and was completed in 1682. The steeple is ninety-eight feet high; on the top of the dial is a figure of the saint. St. Michael Royal, Paternoster, is a rectory with St. Martin Vintry, value 7*l.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury and the Bishop of Worcester alternately. The church stands on the eastern side of College-hill, and is denominated Royal from its vicinity to the Tower Royal. In the old church was buried Sir Richard Whittington, four times lord mayor of London: the present edifice was erected after the great fire.

24. Wallbrook Ward.

The name of this ward is derived from a rivulet rising on the north of Moorfields, called Wall brook, on account of its entering the city through the wall between Bishopsgate and Moorgate; it directed its course along the street called by the same name, and emptied itself into the Thames westward of Dowgate; anciently this stream was open, with several bridges over it, but it has long been entirely arched over. Wallbrook ward is bounded on the east by Langbourn and Candlewick-street wards; on the north by Cheap ward; on the west by Cordwainers'-street ward; and on the south by Dowgate ward. It is divided into seven precincts, and is governed by an alderman, eight common-councilmen, thirteen wardmote inquestmen, &c. The jurymen, who are returned by the wardmote, are to serve in the several courts in Guildhall in the month of October. The principal streets are Wallbrook, Bucklersbury, Budge-row, Dowgate-hill, Cannon-street, Bearbinder-lane, St. Swithin's-lane, and the western end of Lombard-street. Stock's-market, on the site of which the Mansion-house is erected, was founded in 1282 by Henry Wallis, then mayor, on a piece of ground northward of St. Mary Woolchurch, where formerly had stood a pair of stocks for the punishment of offenders; the name is derived from stock, an old word for fetter. In this market, appointed for the sale of fish and flesh, stood an equestrian statue of King Charles II., set up by Sir Robert Vyner, lord mayor in 1675. In St. Swithin's-lane is Salters'-hall, rebuilt about 1827. The parish churches in this ward are the following:—St. John the Baptist, a rectory, united since the fire of London to St. Anthony in Budge-row, and value 15*l.* 18*s.* 9*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown and the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's alternately. St. Stephen's Wallbrook is a rectory, value 17*l.* 13*s.* 9*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown and the Grocers' Company alternately. The old church being destroyed by the fire of London, the present edifice was erected from designs by Sir Christopher Wren. The body of the church, covered with a dome, is elegant and beautiful, and is certainly one of the best performances of that celebrated architect. After the fire of London, this was also made the parish church of St. Benet Sherehog in Cheap ward, the church of which was not rebuilt. Adjoining the churchyard of St. Stephen is Wallbrook-house, rebuilt in 1667 by Sir Henry Pollexfen, Chief Justice of the Common Pleas. St. Swithin, London Stone, is a rectory with St. Mary Bothaw, value 15*l.* 17*s.* 11*d.*, in the patronage of the Salters' Company and the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury alternately. The church stands at the corner of St. Swithin's-lane, in Cannon-street; it was rebuilt after the fire of London: against the southern wall is now placed the famous London Stone. See p. 67, ante. The parish of St. Swithin is annexed to that of St. Mary Bothaw; the church of which stood, before the great fire, on the eastern side of Turnwheel-lane, near Dowgate-hill. This church took its name from its vicinity to a boat haw, or boatbuilder's yard.

THE CITY OF LONDON WITHOUT THE WALLS.

A large space around the site of the ancient walls of London is within the liberty or freedom of the city, encompassed by an irregular line of separation, which divides the city of London from the county of Middlesex. This line begins at the river Thames, eastward of the Temple, which it surrounds on the eastern and northern sides; then passing through Shire-lane, it comes into Chancery-lane by the Liberty of the Rolls, and thence into Holborn, almost opposite to Gray's-Inn-lane, where there are Bars; hence it winds through Brooke-street, Furnival's-Inn, Leather-lane, Hatton-garden, and Chick-lane, to the river Fleet, whence it returns eastward to Cow-cross and Smithfield-bars. The line is continued between Long-lane and Charterhouse-lane, to Goswell-street, whence it extends across Golden-lane, White-cross-street, and Grub-street, to Moor-gate, and along Eldon-street, dividing it from the manor of Finsbury; it then runs northward to Norton Folgate, and thence through Spital-fields and Wentworth-street to Whitechapel. The line of separation then passes by the Little Minories to Goodman's-fields, whence it returns and abuts on the Tower liberty. The whole extent of ground between the site of the ancient city wall and this line does not exceed three hundred acres, although the length of the line is four miles, fifteen perches, two feet and a half.

The Bills of Mortality were originally instituted in 1592, and continued to the end of 1595. After this they were discontinued until the year 1603; since which time a regular series has been preserved. At first they only included one hundred and nine parishes, but by the gradual addition of others, the whole amounted to one hundred and forty-six in 1810.

The division of Farringdon ward into two, increased the number of wards to twenty-five; and when, in 1550, the liberties of the Borough of Southwark were granted to the mayor, aldermen, and commonalty of the city of London, a twenty-sixth ward was formed by the name of Bridge ward Without.

25. Farringdon Ward Without.

This ward, which is very large, forms the western extremity of the city. In the Anglo-Saxon period of English History, the principal part of London laid westward from Ludgate; and what is now considered the heart of the city, was but thinly inhabited. At this time Canterbury, York, and other cities surpassed London in extent of buildings; but after the Conquest it rapidly increased, and excelled all other cities. Farringdon ward Without extends from the places where Newgate and Ludgate formerly stood, to Temple-bar and Holborn-bars westward, and from Long-lane and Smithfield-bars to the river Thames southward: it is bounded on the east by the ward of Farringdon Within and Aldersgate ward; on the north by the Charterhouse, the parish of St. John Clerkenwell, and part of that of St. Andrew Without the freedom of the city; on the west by the parish of St. Clement Danes; and on the south by the river Thames. Within this district are included the whole precinct of the old priory of St. Bartholomew, part of Long-lane, all Smithfield to the Bars in St. John-street, Holborn to the Bars at the east end of Middle-row, whence the boundary runs southward between Staple's-Inn and Castle-street, and crosses the south end of Chancery-lane towards Temple-bar, and thence to the Thames, where turning easterly it continues its course to the place formerly called Fleet-ditch. The ward is divided into fourteen precincts, and is governed by an alderman, three deputies, sixteen common-councilmen, forty-four inquestmen, &c. The jurymen, who are returned by the inquest, are to serve in the several courts in Guildhall in the month of June. The ward being very extensive is separated into four divisions, St. Andrew the Apostle, St. Bridget's, St. Dunstan in the West, and St. Sepulchre's. The principal streets in it are Ludgate-hill, Bridge-street Blackfriars, Farringdon-street, Fleet-street, part of Chancery-lane, Fetter-lane, Holborn, Castle-street, Hatton-garden, Ely-place, Skinner-street, &c. Between Ludgate-hill and Fleet-street, on the north side, formerly stood Fleet-market, now called Farringdon-street, forming one of the widest and most commodious thoroughfares in the metropolis; it is erected on Fleet-ditch: this rivulet is increased in its course to the Thames by Turnmill-brook and the Old Bourn, a stream formerly navigable to Holborn-bridge. Over this rivulet were four bridges, at Bridewell, Fleet-street, Fleet-lane, and Holborn; it was arched over in 1734: the market-house, erected in 1737, was removed in 1828, to form the present handsome street. On the eastern side of it is the Fleet prison, the rules or liberties of which are on the northern side of Ludgate-hill to the Old Bailey, and down Fleet-lane to Farringdon-street, and on the eastern side of this street to Ludgate-hill. Farringdon-market, opened 20th November 1829, has an entrance in Stone-cutter-street, and inlets from Farringdon-street and Shoe-lane, on either side of the quadrangle, which is two hundred and thirty-two feet long, by one hundred and fifty feet wide; the building was erected from designs by William Montague. Directly opposite Farringdon-street is Bridge-street, leading to Blackfriars-bridge; at the intersection of these streets with Fleet-street are obelisks to the memory of Aldermen John Wilks and Robert Waithman,—the latter of Haytor granite, erected in 1833. On the western side of Bridge-street is Bridewell Hospital, built on the site of a Royal Palace erected by King Henry VIII. in 1522, who gave it the name of Bridewell, on account of its vicinity to a holy well; over which is now a pump in Bride-lane, near St. Bride's church. On the southern side of Fleet-street are Dorset-street and Salisbury-square, so called from being the site of the palace of the Bishops of Salisbury, afterwards inhabited by the Earls of Dorset. At the bottom of the street, fronting the river Thames, was formerly a theatre; here plays were performed till the Revolution in 1688. St. Bridget's, or St. Bride's, in Fleet-street, is a vicarage, value 16*l.*, in the presentation of the Dean and Chapter of Westminster. In the year 1610 the Earl of Dorset granted a piece of ground on the western side of Fleet-ditch, as it was then called, for a new churchyard; the church being destroyed by the fire of London in 1666, the present edifice was erected, from designs by Sir Christopher Wren, in 1680; the steeple, of excellent workmanship, is raised upon a solid tower, and the several stages by which it gradually decreases to the original height of two hundred and thirty-four feet, are well designed and skilfully executed. Having been struck by lightning in 1805, it was lowered to its present standard. This church has been repeatedly beautified; its last internal decorations were effected in 1824: in it are interred Thomas Flatman the poet, and Samuel Richardson the novelist. An unobstructed view of the tower and spire is now obtained from Fleet-street, by an opening made in the year 1825; one side is now occupied by Charles Tilt, an enterprising bookseller and publisher. Westward of this church are several streets erected on the site of a convent of Carmelites, or White friars, whose house and gardens extended from Fleet-street to the Thames. This convent was founded in 1241, by Sir Richard Grey, of Codnor in Derbyshire, and was rebuilt by Hugh Courtenay Earl of Devonshire about the year 1350. Many persons of distinction were interred in the conventual church, which was erected by the munificence of Sir Robert Knowles in the reign of Richard II. At the Dissolution the revenue of the house was valued at 62*l.* 7*s.* 3*d.*, when Henry VIII. conferred different portions of the building upon his favourites; and in 1547 King Edward VI. granted the church and chapter-house to the Bishop of Worcester and his successors in that see. The site of the Whitefriars theatre lay between the eastern gates of the Temple and Water-lane Fleet-street. The exemption of this district from the jurisdiction of the city of London rendered it a safe asylum for insolvent debtors, who gave it the name of the Kingdom of Alsatia; but in the year 1696 an Act of Parliament was passed to deprive the precincts of the White friars of privileges so injurious to the community; when several persons that resided here as a privileged place, removed to the Mint, Southwark, then equally lawless, for better security of their persons, and which circumstance probably occasioned the disbanding the once renowned order of the Squires of Alsatia, alluded to in Shadwell's comedy of that name. Westward, on the same side of Fleet-street, is Serjeant's Inn. The present hall, used by the Amicable Society, instituted by charter of Queen Anne, was erected in 1793. Beyond this, near Temple Bar, are the entrances into the Temple, one of the most celebrated inns of court: the name is derived from the Knights Templars, who settled here in the reign of Henry II., and made it their chief house; it was used as a sanctuary, and in troublesome times for the preservation of treasure and valuable property. The order of Templars combined to defend the Christians who visited the Holy Land, and were thus called from their original residence near the Temple of Jerusalem, which it was their duty to protect. The Templars existed from the year 1118 to 1312, when the Order was abolished by Pope Clement V. Their possessions were transferred to the Knights Hospitallers of St. John of Jerusalem, who had their chief house where St. John's Square, Clerkenwell, is now situated. These knights soon afterwards let the building that belonged to the Templars to students of the common law, in whose possession it has ever since continued. It is divided into two parts, the Inner Temple and Middle Temple, part of which is situated in Middlesex, with separate halls, although but one church. Shakspeare makes the Gardens of the Temple the scene of the quarrel between the rival houses of York and Lancaster. At the extremity of the city liberties, westward, is Temple Bar, originally indicated by posts and a chain, as in other places where the city jurisdiction terminated. After the fire of London the present gatehouse was erected, the only remaining gate: it is of the Corinthian order, and is of Portland stone; the arch of entrance is elliptical and very flat. On the eastern side are niches containing statues of King James I. and his queen; and on the western side are the statues of King Charles I. and King Charles II. Eastward of Temple Bar, on the northern side of Fleet-street, is Chancery-lane, in which are many public buildings; but none of them are within this ward, excepting Serjeant's Inn, anciently Farringdon's Inn, for the judges and serjeants of the law; and the Rolls chapel, used for keeping the rolls or records in chancery. Here are contained all charters, patents, &c., issued since the beginning of the reign of Richard III.; all those before that time being deposited in the Record-office, in the Tower of London, which being made up in rolls of parchment gave occasion to the name. At the north-western angle of this chapel is a court, where the Master of the Rolls, who is always the principal master in chancery, hears causes. Eastward from Chancery-lane, in Fleet-street, is Clifford's Inn, formerly the residence of the family of Clifford, and demised in the year 1345 by Isabel, widow of Robert Clifford, to students in the law; it is an inn of chancery, and an appendage to the Middle Temple: adjoining to this inn is the parish church of St. Dunstan-in-the-West, which is so called to distinguish it from the church in Tower-street ward, dedicated to the same saint, and known as St. Dunstan's-in-the-East. It escaped the fire of London, the flames having been stopped within three houses of it. It is a vicarage, value 26*l.* 4*s.* 9*d.* The church was rebuilt in 1832, from designs by John Shaw, and may be considered as one of the most important of the modern improvements in London. Its site was removed so as to give thirty feet additional width to the street fronting it. The tower, with its surmounting lantern, which, in an architectural point of view, is the most ornamental part of the edifice, is one hundred and thirty feet in height; that of the tower alone, to the battlements, is ninety feet. The whole of this division of the building is of Ketton stone. The body of the church is of brick, finished with stone; it is of octagonal form, about fifty feet in diameter. The clerestory windows were painted by Miller, and that over the altar by Willement; the latter contains the figures of the Evangelists, emblems of the Crucifixion, the Holy Trinity, &c., with an inscription denoting it to be the gift of Henry Hugh Hoare, Esq., of Fleet-street. In the belfry is a fine set of bells from the old church, the sound of which is considerably improved by the large upper windows, which are the main features of the tower of the church. Eastward of St. Dunstan's church, and near the end of Fetter-lane, is Crane-court, in which is the Hall of the Scottish Corporation, founded in 1665, and reincorporated in 1775, for the relief of natives of Scotland who have acquired no parochial settlement.

Fetter-lane, extending from Fleet-street to Holborn, was anciently called Fewters-lane, from being surrounded with gardens and houses devoted to dissipation. Westward of the northern end of this street are the Bars which divide the city liberty from the county on this side. Within the Bars, on the southern side of Holborn, is Staple's Inn, said to have been anciently a hall for wool-staplers, whence it derived its appellation: it is an inn of chancery, and a member of Gray's Inn. Eastward, on the same side of Holborn, is Barnard's Inn, anciently Mackworth's Inn, but given to the Society in 1454, by the executors of John Mackworth, Dean of Lincoln: it is also an inn of chancery, and an appendage to Gray's Inn. Further east, on the same side of the street, is Thavie's Inn, which belonged to John Thavie in the reign of Edward III.; by his will, dated in 1348, it appears then to have been an inn for students of the law: it is an inn of chancery, and a member of Lincoln's Inn. Contiguous to this inn, at the corner of Shoe-lane, stands the parish church of St. Andrew the Apostle, Holborn: it is a rectory, value 18*l.*, in the patronage of the Duke of Buccleuch. This church escaped the fire of London, but was rebuilt in 1687, excepting the tower, which was not erected till 1704. The church stands at an advantageous distance from the street, from which it is separated by a wall enclosing the churchyard, having an entrance by large and elegant iron gates. Opposite to this church, in Shoe-lane, was formerly situated Holborn Hall, which from its name seems to have been the manor-house. Bangor-court, in Shoe-lane, is the site of the palace of the Bishops of Bangor; the last bishop of that see who resided here was Bishop David Dolben, in 1633: it was sold in 1647, for the purpose of building on the grounds belonging to it. On the northern side of Holborn, nearly opposite to St. Andrew's church, is Ely-place, enclosed with iron gates. This street is erected on the site of the ancient palace of the Bishops of Ely, which was sold in 1772, when the money it produced was applied to the purchase and erection of a house in Dover-street, Piccadilly, now settled upon the Bishops of the see of Ely. The gardens of Ely Palace were celebrated for strawberries; and it is related that King Richard III., at the council held in the Tower on the morning Lord Hastings was beheaded, requested a dish of strawberries from the bishop. In the reign of Elizabeth there were forty acres of orchard and pasture land belonging to this palace, part of which was granted to Sir Christopher Hatton, who built a mansion on the spot. The house has been long pulled down, and the ground laid out into streets, called Hatton-garden, Great and Little Kirby-street, Charles-street, Cross-street, and Hatton-wall. The chapel, belonging to the old palace, is yet preserved: it stands on the western side of Ely-place, and has a crypt under it the whole length of the building. Further westward, in Holborn, is Furnival's Inn, built on the site of the mansion of Sir John Furnival, who possessed it in the year 1388: it is an inn of chancery, and an appendage to Lincoln's Inn; it was entirely rebuilt in 1818. At the eastern end of Holborn is Skinner-street, erected about 1804, and named after Alderman Skinner, an active member of a committee for improving the entrances into the city of London. At the top of this street is the parochial church of St. Sepulchre, a vicarage, value 20*l.*, in the patronage of St. John's College Oxford. This church is said to have been founded about the year 1100, at which time particular devotion was paid to the Holy Sepulchre at Jerusalem, the grave of Jesus Christ: it was rebuilt in the reign of Edward IV., but was much damaged by the fire of London, and afterwards repaired. The church is one hundred and twenty six feet in length, and has at the west end a square tower surmounted by four pinnacles, to the top of which is one hundred and forty-six feet. Opposite this church is Angel-court, at the upper end of which is a house, formerly the Farthing-office, afterwards occupied by Mr. Spilsbury, as a printing-office. The Old Bailey, a street leading to Ludgate-hill, is said to be named by a corruption of Bale-hill, an eminence, on which stood the Bale, or bailiff's house, containing a court for the trial of malefactors. The place where the sheriffs keep their prisoners during the sessions still retains the name of the Balc Dock.

The eastern side of the Old Bailey is occupied by Newgate, the jail for the county of Middlesex, rebuilt in 1770, from designs by Dance. The front, which faces the west, consists of two wings, between which is the residence of the keeper. In the area opposite Newgate the prisoners capitally convicted at the sessions-house in the Old Bailey are executed on a moveable scaffold. The sessions-house, or justice-hall, is only separated from Newgate by a court-yard. Sessions are held here eight times a year, for the trial of prisoners for crimes committed within the city of London and county of Middlesex. Offences committed in the city are tried by a jury of citizens, and those committed without the liberties, by a jury formed of house-keepers in the county. The judges are the lord mayor, the aldermen past the chair, and the recorder, who are attended by both the sheriffs, and by one or more of the national judges. Prisoners are brought to this court from Newgate by a passage under ground that connects the two buildings. Opposite the northern end of the Old Bailey is Giltspur-street, named originally, like Knight-Rider-street, from the processions of gallants to the tournaments in Smithfield. The knights alone wore gilded spurs. On the eastern side of this street, in a line with Newgate, is Giltspur-street Compter, another prison belonging exclusively to the city. The house opposite the northern end of this building is remarkable as being the very spot where the great fire of London terminated in 1686. Smithfield, which is called West Smithfield, to distinguish it from a place of the same name in the eastern part of the town, is the greatest market for cattle in Europe; it is also a market for hay and straw. Smithfield, which means the smooth and level field, was anciently called Crownfield, and was much larger than at present; the western side was called the Elms, from trees that grew there. King Henry II. granted to the priory of St. Bartholomew the privilege of a fair, to be kept annually at Bartholomew tide, which the clothiers of England and the drapers of London were accustomed to attend. They had their booths in the church-yard, within the walls of the priory; and the street afterwards built where the standings were erected, now retains the name of Cloth-fair. On the opposite side of the field is Hosier-lane. In the days of chivalry, from the twelfth to the fifteenth century, Smithfield was the place where tournaments and jousts were held, before the King and his Court: many instances are on record from the reign of Edward III. to that of Edward IV. Victory in a tournament was considered little less glorious, and perhaps at the moment was more exquisitely felt than victory in the field of battle; since no battle could assemble such witnesses of valour. "Honor to the sons of the brave!" resounded here amidst the din of martial music, from the lips of the minstrels, as the conqueror advanced to receive the prize from his Queen; while the surrounding multitude acknowledged, in his prowess of the day, an augury of triumphs that might in more serious contests be blended with those of his country. In these times also, be it remembered, many martyrs to religious opinions were burnt at the stake. Bartholomew-fair is the only fair now held within the city of London, and is annually proclaimed by the lord mayor in state, on the 3rd of September, unless Sunday should fall on that day. The proclamation is read at the gate leading into Smithfield from Cloth-fair, in the presence of the lord mayor and sheriffs, who afterwards proceed round Smithfield and return to the Mansion-house. It was formerly the custom for the procession to stop at Newgate to drink to the governor's health, but this practice was discontinued in the second mayoralty of Alderman Wood in 1821. The fair continues three days, exclusive of the day of proclamation. Lady Holland's mob, which formerly assembled the night before the fair was proclaimed, can be traced as far back as the times of the Commonwealth, when considerable efforts were made to suppress the fair; and it is presumed the populace determined to support what they called their charter, under the colour of the Holland interest; the Earl of Holland then residing in Cloth-fair, the site of the priory having been granted to his ancestor Robert Lord Rich, Lord Chancellor. The year 1822 was the last time this mob appeared in any force. At a public-house in Cloth-fair, the sign of the Hand and Shears, on the 2nd of September certain tailors yet meet, with a chairman, who, as the clock strikes twelve, issue into the street and proclaim the fair, shears in hand, &c.; so that it is found that even a mob may degrade from men to tailors. On the eastern side of Smithfield is the hospital of St. Bartholomew, one of the earliest establishments of the kind in London. Rahen, a minstrel and favourite of King Henry I., founded here a priory of Black canons, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, in 1102, and quitting a gay life became himself its first prior. He afterwards obtained from the King sufficient ground upon which to erect a hospital, which he placed under the care of the monks, when the priory and hospital were surrendered to Henry VIII. The King in 1546 refounded and endowed the hospital, which is incorporated as the hospital of the mayor, commonalty, and citizens of London, governors for the poor, called Little St. Bartholomew, near West Smithfield. The old building escaped the fire of London, but the whole was afterwards, at different periods, rebuilt, and completed in 1770. Within the principal entrance to this hospital stands the parochial church of St. Bartholomew the Less, a vicarage, value 13*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the governors of the hospital; and on the same side of Smithfield, at the end of Duck-lane, stands the church of St. Bartholomew the Great, a rectory, value 8*l.*, in the patronage of Lord Kensington. This church was originally a parish church, adjoining that of the priory; but when the latter was pulled down, excepting the choir, that part was annexed, by the King's orders, for the enlargement of the old parish church. The present church is the same as it stood in the reign of Edward VI., excepting the tower, which was rebuilt in 1629. On the north side of the chancel is the monument of Rahen, the founder of the priory, which was restored by William Bolton, the last prior of St. Bartholomew. On the southern side of the church is Bartholomew-close, the ancient precinct of the priory; part of the cloister still exists as livery-stables, and other vestiges of the ancient monastery are to be seen northward of the stables, adjacent to which is part of the south transept. The houses in Long-lane were originally erected without the northern wall of the priory, in the reign of Henry II., for the sake of obtaining great rents.

26. Bridge Ward Without.

This ward, although a part of the jurisdiction of the city of London, is divided from it by the river Thames, and is in another county. It contains nearly the whole of the borough of Southwark, and extends from London-bridge to Newington on the south, almost to Lambeth on the west, and to Rotherhithe on the east. Bridge ward Without may be said to be only nominal; although it has an alderman, he is not elective by the inhabitants, nor have they any representatives in the court of common council. The senior alderman of London, who is termed the Father of the City, possesses the honourable sinecure, which relieves him from the fatigue of ward business. See page 101, for an account of Southwark. Since that was written, the restoration of the Lady-chapel of St. Saviour's church has been completed by George Gwilt, in perfect accordance with the existing remains of this noble edifice; but the nave of the church is still in ruins, the roof having been removed by an order of the vestry.

NORTHERN SUBURBS OF THE CITY OF LONDON.

Besides the wards of Aldersgate, Bishopsgate, and Cripplegate without the walls, London extends northward over a considerable space of ground. High Holborn liberty, a part of the parish of St. Andrew Holborn, but without the bounds of the city, is eastward of the parish of St. George Queen-square. Within this district are two of the four principal inns of court, viz., Gray's Inn, and Lincoln's Inn. Gray's Inn, on the manor of Portpool, was formerly a residence of the family of the Lords Grey de Wilton, and was demised to students of the law in the reign of Edward III. The principal entrance to Gray's Inn is in Holborn, although the buildings are situated at some distance from the street: there is another entrance in Gray's Inn-lane.—Lincoln's Inn is situated southward of Holborn, and on the western side of Chancery-lane, on the site of a palace of the Bishops of Chichester, as also on that of a house of Black friars founded about 1222. Both coming into the possession of Henry Earl of Lincoln, he erected on the spot a mansion for his own residence, into which it is said that some time before his death he introduced the study of the law. The northern side of this quadrangle lies open to gardens, with a terrace, commanding a prospect of Lincoln's-Inn-fields or Square. The gatehouse in Chancery-lane was built by Sir Thomas Lovel, Treasurer of the Household to Henry VII. On the eastern side of the gardens are Stone Buildings, between which and Chancery-lane is the Office of the Six Clerks in Chancery. The site of Chichester-house is not entirely occupied by the Inn, part of it still forms Bishop's-court and Chichester-court: Lincoln's-Inn is at the same time an Inn of Court and of Chancery. The hall of the Law Institution is situated on the western side of Chancery-lane, nearly opposite to the Rolls Court, and extends thence into Bell-yard: it was erected in 1831 from designs by Vulliamy. Southampton-buildings occupy the site of Southampton-house, anciently the Bishop of Lincoln's Palace, but conveyed in fee to the Earl of Southampton, Lord Chancellor in the reign of Edward VI. On the southern side of these buildings is the office of Chancery, in which the Masters have offices for the dispatch of their duty.—On the opposite side of Holborn is Brooke's-market, near the site of Brooke-house, the mansion of Fulk Greville, first Lord Brooke, the friend of Sir Philip Sidney, who died here in 1628. Westward of Gray's-Inn is Bedford-row, which, with most of the streets in this neighbourhood, was built on an estate bequeathed in 1574 by Sir William Harper, lord mayor, to the corporation of the town of Bedford, for the endowment of the free-school which he had previously founded in that town. North-eastward of High Holborn liberty is Clerkenwell, which obtained its name from a celebrated spring on the green, where the parish clerks of the city of London met annually to perform sacred dramas. A pump nearly opposite Mutton-hill, on the eastern side of Rag-street, now called Ray-street, erected in 1800, contains an inscription commemorative of the practice. A convent of Benedictine nuns anciently stood on the elevated bank of the river Fleet: the prospect then was unintercepted by houses, and persons on the rising ground had an uninterrupted view of the performances of the parish clerks at the well. On the north-eastern part of the hill was a bear-garden; and at the bottom of the hill westward, in the hollow of Air-street, is Hockley-in-the-hole, where different sports were carried on almost within recollection. Some time after the dissolution of the Benedictine convent, the ground came into the possession of Sir William Cavendish, who was created Duke of Newcastle in 1664; he built a large mansion on its site, called Newcastle-house; this has been demolished, and the site is occupied by modern buildings. The church, belonging to the old priory, was made parochial on the Dissolution, when it appears to have been dedicated to St. James the Less; the old church was taken down in 1788; it was afterwards rebuilt: it is a perpetual curacy, in the presentation of the parishioners. The priory Close still retains its ancient name. South-eastward stood the priory of St. John of Jerusalem, founded by Jordan Bunt, who purchased of the prioress and nuns of Clerkenwell ten acres of land for the purpose, in 1110: this was the chief house in England belonging to the Knights Hospitallers; and after its suppression the building was used as a repository for the royal hunting equipage and military stores till 1550, when Edward Seymour Duke of Somerset, Lord Protector, caused the edifice to be demolished, and used the materials for the erection of Somerset-house, his seat in the Strand. Part of the site of this priory is now occupied by St. John's-square, which is entered from the south by the original gatehouse. Part of the possessions of the knights was granted to the family of Bruce, Earls of Aylesbury, who formerly resided here. Aylesbury-street was built on the site of their house and garden.

The house in which Bishop Burnet resided is situated on the north-western side of St. John's-square; he died in 1715, and was buried in St. James's church, where a monument was erected to his memory. At the north-eastern corner of the square is the parish church of St. John, Clerkenwell, a rectory, under the management of a select vestry. This church was the choir of the ancient church of the Knights Hospitallers of St. John, and was made parochial in 1723. The only vestiges of the antiquity and extent of this church are in Jerusalem-court, leading into St. John-street. On the western side of Clerkenwell-green is the Sessions-house for the county of Middlesex, erected in 1782, from designs by Carter. The former sessions-house was situated in St. John's-street, and was called Hickes's-hall, from its founder Sir Baptist Hickes, who in the year 1611 granted it for the use of the magistrates of the county. North-westward is Clerkenwell prison; and at some distance is Cold Bath-square, in the centre of which was formerly a bath: streets have been formed, and it is now enclosed with houses. On the western side of this square is the House of Correction for the county of Middlesex, erected on the declivity of a hill. At a short distance north-east from Cold-bath-fields is the New River-head, and near it Sadler's Wells. In Myddelton-square is a new church, erected about 1828. Chadwell-street leads into St. John's-street. More southward are Southampton-square and King's-square,—in the last is St. Barnabas chapel, erected in 1826. Pardon-passage, on the eastern side of St. John's-street, is an ancient entrance into Pardon churchyard; the ground was purchased by Ralph Stratford for a cemetery, required by the pestilence in 1348, and which was situated between the northern wall of the Charterhouse-garden and Sutton-street. At the foundation of the Charterhouse monastery, now the Charterhouse, this ground became the property of the convent. The Spital-croft, adjoining Pardon churchyard, was in the following year purchased by Sir Walter Manny, who in 1370 founded the monastery on the site of both, then called New Church-haw. This convent, designated as the House of the Salutation of the Mother of God, was surrendered to King Henry VIII. in 1538, and was afterwards used as a repository for the King's tents and pavilions; but in 1545 was granted to Sir Edward North, Chancellor of the Court of Augmentation: twenty years afterwards his descendant Roger Lord North sold it to the Duke of Norfolk, excepting a part on the eastern side. In the Archæologia, vol. xix., are very curious extracts from "the booke of the Howshold Charges," &c. of Lord North, beginning 1st January 1575, 18 of Elizabeth, including the charges of my lord's buildings at his house in the Charterhouse-yard, between the last of August 1575 and the last of January 1576. The whole was purchased in 1611 by Thomas Sutton, for the purpose of a charitable foundation for pensioners and scholars. The Charterhouse is situated between St. John's-street on the west; Goswell-street on the east; Long-lane on the south; and Wildernesse-row on the north. There is scarcely any vestige of the conventual building, which is said to have stood where the garden now is. The house was erected by the Duke of Norfolk: in one corner of the court is a chapel, in which is a monument to the memory of Thomas Sutton, the founder. In front of the building is Charterhouse-square, whence Carthusian-street leads into Goswell-street, a continuation of Aldersgate-street, and extending to Islington.

Eastward of the Charterhouse is Glass-house liberty, a district so called from a glass-house formerly situated here, and consisting of that part of the parish of St. Botolph Aldersgate, which is without the city liberty. Opposite to the north-eastern corner of the Charterhouse garden is Old- or Eald-street, part of a Roman military way which anciently led from the eastern to the western parts of the kingdom. The parish of St. Luke Middlesex, owes its rise to the increase of buildings in the parish of St. Giles Cripplegate. The commissioners for erecting the fifty new churches ordered the building of the church situated nearly in the centre of Old-street, on the north side: it was completed in 1732; and being consecrated on St. Luke's day, that saint was appointed its patron: it is a rectory, in the patronage of the Crown. Eastward from this church is St. Luke's Hospital, erected in 1783, for the reception of lunatics: it is in length four hundred and ninety-three feet. Adjoining this hospital, and between it and the City-road, is the London Lying-in-Hospital, erected in 1771. This charity was established in 1750, and originally held at Shaftesbury-house, in Aldersgate-street. On the north-side of Old-street, in George-yard, are alms-houses, founded in 1657, by Susan Amyas, and repaired in 1790. Pesthouse-row, in the neighbourhood, derives its name from a pesthouse established in 1665, and removed in 1737, when the present buildings were erected. In this row is the French Hospital, erected in 1717; and opposite to it is Peerless Pool, a bath, considered to be the largest in England. In the City-road is the Orphan Working School, erected in 1773; adjoining this edifice are alms-houses belonging to the Dyers' Company; near the last is the City Basin of the Regent's canal. South-eastward of this point is the manor of Finsbury, which in the reign of Henry VIII. consisted chiefly of fields, orchards, and gardens. Part of it, on the northern side of Chiswell-street, had in the year 1498 been used as a field for the exercise of archery, and afterwards came into the possession of the Artillery Company, by whom it is at present used for military exercise. The north side of this ground, called Bunhill-fields, was enclosed for a burial-ground in 1666. Finsbury-square was erected between the years 1777 and 1791, and the whole manor is now covered with handsome streets.

Northward of Finsbury-square is the Tabernacle, erected by the Rev. G. Whitfield in 1753; and near it is another meeting-house called the Foundry, from one which formerly occupied the site. Eastward of St. Luke's is the parish of St. Leonard Shoreditch, anciently a village situated upon the Eald-street, now Old-street, at some distance northward from London. John de Sordich was lord of the manor in the reign of Edward III., whence its name: but there is a popular belief that it is derived from Jane Shore, the beautiful mistress of King Edward IV. The east end of Old-street is in this parish; part of it, between Paul-street and Pump-row, is called St. Agnes le Clere, from a celebrated spring of pure water; near it is Aske's or Haberdashers' Hospital, founded in 1692, and rebuilt about 1826; in front is a statue of its benevolent founder, Robert Aske. St. Leonard Shoreditch, is a vicarage, value 17*l.*, in the patronage of the Archdeacon of London: the old church was pulled down in 1735; soon after which the present edifice was erected. Kingsland-road is a continuation of the principal street to Stoke Newington: on the eastern side of this road are alms-houses, erected in 1713 by the Ironmongers' Company, pursuant to the will of Sir Robert Geffryes, lord mayor of London in 1686, who died in 1703. Adjoining this building, on the south, are alms-houses of the Drapers' Company, founded in 1713 by Samuel Harwar; and on the north are alms-houses of the Framework-knitters' Company, founded by Thomas Bourne in the year 1734. Westward of Kingsland-road is Hoxton, anciently Hocheston, a village situated at a distance from London, but now united by the increase of buildings. Near the extremity of this liberty is Hoxton-square. On the north of Hoxton the Regent's canal proceeds across the Kingsland and Haggerstone roads, to the Cambridge-heath road: it afterwards unites with Sir George Duket's canal from Oldford, then crosses the Mile-end road, Commercial road, &c., to Limehouse. The church of St. John Hoxton, erected in 1826, is situated at the south-eastern extremity of the New North-road. The hamlet, although it once had a market, was till then destitute of a church: it was built from designs by Edwards, and the steeple is remarkable amongst those of modern erection for symmetry of proportion. The mansion of Sir George Whitmore, lord mayor in 1631, was partly erected in the reign of Elizabeth, but underwent considerable alteration in the year 1683, a time in which Hoxton began to increase in buildings. Haggerstone is also a hamlet of the parish of St. Leonard Shoreditch, and has a church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, erected from designs by Nash in 1827, in the pointed style of architecture. Southward of Shoreditch church is the liberty or manor of Norton Folgate, which is extra-parochial, and belonged to the cathedral of St. Paul as early as the Conquest. The prebend of Holy Well, in Shoreditch parish, or Haliwell, took its name from a well near the Curtain-road, famed for its miraculous virtues. This spot, during the plague in 1665, became a cemetery, and gave rise to Holywell Mount, which was levelled in 1777, but the neighbourhood around Chapel-street and Holywell-row still retains the name. In Holywell-lane, leading from the Curtain-road to Shoreditch, anciently stood a Benedictine priory, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, founded by Robert a prebendary of Haliwell, the charter of which was confirmed by Richard I. in 1189: it was rebuilt by Sir Thomas Lovel in the reign of Henry VII., who was interred in the chapel; the window of which bore the following sentence:—

All the nunes in halpwell

Pray for the soul of Sir Thomas Lovel.

The remains of this priory, in King John's-court, were afterwards called King John's Palace, but it does not appear that a royal mansion was ever situated in this quarter of the town.

Southward of Shoreditch is also Spitalfields, anciently a hamlet of the parish of St. Dunstan Stepney, but was made a distinct parish, called Christchurch, in the year 1729: it is a rectory, in the patronage of Brazenose College Oxford. The church is situated on the southern side of Church-street, and at the west end is a school. North-westward of the church is Spitalfields-market, chiefly for vegetables. Spitalfields derived its name from having anciently belonged to St. Mary's Spital, which stood on the eastern side of Bishopsgate-street, and was originally inhabited by the Huguenots, Protestant subjects of Louis XIV., driven from France by the Revocation of the edict of Nantes, who here established the manufacture of silk in all its branches. When trade is brisk, there are said to be 15,000 looms employed in this parish.

Eastward from Spitalfields is Bethnal-Green, now a parish distinct from Stepney, of which it was formerly a hamlet. The church, dedicated to St. Matthew, was erected in 1740: it is a rectory, in the patronage of King's Hall and Brazenose College Oxford. Bethnal-green-house, an old mansion, is traditionally reported to have been the residence of a celebrated blind beggar, and is sometimes called Kirby Castle. A Roman road led through this part of the town, and joined the military way towards the Old Ford, over the river Lea. Mile-end is a hamlet of Stepney. See page 65.

THE EASTERN SUBURBS OF LONDON.

Eastward of the Tower of London is the parish of St. Katherine, one of the twenty-one Tower Hamlets, which are in the military jurisdiction of the constable of the Tower, and are obliged to raise two regiments of militia. This district, of which the constable of the Tower is the Lord Lieutenant, consists of the following: Hackney, Norton Folgate, Shoreditch, Spitalfields, Whitechapel, Trinity Minories, East Smithfield, Tower Extra, Tower Intra, St. Katherine, Wapping, Ratcliff, Shadwell, Limehouse, Poplar, Blackwall, Bromley, Bow, Old Ford, Mile-End, and Bethnal-Green.

The Commercial Docks now occupy the site of the ancient hospital of St. Katherine, founded in 1148 by Matilda Queen of King Stephen, and refounded in 1273 by Eleanor Queen of Henry III.; the whole of which was demolished in the year 1826. The hospital has been rebuilt on an advantageous spot in the Regent's Park; and St. Katherine's Docks, occupying its former site, were opened, with the usual ceremonies, 25th October 1828. From St. Katherine's, Wapping extends along the banks of the Thames to Shadwell. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, originally erected in 1617, was rebuilt in 1790: it is a rectory, in the patronage of King's Hall and Brazenose College Oxford. Adjoining the church is a school, rebuilt in 1765. The London Docks were opened 31st January 1805. In this parish also is Execution Dock, where pirates, &c. suffer the sentence of the law. Northward of Wapping is the hamlet of Ratcliff. The parish church of St. George-in-the-East is a rectory, in the patronage of Brazenose College Oxford: it was one of the fifty churches founded in 1715, but was not completed till 1729. Raine's Hospital, in Fowden-fields, was founded and endowed in 1737; and in this parish is a school, founded by Nicholas Gibson in 1537, to which are attached alms-houses, belonging to the Coopers' Company, by the same founder. Adjoining the parish of St. George-in-the-East is that of St. Paul Shadwell. See page 63 ante.

THE BISHOPRIC OF LONDON, AND ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL.

The see of London was archiepiscopal in the time of the Britons, and was intended by Pope Gregory to have been continued so amongst the English; but St. Augustine, whom His Holiness sent to convert the Saxons, was so pleased with his reception from Ethelbert King of Kent, that he set up his staff at Canterbury, the capital of Ethelbert's dominions, which has continued the metropolitan see of England ever since. London has continued a bishopric, and the bishop of this see has precedence before all bishops of the realm next to the two archbishops, and is dean to the Archbishop of Canterbury. The diocese has five archdeacons, London, Middlesex, Essex, Colchester and St. Albans, is valued in the King's books at 1119*l.* 8*s.* 4*d.*, and comprises the counties of Middlesex and Essex, and a part of Hertfordshire, wherein are reckoned six hundred and twenty-two parishes, of which there are one hundred and eighty-nine impropriated. To the cathedral of St. Paul belong a dean, five archdeacons, a treasurer, a chancellor, two canons residentiary, twenty prebendaries, a precentor, and other inferior officers. The cathedral was built by Ethelbert, but afterwards much improved by Bishop Erkenwald: it has been repeatedly destroyed by fire,—the last time during the dreadful conflagration of 1656. This church was remarkable for its beautiful spire, of two hundred and seventy-four feet, standing upon a tower of two hundred and sixty feet; so that the total height was five hundred and thirty-four feet. The present magnificent edifice was erected on the same site, from designs by Sir Christopher Wren, by whom the first stone was laid June 21, 1675. St. Paul's Cathedral, the chief ornament of the British capital, stands in the centre and most elevated part of the city, between Cheapside on the east, and Ludgate-street on the west: it is built of fine Portland stone, in the form of a Greek cross, and at the intersection of the nave and transept rises a stately dome, one hundred and forty-five feet in diameter, from the top of which springs a lantern adorned with Corinthian columns, surmounted by a gilded ball and cross. The western front, a specimen of grandeur and elegance perhaps equal to any thing of the kind in the world, consists of a noble portico, the lower division of which is composed of twelve Corinthian columns, and the upper of eight Composite columns, all of which are coupled and fluted; resting on a basement formed by a double flight of steps of black marble, and supporting a spacious pediment crowned with acroteria. In the tympanum is the Conversion of St. Paul, sculptured in basso-relievo by Francis Bird. On the apex of the pediment stands a gigantic figure of St. Paul; whilst on either side, at different distances, along the summit of this front, are colossal statues of St. Peter, St. James, and the Evangelists. At each corner is a very beautiful turret, two hundred and twenty-two feet high, the one serving as a belfry, and the other as a clock-tower; both are decorated with columns, urns, statues, &c., and terminated by a majestic pine. On the north and south sides of the cathedral, at each end of the principal transept, is a grand semicircular portico, formed by six Corinthian columns supporting a half dome, above which rises a well-proportioned pediment, having sculpture in the tympanum, and surmounted by five statues of the Apostles; that on the north side represents the royal arms and regalia, supported by angels; and that on the south a phoenix rising from the flames, with the motto Resurgam inscribed beneath, emblematical of the rebuilding of the church after the fire. This device had probably its origin from an incident which occurred at the commencement of the work, and was particularly remarked by the architect as a favourable omen. When Sir Christopher had himself set out the dimensions of the intended building, and fixed upon the centre of the dome, a labourer was ordered to bring him a flat stone, the first he should find amongst the rubbish, to leave as a mark of direction for the masons: the stone which was brought and laid down for the purpose happened to be a piece of a gravestone, with nothing remaining of the inscription but the single word in large capitals, RESURGAM. The phoenix is finely executed; its length is eighteen feet, and its height nine feet; it was sculptured by Caius Gabriel Cibber. The ascent to the north portico is by a semicircular flight of twelve steps of black marble; but on the south side, where the ground is considerably lower, the ascent is formed by a flight of twenty-five similar steps. It has been judiciously observed of these porticos, that they are objects equally beautiful, whether considered separately, or in connexion with the total mass of the building, which they adorn and diversify by the contrast of curved with straight lines, and of insulated columns with engaged pilasters. The projecting semicircle which terminates the east end is of fine proportion, and properly ornamented with architectural enrichments. The remainder of the vast outer walls of the fabric is of excellent masonry, strengthened as well as decorated by two stories of coupled pilasters arranged at regular distances, consisting of one hundred and twenty each; the upper range being of the Composite order, and the lower of the Corinthian. The intervals between the Corinthian pilasters are occupied by large windows, and those between the Composite pilasters by ornamented niches, in the pedestals of which are singularly inserted windows, belonging to rooms and galleries over the aisles. The entire summit of the side walls is surmounted by a regular balustrade.

The dome, or cupola, is the most remarkable and magnificent feature of the building. This rises from an immense circular basement, which at the height of about twenty feet above the roof of the church gives place to a Corinthian colonnade, formed by a circular range of thirty-two columns, every fourth intercolumniation being filled up with masonry so disposed as to form an ornamental niche or recess; an arrangement, by which the projecting buttresses of the cupola are most judiciously concealed, and thus converted into a decoration of the most grand and beautiful character. The columns are placed at regular intervals, and crowned with a complete entablature, which, continuing without a single break, forms an entire circle, connecting all the parts into one grand and harmonious whole. The buttresses are pierced with arcades, by which a free communication is obtained round this part of the dome; and the entablature of the peristyle supports a circular gallery surrounded with a balustrade.

Above the colonnade, but not resting upon it, rises an attic story, with pilasters and windows, from the entablature of which springs the exterior dome, of a very bold and graceful contour, covered with lead, and ribbed at regular intervals. Around the aperture, at its summit, is another gallery or balcony; and from the centre rises a stone lantern, which is surrounded with Corinthian columns, and crowned by a majestic ball and cross that terminate the fabric.

The following are the principal dimensions:—

	Feet.
Whole length of the church and porch	500
Breadth within the doors of the porticos	250
Breadth of the west front with the turrets	180
Breadth of the west front without the turrets	110
Outward diameter of the dome	145
Inward diameter of the same	108
Height from the ground without to the top of the cross	340
Height to the top of the highest statues on the front	135
Height of the lantern from the cupola to the ball	50
Diameter of the ball	6
Height of the cross with its ornaments below	6
Circumference of the building	2292

On viewing the interior of the cathedral from the great western entrance, the eye dwells with admiration on the grandeur of the perspective: an arcade, supported by massy piers, divides the edifice into the nave and aisles, and the view is terminated by the altar at the extremity of the choir. The piers and arches are ornamented with columns and pilasters both of the Corinthian and Composite orders, and are further adorned with shields, festoons, chaplets, cherubim, &c. The vaulting of this part of the church is exceedingly light and elegant in its construction; each division forms a low dome, supported by four spandrels, the base of the dome being encircled by a rich wreath of foliage. The circular panels, and the spandrels of the vaulting of the aisles, are separated by shields, bordered with acanthus leaves, fruit, and flowers. Alcoves for the windows are finely disposed, and their arches are filled with hexagonal, octagonal, and other panels. The Morning-prayer Chapel, on the south side, and the Consistory, on the north, occupy the respective extremities of the western transept, which is an elegant part of the building; these are divided from the aisles by insulated columns and screens of ornamental carved work. The central area below the dome is an octagon, formed by eight stupendous piers, with their apertures. The cathedral of Ely is said to be the only other church in this country in which the central area being pierced by the aisles has eight openings instead of four, the usual number. The spandrels between the arches above form the area into a circle, which is crowned by a large cantilever cornice, partly supporting by its projection the Whispering-gallery. At this level commences the interior tambour of the dome, which consists of a high pedestal and cornice, forming the basement to a range of pilasters, of the Composite order; the intervals between which are occupied by twenty-four windows and eight niches, all corresponding in situation with the intercolumniations and piers of the exterior peristyle. Above, from a double plinth, over the cornice of the pilasters, springs the internal dome. In the crown of the vault of this cupola is a circular opening, surrounded by a railed gallery, through which the light is transmitted with admirable effect from the cone and lantern above. Both the cone and lantern are very ingeniously constructed; and the mechanism of the roof, which supports the outward covering of lead, is contrived with extraordinary skill and judgement. Edmund Aikin, an architect who has done ample justice to the merits of Sir Christopher Wren, says that "this cupola does not belong as an ornament to the cathedral of St. Paul alone, but to London in general, which, in every distant view, it crowns in surpassing glory; and considered in this light, the coldest critic, the most rigid theorist, could not wish to subtract a particle from its rich exuberance." Unquestionably the finest view of the dome and peristyle is to be obtained from beneath the portico of the Post-office in St. Martin's le Grand, where it rises above the houses with inconceivable majesty. From a printed sheet relating to St. Paul's, published in 1685 by John Tilloison, clerk of the works, it appears that the general depth of the foundations below the surface of the churchyard is twenty-two feet, and in many places thirty-five feet; that the large and stately vaults beneath the church are eighteen feet six inches from the ground to the crown of the arch; that each of the great piers sustaining the dome stands upon one thousand three hundred and sixty feet of ground, superficial measure, and each lesser one upon three hundred and eighty feet; and that the whole space occupied by the piers, and covered by the dome contains half an acre, half a quarter of an acre, and almost four perches.

The interior of the cupola was painted by Sir James Thornhill, who represented the principal passages of St. Paul's life in eight compartments, viz. his conversion; his punishing Elymas the sorcerer with blindness; his preaching at Athens; his curing the poor cripple at Lystra, and the reverence paid him there by the priests of Jupiter as a God; his conversion of the jailor; his preaching at Ephesus and the burning of the magic books in consequence of the miracles he wrought there; his trial before Agrippa; his shipwreck on the island of Melita. Through want of care these paintings are now in a very dilapidated state; all the lower parts have utterly perished, and ought to be restored. The most probable cause is, that the vibrations given to the dome by the thundering sound, produced by violently shutting the door of the whispering gallery, for the amusement of visitors who pay for the experiment, has shaken the stucco into dust, through the frequent repetitions of the concussion.

The best situation for viewing the paintings and other decorations of the cupola is the whispering gallery, the ascent to which is by a spacious circular staircase, constructed in the north west projection of the principal transept. This gallery encircles the lower part of the dome, and extends to the extreme edge of the great cantilever cornice, but is rendered perfectly safe by a strong and handsomely wrought gilt railing, that surrounds the inner circumference. Here the forcibly shutting the door causes a strong reverberating sound not unlike the rattling of thunder, accompanied by a visible vibration in the building; and a low whisper breathed against the wall, in any part of this vast circle may be accurately distinguished by an attentive ear on the opposite side. Round the space between the railing and the wall, are two steps and a stone seat. The decayed state of the paintings, and the mutilations of the stucco work are very apparent from this gallery, but the dome itself is completely sound, not a single stone being either deranged or broken; a circumstance that must be regarded as demonstrative of the admirable manner in which it is constructed, particularly when considered in reference to the very considerable settlement that took place amongst the sustaining piers. From the gallery upwards to the next range of cornice the surrounding wall is quite plain and unornamented; the cornice is enriched with sculptures of shells and acanthus, leaves most richly gilded, as are the bases and capitals of the thirty-two pilasters above, which correspond with the outward colonnade. The panels under the eight niches, and the compartments over them are finely sculptured with festoons and foliage gilded. The architrave and cornice which surmount the pilasters are superbly gilt; as are also the scrolls, shells, festoons, wreaths and other decorations of the frame work to the paintings by Sir James Thornhill. The ornamental panels and roses above them, to the opening of the vault, and the cornice, festoons, shells, roses, &c. in the upper part of the cone, which is seen through it, and terminates the view, are likewise highly enriched by gilding. The circular staircase which leads to the whispering gallery contracts on approaching it, to give room for various passages, through the apertures of which, the immense buttresses of the dome may be seen. It communicates besides with the long galleries over the aisles; these are paved with stone, and crossed at intervals by the enormous strong arches and buttresses which support the walls and roof of the nave. From the end of the south gallery the passage continues through the substance of the wall, into the northern transept; in the south angle of which, and directly over the consistory, is the library. The north and south sides of this apartment, are formed by strong piers or pilasters, the fronts of which are finely sculptured into skulls, crowns, mitres, books, fruits and flowers. The cantilevers, and other ornaments of the oaken gallery in this room, were carved by Jonathan Mainwaring. The ceiling is plain; but the floor is entirely constructed with small pieces of oak, without either nail or peg, disposed in various forms. Over the fire place is a half length portrait by Sir James Thornhill, of Dr. Henry Compton, the worthy bishop who held this See, during the whole period of the erection of the cathedral. He is represented sitting, with flowing hair, and in his hand is a plan of St. Paul's. This prelate bequeathed his books to the library.

At the opposite extremity of the transept, and exactly corresponding in situation and dimensions with the library, is another spacious apartment; in which is kept the beautiful model Sir Christopher Wren first caused to be constructed, and valued by him as the most perfect and chaste of all the designs he invented for the new cathedral; this though much mutilated, is highly deserving of inspection. Here also are the remains of a model designed by Sir Christopher, for the altar piece, but never executed. Westward from the library is a door, communicating with the geometrical staircase, which leads down to the lower part of the church. This is perhaps the finest specimen of the kind in the kingdom; the stairs 110 in number, go round the concave in a spiral direction; the base being formed by a platform inlaid with black and white marble, to represent a star, enclosed by a circle. Facing the door that connects the lower part with the church, is a beautiful niche, decorated with grotesque pilasters and rich iron work.

In the south turret is the clock, and the great bell on which it strikes. The clock is of great magnitude; it is wound up daily, and the outward dial, eighteen feet, ten inches in diameter, is regulated by a smaller one within. The length of the minute hand is eight feet, and its weight seventy-five pounds; the length of the hour hand is five feet, five inches, and its weight, forty-four pounds; the length of the hour figures, is two feet two inches and a half. The great bell is sustained by a strong frame of oak, admirably contrived to distribute the weight on every side of the tower, within a cylinder of stone pierced with eight apertures. The diameter of this bell, is about ten feet, and its weight, is generally stated at four tons and a quarter; in the direction of the wind, its sound may be heard at the distance of many miles; on it are the words "Richard Phelps made me 1716." The quarters are struck on two smaller bells. The great bell is never tolled, excepting at the deaths and funerals of any of the Royal Family, the Bishop of London, the Dean of St. Paul's, and the Lord Mayor, should he die in his mayoralty: and when tolled it is the clapper and not the bell that is moved.

The ascent to the whispering gallery is sufficiently convenient, but the avenues contract on approaching the stone gallery which surrounds the exterior dome above the colonnade. The view hence is extensive, yet it by no means equals the prospect obtained at the superior elevation of the golden gallery which crowns the apex of the cupola at the base of the lantern. From this height when the atmosphere is clear the surrounding country to a great extent seems completely under the eye, and even the metropolis extensive as it is with all its dependant villages appears to occupy but an inconsiderable space. The bright line accompanying the meanderings of the Thames and the thousands of vessels floating upon its stream, and in the vicinity of the tower almost exclude its waters from the sight, compose principal features in the scene. This view though perhaps the very finest in all London can seldom be enjoyed owing to the clouds of smoke almost continually overhanging the city, but the best time is early on a summer morning.

The copper ball which crowns the lantern will contain six persons; the entire ascent to this elevation is said to include 616 steps.

The choir is of the same form and architectural style as the body of the church, from which it is separated by iron rails and gates curiously and elegantly wrought. The east end is terminated by a bold sweep or apsis, with three large windows below, and three smaller ones above: the soffits of these windows as well as those of the aisles are ornamented with sculptured foliage and have festoons over them; the entrance to the choir is immediately beneath the organ gallery, this is supported by eight Corinthian columns of blue and white veined marble. In front is the following inscription in gold letters which formerly appeared only over the grave of the great architect whom it commemorates, but was repeated here as the more appropriate situation in accordance with the suggestion of Robert Mylne, Clerk of the Works to St. Paul's.

ÆTAT. 91.

The organ, one of the finest in the kingdom, was constructed in 1694 by Bernard Smydt or Schymdt a German. The pipes, the original gilding of which appears perfectly fresh, are preserved from dust by a case with sashes. The caryatides, fruit, flowers, and other ornaments of the organ case are admirably carved, but the sashes impede the sound. The organ was entirely taken to pieces and repaired in 1802 by a Swede and his partner, and the tones are said to be improved into exquisite softness and harmony.

The choir was first opened for divine service on the 2nd of December, 1697, on occasion of the thanksgiving of the peace of Ryswick, when King William went in state; the evening was concluded with fire works exhibited before his majesty in St. James's Square.

The morning prayer chapel was opened for divine service on February 1, 1699. On each side of the choir is a range of fifteen stalls, exclusive of the Bishop's throne on the south, and the Lord Mayor's on the north side. These are most beautifully ornamented with carvings by Grinling Gibbons. The altar piece is decorated with four fluted pilasters painted in imitation of lapis lazuli, and their capitals are richly gilt; the foliage of the frieze, the palm and laurel branches, &c. are also resplendent with gilding. The marble panelling between the intercolumniations consists of nine squares, three under each window. The pulpit was designed by Robert Mylne and erected about 1800. The reader's desk, a fine example of the kind, is entirely of brass, richly gilt, and consists of an eagle with expanded wings, supported by a pillar, and enclosed within a gilt brass railing.

The general pavement of the choir, and of the body and aisles of the church is of black and white marble neatly disposed, and particularly so in the area below the dome; here, round a brass plate in the centre pierced with lyre shaped openings, and otherwise ornamented, a large diamond star of thirty-two points is formed with black and variegated marble; this again is surrounded by a double circle enclosing lozenge shaped squares, and more outward to the extremity of the area, where one extensive circle of black marble bounds the whole, the systematic arrangement is continued by smaller circles and other figures.

The two monuments first honored with a situation in this building, were those of John Howard the philanthropist, who expired at Cherson, in Russian Tartary, in 1790, and Dr. Johnson, who died in 1784; the latter executed by John Bacon, R. A. in 1796, was the first erected, though the permission for Howard's statue was first granted. It occupies a situation corresponding with that of Dr. Johnson, an angle in front of one of the smaller piers of the dome, and is also from the chisel of Bacon. In another correspondent angle below the dome is a third statue by Bacon, erected in 1799, to the memory of Sir William Jones, who died at Bengal in 1794. A fourth statue is in memory of Sir Joshua Reynolds who died in 1792; under the east window of the north end of the principal transept, is the monument of Captains Mosse and Riou, who fell in the attack upon Copenhagen, conducted by Lord Nelson in 1801, by Charles Rossi, R. A. it was erected in 1805. Against the panel, between the pilasters of the first pier on the east from the north entrance, is a magnificent group of sculpture, executed by Bacon in 1805, in commemoration of Major General Thomas Dundas, who died in the West Indies in 1794.

Immediately opposite is a monument by Banks, R. A. to the memory of Captain Westcott, who was killed in the battle of the Nile in 1798. At the south end of this transept, is a corresponding situation, against the panel of the south west pier is another monument by Banks, in memory of Captain Burgess, who gloriously fell in the battle fought with the Dutch off Camperdown, by Admiral Duncan in 1797. Against the opposite panel is another large monument, the workmanship of Rossi, commemorating the fate and gallant conduct of Captain Faulknor, who fell in battle in the West Indies, in 1795. In a smaller panel above the last monument, is a medallion to Captain Willet Miller, a beautiful composition by Flaxman. Within the alcove of the south east window of this part of the transept, is the very noble equestrian monument of Sir Ralph Abercromby, who was mortally wounded in Egypt, soon after the memorable landing of the British troops in that country, in the year 1801. This was erected in consequence of a vote of Parliament, by R. Westmacott, about 1809, and is unquestionably one of the grandest monuments, and most perfect in composition that has yet been erected in St. Paul's Cathedral. Under the opposite east window is a most noble monument by Flaxman, in memory of Lord Howe, who died in 1799. Against the large panel on the left of the entrance into the choir, is a magnificent monument by Westmacott, to the Marquess Cornwallis, who died in 1805, at Ghazee-pore, in the province of Benares. In a small panel over it, is a memento for Captain John Cooke, who was killed commanding the Bellerophon in the battle of Trafalgar; and in the corresponding panel opposite to this, is another mural monument, by Bacon, in commemoration of Captain George Duff, who was killed in the same battle, commanding the Mars. The monument to Lord Nelson, by Flaxman, is opposite that of the Marquess Cornwallis. The statue of Nelson, habited in the pelisse presented by the Grand Seigneur, leans on an anchor beneath on the right of the hero; Britannia directs the attention of two young seamen to Nelson, their great example. The British Lion on the other side guards the monument. On the cornice of the pedestal are inscribed the words, Copenhagen, Nile, Trafalgar. The figures on the pedestal represent the North sea, the German Ocean, the Nile, and the Mediterranean.

Of all the persons mentioned as commemorated in this edifice, only Lord Nelson has been really interred here.

The entrance to the vaults is by a broad flight of steps in the south eastern angle of the great transept. In these recesses which receive only a partial distant light, the vast piers and arches that sustain the superstructure, form the whole space into three main avenues, the principal one under the dome being almost totally dark. Here in the very centre of the building repose the remains of Lord Nelson, who fell in the battle of Trafalgar in 1805. His body having been brought to England in his own ship, the Victory, was enclosed at Chatham, in a coffin made out of the main mast of L'Orient, which blew up in the battle of the Nile, and being thence conveyed to Greenwich Hospital, was laid in state during three days. It was then removed by water to the Admiralty, and on the following day, Thursday, January 9th, 1806, was conveyed to St. Paul's, amidst a solemn procession, and with all the honours that a sorrowing country could bestow. On this occasion, the interior of the Cathedral displayed a scene the most impressive and affecting, perhaps, that was ever beheld within its walls. The colours of the Victory were deposited with the chieftain, who so gloriously fell under them, and whose reliques have been enclosed within a base of Scottish granite, built upon the floor of the vault, and supporting a large sarcophagus, formed of black and dark colored marbles. In St. Paul's are also the monuments of Admiral Lord Collingwood who died in 1810; he was second in command to Lord Nelson in the battle of Trafalgar, and upon him the entire command devolved after the death of that hero. Major general John Gaspard le Marchant who fell in the battle of Salamanca; Admiral Lord Rodney, Vice Admiral of Great Britain who died May 24, 1792, by Rossi; Lieutenant General Sir John Moore who died at Corunna in 1808; Admiral Lord Duncan who died in 1804.

This vast and noble fabric is surrounded at a stated distance by a dwarf stone wall, on which is placed a most magnificent balustrade of cast iron, about five feet six inches in height exclusive of the wall. In this enclosure are seven gates; the whole was cast at Gloucester furnace near Lamberhurst in Sussex. In the area of the grand west front on a pedestal of exquisite workmanship stands a marble statue of Queen Anne. The figures on the base represent Britannia, Gallia, Hibernia and America; these and also the colossal statues with which the church is adorned were executed by Hill. The space occupied by this splendid edifice is 2 acres and 16 perches, but with the churchyard it occupies 6 acres. The north east part of the churchyard belongs to St. Faith's parish, and the south-east part of the cemetery with a vault therein, to St. Gregory's parish. This magnificent cathedral sufficiently lofty to be distinguished at sea eastward and at Windsor to the west, was begun and finished by one architect Sir Christopher Wren, one principal mason Mr. Stroug, and during one bishopric, that of Dr. Henry Compton Bishop of London.

THE LORD MAYOR AND ALDERMEN OF LONDON.

Henry Fitz Alwyn is generally said to have been the first Mayor of London, in which office he died about 1213. In the following year King John granted a Charter, conferring upon the Barons of the City of London, the liberty of choosing a Mayor annually, and it was expressly stipulated in Magna Charta, that the City of London should have all its ancient privileges and free customs, as well by land as by water. The liberty of electing a Mayor annually was accompanied by the condition that he should be presented to the King; but in 1252, Henry III. permitted the Citizens to present their Mayor to the Barons of the Exchequer when the King should not be at Westminster. This was done to avoid the inconvenience that had resulted from being obliged to repair to the King's residence, in whatever part of England he might have been. The right of electing the Mayor was, at this early period, resident in the citizens at large, when assembled in general folk-mote. This gave place to a more confined election by delegates chosen out of each ward, denominated the Commonalty, which method continued with variations at different periods till 1475, when, by an act of Common Council, the election of the Mayor and Sheriffs was vested in the Mayor, Aldermen, and Common Council, and the Masters, Wardens, and Liverymen of the City Companies, in whom the right has been continued by Act of Parliament. In the year 1354, King Edward III. granted the liberty of having maces carried before the Mayor, Sheriffs, and Aldermen every where, within the City, its suburbs and liberties, and the county of Middlesex; and also when going to meet the King or his heirs, or other royal persons, without the City, &c. It was probably at this period that the chief magistrate was first entitled the Lord Mayor, a conjecture which receives corroboration from the circumstance of that officer being rated as an earl, under the levies of the capitation tax of 1379, and every Alderman as a Baron. In 1452, Godfrey Fielding, mercer, then Lord Mayor, was made a privy councillor by King Henry VI. which is the earliest instance of a person of his rank being advanced to such an honor. Although the office of Lord Mayor is elective, his supremacy does not cease on the death of the sovereign, and when this happens, he is considered as one of the principal officers in the kingdom, and takes his place accordingly in the privy council until the new king is proclaimed. The Lord Mayor's power is extensive, he is not only the king's representative in the civil government of the city, but also first commissioner of the lieutenancy, perpetual coroner and escheator within the City and Liberties of London, and the Borough of Southwark. Chief justice of oyer and terminer, and gaol delivery of Newgate, judge of the courts of wardmote at the election of Aldermen, conservator of the River Thames and Medway, perpetual commissioner in all affairs relating to the river Lea, and chief butler to the king at all coronation feasts. No corporation business is valid without his authority, and no election of a Mayor for next year is legal without his presence, he being living. Whoever is chosen to fill the office of Lord Mayor, must be free of one of the city companies; and if not so before he is chosen, he must become so before he can be sworn. The election is made annually on Michaelmas-day, in Guildhall, when all the Aldermen who have not passed the chair, but who have served the office of Sheriff are proposed in rotation, and two of them are returned by the Livery assembled in common hall to the court of Aldermen, and the majority of that court determine on which of the two the election has fallen. Soon after the election, the person thus chosen, accompanied by the Recorder and other officers, is presented to the Lord Chancellor as his Majesty's representative for his approbation, without which the Lord Mayor elect has no legal power to execute his office; but this being obtained, he is sworn in on the 8th of November, at Guildhall; and on the next day he is finally sworn before the Barons of the Exchequer at Westminster, after certain ceremonies, and immediately enters upon his office. The inauguration of the chief magistrate is attended with much civic festivity; but the manner in which the Lord Mayor's day is now kept, does not by any means equal the splendid pomp with which it had been celebrated in former periods. The custom of going in state to Westminster by water, was introduced in 1453, by Sir John Norman, who built a barge for the purpose at his own expence: the twelve principal city Companies also built costly barges; on this occasion they all went in grand procession from the Vintry. The watermen of that day were so highly pleased with the Lord Mayor's conduct, that they composed a song, beginning

Row to thy Lemman.

At the present day, the mode of procedure is in a similar manner, and when the ceremony is concluded at Westminster Hall, the procession returns in order to Blackfriar's bridge, when the Lord Mayor lands, and is received by the Artillery Company, which takes the lead in the procession thence to Guildhall, and is followed by the Company to which his lordship belongs. Formerly different pageants were introduced into the procession by the various companies, but all that remains of the Lord Mayor's show, to remind the curiously informed of its ancient character, is the first part of the procession composed of the poor men of the company to which the Lord Mayor belongs, habited in long gowns and close caps of the company's livery, bearing shields on their arms, but without javelins. So many of these attend as there are years in the Lord Mayor's age. The numerous band of gentlemen ushers, in velvet coats, wearing chains of gold, and bearing white staves, is reduced to half a dozen full dressed footmen, and the most attractive part of the show in modern times has been the Armourers Company, preceded by a man on horseback, in bright armour, having sometimes two or three persons on horseback in different kinds of armour accompanying him in the procession. When the whole reaches Guildhall, the City Companies retire to their respective Halls, where also entertainments are provided. Since the year 1752, the place of residence of the Lord Mayor has been the Mansion House, where he lives in an elegant manner. On all state occasions he is habited in robes of scarlet, richly furred, and wears a collar of S. S. with a jewel appendant, the mace and sword being carried before him. The principal officers belonging to the Lord Mayor, and forming part of the establishment for maintaining his dignity, are the sword bearer, the common hunt, the common crier, and the water bailiff, all of whom have the title of esquires. The ennobled families of Cornwallis, Capel, Coventry, Legge, Cowper, Thynne, Ward, Craven, Marsham, Pulteney, Hill, Holles, Osborne, Cavendish, Bennet and others, have sprung either directly or collaterally from those who have been either Mayors, Sheriffs, or Aldermen of London; and a very large portion of the peerage of the united kingdom is related, either by descent or intermarriage to the citizens of the metropolis.

The Aldermen of London are of more remote antiquity than their Mayors, and their office was unquestionably of Anglo-Saxon institution. In a charter, granted by King Henry I. all strangers are commanded "to give custom to none but to him to whom the soke appertains," that is, the Alderman or Baron, "or to his officers whom he shall there put." Anciently the Aldermanries or Wards were held either by inheritance or by purchase; but the citizens at length brought it to an annual election. The mode of election has been several times varied, but is now regulated by an act of parliament, passed in 1725, by which also the modes of electing all the other city officers are prescribed. The right of voting for Aldermen, is vested in those freemen who are resident householders in the different Wards, paying scot and lot, and a rent of £10 or upwards annually. The Aldermen are the subordinate governors of their respective Wards, under the jurisdiction of the Lord Mayor, and they exercise an executive power within their own districts. The Aldermen hold courts of wardmote, for choosing the ward officers, regulating the business of the ward, &c. and in the management of their affairs, each is assisted by one or two deputies, who are appointed by himself out of the common council of his ward. Those Aldermen who have passed the chair, are justices of the quorum, and all the other Aldermen are justices of the peace within the city.

The office of Sheriff is of great antiquity, and that London had its Sheriff prior to the Norman conquest, is evinced by William the Conqueror's second charter being addressed to William the Bishop, and Sweyn the Sheriff. In all general cases, the Sheriffs are the king's officers, but the Sheriff-wick of Middlesex having been purchased by the City of London from King Henry I. the Mayor and Citizens now hold the office in fee, and appoint two Sheriffs annually for London and Middlesex. Although the jurisdiction of these officers are to a considerable extent perfectly separate, yet if either of them dies, the other cannot act till a new Sheriff be chosen. There must be two Sheriffs for London, which by charters is both a city and a county, though they make but one, jointly, for the county of Middlesex. Anciently these offices were chosen from the commonalty, and any citizen is still eligible, excepting he swear himself not worth £1500., and many aldermen who were never sheriffs, were yet advanced to the Mayoralty; but a greater degree of regularity is now observed, and no sheriff can be chosen Lord Mayor unless he has been elected Alderman. The mode of choosing the sheriffs has been altered at different periods; the present mode is, that the Lord Mayor drinks to fourteen respectable citizens, two of whom are elected by the Livery on the following Midsummer-day, and they are obliged to serve under a penalty. Whoever serves is obliged to give bond to the corporation for £1000. The sheriffs enter upon their office on Michaelmas-day. After the Sheriffs are elected, the Livery proceed to choose a Chamberlain for the city, and other officers, as the Bridge-masters, the Auditors of the city and Bridge accounts, the Aleoners, &c. The Chamberlain though subjected to the form of annual election, is never displaced unless under very particular circumstances. The duties of the Sheriffs are to serve the King's writs of process, to collect the public revenue within their jurisdiction, to gather into the exchequer all fines to the crown, to attend the judges and execute their orders, to impanel juries, to see condemned persons executed, and in case of resistance to legal authority, to raise the posse comitatus. They are also to discharge the orders of the court of common-council, in all cases of petition to Parliament, and of address &c., to his Majesty. In the performance of these trusts, there are distinct official arrangements for the city and its liberties, and for the county exclusively. The city department is superintended by the permanent under Sheriffs, the two Secondaries of the Poultry comptroller, and Giltspur-street comptroller, the Sheriff's prisons within the city, their orders are enforced by the serjants at Mace, who are admitted to their office by the court of Aldermen.

The department for the county of Middlesex, is on a more extensive establishment, and is managed by deputies to the under-sheriffs; these persons employ thirty-nine bailiffs, whose duty is to make arrests, and execute warrants on all writs directed to the sheriffs, &c. In all cases of election for members of parliament, either for the city or county, the writs are directed to the sheriffs, who are the returning officers, and have an exclusive power to convene the voters, preside at the poll, and adjourn from time to time as they judge expedient. When the great increase in the population of the city, and the intermixture of numerous non-freemen with its inhabitants, had rendered the assembly of the commonalty inconvenient. The meeting of the Folk-mote at St. Pauls Cross was gradually discontinued, and a certain number of representatives were chosen out of each ward, who being added to the Lord Mayor and Aldermen, constituted a common council. The common councilmen are chosen after the same manner as the Aldermen; with this difference only, that as the Lord Mayor presides in the Wardmote, so the Alderman of each ward is judge of the poll, at the election of a common councilman. They are chosen annually on St. Thomas's day, and no act can be executed in their name, without the concurrence of a majority of the court, but they cannot assemble without a summons from the Lord Mayor. The Recorder is appointed by the Lord Mayor and Alderman, and holds his situation during life. He is the principal assistant and counsellor to the city magistrates, and takes precedence in the courts, before all men who have not passed the civic chair. He is also one of the justices of Oyer and Terminer, and a justice of the peace for the city; he reads and presents the addresses to the King, and when seated on the bench, delivers the sentences of the whole court. The chamberlain is an office of great trust, he is the city treasurer, and receives all the money belonging to the corporation; for which he accounts annually to the proper auditors. All the bonds and securities, taken by the city with the counterparts of loans, &c., are in his custody; and he has the keeping of the money, lands and goods of the city orphans, for which he is obliged to give security on entering office. The town clerk or city Registrar has the custody of the charters, rolls, records, &c., of the city; together with the books in which the proceedings of the corporation are narrated. Both the chamberlain and this officer have several clerks and other assistants. The common serjeant has to attend the Lord Mayor and Aldermen on court days, and must be in council with them, on all occasions. The city remembrancer attends daily at Westminster, during the setting of parliament, to report any proceedings of the House, that may effect the interests of the city. The three last officers are all appointed by the court of common council. Common Halls are the general assemblies of the Livery in Guildhall, and the business of which, is carried on in conformity with enactments of parliament, passed in 1725. The city courts of Ordinary Jurisdiction are four in number; namely the Court of Hustings, the Lord Mayor's Court, and the two Sheriff's Courts. The court of Hustings the most ancient, is the supreme court of law belonging to the city, and is also a court of Record from immemorial usage. It is divided into two courts, denominated the Husting of pleas of land, and the Husting of common pleas; and under these titles a court is held weekly. The Lord Mayor's court is a court of record, and has both an equitable, and a legal production, which is exercised by primary inherent right. The Lord Mayor and Aldermen are considered as the judges of this court, but the Recorder only officiates; under him, is a Registrar who has the custody of all records &c.; this office forms a part of that of the Town Clerk, but is executed by Deputy. There is also a secondary or clerk of the bails belonging to this court, six serjeants at mace, four council or common pleaders who have been admitted barristers at one of the inns of court, and four attorneys who have been admitted into one of the courts of Westminster Hall. This court is held once or more weekly according as the business may render it necessary. The Sheriff's courts forming two distinct independant judicatures accord as to authority and practice. They are courts of record from immemorial usage, and each court has its own judge, who is appointed by the court of aldermen and must be a barrister of three years standing. Besides these courts there are various others belonging to the city, as the court of the Lord Mayor and Aldermen, the Chamberlains court, the court of Conservancy of the river Thames, the Coroners and Escheators court, and the court of Requests in Conscience. The court of common council assemble in the council chamber at Guildhall, and may be described as the city legislature; its general business being to make laws for the due government of the city, and its liberties. As the citizens of London cannot be impeached out of their own boundaries; the courts of King's Bench and Common Pleas are consequently held within the city at Guildhall, before the Lord Chief Justice, and the other judges of the realm during term time. There is another principal court, which is held within the city. The court of Oyer and Terminer for the trial of criminals in London and Middlesex. This is held eight times yearly, under the King's commission in the Justice hall in the Old Bailey. The judges of this court are the Lord Mayor, the Aldermen past the chair, and the Recorder, who on these occasions are attended by the sheriffs, and generally by one or more of the national judges; the prisoners are tried by a jury of citizens, for offences within the city, and by a Middlesex jury for those committed in the county. The continued tranquility of the capital, in the times subsequent to the Restoration of Charles the 2nd, having rendered any call on the military power of the city unnecessary, the ancient framed bands were gradually disorganized, but were for some time nominally kept up. The Commissions were filled by the chief Citizens and each regiment had an alderman for its colonel. A new system was at length resorted to and in the year 1794 an Act of Parliament was passed for raising two regiments of Militia for the defence of the City, to be trained and exercised under the superintendence of the Commissioners of Lieutenancy. Another Act was passed in May 1796, by which 1,200 men were to be raised and formed into two regiments the expences to be defrayed by an equal assessment upon the different Wards. Besides the City Militia there is also the Artillery Company, which is principally composed of a voluntary enrolment of the younger citizens, to the amount of about 600. The Artillery Company is governed by a President, Vice President, Treasurer, and court of Assistants.

THE GUILDHALL, MANSION HOUSE, &c.

The original Hall for the transaction of the public business of the Corporation of the City of London, appears to have stood on the eastern side of Alderman's Bury, to which it gave name.

The present Guildhall, an extensive pile of building, situated at the northern end of King Street Cheapside, was commenced in the year 1411, by Thomas Knottes, then Lord Mayor, and by the Aldermen; the expences of erecting the great hall, which was the first part that was built was defrayed by benevolences from the City Companies. In the year 1423, the executors of the celebrated Sir Richard Whittington gave £35 towards paving the great hall with hard stone of Purbeck, and they also glazed some of the windows; others were glazed by divers Aldermen, whose arms were in consequence inserted in the windows. In 1481 Sir William Harvey Lord Mayor gave £40 for making and glazing two louveres or lanterns, and about the year 1501, the kitchen and other offices were built by Sir John Shaw, Goldsmith, Mayor, who procured contributions from the City Companies.

In 1499 all the works appear to have been completed. It comprised the mayor's court, a porch on the southern side of the mayor's court, the mayor's chamber and a council chamber, with other rooms above the stairs, together with a stately porch on entrance to the great hall beautified with images of stone. In 1505 a bequest of £73. 6s. 8d. was made by Sir Nicholas Aldwyn for a hanging of tapestry to serve for principal days in the hall. In 1615 a new council chamber, with a record room over it was erected. At the time of the fire of London in 1666, the out offices of this edifice were consumed, but the Hall underwent a substantial repair within the three following years. The ancient venerable aspect of the Hall was changed according to the absurd taste of the day by the erection of the present gothic front in 1790. The interior of the porch is nearly in its ancient state, and tolerably perfect. The interior of the great hall deprived as it is of its original roof, and considerably mutilated in parts, retains much of the grandeur of its ancient character. Its length is 154 feet, and its width 52 feet. The sides are each separated into eight divisions by clustered pillars, upon which are now large shields blazoned with the royal arms, the arms of the city, and of the principal city companies, these were put up subsequently to the repairs after the great fire; there is no doubt that originally the Hall was finished with an open worked timber roof, similar to that of Westminster Hall, and that the springing of the ancient timbers took their rise from the capitals of these clustered pillars. The eastern end of the Hall is appropriated to the holding of the court of Hustings. One large painted window fills nearly all the upper space, both the design and execution of the painted glass in this window are of the meanest order and can only be characterised as an expensive job. The western end of the Hall exhibits another magnificent window and modern painted glass in the same style of art, and apparently by the same hand, at this end of the Hall are the two gigantic statues generally called Gog and Magog, they are in Roman costume, but are supposed to be Anglo Saxon types of municipal power. Cenotaphs have been erected in Guildhall at the expense of the city, in commemoration of William Beckford, Lord Mayor in 1763, and 1770; William Earl of Chatham, by Bacon; Admiral Lord Nelson, by Smith; and of the Right Honorable William Pitt, prime minister, by Bubb. In the lord mayor's court which is also the court of common pleas, is a portrait of Sir Matthew Hale, by Wright, and another of the late Lord Camden, by Reynolds. In the court of king's bench is a picture of the relief of Gibraltar by Lord Howe, 1782, by Copley. The common council chamber is hung with a collection of pictures given to the city by the late Alderman Boydell, &c. &c. The old council chamber, wherein the court of the Lord Mayor and Aldermen is now held, bears the appropriate motto of Audi Alteram Partem. In the chamberlain's drawing room are copies of votes of thanks from the city to distinguished Military and Naval heroes, framed and glazed. In the chamberlain's office apprentices are enrolled, freemen admitted, &c. Since the building of the kitchen by Sir John Shaw in 1501, the inauguration dinners of the Lord Mayors have constantly been celebrated in Guildhall. The entertainments are always splendid, but particularly so when the sovereign and royal family honor the citizens with their presence, or when direct invitations to banquets are given on the occurrence of important state events.

Previously to the reign of George 2nd, the chief magistrate of the City of London, had no place of fixed residence for exercising his official dignities and hospitality. The foundation of the Mansion House was laid 15th October, 1739.

The edifice designed by George Dance stands in a line with Cheapside at the eastern end of the Poultry, a situation that was adopted as most in the centre of business, and in the heart of the city. The site had been previously occupied by the Stocks market, chiefly for fruit and vegetables. This spot was discovered to be so full of springs that it became expedient to erect the mansion wholly upon piles; the building was not completed till the year 1753, and Sir Crispe Gascoigne ancestor of the marchioness of Salisbury, was the first Lord Mayor who made it his residence. It is built of Portland stone, and exhibits a noble portico of the Corinthian order, the tympan ornamented with sculpture in alto relievo, representing the dignity and opulence of the City of London, designed and executed by Taylor. The eastern and western sides of this building are uniform, the entrances only being dissimilar. The disposition of the interior of the Mansion House, and the arrangements to which the architect has had recourse, in order to admit sufficient light into the various apartments evince great professional judgment. The grand entrance opens upon a saloon, a spacious apartment enriched with Corinthian columns of Siena marble, which leads into the Egyptian hall occupying the entire width of the house, more than 90 feet in length, and in width upwards of 60 feet; other apartments on this floor are Wilkes's parlour, the sword bearer's room and the justice room. The ball room, drawing room, and state bed room are the principal apartments of the second story; many sumptuous entertainments have been given in this mansion to the most illustrious personages of the country.

THE CITY COMPANIES, THEIR HALLS, &c.

The city companies had their origin from the early associations called Guilds, fellowships or fraternities. The secular guilds, so named to distinguish them from the ecclesiastical, under their primary acceptance appear to have included the entire aggregate of the merchants and traders of a city or town, and were denominated Gilda Mercatoria; but afterwards as the principal trading towns increased in population, the respective craftsmen, artisans, dealers, &c. who inhabited them obtained charters of incorporation. The guild of weavers of London was the earliest company of tradesmen in this country; but the remotest date of any of the patents of incorporation now known to be preserved, are those granted to the goldsmiths and the skinners, by Edward III. in 1327. The first twelve of the city companies, as they stand on the list, are called the chief, and all are arranged according to modern precedence.

THE TWELVE PRINCIPAL COMPANIES.

The Mercers' company was incorporated in 1393. The mercers are recorded to have been seated near the spot where their present hall and chapel stand, in Cheapside, as early as the period of the first introduction of their trade into this kingdom, when their congregated dwellings were distinguished by the general appellation of the Mercery. About the centre of this cluster stood the house of Gilbert a Becket, citizen of London, who was father of the celebrated Thomas a Becket, Archbishop of Canterbury. A few years after that prelate's assassination, Thomas Fitz Theobald de Helles, in conjunction with his wife, the sister of the Archbishop, founded a chapel and hospital upon the very spot where the dwelling of Becket's father had stood. This foundation was dedicated to the Blessed Virgin and St. Thomas the martyr of Acres. At the suppression in 1538, it was valued at £277 3s. 4d. and was afterwards granted to the Mercer's company; and was totally destroyed by the great fire in 1666. The present hall and chapel occupying the site of the ancient hospital, were erected soon after the conflagration, and are situated between the Old Jewry and Ironmonger Lane. The front in Cheapside, which from the contiguity of dwelling houses, is almost the only part of the exterior that can be seen, presents a gorgeous arrangement of architecture and sculpture. The doorway exhibits an ornamented arch, with cherubim above, mantling the Virgin's head, which is the cognizance of the company, and is displayed upon the key-stone of the arch. Above is a cornice with brackets, sustaining a balcony, from the floor of which on each side rises an Ionic pilaster, supporting an entablature and open pediment; between the pilasters and the central window are the figures of Faith and Hope, in niches; and from a third niche over the entablature, protrudes the statue of Charity. This front was carefully restored, and the whole building repaired, about 1814. The chapel is at the extremity of the ante chapel; over which is the hall, a lofty apartment, handsomely pannelled, having Ionic pilasters, and various carvings in compartments. Above the screen is a full length portrait of Benjamin Morland; portraits of Thomas Papillon, Esq. and Rowland Wynne, Esq. masters of this company, are also in this apartment. In the committee room are portraits of Dean Colet and Sir Thomas Gresham. The Mercers' company consists of a principal and three other wardens, a court of assistants, and a livery. The arms are gules, a demi virgin couped below the shoulders, issuing from clouds, vested and crowned with an eastern crown, her hair dishevelled, and wreathed round the temples with roses, all within an orle of clouds proper. Motto, Honor Deo. The patroness being the Virgin Mary, it was formerly the custom when a member was elected to the civic chair, to have in the inauguration procession to Westminster, an open chariot, highly ornamented, in which was seated a beautiful virgin magnificently attired, her hair flowing in ringlets, and on her head a crown.

The Grocer's Company under the primitive name of Pepperers, existed long previously to the period of its incorporation in 1345; the charter has been several times confirmed, particularly by Henry VI. and Charles I. Amongst other privileges was the management of the King's beam at the weighing house, now disused. This company consists of a master, three wardens, fifty-two assistants, with an extensive livery, and bears for arms, argent, semée of cloves, a chevron gules. Crest, a loaded camel passant proper: the supporters griffins per fess gules and or; and the motto God grant grace. Patron St. Anthony.

Grocer's Hall is situated on the northern side of the Poultry within a court, and was rebuilt in 1802, from designs by Levcron; this building, in 1827, was found to be in such a state of dilapidation that it was obliged to be repaired. Here are portraits of Sir John Cutler, Bart., a remarkably fine and interesting picture; Sir John Moore, Lord Mayor in 1682, and Sir John Fleet, Lord Mayor in 1693. At the foot of the stairs are the arms of the company painted on glass by Willement.

The Linen Drapers' Company was incorporated in 1439, and is governed by a master, four wardens, and a court of assistants. The Hall is situated in Throgmorton Street, near its junction with Broad Street, is a quadrangular building, enclosing a court surrounded by an arcade. The dining hall occupies the eastern side of the quadrangle; in this apartment are portraits of Henry Fitz Alwyn, first Mayor of London, and of Lord Nelson, by Sir William Beechey. In one of the windows are the arms of the company by Willement; the court room fitted up with great elegance, contains portraits of the Sovereigns from the time of William III.; that of George IV. is a repetition of Sir Thomas Lawrence's picture; of Sir Joseph Sheldon, Lord Mayor in 1677, by Gerard Voest, and Mary Queen of Scots, and James her son, said to be by Zuccherò, but the identity of the picture is doubtful. In the ball room is a portrait of Sir Robert Clayton, Lord Mayor in 1680, by Sir Godfrey Kneller. Adjoining the building is a garden opened occasionally to the public. The arms of the Drapers' company are azure, three clouds proper radiated in base or, surmounted by a triple crown of the last. Crest, on a mount vert a ram couchant, or attired sable; the supporters two lions pellette. Motto, Unto God only be honor and glory. Patroness the Virgin Mary.

The Fishmongers' Company, formed by the junction of the companies of salt and stock fishmongers, was incorporated in 1536. The salt fishmongers were incorporated in 1433, and the stock fishmongers in 1509, and before their union they had six halls, two in Thames Street, two in New Fish Street, and two in Old Fish Street. The Hall is now rebuilding, 1833, immediately at the foot of London Bridge. The following pictures belong to the company, the portraits of Admiral Earl St. Vincent, William the III. and his Queen Mary, the Margrave and Margravine of Anspach by Romney, and eight curious paintings of fish, grouped with much skill, and excellently colored; there is also a statue of Sir William Walworth. This company consists of a prime and five other wardens, a court of assistants and a livery; the arms are azure, three dolphins naiant in pale, between two pair of lucies saltierwise proper, crowned or, on a chief gules, six keys in three saltiers, the ward ends upward. Crest, two arms sustaining a crown; supporters, on the dexter side a merman armed, and on the sinister a mermaid holding a mirror in her left hand. Motto, All worship be to God only. Patron St. Peter.

The Goldsmiths' Company was incorporated in 1327, and afterwards confirmed in 1394, and in 1462, at which period was granted the privilege of inspecting, trying, and regulating all gold and silver wares. This company is governed by a prime and three other wardens, and a numerous court of assistants. The arms are quarterly gules and azure, in the first and fourth a leopard's head, in the second and third a covered cup between two buckles, all or. Crest, a demy goldsmith in the dress of Elizabeth's reign, in his dexter hand a pair of scales, and in his sinister an ingot; this is usually represented as lady of the same period. Supporters, unicorns or, armed crined and hooped argent; motto, Justitia virtutum regina. Patron St. Dunstan.

Goldsmith's Hall situated in Forster Lane, at the back of the Post Office, is now rebuilding from designs by Hardwick, in a very old style of architecture, with sculpture on the front by Nixon. In the dining hall on the eastern front will be five large windows, entirely filled with painted glass by Willement, the subjects chiefly armorial.

THE INNS OF COURT AND CHANCERY.

Inns of court are so called from being places of study, preparatory to practising in the courts of law, which were anciently held in the hall or court of the royal palace. Inns of Chancery were appropriated to such clerks as chiefly studied the form of writs, which was the province of the cursitors, who are officers of chancery, and such as belong to the courts of common pleas and king's bench. These societies are divided into four ranks, benchers, outer barristers, inner barristers, and students. The four inns of court are, the Inner Temple, Middle Temple, Lincoln's Inn, and Gray's Inn.

Of the ancient buildings of the Inner Temple, the only part remaining is the church. This was founded by the Templars in the reign of Henry II. upon the model of that of the Holy Sepulchre at Jerusalem, which was the general plan of all their churches, and was consecrated by Heraclius Patriarch of Jerusalem in 1185. The western part, or nave, is circular, about 57 feet diameter, of curious construction, and singular elegance of design. Upon the pavement is laid two distinct series of statues, four in one, five in the other series, these are of very remote sculpture, may be called excellent, the costume and armour in fine preservation; they are monumental figures of Geoffrey de Mandeville, ob. 1148, William Marshal, Earl of Pembroke, ob. 1216, Robert Ros, ob. 1215, William Plantagenet, ob. 1256, and others whose names are not known: the attitudes of the figures are much varied, and some are represented in a way no where else to be met with. The choir, proceeding from the eastern side of the nave, to which it in a manner forms a part, is in the early pointed style of architecture, and is divided into a spacious centre with its aisles; it is in length 87 feet, and in breadth 58 feet, and contains several very curious monuments. The arch of entrance on the western front is particularly grand, having on each side clustered pillars, with enriched capitals; it is in excellent preservation.

The old hall of the Temple, which was a later structure than the church, and supposed, by Dugdale, from the form of the windows, to have been of the time of Edward III. was pulled down to make room for the present substantial fabric, about the reign of Henry VIII. Although a fine room, it is comparatively small, ornamented with emblematical paintings, by Sir James Thornhill, and contains portraits of the celebrated judge Lyttleton, who died in 1481, and of his commentator Coke, a distinguished lawyer in the reign of Charles I. besides portraits of other celebrated judges. In the Inner Temple is a good library, and other buildings, consisting of several courts or squares, all surrounded by houses or chambers well inhabited. A beautiful garden on the Thames side is laid out with taste, and kept in perfect order; hence the view both up and down the river is interesting. The various divisions of the buildings in the Temple, retain the names of their founders; others are denominated from their vicinity to the principal offices, as the King's Bench Walk, near the King's Bench office; Church-yard court, adjoining the church-yard, &c. Allhallows, Candlemas, and Ascension day were anciently kept at this house with great splendour, when dancing, music, &c. were conducted by a master of the Revels. The steward, whose province it was to provide for these entertainments, was by his office an esquire, and entitled to wear a gold chain of the value of 100 marks. The arms of the Templars were argent, a cross gules on the nombril a holy lamb, but the society of the inner Temple now bear on a shield or, a pegasus gules.

The society of the Middle Temple consists of benchers, or such as have been readers, anciently called apprentices of the law, members, barristers, and students. The government of the society is vested in the benchers, whose general meetings to transact business, are dignified with the name of parliaments, and are held with much formality. The officers are a treasurer, a sub-treasurer, steward, chief butler, two porters, &c. The principal building of importance in the Middle Temple, is the great hall, completed in 1572, in the treasurership of Edmund Plowden, but the screen at the lower end was not put up till 1574; the latter was erected by contribution from the benchers, barristers, and members. This hall is the largest and finest room in any of the Inns of court, being 100 feet long, including a passage, 44 feet wide, and in height upwards of 60 feet. The roof is constructed of timber, and the enrichments of the interior are in a style of correspondent grandeur. The windows contain the armorial bearings of nearly two hundred members of the society, amongst them several of royal and noble rank; a great oriel window at the western end, has an uncommonly rich effect. Along the sides of the hall which are panelled with oak to a considerable height, are the arms of the readers, from the time of Richard Swaine in 1597, amounting to nearly three hundred in number. The oldest date to the arms in the windows is 1540, one of those which were removed from the hall which formerly stood on the same site. Some of the later arms are the work of Pearson. The hall also contains bronzed busts of the twelve Cæsars, and full length portraits of Charles I. and his equerry, King Charles II. King James II. King William III. Queen Anne, and King George II. The gallery at the lower end of the hall is of oak, and highly enriched with carving, both on the Doric pilasters and pedestals; the panels in the intercolumniations are also carved in bold relief. In the gallery are suits of ancient armour, with several morions and weapons carefully arranged. The oak tables and benches of the hall are very massive. Here were held the great feasts and Christmassings for which the Inns of court were formerly celebrated. One of the yearly festivals is particularly described in Gerard Legh's accidence of armoury; they sometimes lasted several days, and on each day the ceremony differed. In the parliament chamber are painted all the arms of the treasurers; and here is also some fine carving by Grinling Gibbons. The chief entrance to the Middle Temple is by a gatehouse, erected by Sir Christopher Wren, in the Ionic order. The Middle temple consists of several courts or squares, a very good library, besides gardens, a fountain, &c. Shakspeare, from tradition, made the Temple garden the scene of the origin of the badges of the white and red roses, the distinction of the houses of York and Lancaster; vide 1st part Hen. 4. act 2. sc. 4.

To the Inner and Middle Temple anciently belonged five Inns of chancery: Strand Inn, which was destroyed at the building of Somerset House, Clifford's Inn, Clement's Inn, New Inn, and Lyon's Inn. There are no records which fix any certain date to the foundation of these Inns of chancery: Clifford's Inn, adjoining St. Dunstan's Church in Fleet Street, is of very considerable antiquity. The society is governed by a principal and twelve rulers. Their arms are those of the founder, Chequy or and azure, a fess and border gules. It has three entrances, one in Fleet-street, another in Fetter-lane, and a third through Serjeant's Inn. The hall, a moderate sized room, contains an old chest, in which are kept the institutions of the society. In this hall Sir Matthew Hale and the judges sat after the great fire of London, to settle the differences regarding the several divisions of property; the speedy rebuilding of the City is in a great measure owing to the great care which they used, and to the judgment they showed in the affair.

Lyon's Inn, between Holywell-street and Wych-street consists of one small square only, with a hall in the south western angle, which was erected in the year 1700. Its government was originally vested in a treasurer and twelve ancients: the arms are chequy or and argent, a lion rampant sable.

St. Clement's Inn, near St. Clement's Church in the Strand, occupies three courts. The hall fills the southern side of the middle court: it is a well proportioned room, and contains a portrait of Sir Matthew Hale. The device of the society is an anchor without a stock, surmounted by the letter C. In the middle of the garden which adjoins that of the New Inn, is a sun dial, supported by the figure of an African kneeling, presented by Lord Clare to the society; it attracts much attention.

New Inn is the only law seminary remaining in the possession of the Middle Temple. It stands contiguous to Clement's Inn on the west: the buildings occupy three sides of a square; the garden which is a large plot of ground, surrounded by iron palisades, is laid out in pleasant walks, and is common to both societies. The hall stands at the south eastern angle. The site of the New Inn about the year 1485, was occupied as a common hostelry for travellers, and was called from its sign "Our Lady Inn." It became an Inn for students of the law, according to tradition, upon the removal of students from the Inn of Chancery, formerly situated in Sea-coal-lane, called St. George's Inn. The armorial ensigns of New Inn are, vert, a lilly pot argent.

Strand Inn, or Chester's Inn, was a house of chancery belonging to the Middle Temple, which stood near the Church of St. Mary-le-Strand, and together with that building and several others, was destroyed on the building of Somerset-house in the Strand. It is sometimes confounded with the house of the bishops of Chester, which stood near the same spot; but the latter was commonly called Lichfield and Coventry's Inn, or London Lodgings, and was originally built by Walter Langton, bishop of Chester, and treasurer of England in the reign of Edward I. In the high street near the Strand, stood a cross of stone, against the bishop of Chester's house, at which the justices itinerant sat, without London, in the year 1291, and at other times.

Lincoln's Inn, one of the principal Inns of court, occupies a large plot of ground on the western side of Chancery, or Chancellor's-lane, nearly in the centre of the metropolis, and was founded partly on the ruins of a convent of black or preaching friars, which anciently fronted Holborn; and partly on the site of the house and garden of the the bishop of Chichester. The hall was founded in 1506; but the louver or lantern was not erected till 1552: on the outside of it were placed in lead, the arms of Lacy, earl of Lincoln, together with those of Quincy, and of the earl of Chester. The noble gate-house was erected in 1518; and towards this part Sir Thomas Lovell, the founder of Holywell nunnery, formerly a member of this society, but then treasurer of the household to King Henry VII. was a benefactor. The timber used for it was brought by water from Henley upon Thames; and the brick and tile used, were dug from the Coneygarth, lying on the western side of the house adjoining to Lincoln's-Inn Fields. In 1542 Chancery-lane was paved with stone, at the expence of the society, as far as the extent of their own house and garden; and in 1555, a walk under the trees in the Coneygarth was made. Lincoln's-Inn chapel, designed by Inigo Jones, was erected in the reign of James I. It is reared on pillars and arches, which form an open walk beneath the chapel; the windows are painted with representations of prophets, apostles, &c.; the edifice is 67 feet long, by 41 feet wide, but is not be commended for its architecture.

The buildings which comprise the ancient part of Lincoln's Inn adjoin Chancery-lane, and are approached by the great gate house; the more modern part which occupies the greatest extent, lies to the north and south, and consists of the new square, or Searle's Court, and the stone buildings: Searle's Court received that name from Henry Searle, a benchler, whose property it was, about 1697. His arms, with those of the Inn, are in one corner of the square. The stone buildings are situated towards the northern end of Chancery-lane, fronting the west. This range is part only of a plan for re-building the whole Inn, which has never been completed. In front is a spacious garden. The terrace walk, erected in 1663, forms a fine promenade, having a view of Lincoln's Inn Square, one of the largest in Europe, originally laid out by Inigo Jones, by a commission from the king, issued in 1618, and entrusted to the care of the lord chancellor Bacon, the earl of Arundel, &c. Several of the ancient houses remain in this square, particularly Lindisey house, afterwards the mansion of the duke of Ancaster. Lincoln's-Inn library, situated in the stone buildings, contains many very fine and curious manuscripts, removed in 1787 from the old library, and great part of which were bequeathed to the society by Sir Matthew Hale. The keys of the presses in the library are kept by the master, who is chosen annually by the benchers from their own body, and the manuscripts cannot be viewed without an order from one of the masters of the bench.

Thaive's Inn is a court adjoining the parish church of St. Andrew Holborn. It was granted in the reign of Edward VI. to the benchers of Lincoln's-Inn, for the use of students at law, which society soon afterwards constituted it one of their Inns of chancery, and vested the government in a principal and fellows, who were to pay as an acknowledgment to the mother house an annual rent. The members are allowed the same privileges for the admission of students into Lincoln's-Inn, as were enjoyed by the members of Furnival's Inn.

Furnival's Inn is situated in Holborn, between Brook-street and Leather-lane, and occupies one square or court. This society was governed by a principal and twelve ancients. Their arms are argent, a bend between six martlets within a border gules.

Gray's Inn, the fourth and last Inn of court, stands on the northern side of Holborn, and extends from Gray's-Inn Lane a considerable distance westward. It consists of two large squares or courts, besides a third facing the principal entrance to the gardens. The hall and chapel occupy the southern side of the largest court; the former is a well proportioned apartment, having an open worked timber roof, and windows richly decorated with armorial bearings. The chapel stands on the site of an ancient structure, called the chapel of Portpole. In 1592, a sum of money was contributed by the members of the society, towards building a gate house in Holborn, which was soon afterwards erected. The gardens, for which this Inn of court is still celebrated, are very large, and were planted in the reign of Elizabeth, when Mr. Bacon, afterwards lord Verulam, as treasurer of the society, allowed a sum for planting elm trees in them; and it was ordered that a new rail, and quickset hedges, should be set upon the upper long walk. The arms of the society are sable, a griffin segreant or.

Staple Inn stands on the southern side of Holborn, and is one of the two Inns of chancery belonging to Gray's-Inn; it consists of two large courts surrounded with buildings. The first court adjoining Holborn is of great age, and towards the street extends a considerable length. Great part of the second court was rebuilt about 1720, and it contains also a garden. The Hall of this Inn, which separates the two squares, is a large handsome room; in the windows are some coats of arms of former members of the society. Here are also some old portraits, and busts of the twelve Cæsars on brackets. The arms of Staple Inn are vert, a wool pack argent.

Bernard's Inn is situated at a short distance from Staple Inn in the same street, and consists of two courts, surrounded by chambers. The hall of this Inn contains a few portraits of eminent lawyers, and the windows are decorated with armorial bearings. In the second square is a small garden, and an access to Fetter-lane. The government of Bernard's Inn was vested in a principal and twelve ancients, besides the gentlemen of the house. Their arms were party per pale indented ermine and sable, a chevron fretted or and gules.

Besides the Inns of court and chancery, there are other Inns appropriated to the use of the judges of the King's Bench, Common Pleas, Barons of the Exchequer, and Serjeants at Law: two of these are still remaining; the one situate in Chancery-lane, the other in Fleet-street. A third Serjeant's Inn stood in Holborn, called Scroop's Inn, which has long been destroyed.

Serjeant's Inn, Chancery-lane, consists of two small courts, surrounded by the judge's chambers. The principal entrance fronts the hall; the second court communicates with Clifford's Inn. The hall windows, like those of other Inns, are decorated with armorial bearings in stained glass. The chapel is not remarkable. This Inn, previously to 1484, was called Faryngdon's Inn.

Serjeant's Inn, Fleet-street, retains its ancient name, but is at present occupied by the Amicable society, and private residences round a court, the Inn having been deserted by the judges on the old buildings falling to decay. It adjoins the north eastern corner of the Temple, with which it has a communication.

Scrope's Inn adjoined the house of the bishop of Ely; the site is now called Scrope's-court.

THE TOWER OF LONDON.

This celebrated fortress stands on the northern bank of the river Thames, at the eastern extremity of the city, and occupies the brow of an eminence, called Tower-hill. It is probable that it was originally designed to defend the maritime approach to the capital; but as a place of strength little importance can be attached to it. The fortifications, which consist of a citadel, encompassed by an inner and outer ward, occupy more than twelve acres of land, and are surrounded by a broad ditch, supplied with water from the Thames. The principal entrance to the Tower is over a stone bridge at the southwestern angle of the enclosure; there are also two draw-bridges on the southern side communicating with a platform, or wharf, towards the river, and an entrance by water under a strong gate-house tower, which is usually called the traitor's gate. Beyond the ditch, on the west, there formerly stood some considerable outworks, which formed the Barbican, the post of an advanced guard, and where a porter was stationed to announce all arrivals at the gate, and to detain strangers till their business was made known to the governor. A small moat connected with that which surrounds the Tower enclosed these outworks, most of which have been removed, and the site is now chiefly occupied by the royal menagerie. The entrance to the principal bridge is covered by a strong tower, flanked with bastions; at the opposite end of the bridge, another portal of similar construction forms an entry to the outer ward. The inner ward, which contained the state apartments, and all the most considerable buildings, is entered from the south by a gatehouse, the architecture of which is in the style of that of the fourteenth century: the inner ward was enclosed by a lofty wall of stone, embattled and strengthened by thirteen turrets, properly situated for commanding the intermediate lines of rampart. A great portion of this wall is still extant, and most of the towers remain nearly in their original state.

THE WHITE TOWER.

The most ancient part of the Tower of London is the Citadel, which stands nearly in the centre of the Inner ward. It is said to have been erected under the direction of Gundulph, bishop of Rochester, by command of William the Conqueror, about 1081, and is called Cæsar's Tower. In dimension this edifice is 176 feet north and south, by 96 feet east and west, having on the eastern side a semicircular projection of considerable diameter, which rises to the summit of the building. The elevation is 92 feet; it is embattled, and its angles are finished with turrets, which rise considerably above the roof. The turrets at the north and south-western angles are square, with a slight projection; that upon the south east is built on the summit of the wall, and the tower at the north-eastern angle, called the observatory, is an irregular circle in plan, projecting materially from the face of the main building; it contains a staircase, which communicates with each of the floors from the vaults to the roof.

In its elevation, the White Tower is divided into three stories, and there are two entrances on the northern side, and another on the southern; both of which are evidently more modern than the date which has been assigned to the building; but over the former are indications of an arch of ample dimension which seems to point out the situation of the original entrance. Considerable repairs were effected in this building about the middle of the thirteenth century, probably the first of any importance that had been necessary since its foundation. Much was done to the White Tower, in common with the rest of the fortress, in the year 1532, when stone was brought for the purpose from the quarries of Caen in Normandy. After the restoration of Charles II. it underwent another repair; and in the reign of William III. great alterations were made in the windows, and other parts of the building, when some of the rooms were converted into armouries. The first floor of the White Tower consists of two large apartments and a smaller one, distinguished from the others by having a semicircular termination. Tradition states this was the place of confinement of Sir Walter Raleigh, and that it was here he wrote his History of the world; it is now a repository for cavalry arms; the others are used as an armoury and tool room. On the second story is Cæsar's chapel, which, with its gallery, occupies the entire space from the second floor to the roof; it exhibits a fine and perfect specimen of the Anglo-Norman style of architecture, and was dedicated to St. John the Evangelist. This chapel is supposed to have been used for the private devotion of the royal family and household, when the court was kept at the tower; it now forms part of the rooms belonging to the record office. The other rooms on this floor are used as armouries. The uppermost story of the White Tower corresponds exactly, in point of division, with each of the others; but the rooms are much loftier, and their general appearance excites a greater degree of interest. To the largest apartment tradition has given the name of the council chamber, and it is said that here the council was assembled in 1483, when Richard, Duke of Gloucester, ordered the execution of Lord Hastings, and the arrests of the Archbishop of York, the Bishop of Ely, and Lord Stanley. The massive timbered roof and its supporters, has an appearance of great antiquity, and the room evidently formed one of the state apartments of the White Tower. Round the floor of the uppermost story are small galleries, formed in the substance of the wall, and communicating with stairs at the angles. The whole of this floor is now annexed to the record office, the keeper of which is Henry Petrie, Esq. and the check clerk John Bayley, Esq. the latter gentleman has published a valuable history of this interesting edifice, whence much of this brief notice is derived.

ST PETER'S CHAPEL.

Besides the private chapel of St. John the Evangelist in the white tower, there is another chapel in the north-western angle of the inner ward, dedicated to St. Peter, ad vincula, which was in early times appropriated to the public devotion of the royal family and household, as well as for the general use of the garrison. It was originally erected in the reign of Edward I. but appears to have undergone considerable alterations since that period, these were made probably in the reign of Henry VIII. at which time it was materially injured by fire. The chapel is entirely void of ornament, but derives interest from being the burial place of many personages distinguished by rank, by fortune, and by fate. At the western end is an altar tomb, with recumbent figures of Sir Richard Cholmondeley, and Elizabeth his wife. He was lieutenant of the tower in the early part of the reign of Henry VIII. On the north side of the chancel is a monument of Sir Richard Blount, who died in 1560, and of Sir Michael his son, both lieutenants of the tower. Besides these monuments, and others of less note, there are in the floor several ancient slabs, but the brasses with which they were inlaid, have been purloined.

LIEUTENANT'S HOUSE.

The lodgings of the lieutenant of the tower, now occupied by the resident governor, are situated in the south-western angle of the inner ward. It is a large building, chiefly of timber, erected about the latter end of the reign of Henry VIII. A room on the second floor contains some paintings, but concealed by the panneling, and a memorial of the gunpowder plot, with a bust of King James I. which was erected in 1608, by Sir William Wade, then lieutenant of the tower. It was in this apartment that the commissioners met to examine the conspirators, and it has thence derived the name of the council chamber.

TOWERS IN THE WALLS.

The Bell Tower is situated immediately behind the lieutenant's house, and takes its name from containing the alarm bell of the garrison; it now forms part of the domestic offices of the resident governor. It is of circular form, and consists of only one floor above the ground. The architecture of the basement story is worthy of notice; it has a vaulted roof, with deep recesses in the walls, and derives celebrity from having been the place of confinement of Fisher, Bishop of Rochester, and is said, with little foundation, to have been that in which the princess Elizabeth was lodged, when imprisoned by queen Mary. The next tower, proceeding northward, in the line of enclosure of the Inner ward, is the Beauchamp, or Cobham Tower, so called from its having been the place of confinement of Thomas Beauchamp, earl of Warwick, previously to his banishment to the Isle of Man in 1397; and from some of the Cobhams who were confined here in the reign of Mary. The style of architecture corresponds with that which prevailed in the time of king John, or the early part of the reign of Henry III. the period when most of the small towers in the inner ward were erected. The Beauchamp Tower, one of the principal state prisons, excites interest from the numerous inscriptions, coats of arms, and other devices left on its walls by the sufferers. These were chiefly discovered in 1796, when the building was converted to a mess house for the officers of the garrison. The chief room in this tower is a spacious apartment on the first floor, and adjoining it are small cells, probably intended for the better security of persons by night. Continuing the course of the ancient wall is another tower, denominated the Devereux Tower, in consequence of Robert Devereux, earl of Essex, the favorite of queen Elizabeth, having been confined in it in the year 1601. The style of architecture in this building differs from that of the Beauchamp tower, and seems to be of earlier date. It retains for the most part its original character, having undergone little or no alteration, excepting in the windows. Its form approaches almost to a circle, and it consists of two stories, with one apartment on each, ascended by a winding staircase of stone. The basement, which is vaulted and groined, is about 19 feet in diameter, and the walls are 11 feet in thickness. This building now belongs to the office of ordnance, and is the residence of the master furbisher of small arms. From the Devereux tower, the ancient enclosure wall runs in a north-eastern direction to the Flint tower, which assimilated both in form and dimension to the rest of the towers which fortify the inner ward; it was rebuilt with brick about the year 1801. In the same direction are the remains of another tower, called the Bowyers tower, from its having been formerly the residence of the master and provider of the king's bows. The basement is the only part extant of the original building, and here, the tradition is that George, Duke of Clarence, was drowned in a butt of malmsey. The upper part of the building is of brick-work, and modern.

The enclosure of the inner ward declines to the south east, and the next tower is called the Brick tower, formerly the lodging of the master of the ordnance; the upper part of this tower, which is of brick, appears to have been built as early as the reign of Henry VIII. The north-eastern angle of the enclosure of the inner ward, is occupied by the Jewel tower, of comparatively modern erection, where the regalia is at present kept. From this tower, proceeding in a southerly direction, is another, called the Constables tower. In form and style of architecture, it closely corresponds with the Beauchamp tower, but is of smaller dimension. The original walls exist in a perfect state; but the windows have been enlarged, and the whole of the interior modernized. Continuing in the same direction, the next building on the walls is the Broad Arrow tower, similar to the last in form and dimension. By an ancient plan of the Tower of London, it appears that in the reign of Elizabeth, the wardrobe, forming part of the palace, extended westward from the Broad Arrow tower, and communicated with a strong round tower that stood near the south-western angle of the citadel, now entirely demolished.

At the South western angle of the Inner Ward is the Salt Tower, in form nearly circular; from this tower the wall of the Inner Ward originally extended in a westerly direction to the Lantern Tower, but at a subsequent period this space was occupied by the King's Gallery, a long building, at the back of which were the royal gardens. The Lantern Tower formed part of the royal apartments and contained the King's bedchamber and closet. Adjoining this tower were the Great Hall and other buildings of the Palace which occupied the entire south eastern angle of the Inner Ward. In 1788 great part of the Lantern Tower was destroyed by fire, and its remains were soon afterwards taken down, together with an adjoining gate-house: no traces of the domestic apartments of this ancient seat of royalty are now to be found: the site of these and other parts of the palace is now occupied by the buildings belonging to the ordnance office. The business of the ordnance office was formerly transacted in houses behind St. Peter's Chapel, but in the reign of James II. part of the old palace was taken down, and an office erected here, which having been destroyed by fire in 1788 the present structure was soon afterwards raised on its site; besides these offices a very large portion of the interior of the Tower of London is also occupied by Armories and Storehouses, and by residences of the different officers of the Establishment.

From the Lantern Tower or the King's lodgings the line of enclosure of the Inner ward is continued westward to the Record Tower, formerly called the Hall Tower from its contiguity to the Great Hall. It is a large circular building, the lower part with the exception of the White Tower is the oldest portion of the Tower of London, now extant. The Record Tower consists of only a basement and first story, each forming an occasional apartment, the former about 23 and the latter 28 feet in diameter. On the ground floor the walls are about 13 feet in thickness and in them are eight recesses, the arches of which are semi-circular, and the whole of the structure as high as the first floor is formed of regular courses of well squared masonry.

In the walls of the upper story there are also large recesses, but much higher, and having pointed arches; here is a fine lofty chamber and it is a common tradition that this room was the scene of the supposed murder of King Henry VI. It is now fitted with presses which contain the ancient records of the Kingdom, of the highest national and individual importance.

Adjoining the Record Tower on the west is a gatehouse, which forms the principal entrance to the inner ward. It is supposed to have been erected in the reign of Edward III.; each end of the archway beneath the tower was originally secured by gates and a strong portcullis, and in the eastern side between the defences was a circular stone staircase leading to the lodging of the porter, the superstructure consisted of two apartments and a space for working the portcullis. In the reign of Henry VIII. this tower was called the Garden Tower from its contiguity to the Lieutenants garden which now forms a part of the Parade; it is now by the warders designated as the Bloody Tower from the circumstance of the two young princes King Edward V. and his brother Richard Duke of York, sons of King Edward IV., having, as it is said, been put to death in this particular spot by their uncle the Protector Richard Duke of Gloucester, but the whole story is extremely doubtful. The bones found in the reign of Charles the II. and afterwards buried in Westminster Abbey were discovered on the southern side of the White tower at the foot of a staircase which leads to the chapel in that building. From the Bloody tower the enclosure wall of the inner ward is continued westward to the bell tower before described.

THE ARMORIES.

The Spanish Armory is a brick building situated opposite to the south-western angle of the White tower and derives its name from being stored with weapons erroneously described as having been found on board the Spanish fleet called the Armada, which in the reign of Elizabeth was destined for the invasion of England, but being met in the Channel was wholly taken or dispersed by the English fleet. Queen Elizabeth is here represented with a fluted breast-plate of the time of Henry VIII. below which is a piece of armour that without minute inspection it is impossible to understand; it could not be worn in a sitting posture, and proves to be the garde deraine belonging to the breast plate, being part of the identical suit worn by King Henry VIII. at the battle of the spurs in 1513, and such as occurs in the painting of that event now at Windsor castle. The armour for the Queen's arms is of Charles I's time, and the helmet held by the page of that of Edward VI. and of an elegant shape. Historians who record the Queen's going to Tilbury to review her troops never notice so extraordinary a circumstance as her appearing in armour. The targets with pistols in them were in the tower in the reign of Edward VI.; the pistols here were common to the English soldiery as well as the Spaniards and the glaives, bills, halbards, partisans, &c. which principally compose this part of the collection were used in England in the reign of Henry VIII.; the instruments of torture and the banner may have been part of the Spanish spoils, but it is probable that the remainder were furnished from the old stores in the tower.—vide Meyricks Critical Enquiry.

The Horse Armory adjoining the White Tower contains a representation of many of the English monarchs in fine armour on horseback, disposed with a grand and imposing effect, the whole was arranged by Sir Samuel Meyrick, under the direction of the Duke of Wellington, Master General of the Ordnance, in 1827. The suit of armour made for King Henry VIII. as well as the horse armour of the same suit is entirely covered with very curious engravings exhibiting a striking picture of the feelings of the times which conceived a man's body to be doubly protected, when, not only sheathed in steel, but covered with legends of saints. Here are also curious specimens of ancient and modern armour, cuirasses found on the field of Waterloo, &c.

The small armory situated opposite the northern side of the White tower, is 345 feet long and 60 feet wide. The building was finished in the reign of William and Mary, and their Majesties on its completion entertained their court with a splendid dinner in the large room. The ground floor besides containing chests of arms and accoutrements is the deposit of a great variety of ancient pieces of artillery and the drum major's chariot used in the army under the Duke of Marlborough. The first floor is fitted up as a repository of small arms, and contains about 150,000 stand, besides which there are several apartments fitted up as armories in the White tower, and another large building adjoining the office of ordnance, appropriated to the same purpose.

THE OUTER WARD.

The principal fortifications of the outer ward consist of a chain of small towers on that side next the Thames, all of which were erected in the latter part of the reign of Henry III. and some of them exhibit interesting specimens of the architecture of that period. The situation of the first, called the Develin tower, is now occupied by a small stone building of modern date. The wall round this building runs in a westerly direction to the Well tower; the lower part of it is all that is now extant of the original work. The next tower westward is called the Cradle tower, the upper portion of which seems to have been in early times connected with the apartments of the palace. The lower part forms a curious vaulted gateway which led in former times to a small drawbridge. The enclosure is hence continued westward to St. Thomas's tower, now called the Traitor's gate, from having under it a passage by water from the river, through which state prisoners were usually conveyed. The interior of this tower retains much of its original appearance and exhibits an interesting specimen of the early pointed style of architecture. The apartments in the two circular towers, which project from the body of the structure, nearly correspond in form and dimension and their vaultings rise from small round pillars with hexagonal capitals.

The By ward tower stands at the south western angle of the fortress and forms the principal entrance to the outer ward. It is a strong gatehouse tower flanked with bastions having a gateway originally defended by gates and a portcullis. The interior of this structure remains in great perfection, an ancient stone fire place is still perfect in each of the rooms. Opposite to this building on the outer side of the ditch is the Martin tower, a strong gatehouse corresponding in almost every particular with the By ward tower excepting that part is of comparatively modern construction. This tower protects the approach to the principal bridge; beyond it stood some considerable outworks, the site of which is now occupied by barracks and the royal menagerie; most of the beasts and birds kept at the tower were presents to the king and royal family either from foreign princes or from naval and military officers returning from abroad.

GARRISON.

The office of Constable of the Tower has generally been conferred on a man of rank and influence in the country; he is sometimes called in early records constable of London and seems to have occasionally exercised a command over the Capital and to have held privileges and jurisdictions in the river Thames of a very extensive and peculiar kind. The Duke of Wellington K. G. is the present Constable and has the same jurisdiction over the Tower Hamlets as a Lord Lieutenant has over his county, he has the appointment of the officers of the Militia of that part, which consists of two regiments, he is assisted by a lieutenant, a deputy lieutenant, a fort major, a chaplain, a gentleman porter, &c. There is also a gentleman goaler, a yeoman porter, and forty yeomen wardens, the last were in early times sworn by the constable as his own servants, but in the reign of Edward VI. they were constituted yeomen of the guard extraordinary, and allowed the same livery. The Tower has its court of record, coroner, justices of the peace, and other offices, and the Constable of the Tower is the custos rotarum of the district.

THE PORT OF LONDON.

Immediately below London bridge commences the Port of London, the limits of which extend to the north Foreland in Kent and to the Naze in Essex, but the ships trading to London usually moor in the Pool. The Port of London actually occupied by shipping extends from London bridge to Deptford, a distance of nearly four miles, and four or five hundred yards in breadth. It consists of four divisions called the upper, middle, and lower pools, and the space between Limehouse and Deptford. The upper pool extends from London bridge to Union hole. The middle pool is continued thence to Wapping new stairs. The lower pool from the latter place to Horseferry tier near Limehouse, and the space below to Deptford. Previously to the formation of the docks the land accommodations of the Port of London consisted of legal quays and sufferance wharfs. The legal quays were appointed in 1558, they occupy the northern bank of the river Thames with some interruptions from London bridge to the western extremity of the Tower ditch, and constituted the whole legal accommodation for the prodigious shipping trade of London, although the depth of the river was found insufficient to admit of that speedy clearance which the trading and mercantile interests required, and the quays were found inadequate to the increased extent of commerce. The Commissioners of the customs permitted other landing places, thence called sufferance wharfs, five of these were situated on the northern side of the river, between the Tower and Hermitage dock, and eighteen on the opposite side. In the year 1799 as a preliminary step towards the improvement of the Port of London; the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Commons were authorised by Parliament to make a canal through the Isle of dogs, and by the same act the West India dock company was incorporated for the purpose of making wet docks, with quays, wharfs, and warehouses attached to them for the reception of all vessels in the West India trade.

In June 1800, the act was obtained for incorporating the London Dock company, for the purpose of making wet docks in the angle formed by the river Thames, between Hermitage and Shadwell docks below Wapping. The East India Dock company was incorporated in 1803, for the purpose of making docks within the parishes of St. Dunstan, Stepney, and St. Leonard, Bromley, for the reception of ships employed in the service of the East India company, which are prohibited from unloading elsewhere, excepting in Long Reach. There are also the Commercial Docks, and the Grand Surrey Canal dock at Rotherhithe; and St. Katharine's Docks near the Tower.

THE CUSTOM HOUSE.

So early as the year 979, the King's Customs were principally collected at Billingsgate. In the year 1383, a custom house was built by John Churchman, but the customs were collected in different parts of the city. About the year 1559 an act was passed, which compelled persons to land their goods in such places as were appointed by the commissioners of revenue, and a new Custom House was then erected in Lower Thames Street, which being destroyed by the fire of London in 1666, was rebuilt in the reign of Charles II.; this building also was destroyed by fire in 1718. The Custom House was again rebuilt the same year on a very noble scale, but was totally consumed by fire, 12th February, 1814. Prior to its destruction, the custom house was found to be inadequate to the vast increase of commercial business, and government had abandoned the idea of making additions to the old building, and had directed a new custom house to be erected between the former one and Billingsgate: the first stone of the present edifice was laid on 25th October, 1813. It was erected from designs by David Laing, and was completed in 1817: the whole building is 489 feet in length, and 107 in breadth. The fraudulent and scandalous manner in which the foundation was laid, occasioned the fall of a large portion of the building in 1825, and it became necessary to rebuild it under the direction of Smirke. The Long Room is 190 feet in length, by 66 in width. The wharf towards the Thames is about 60 feet in total width.

The custom duties are collected under the direction of a board of commissioners, who act, not for the purpose of revenue alone, but to carry into effect the laws of trade and navigation, and for the encouragement of commerce and manufacture. The commissioners have a general control over the revenue of the customs, and the regulations of foreign trade. The waterside department consists of all the officers of the docks, who are, a principal surveyor, &c. at the West India docks; a principal surveyor, &c. at the London docks; four landing surveyors, &c. seventy six landing waiters, whose duty it is to attend the landing of all goods, take the weights, gauge, or take and compute the duties. It is customary to station two of these to each ship arriving from abroad; five gaugers, four timber measurers, with porters, &c. and a clerk of the check. The land and water guard consists of a surveyor of sloops, &c. a surveyor of the act of navigation, and four river inspectors. The business at each out port is under the direction of a collector, who has a comptroller and searcher under him. All baggage and small parcels not entered in a ship's manifest, are sent to the king's warehouse to be properly disposed of.

LONDON BRIDGE.

The erection of a new bridge having been agitated at different periods for more than twenty years, premiums were offered in 1821, for designs; that of the late John Rennie, F.R.S. was adopted, on a recommendation of a committee of the House of Commons. An act for the rebuilding London bridge received the royal assent 4th July, 1823. The site of the new structure having been fixed to be about 100 feet westward of the old bridge; the first pile was driven 15th March, 1824, and the first stone was laid 15th June, 1825, by the Lord Mayor, in the presence of the Duke of York, and other distinguished visitors. After the death of Mr. Rennie in 1826, the work was carried on under the superintendence of his son, now Sir John Rennie. The design of the bridge displays five very beautiful elliptical arches, the two outwardmost of which are 130 feet in span, and $24\frac{1}{2}$ feet high; the two next 140 feet in span, and $27\frac{1}{2}$ in height; and the central, the largest elliptical stone arch in existence, is 152 feet in span, and $29\frac{1}{2}$ in height. The piers on each side this magnificent opening are 24 feet in width; the two other piers are 22 feet wide, and the abutments are 73 feet each at the base. The piers are plain rectangular buttresses resting on massive plinths and pointed cutwaters; they are crowned by a bold projecting block cornice, which describes the sweep of the roadway, and is surmounted by a plain double blocking course, receding in two heights, like the scamilli of the ancients. There are no balusters as at the other stone bridges in London, but the architectural feature last described forms a dwarf wall, over which a person may look upon the river. The total height of the bridge from low water mark is 55 feet, the width of the carriage way is 36 feet, and of each foot path 9 feet. The exterior of the bridge is of three sorts of granite, wrought in the most beautiful and scientific manner. The eastern side is faced with purple Aberdeen granite, the western with the light grey Devonshire Haytor, and the voussours, or arch stones of both are united with the red brown granite of Peterhead. The fillings in of the piers, spandrels, road-way, &c. are of the hard Bramby Fell, a fine indurated sandstone, Derby and Whitby stone. The materials were roughly shaped at the quarries, and after being wrought in a field at Mill-wall, Poplar, were finally dressed and fitted to their places at the bridge. The bronze lamp posts fixed on the parapet walls, were cast by Parker, of Argyll-street, from captured cannon brought from Woolwich: their design is elegant, and they appear to greater advantage from the total absence of all ornament in the masonry. The bridge was opened to the public by the king in person, on 1st August, 1831. The roadway on the Surrey side is continued up in nearly a straight line, until it meets the old road near St. Thomas's-street. On the eastern side of this road another diverges northward, and by a similar inclined plane meets Tooley-street. Tooley-street is itself continued westward, under a handsome elliptical arch of brick. The road from the bridge on the city side branches off to Fish-street Hill and Eastcheap. The arch which extends over the road and pathways of Thames-street, is elliptical, like the large arches of the bridge, it is built with Yorkshire stone, but fronted on each side with granite.

SOUTHWARK BRIDGE.

This bridge, which is as elegant in its form as it is scientific in its construction, was entirely built at the expence of a joint stock company. It is of cast iron, and was designed by Rennie, and executed under his direction: the preparatory works were begun 23rd September, 1814, it occupied four years in erection, and the bridge was opened to the public March 24th, 1819; there was no ceremony observed on the occasion. The arches of this bridge, three in number, are composed each of eight ribs of cast iron, which are rivetted to diagonal braces, to prevent racking. The magnificent centre arch, the largest in the world, is composed of a segment of a circle, whose span is 240 feet, four feet more than Sunderland bridge, its height 24 feet, the side arches being 210 feet in span. Many of the single pieces of this gigantic skeleton are of the weight of 10 tons each, and the total weight of the iron employed in its construction, is between five and six thousand tons; it was cast by Messrs. Walker & Co. at Rotherham, in Yorkshire. The length of the iron bridge within the abutments is 700 feet, and the clear waterway under the three arches is 660 feet. The roads leading to Southwark bridge on the Surrey side cross St. George's fields from the elephant and castle, and crossing Great Suffolk-street, meet at a right angle with New Bridge-street, in Union-street, Southwark.

BLACKFRIAR'S BRIDGE.

This bridge, nearly opposite the centre of the city, was erected in pursuance of an act of parliament, passed in 1756, and the first pile was driven in the middle of the river 7th June, 1760. The ceremony of laying the first stone took place on 31st October following by the Lord Mayor. The architect was Robert Mylne, who afterwards presented to the British Museum a model of a part of the bridge, exhibiting a plan for a centre frame, of very ingenious construction, invented by himself. The bridge was completed in the year 1769. It is entirely of stone, and consists of nine elliptical arches, the centre arch being 100 feet wide, and those on each side decreasing in regular gradation to the smallest at each extremity, which is 70 feet wide. The breadth of the bridge is 42 feet, and the entire length from wharf to wharf is 995 feet: the upper surface is a portion of a very large circle: over each pier of the bridge is a recess, supported by two Ionic columns and two pilasters, which stand on a semicircular projection of the pier above high water; at each end of the bridge are flights of stone steps, defended by iron rails, for the convenience of taking water. Bridge-street, Chatham-place, and Great Surrey-street, were improvements consequent upon the erection of Blackfriars' Bridge.

WATERLOO BRIDGE

The first stone of the Strand bridge as it was then denominated, was laid on the Surrey side of the Thames, close to Cupars bridge, on the 11th October 1811. It was projected by Dodd, but was erected by John Rennie: the design is said to be derived from Perronets bridge over the Seine at Neuilly near Paris. It consists of nine elliptical arches, with Grecian Doric columns in front of the piers surmounted by an entablature and balustrade. The road way upon the summit of the arches is level in a line with the Strand and is carried by a gentle declivity on a series of brick arches on the Surrey side of the river to the level of the roads near the Obelisk in St. George's fields. The length of stone work within the abutments, or from one river bank to the other is 1,240 feet, the straight line running parallel with the river, gives the bridge an appearance of elegance and grandeur not equalled by any work of this description in Europe. The length to obtain the summit of the bridge is 1,250 carried on partly by a mound of earth and brick arches. The length from the north shore or from the abutment to the Strand is 400 feet, the road principally carried over on brick arches. The total length of the bridge, with its approaches from the Strand to St. George's fields, is 2,890 feet. The span of the nine stone arches over the river, all of which are of equal dimensions is 129 feet. The width of the bridge within the balustrades is 42 feet, 28 feet of which is carriage road. The whole of the exterior of the bridge is executed with Cornish moor stone. On June 18th, 1817, the anniversary of the glorious victory of Waterloo, the bridge was opened with appropriate ceremony. The Prince Regent and other illustrious personages passed through the centre arch and landed on the Surrey side where a procession formed. On reaching the Middlesex side of the bridge the company reembarked and returned to Whitehall. It had been called Waterloo Bridge by an act of Parliament passed in June 1816, which declared that the bridge will be a work of great stability and magnificence, adapted to transmit to posterity the remembrance of great and glorious achievements and the company of proprietors being desirous that a designation should be given to the bridge which should be a lasting record of the decisive victory obtained by his Majesty's forces in conjunction with those of his allies on the 18th day of June 1815, it was enacted that the bridge should be named Waterloo Bridge and should cease to be called the Strand bridge. Canova the sculptor on viewing this bridge expressed the highest admiration of its beauty, saying it was the finest piece of architecture in the country and perhaps in the world. Connected with the road leading direct to St. George's fields are two smaller roads, eastward to Blackfriars road, and westward to Westminster road.

WESTMINSTER BRIDGE.

An act of parliament was passed in 1736, for building a bridge across the river Thames, from New Palace Yard, Westminster, to the opposite shore, in the county of Surrey. This act was not obtained without great opposition from some of the inhabitants of the city of London and the borough of Southwark; and also from the watermen of the river Thames. The first stone was laid in a caisson on the 29th January, 1739, by the earl of Pembroke, and it was opened to the public on 17th November, 1750. The bridge was erected by Labelye, a Swiss architect, and consists of thirteen semicircular arches, besides a small one at each end. At the sides of each abutment, there are flights of steps down to the river side, for the convenience of embarking. The width of the centre arch is 76 feet, and the rest decrease regularly four feet on each side; the whole length of the bridge is 1223 feet. The ascent to the bridge is easy, and there is a semi-octangular recess over each pier for the accommodation of passengers. These recesses are supported by solid buttresses rising from the foundations which form the angular extremities of the piers below. Over the central arches are pedestals intended for groups of ornamental figures which were not executed. The foundation of this bridge is laid on a solid mass of gravel which lies at the bottom of the bed of the river, but at a much greater depth on the Surrey than the Westminster side, and this inequality of the ground required the heights of the several piers to be very different, some have their foundations laid at five feet and others at fourteen feet under the bed of the river; they are all four feet wider at their foundations than at the top. The materials of all the piers are the same within as without, and consist of blocks of Portland stone, many of which are four or five tons in weight, and none less than a ton, excepting the closers. The several statutes, under which Westminster Bridge was constructed, provided also for the building of Bridge Street, George Street, and Parliament Street, and for opening and widening the road from the Stones End Lambeth, to the Fishmonger's Alms Houses at Newington, and for the making of what is now called the Borough Road, from Symon's Corner near the Obelisk, across St. George's Fields to the Stones End in Blackman-street in the Borough; and another new road, from the Alms Houses at Newington into the Kent-road, near the End of Kent-street; and also a road from the Asylum to Kennington Common.

THE RIVER THAMES.

Westminster Abbey and Lambeth Palace grace the banks of the river immediately above the Bridge, and for more than five miles its shores are covered with a profusion of spires, towers, and noble edifices. The very bold reach made by the Thames, in its course from Westminster through London and Southwark to Limehouse, adds greatly to the effect of the prospect from the water, or from any of the bridges. The Cathedral of St. Paul with its dome, is proudly elevated above the numerous churches of the City; the lofty Monument and the high bastions of the Tower of London front the great Borough of Southwark, below where the fine tower of St. Saviour's Church graces the view. The river Thames below London Bridge is absolutely crowded with shipping of all nations, so as apparently to close up its channel with a thick forest of masts; but the populous appearance of a City by no means terminates at the Tower, for the suburb of Wapping unites with the outskirts of Stepney and Limehouse, by means of numerous houses and its large church, and covers the shores of Middlesex and Essex as they unite. On the opposite side of the river, Rotherhithe almost incorporates itself with Southwark, and stretches out to Deptford within the borders of Kent. All these places abound in public and private docks, in which no expense has been spared to produce every improvement required in these naval repositories. Between the mouth of the River Lea and that chain of populous villages which form the outskirts of London on this side, a very extraordinary compass is made by the River Thames, almost enclosing a flat which has obtained the title of the Isle of Dogs; opposite to this level where the Ravensbourne descends from Lewisham, the spires of the Deptford Churches and the magnificent Hospital at Greenwich, backed by its well wooded park, grace the Kentish shore with great splendor, above which the elevated ground of Blackheath displays its numerous villas and pleasant villages, commanding striking views over London, and across the river Thames towards Essex. The river makes another sweep to reach Woolwich, the great repository and foundery of our artillery on the Kentish shore, and rolls on, encompassed more and more by marshes, in a broad stream, with frequent windings, to the Sea.

THE COMMERCIAL AND TRADING ESTABLISHMENTS OF LONDON.

THE ROYAL EXCHANGE.

The Royal Exchange, the general place of resort for the London merchants, is situated on the northern side of Cornhill. The ancient Bourse was in Lombard-street, where the merchants met in the open air; but as early as the year 1531, Sir Richard Gresham, who was then sheriff, wrote to Sir Thomas Audley, Lord Privy Seal, requesting him to move the king to direct a letter to be sent to Sir George Monoux, requiring him to sell certain houses in Lombard-street, for the purpose of erecting a Bourse on the ground, for the use of the merchants. Three years after this the king sent letters to the city directing the building of a Bourse at Leadenhall, but the court of common council voted that the place of meeting should not be removed from Lombard-street, and nothing was proceeded with. In the reign of Elizabeth Sir Thomas Gresham, son of Sir Richard, persevered in his father's design and proposed to the corporation in 1564, that if they would give him the ground he would erect an Exchange at his own expense, with covered walks, where the merchants and traders might daily assemble and transact business at all seasons without interruption from the weather. This offer was accepted, in 1566, the ground plot of the present building was levelled at the charge of the city, and possession given to Sir Thomas Gresham, who in the deed is styled agent to the Queen's Highness. The superstructure was carried on with rapidity, and the whole was covered in before the end of the year 1567. The plan of the building is supposed to have been derived from that of the Exchange at Antwerp, it contained beneath the arcade, ranges of shops for different trades, as haberdashers, armourers, apothecaries, booksellers, goldsmiths and glass-sellers. The success of these shops was not answerable to the expectation of the founder, and those that were untenanted were offered rent free for a twelvemonth, to any persons who would engage to furnish and adorn them with wares and wax lights against the time appointed for the queen's coming. On the 23rd of January 1571, the queen's majesty attended by her nobility came from Somerset House in the Strand, and entered the city by Temple Bar, through Fleet-street, Cheap and by the north side of the Burse to Sir Thomas Gresham's house in Bishops-gate-street where she dined. After dinner her majesty returning through Cornhill, entered the burse on the south side, and after that she had viewed every part, especially the pawn,* which was richly furnished with all sorts of the finest wares in the city. The Queen caused the Burse by a herald and trumpet to be proclaimed the Royal Exchange, and so to be called thenceforth and not otherwise. When the Royal Exchange was burnt in 1666, the master and wardens of the Mercers company, trustees of the Gresham estates, began the work of rebuilding as soon as possible, and petitioned the king for an order to obtain Portland stone for the purpose. On the 23rd of October 1667, king Charles 2nd went to the Royal Exchange, and laid the stone which formed the base of the pillar on the western side of the northern entrance. His majesty was entertained on the occasion at the joint expense of the city and the Mercers company under a temporary shed, built for the purpose, upon the Scotch walk. On the 31st of the same month, the Duke of York laid the first stone of the eastern pillar, and was regaled in the same manner. On the 18th of November, Prince Rupert placed that on the eastern side of the southern entrance. During the period occupied by the rebuilding of the Royal Exchange, the merchants met at Gresham College, but the works being sufficiently advanced the new edifice was publicly opened on the 28th of September 1669. The ground plan of the present Royal Exchange is similar to that of the ancient one; the buildings of stone surround a quadrangle, 144 feet by 117, and form a colonnade, which as well as the area itself, is for general accommodation arranged into distinct parts, called walks; as the Italian walk, the French walk, the American walk, &c. In the centre on a marble pedestal is a statue of king Charles 2nd, by Spiller. Beneath the colonnade are niches for statues, two only have been yet erected, that of the original founder Sir Thomas Gresham, by Cibber, and that of Sir John Barnard. The inner face of the superstructure is highly enriched, the cornice is interrupted to admit of compartments, for the Royal arms on the north, the arms of the city of London on the south, the Mercer's arms on the west, and the arms of Sir Thomas Gresham on the east; between the windows are niches containing very curious statues of our ancient kings, chiefly executed by Cibber, those of kings George 1st and 2nd are by Rysbrack, that of king George 3rd by Wilton, that of king George 4th is a fine interesting figure. Upon the northern and southern fronts on the right of the entrances are stairs leading to the gallery, which is occupied by offices of different descriptions, and by Lloyd's Coffee-house, a celebrated establishment where intelligence is duly registered of the arrival and sailing of vessels, losses at sea, captures, engagements, accidents, and other circumstances connected with the shipping interest. The total extent of the Royal Exchange from north to south is 171 feet, and from east to west 203 feet. The principal front towards the south in Cornhill, consists of a centre with wings, composed of a mixed architecture, chiefly Corinthian. The entrance gateway is formed within the central intercolumniation of four Corinthian columns, which with their entablature reach to the summit of the main building. In the side intercolumniations over the lesser entrances are niches containing statues of kings Charles 1st and

* Pawn is a word hitherto unexplained in our English dictionaries, it probably means a gay shop, having a peacock for a sign. In French Paon.

2nd, by Bushnell. This front is surmounted by a tower and cupola, which were rebuilt in 1820, from designs by George Smith; as a separate structure it would be deserving of very great praise, but considered as a restoration, it ought most certainly to have partaken of the character of the original edifice. The tower consists principally of a well proportioned peristyle of the Corinthian order, surmounted by a plain dome, crowned with the crest of the original founder, a gilded grasshopper: the whole is certainly more elegant than the similar appendages of several adjacent buildings. To the square basement of the tower is attached on each side, a short wall with low pedestals in front, bearing statues of the four quarters of the globe, &c. by Bubb; above in a niche is a statue of the founder; this portion is a variation of design that cannot be considered an improvement. The tower of the Royal Exchange would have appeared more stately without such adjuncts; its prominent defect is want of height; but another defect, not less striking, is the ungraceful outline which the front now presents, compared with the original, which was demolished to give place to the present.

THE BANK OF ENGLAND.

The Bank of England is the most important institution of the kind that exists in any part of the world, and history furnishes no example that can at all be compared with it for the multiplicity of its transactions, and for the influence which the establishment possesses over public and national affairs. The Bank is an immense pile of building, which occupies an area of an irregular form, bounded on the south side by Threadneedle-street, on the west by Prince's-street, on the north by Lothbury, and on the east by St. Bartholomew's-lane. The names of the architects under whom in succession the Bank buildings were erected, are George Sampson, Sir Robert Taylor, and Sir John Soane. The first stone of the original building on the present site, but then the house and garden of Sir John Houlton, was laid in 1732, and finished in 1736, from the designs of Sampson. This building comprised the original centre towards Threadneedle-street. The wings, formerly attached to it, were designed and erected by Sir Robert Taylor; and other additions were made by the same architect, between the years 1765 and 1785.

The Bank of England was first established by charter of William and Mary, dated July 27th, 1694. The business was transacted from its institution till 1733 in Grocers' hall, the identical edifice mentioned by Addison in the Spectator, No. 3. written in 1711. The present building bears an inscription to express the memorial of royal sanction, which is placed beneath a well executed statue of King William, by Cheere, at the eastern end of the pay hall, which fronts the principal entrance. The exterior walls of the Bank measure 365 feet on the southern side, 440 feet on the western side, 410 feet on the northern side, and 245 feet on the eastern side. Within this space are nine open courts, a spacious rotunda, court and committee rooms, numerous public offices, an armoury, a printing office, a library, &c. besides apartments for the chief officers of the establishment. It would be difficult to give a complete idea of the interior of the Bank of England, without the aid of a ground plan. It may be sufficient to say, that under the direction of Sir John Soane the distribution of the several offices has been arranged in accordance with one general plan, to which every addition and alteration have been made subservient. Under this arrangement, the principal entrance from Threadneedle-street opens by an archway into a quadrangular paved court, with which all the leading communications are connected: through the pay hall and bullion court into Lothbury, and affording access to the court and committee rooms, the governors, deputy governors, and waiting rooms, the discount office, the treasury, the bullion office, the general cash book office, the cashier's office, the chancery office, the secretary's office, &c. At the entrance to the secretary's office the corridor turns westward, and leads to the land tax redemption office, the loan or property office, the bank note office, and the stamp office, the drawing office in the accountants' department, the accountants' office for the new specie, and other offices dependent upon these. Between the land tax redemption office, and the loan office, is a corridor leading to the accountants' office, for the old specie. On the western side of the paved court is the dividend pay office, adjoining which is the green court, formerly the church yard of St. Christopher's parish, which gives access to the cheque office, the reduced annuity office, the armoury, the guard room, and the bank note printing office. The eastern side of the paved court leads to the rotunda, the three per cent. office, the four per cent. office, the bank stock office, the three per cent consols, and the unclaimed dividend office, and through the last communicates with the entrance to the Bank from Lothbury. The principal suite of apartments is on the ground floor, and there are no rooms over the chief offices, which are lighted from above; but beneath this floor, and below the surface of the ground, there are a greater number of rooms than in the entire superstructure. In the committee room is a half length of King William III. who is represented in armour. In the governor's room is a view of the Bank, Cornhill, and the Royal Exchange, taken from a point near the mansion house, by Morland. In the ante room is a portrait of Abraham Newland, who was cashier from 1782 till 1807. Also of David Race, formerly cashier, by Hickey. In the adjoining waiting room are busts of Fox and Pitt, by Nollekens. The rotunda is a lofty apartment, 57 feet diameter, terminating in a dome and lantern lights; here stock brokers and jobbers daily assemble to make purchases, drive bargains, &c. The offices appropriated to the management of the different stocks, branch out from the sides of the rotunda, and its vestibule, which opens to Bartholomew-lane. In the different offices, under the letters of the alphabet, are arranged the books in which the names of all persons having property in the funds are registered, as well as the particulars of their respective interests. The entrance from Lothbury exhibits a singular display of architectural design, by Sir John Soane, R.A. formed upon the best specimens of ancient art extant. The Lothbury court, as it is called, forms an irregular quadrangle, having the buildings on the eastern and western sides masked by open screens, or colonnades, of the Corinthian order raised on a double flight of steps, and having their entablature surmounted by vases. On the southern side, forming the entrance into the bullion court, is a magnificent arch, also of the Corinthian order of architecture, the columns of which are surmounted by statues, emblematical of the four quarters of the globe, and the intercolumniations are enriched with reliefs, allegorically representing the rivers Thames and Ganges, the whole of the sculpture was executed by T. Banks, R.A. The northern side of this court contains a lodge, and other offices of inferior description. Besides the offices above described, there are many others in this edifice; so extensive indeed are the engagements entered into by the corporation, that upwards of a thousand persons are constantly employed in the various departments within the building. The exterior of the Bank of England now forms one uniform design, which has been accomplished gradually, under the entire direction of Sir John Soane, R.A. In the angle between Princes-street and Lothbury, the architect has adopted a portion of the peripteral temple at Tivoli, a beautiful specimen which Claude the painter has introduced more frequently than any other into his unrivalled landscapes. The whole design may be termed dignified and novel, evincing the highest class of professional ability.

THE GENERAL POST OFFICE.

This magnificent building, one of the largest public edifices now existing in the City of London, is situated near the junction of Cheapside and Newgate-street, on the spot formerly occupied by the college of St. Martin's-le-Grand. The principal front 400 feet in length, has a grand and impressive effect, arising from the simplicity of design in its elevation, and from the solidity and grandeur of its proportions. A hexastyle portico, of the Grecian Ionic order of architecture which projects with two intercolumns at the sides, is also recessed, and has an air of space, and a depth of shadow, that contribute materially to enhance its very beautiful effect. Its extreme breadth is 70, and its depth 20 feet. The vestibule or great hall, which occupies the centre of the edifice, is open to the public; its dimensions are about 80 feet in length, 60 feet in breadth, and 53 feet in height. It is supported by two lines of columns, similar to those of the portico, and raised on pedestals; against the wall are corresponding antæ, or pilasters; the entablature is surmounted by an attic, whence light is admitted. Over the entrance from Forster-lane, is a gallery of communication with the apartments of the respective wings. On the northern side of the vestibule are the letter carriers' office, the inland office, and the ship letter office. On the southern side are the two-penny post office, the foreign office, the receiver general and accountants' offices. Other offices belonging to this department of government are the secretary's and assistant secretary's offices, the bye-letter office, the dead letter office, the returned letter office, and the letter bill office. The Inland Office, the most important on the establishment, is connected with the Branch offices, and different receiving offices in London, with the letter carriers' office, and with the mail coach office, as well as with the deputy post-masters' offices in various parts of the country; hence also the mails for the West Indies are despatched, and the principal part of the revenue of the Post is undoubtedly derived from the business here transacted. According to the 18th report of the commissioners of revenue enquiry, which relates entirely to the transactions of every department of the general post office in London, and shows the machinery of this extensive establishment, the ordinary business of each day was at that time in the Inland Office alone 35,000 letters received, and 40,000 sent, which amounts to 23,475,000 annually, exclusive of the letters in the foreign department and the ship letter office, and altogether independent of the two-penny post office. The number of newspapers daily, varies from 25 to 50,000, of which number about 20,000 are put into the post office ten minutes before six o'clock; the number put in after that hour, composes a total of 240,000 newspapers annually put into the office from six to a quarter before eight o'clock. The revenue derived from charges for early delivery in London, is £4000, and the sum obtained by the charge of one penny each letter taken up by the letter carriers from five o'clock, when the receiver's offices are shut, to six o'clock, when they must despatch all their letters by the mail carts to the general post office is £3000 a year, giving 720,000 letters annually, or nearly 2,000 daily collected in this manner. The revenue of London is £6000 per week, above £300,000 a year, and yet of this annual revenue there has only been lost, by defaulters, £200 in twenty-five years. The franks in a morning amount to 4,000 or 5,000, or more. Newspapers can only be franked for the continent to the first foreign port at which the mail arrives; after this they are charged postage according to the weight. A great number of letters are circulated in Great Britain by means of the cross post, and the general business of the country is under the direction of surveyors, eight in number, who reside in particular districts, to which their attention is confined. The whole of the present regulations of the general post are well known to have originated with, and are carried on under the superintendence of Sir Francis Freeling, Bart. The Office of the Inland department is a hall 85 feet 6 inches in length, by 48 feet 6 inches in breadth, but including the office for paid letters, the total length is 101 feet. It communicates by folding doors with the letter carriers' office, a room nearly of the same dimensions. The walls are occupied by divisions, agreeing in number with the mail coaches despatched hence every evening. These divisions are filled with cabinets closed with shutters, and containing partitions, all inscribed with the names of the several towns upon each separate road. In the area are tables covered with green cloth, upon which the operation of sorting the letters is performed, in a manner neither tedious nor intricate, which it is hardly necessary to explain in detail. The letters are afterwards transferred to the divisions before named, and after undergoing a peculiar computation, are finally sent on their rout; all which is accomplished with accuracy and precision only to be acquired by constant practice. The degree of perfection indeed which this grand machine has attained, must have required, in its gradual and progressive improvement, the application of powerful ability, as well as a very judicious adoption and arrangement of various means suggested by the speculations of ingenious projectors.

The edifice was designed by and executed under the direction of R. Smirke, R.A. it may be characterized as chaste, simple, and imposing. The clock over the principal entrance was made by Vulliamy; the bob of the pendulum weighs 448 lbs. and is remarkable as the heaviest ever put to a clock; the object attained by such a weight, is to counteract the effect of wind on the hands of the dial.

EAST INDIA HOUSE.

The first association for promoting trade between England and India, was formed in London in the year 1599, which in the following year procured a charter of privileges, constituting the adventurers a corporate body, by the name of The Governor and Company of Merchants of London trading to the East Indies. About 1697, a company was incorporated by the name of The General Society, and authorized to trade with India, but the old company was entitled to three years notice before its trade could be stopped. In 1701, when their time expired, a union was effected between the two corporations. On 22nd July, 1702, an indenture passed under the great seal, and the two corporations took the common name of The United Company of Merchants trading to the East Indies. This act of parliament is the foundation of the privileges now enjoyed by the United East India Company. The exclusive privilege of trading eastward of the Cape of Good Hope to the Straits of Magellan, then granted, was confirmed and continued by successive acts of parliament; but on the last renewal of their charter, their trade under certain restrictions, was laid open to every place beyond the Cape of Good Hope, excepting China. The government of this company is in twenty-four directors, at the head of which is a chairman and deputy chairman. Six directors go out every year, and six others are elected in their room. These seats are often contested with great warmth, and sometimes great expence, on account of the immense patronage they acquire.

Immediately after their annual election, the directors divide themselves into committees, as the committee of correspondence, the committee of accounts, the committee of shipping, the committee of warehouses, and the committee of buying. The officers more immediately under the directors, are a secretary, a deputy, a check clerk, &c.; there are also on this large establishment, an examiner of Indian correspondence, an auditor, a treasurer, an accountant general, a freight accountant, a transfer accountant, a paymaster of seamen's wages, and a clerk to the committee of shipping; under this committee are also a master attendant, a surveyor, and a husband of the shipping. The erection of the present East India House was commenced in 1799, from designs by R. Jupp. On the front towards Leadenhall-street, is a hexastyle portico of the Ionic order of architecture, surmounted by a pediment, in the tympan of which is an alto relievo, representing Commerce, typified by Mercury, attended by Navigation, and introducing Asia to Britannia, at whose feet she pours out her treasures. The King is represented holding on his right arm a shield of protection over the heads of Britannia and Liberty. By his side is Order attended by Religion and Justice. In the back ground is sculptured the City barge, and near it Industry and Integrity. A river God representing the Thames, fills the western angle of the tympan, and the River Ganges the eastern. There are also acroteria sculptured in allusion to the species of trade in which the East India Company is engaged. The wings are plain, and are surmounted by a balustrade. The principal entrance under the portico opens upon a long corridor, leading to a court, and court room surrounded by offices of various description. The chief ornament of the court room is a bas relief in white marble, representing Britannia attended by India, Asia, and Africa, and surmounted by the arms of the Company. The arms are thus blazoned: argent, a cross gules, in the dexter chief, an escutcheon of France and England quarterly, the shield ornamented and regally crowned or. Crest, a lion rampant guardant, holding a regal crown or. Supporters, two lions rampant guardant or, each holding a banner argent, charged with a cross gules. Motto. Auspicio regis et Senatus Angliæ. In the court room are also views of Fort St. George, Bombay, Fort William, Tellicherry, the Cape of Good Hope and St. Helena. The committee room contains a portrait of General Stringer Lawrence. The old sale room is semicircular at the west end, where are niches containing statues of Lord Clive, Sir George Pocock, and General Lawrence, there is also a statue of Sir Eyre Coote. The new sale room erected from designs by Jupp and Holland, is adorned with pictures illustrative of the commerce with India. In the room belonging to the committee of correspondence, are portraits of the Marquess Cornwallis, Warren Hastings, the Nabob of Arcot, &c., besides views of Trichinopoly; Viri Malli, a curious Rock, the Bath of the Bramins in Chillimbrum, Madura, Tippy Column, the mausoleum of the Seer Shaw, Choultry of Seringam, the southern entrance to the pagoda at Seringam, &c. &c. all painted by Ward. The library, situated in the eastern wing of the building, is sixty feet in length by twenty feet in breadth, having on the southern side a semicircular recess; over the chimney piece is a picture of an emperor of Persia, in a dress highly embellished with jewels of considerable size. At the eastern end of the library are busts of Warren Hastings, and of Robert Orme the historian of Indostan. The printed books here relate chiefly to the history, customs, and jurisprudence of Asia. There is besides a fine collection of MSS. in all the Oriental languages, amongst which are Tippoo Saib's copy of the Koran, curious Malayan MSS., drawings of Indian plants, a collection of printed books of the Chinese, &c. Adjoining the library is a museum, containing the Babylonian inscriptions, written in the nail headed or Persepolitan character, collected by Harford Jones, and a fragment of Jasper, upwards of two feet in length, covered with inscribed characters, which was presented to the court of directors by Sir Hugh Inglis. The trophies obtained from Tippoo Saib are amongst the most valuable of the curiosities in this repository, comprising standards, pieces of armour, helmets, and the foot stool of his throne, the last of solid gold; also his mantle, rendered invulnerable by having been dipped in the holy well at Mecca, &c. The East India House extends a great way southward, having a garden belonging to it, and warehouses towards Lime-street, to which there is a distinct entrance; other warehouses belonging to this company are situated in Haydon-square near the Minories, in Gravel-lane, Petticoat-lane, Fenchurch-street, New-street Bishopsgate, &c. The great repository for tea is in Crutched Friars, and includes a court 150 feet by 60 feet, entered by an archway. The East India Company have also almshouses and a hospital at Poplar.

THE SOUTH SEA HOUSE.

The South Sea House is situated at the northeastern extremity of Threadneedle-street; it stands on a large extent of ground reaching to Old Broad-street. The front is handsome, with an arched entrance to a Doric quadrangle, or court. In the reign of Queen Anne the advantage of forming establishments in the South Seas in consequence of the immense profit made by the Spanish Merchants on European merchandize sent thither, induced a company to apply to Parliament for a participation in this alluring speculation. They were incorporated by a charter dated 8th September 1711, under the title of the Governor and Company of Merchants of Great Britain trading to the South Seas and other parts of America and for encouraging the Fishery. But although the company seemed to be formed for the sake of commerce, ministers never entertained a serious thought of making any settlement on the coast of South America, which was what flattered the expectations of the people, nor was it ever carried into execution by the company. By a statute of the 6th George 1st 1720, it was declared that they might redeem all, or any of the redeemable national debt. The fatal south sea scheme originated in this last mentioned statute. It was projected on pretence of raising a fund for carrying on a trade to the south seas. The sum necessary for establishing it together with the profits that were to arise from it, were divided into a certain number of shares, or subscriptions, and the better to carry on the deception, the directors engaged to make very large dividends. The first subscription was opened on 14th April, and in June following, shares of one hundred pounds were sold for £890, but in September the fallacy of the scheme became apparent and the destruction to public and private credit, thus produced, was excessive. The speculations of this company afterwards became the subject of Parliamentary investigation and various acts were passed for the relief of the sufferers. In 1724 this company undertook the Greenland whale fishery, but the speculation proved unsuccessful, and since the year 1750 the company has ceased in every respect to be a trading company, the remainder of its trading stock having been converted into an annuity stock. The arms of this company are azure, a globe whereon are represented the straits of Magellan and Cape Horn, in the sinister chief point, two herrings hauriant in saltier argent, crowned or. On a canton the arms of Great Britain. Crest, a ship in full sail. Supporters, dexter, Britannia, sinister, a Fisherman having in his hand a string of fish. Motto, A gadibus usque Auroram. By an act of Parliament passed in the year 1753, the management of this company is vested in a governor, sub-governor, and 21 directors, but no person is qualified to be governor, his Majesty excepted, unless he is possessed, in his own name and right, of £5,000 in the trading stock, the sub-governor must have £4,000, the deputy governor £3000, and each director £2,000, in the same stock. The Exchequer Bill loan office for public works and fisheries under the acts of 57 George III. &c. is held at the South Sea House.

HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY.

The Hall belonging to the Hudson's Bay Company is situated at the upper end of Culver-court, Fenchurch-street, the elevation is enriched with pilasters, an entablature, &c. In a room is preserved a pair of horns of the moose deer, weighing 56 pounds and a picture of an elk killed in the presence of Charles XI. of Sweden, which weighed 1229 pounds. A charter of incorporation was granted to this company, 2nd May, 1679, by the name of the Governor and Company of adventurers of England trading to Hudson's Bay, and their capital fund was £10,500, they were empowered to have a common seal and the making of bye-laws, their arms are argent, a cross gules between four beavers passant proper. Crest, on a chapeau, a squirrel sejant. Supporters, two bucks. Motto, Propelle outem.

This company had formerly a complete monopoly of the northern fur trade, until the conquest of Canada by Great Britain, since which time their commerce has been declining. They still, however, send ships annually to sea, maintain three forts in Hudson's Bay, and some outposts. Some disputes have lately arisen between this Company and the North Western traders, they however are a chartered Company, and their opponents only an association of merchants.

Other Trading Companies of the City of London, are the Russia Company, who were incorporated in 1555, and their Charter was confirmed in 1614. Their arms are Barry wavy argent and azure, over all a Ship in full sail, proper, her sails, pendants, and ensigns of the first, each charged with a cross gules, all between three bezants; on a chief or, a pale, between two roses gules, charged with a lion of England. Crest. A lizard's head erased, ducally gorged; supporters, a lizard and an ape both ducally gorged. Motto. God be our good guide.

The Levant and Turkey Company, chartered in 1579, bear for arms, Azure, on a sea in base proper, a ship in full sail or, between two rocks of the second, all the sails, pendants and ensigns argent, each charged with a cross, gules, a chief engrailed of the third, and in vase a sea horse proper. Crest. A demi sea horse salient. Supporters. Two sea horses. Motto. Deo Reipublica et Amicis.

The Eastland Company was incorporated in 1579, and had their charter confirmed by King Charles II. they carried on what is now called the Baltic trade. They bear for arms, Or, on the sea in base a ship in full sail, her sails pendant and ensigns argent, charged with a cross gules. On a chief of the last, a lion of England. Crest, a camel. Supporters, two bears. Motto, Despair not.

The Royal African Company was chartered by King Charles II. who gave them an exclusive trade from the port of Saltee, in South Barbary to the Cape of Good Hope. In 1749 the trade was opened to all the king's subjects, but the company of merchants trading to Africa, is still a corporate body.

MARKETS OF LONDON.

Smithfield market is the largest for the sale of cattle, sheep, and pigs, particularly on Monday; there is also a market held on Friday, and on Tuesday and Thursday for horses.

Leadenhall market is the most considerable for country killed meat, and for poultry. It is the only market for skin and leather within the bills of mortality. Newgate market is also famous for its country killed meat, pigs and poultry, together with vegetables, fresh butter and eggs. The three last markets supply the butchers of London and its vicinity almost entirely.

Whitechapel market, Spitalfields market, Farringdon market, Brook's market, and Honey-lane market also contribute to the supply of their several neighbourhoods. The Borough market is considerable for vegetables.

At Billingsgate is the fish market, principally supplied by fishing smacks and boats coming from the sea up the river Thames, and partly with fresh fish by land carriage. This market is held daily. The Corn market is held in Mark-lane every Monday, Wednesday, and Friday, but the chief business is done on Monday. A Corn Exchange was also erected in Mark-lane in 1827 as a market for the use of the corn factors of London; at Whitechapel and Smithfield, hay and straw are sold thrice weekly, and the metropolis is further supplied from another market for hay and straw held four times weekly in the Borough.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS OF THE CITY OF LONDON.

The principal public schools of London are of ancient foundation and arose upon the dissolution of the monasteries where the education of youth was previously carried on. The chief foundations are Christ's Hospital, the Charter House, St. Paul's School, and Merchant Tailor's School.

CHRIST'S HOSPITAL.

This is a royal foundation for the education and maintenance of children, the number of which in this hospital, at one time, including those at Hertford, has amounted to more than one thousand. The grant of the late Grey friars monastery to the city in 1537 was confirmed in 1553 by charter of King Edward VI. The King who at this time was languishing under a decline which soon put an end to his life, ordered the two houses of Parliament to attend him at Whitehall, when Ridley, Bishop of London, preached before the assembly, and recommended with energy the duties of beneficence and charity. His Majesty immediately sent for him, and enquired how he could best put in practice the duties he so strongly enforced. The result of this sermon and conference, was the determination in the King to found and endow with ample revenue the noble institutions of Christ's, Bartholomew's, Bridewell, and St. Thomas's Hospitals. Almost the last action of this young King's life, was the grant of permission to the governors of Christ's Hospital, to purchase lands in mortgage to the value of 4,000 marks per annum. This laudable foundation of King Edward VI. was greatly increased by the benefactions of his subjects. In the year 1673, King Charles II. added a mathematical school and a ward to the hospital, for forty boys to be instructed in navigation. All the boys in the hospital are publicly examined twice a year before the governors, and the mathematical boys were formerly presented to the King every New Year's Day. They were also presented once a year to the Lord Chancellor, the Lords of the Treasury, and the Lords of the Admiralty, separately. The principal buildings of Christ's Hospital form the four sides of a large area, originally the cloisters of the Priory, but the parts have been erected at different times, and extend nearly round another court, in which are the new schools, erected from the designs and under the direction of J. Shaw. The schools consist of a plain elevation, in two stories above the ground floor, and a series of dormer windows in the roof; at each end is a projecting tower, the materials brick with stone dressings.

The New Hall of Christ's Hospital, by the same architect, was opened on 29th May, 1829; it is a magnificent room 187 feet in length by 51½ feet wide, and 46½ feet high; the enrichments are in excellent taste, and oak panelling is carried round the room to the height of ten or eleven feet from the ground, and the arms of various benefactors, from the earliest period of its establishment down to the present time, are painted on the upper panels. The ceiling also of oak is beautifully and chastely ornamented, and the galleries are enriched with carving. At the bottom of the room is Holbein's celebrated picture of King Edward VI. granting the charter of the Hospital. One side of the room is adorned by Verrio's picture of James II. giving audience to the president and governors of the Institution, who are presenting the children to his Majesty on New Year's Day; the windows contain coats of arms, &c. by Miller. A new entrance to the Hospital from Newgate-street is at present in progress, which will give an uninterrupted view of the Hall, a remarkably fine modern specimen of the Tudor style of architecture. In the Court Room are portraits of King Edward VI. by Holbein, and of the chief benefactors of the Hospital.

ST. PAUL'S SCHOOL.

This School was founded by Dr. John Colet, Dean of St. Paul's in the year 1509; he was the eldest son of Sir Henry Colet, who had been twice Lord Mayor of London, and having a plentiful estate without any near relations, he resolved to consecrate his whole property to some perpetual benefaction, and this he performed by founding St. Paul's School, of which he appointed William Lilly first master in 1512. He ordained that there should be in this school a high master, a sur master, and a chaplain, who should teach gratis 153 boys, divided into eight classes; and he endowed it with lands and houses, chiefly in Buckinghamshire, amounting then to £122 4s. 7d. per annum; of which endowment he made the Company of Mercers trustees.

By the progressive improvement of the estate, and the good management of the Mercer's Company, and by some additional sums left to the foundation, the salaries of the masters are become very considerable, and there is also a house at Stepney, once the residence of Dean Colet, appropriated to the high master, besides that in St. Paul's Churchyard. The original building fronting the east end of St. Paul's Cathedral, was consumed by the great fire in 1666, but the school was rebuilt in 1670, at the charge of the Mercer's Company, and under the direction of Robert Ware the warden. It was again rebuilt from designs by George Smith, about 1825. The centre is a hexastyle portico of the Corinthian order, derived from the beautiful peripteral temple at Tivoli, elevated upon a rusticated basement of solid piers. The wings are elevated upon a similar basement, and project the width of an entablature, but the centre projects an entire intercolumniation, and finishes with antæ against the wall to support the entablature, the frieze of which is enriched with the Capo di Bove, or bulls heads and garlands. The centre is entirely devoted to the School, and has lofty windows between the columns. It is surmounted by a low attic and acroteria, on the summit of which rises a cupola. The wings contain the master's houses. The School is divided into eight classes, in the lowest of which, boys are taught the rudiments of languages, and are thence advanced according to their proficiency to the other classes, till they reach the eighth or highest. It is a Free School, and education is confined to that mode of tuition alone which is strictly classical. The admission of a scholar is in the gift of the Mercer's Company, and they are admitted to the age of fifteen. There is no prescribed time of superannuation, but no boy is expected to remain after his nineteenth year. The apposition, a term peculiar to St. Paul's School, is the annual commemoration of the Founder. It has latterly been usually held on the Wednesday or Thursday of examination week. There are eight exhibitions paid out of a separate estate, being a benefaction of Lord Viscount Campden. There are also some advantages, either as scholarships or exhibitions, for Paul's School, at Trinity and St. John's Colleges, Cambridge, founded by Mr. Perry and Dr. Sykes, also a scholarship founded by John Stock. The exhibitioners are chosen by the court of wardens of the Mercer's Company, and they are paid at Mercer's Hall.

MERCHANT TAILOR'S SCHOOL.

This School was founded by the Company of Merchant Tailors, in the year 1651, in a building called the Manor of the Rose, on the eastern side of Suffolk-lane.

The old school having been destroyed in the fire of London, the present building was erected on its site about 1675. It is a large brick edifice, having a range of pilasters in front, and a small cloister, beneath the school and library within, contiguous to these, is a house appropriated to the use of the head master. The school consists of eight classes, in which nearly 300 boys have their education, 100 of which, according to the ancient statutes of the Institution, are taught gratis. There are four probations in the year, by the master and ushers, on 11th March, 15th June, 11th September, and 11th December, not being Sundays, and then on the day following. The probations themselves undergo an examination by persons learned in Hebrew and Greek, appointed by the master and wardens of the company twice every year, upon what are called the doctor's days, between the 11th and 21st of March and September. After the examination public exercises are performed by the eight senior scholars or monitors of the school. There is another public examination of the scholars of the upper class, by the president and fellows of St. John's College, Oxford, annually on 11th June, previously to the election of scholars to be made upon that day, to fill up the vacant fellowships in the College.

THE CHARTER HOUSE.

This ancient Convent was purchased in 1611 of the Earl of Suffolk by Thomas Sutton, in order to establish a foundation for pensioners and scholars, for which he obtained letters patent from the King, afterwards confirmed by parliament. It was instituted for the maintenance of a master, a preacher, a head schoolmaster, a second master, and 80 pensioners. There are also forty-four boys supported in the house. From amongst these are chosen twenty-nine students at the Universities, who are each allowed £20 per annum for eight years; there are nine ecclesiastical preferments in the patronage of the governors, who, according to the statutes, are to confer them upon those who receive their education in this school. The pensioners and scholars are taken in at the recommendation of the governors, who appoint in rotation. The Charter House is situated between St. John's-street and Goswell-street; the present buildings were erected by the Duke of Norfolk, and are very irregular but convenient.

LITERARY AND SCIENTIFIC INSTITUTIONS.

Institutions devoted to the purposes of literature and science are numerous in the metropolis, but are chiefly situated without the liberties, or in Westminster; the principal of those exclusively belonging to the City of London, are the following:

THE LONDON INSTITUTION.

The London Institution was established in the year 1805, on almost the same plan as the Royal Institution, and with a design to promote the diffusion of science, literature, and the arts, in pursuance of which the attention of the Institution has been directed to the acquisition of a valuable and extensive library, to the diffusion of useful knowledge by means of lectures and experiments, and to the establishment of a reading room, where the foreign and domestic journals and other periodical works, and the best pamphlets and new publications, are provided for the use of the proprietors. The celebrated Greek professor, Richard Porson, was their librarian, and was succeeded by William Maltby. The Institution was at first held at a large house in the Old Jewry, once the residence of Sir Robert Clayton, Lord Mayor. It was then removed into Coleman-street. But in the year 1815, the present handsome building in Finsbury Circus was founded. It was erected from the designs of William Brooks. The ground story is of the Doric order of architecture, and the entablature, carried through the whole line of the front, is enriched with chaplets of laurel instead of triglyphs; the upper story consists of a tetrastyle portico of the Corinthian order as found at Tivoli, having the entablature surmounted by a balustrade, the piers of which are enriched in the manner of sarcophagi. The building contains an entrance hall, vestibule, stairs to the library, and corridor leading to the lecture room, laboratory, &c.; the upper story consists of the library, which occupies the whole front. The London Institution is governed by a president, four vice-presidents, twenty managers, and has nine visitors, five auditors, a treasurer, secretary, counsel, solicitor, and two librarians; the sub-librarian is William Upcott, the celebrated autograph collector.

THE CITY OF LONDON LITERARY AND SCIENTIFIC INSTITUTION.

This Institution was founded in the year 1825, for the purpose of establishing a library of reference and circulation, classes for the attainment of languages; and for the delivery of lectures on literature, philosophy, and science. Amongst its earliest and most active patrons, was George Grote, Esq., now M. P. for the City of London, and extensive premises in Aldersgate-street have been adapted to the general purposes of the Institution, where a Museum, consisting of fossils and other natural and artificial curiosities has lately been formed. On 1st October, 1833, the members of this society published the first number of a monthly magazine, edited by themselves.

HOSPITALS AND INFIRMARIES OF LONDON.

There are four Hospitals of Royal foundation in the metropolis, namely, St. Bartholomew's, Bethlehem, Bridewell, and St. Thomas's, besides Christ's Hospital already described.

ST. BARTHOLOMEW'S HOSPITAL.

This Hospital, situated in West Smithfield, was originally a Priory of Black Canons, and together with other religious houses, was surrendered to King Henry VIII. By this King it was granted to the Mayor and Commonalty of London for an Hospital, to be called Little St. Bartholomew's. This Hospital escaped the general fire in 1666, but in 1730 it was found necessary to rebuild it, which was effected by voluntary contribution; great alterations are at present, 1833, in progress, principally on the north front towards Smithfield.

The interior of the Hospital presents a fine court, surrounded by stone buildings, in which are the wards for the sick. In a court adjoining is a house for the treasurer. The hall is adorned with portraits of benefactors, there is also a full length portrait of King Henry VIII., and in a window is a representation in stained glass, of Henry VIII. delivering the charter to the Lord Mayor. This and most of the City Hospitals are under admirable management; they are made equally beneficial to rich and poor, as the latter receive every comfort and assistance their cases require, and by the knowledge the physicians, surgeons and their pupils here gain, they are enabled with superior skill, to administer to the rich who may need their assistance.

BRIDEWELL HOSPITAL.

Bridewell was formerly a palace and residence of the King; it was granted by Edward VI. to the City for charitable purposes. In 1666 the old building was destroyed by the fire, and the hospital was rebuilt at considerable expence; it is closely united in its foundation with that of Bethlehem, and the surplus funds of one Hospital, may by the charter, be applied to the use of the other. At present this Hospital, which is situated in Bridge-street, Blackfriars, is of a mixed nature in its establishment, consisting of a school of industry, a hospital, a workhouse, and a prison: great improvements have been made in the buildings, and the revenues are flourishing.

BETHLEHEM HOSPITAL.

The Priory of Bethlehem, one of those surrendered to King Henry VIII., was on petition of Sir John Gresham, granted with its revenues to the Corporation of London. It was built in Moorfields in 1675, from a design said to have been derived from that of the Tuilleries at Paris. Early in this century the building was found to want great repair, and it was resolved to rebuild it in St. George's Fields, where the City was possessed of land sufficient for the purpose. It is established for the cure of lunatics, and patients are admitted with little difficulty. The New Hospital presents a front of much grandeur of design; it is 580 feet in length, and is composed of three principal and two subordinate parts, consisting of a central building, with an hexastyle portico of the Ionic order of architecture; two wings and two receding intermediate parts, which form the main body of the building. In the hall are the figures of raving and melancholy madness, sculptured by Cibber. In the wings the patients are accommodated; and in the area behind, comprising nearly 12 acres, are separate buildings for offices, and grounds for the exercise of patients, who can be received to the number of 200, exclusive of about 60 others, who are confined for acts of criminality.

ST. THOMAS'S HOSPITAL.

This Hospital, situated in the Borough of Southwark, has been mentioned at page 101 ante. It is well endowed, and the governors are the Lord Mayor and Court of Aldermen ex officio, and others who qualify by a donation of £100. Patients hurt by accident are received into this Hospital at all hours, but diseased patients are admitted by an order from a governor.

ST. LUKE'S HOSPITAL.

This charitable foundation for the reception of Lunatics, originated in the year 1751; but the first hospital was erected in 1757, on Windmill-hill, Moorfields, whence it was removed in 1786 to the present building in Old-street, by which its benefits were extended to a greater number of patients. The northern and southern fronts of the edifice, 493 feet in length, are in the same style; the centre and ends slightly project, and are higher than the intermediate parts, without being indebted to architectural ornament: it presents a design well suited to its destination. Behind the house are two large gardens, where such of the patients as can be permitted with safety, are allowed to take the air. This hospital has accommodation for 300 persons, and its government is in a committee of thirty. The mode of application for relief from the charity is particular, but directions may be obtained by application to the steward of the hospital.

Besides the principal hospitals here mentioned, London contains many asylums for the sick and lame, and institutions for the maintenance of indigent persons of various other descriptions, as dispensaries for gratuitously supplying the poor with medical aid and medicine at their own dwellings; numerous schools, supported by the respective parishes, with the aid of occasional voluntary contributions: and in each parish a workhouse for maintaining its own helpless poor. The public companies of the City of London, distribute large sums annually in charity, besides keeping up almshouses, which have been built and endowed by various members of the corporate bodies.

THE CITY OF WESTMINSTER.—Home Circuit.

THE Metropolis is formed by the union of the Cities of London and Westminster, and the Borough of Southwark. Westminster on the northern bank of the Thames, received its name from its Minster situated westward of London, and is so called in a charter of sanctuary, granted by King Edward the Confessor, in the year 1066. For a considerable period it was entirely distinct from London, although it now forms an integral part of it. The Abbots of Westminster had archiepiscopal jurisdiction within their liberties, and had the keeping of the regalia; performing also a chief service in the coronation of the Kings of England, and had a seat in Parliament. The ancient arms of the Abbey were Azure, on a chief indented or, a crosier on the dexter side, and a mitre on the sinister, both gules. After the dissolution of monasteries, King Henry VIII. erected the abbey into a deanery, and in 1541 established it as a Bishopric, appointing John Thirlby the first bishop: upon this occasion it became a City; he having wasted the revenue allotted by the King for the support of the See, was translated to Norwich, and with him ended the Bishopric of Westminster, the dignity continuing only nine years, when Middlesex, which was the diocese, was restored to London. The dean continued to preside until the accession of Queen Mary, who restored the abbot; but Queen Elizabeth displaced the abbot, and erected the Abbey into a collegiate church, as it still continues. The arms of the Deanery of Westminster, are Azure, a cross patonce between five martlets or, on a chief of the last a pale quarterly of France and England, between two roses gules. The dean of Westminster being invariably Dean of the Order of the Bath, bears the ribbon of the order with the badge pendant. When the Bishopric was dissolved by King Edward VI., the right of Westminster to the name of City was lost with it, although custom has retained the epithet ever since. Westminster is governed by a high steward, who is usually a nobleman, and is appointed by the dean and chapter, a deputy steward, sixteen capital burgesses, sixteen assistants, a high bailiff, high constable, town clerk and other officers. The quarter sessions for the peace are held in the Court House in King-street. The arms of the City, granted the 1st October, 1601, are Azure, a portcullis with chains pendant Or, on a chief of the last, the arms of King Edward the Confessor, in pale, between two roses of York and Lancaster.

THE ABBEY CHURCH OF ST. PETER, WESTMINSTER.

This venerable structure, one of the most interesting edifices in the kingdom, on account of its antiquity, grandeur and beauty, as an ornament to the metropolis, as well as for its architecture; specimens of each successive period of the pointed style being here to be found, from its earliest date to the florid richness of the Tudor age. The Abbey is also the scene of the most impressive of our national ceremonies; within its walls both the coronation and burial of the Sovereigns of England, with a few exceptions, have been solemnized; here also are the monuments of our most distinguished nobility, as well as of the most celebrated poets, philosophers, and historians, in which the progress of the art of sculpture may be successfully traced.

The site on which the building stands is supposed to have been an island, circumscribed by the river Thames, called Thorney, on which in the Roman period of history, stood a Temple of Apollo, that was destroyed by an earthquake. In support of this tradition it may be remarked, that whenever the word Thorn occurs in a local name, a Roman station is always found to have been near, if not on the spot, (according to Gale, an eminent antiquary.) On the ruins of this Temple, Sebert, King of the East Saxons, previously to the year 616, erected a christian church and dedicated it to St. Peter. Such at least is the received tradition regarding its original foundation. It was rebuilt by King Edward the Confessor in 1065, and at the same time was endowed with ample revenues. On Whitsun Eve in the year 1220, King Henry III. commenced building of the present structure, by laying the first stone of a chapel in honor of the Virgin Mary, at the eastern end of the church, on the spot now occupied by King Henry VIIIth's. chapel; and on 13th October, 1269, the new church, of which the eastern part with the choir and transept, appears to have been at that time completed, was opened for divine service; and on the same day, the body of St. Edward the Confessor was removed to a rich shrine at the back of the high altar, in the presence of the King, his brother, the King of the Romans, and many other nobles.

The Abbey Church may be considered as one of the finest examples of the pointed style of architecture that was ever erected in this country, and with the exception of the Cathedral at Salisbury, it is also the most perfect that now remains. The general plan of the conventual church is in form of the Latin cross, but is not uniform, as the cloisters which adjoin the southern side, occupy a portion of the space that would otherwise have composed a western aisle to the south transept.

The grand western front consists of a deeply recessed entrance porch, having a large pointed arched window above, and flanked by two square towers, in height 225 feet, terminating in battlements, with pinnacles at each angle. The western front, as it anciently appeared, was erected by Abbots Esteney and Islip, but it was never entirely finished till the reign of George II., 1735. The northern side of the church, between the western front and the transept, is supported by graduated buttresses, from which a double tier of flying buttresses, extend to the upper walls of the nave; between every two buttresses is a large pointed arched window, above which is a range of windows, consisting of three circles inscribed within a triangle; there is also a range of pointed arched windows in the upper part of the walls of the nave, which are terminated by an embattled parapet.

The northern transept, although altered in its detail from what it originally was, presents a very noble specimen of the fanciful display inherent to the pointed style of architecture. The entrance at this transept was usually denominated Solomon's Porch, from its surpassing beauty. Above it is a great rose window, rebuilt in 1722. The entire height of this front to the top of the centre pinnacle, is 170 feet.

The eastern termination of the church, seen above the chapels which environ it, displays four windows on each side, and three at the end, which finishes in a half decagon; these windows are more acutely pointed than those of the upper range before described, but are of similar character and arrangement.

The front of the southern transept is not so elegant as that on the north side, but from its situation, the library, chapter house and cloisters, nearly exclude it from public view; here is a great marygold window, more complicated in its tracery than the rose window of the north transept; it was reconstructed in 1814, under the direction of Benj. Wyatt.

The southern side of the Abbey Church exhibits some peculiarities in its architecture, arising from the contiguity of the cloisters, and the ingenuity that was necessary to be employed, in order to support the walls, and at the same time to admit of space intervening between the superstructure and the abutments.

All the exterior walls of the edifice are embattled, and the roofing is substantially covered with lead. The central tower was rebuilt after a fire, which took place in this part of the church in 1803.

The interior of this venerable edifice, produces its most striking and impressive effect on entering from the west; the view from that point being more extended and unbroken, and the architectural character of the building more apparent than from any other. The lights too are so happily disposed, and the arrangement of the pillars so nicely adapted to the forms and magnitude of the arches, and to the loftiness of the vaulting, that the whole combines in one harmonious perspective. The great western window is admirably proportioned, and its tracery elegantly disposed; twenty-four large compartments are filled with painted glass, chiefly scriptural figures from the Old Testament, the royal arms of George II., King Sebert, Queen Elizabeth, Wilcocks, Bishop of Rochester and Dean of the Church, and the arms of the College of Westminster; it was executed in 1735.

The Abbey Church contains within its walls a vast store of characteristic ornament, exhibiting vestiges of ancient art, the work of every period, distinguished by its peculiar style of enrichment, from the remote time of its structure by King Henry III. The chancel or sanctuary in its original arrangement, displayed great magnificence; on the north side of the altar screen, which has been restored, are displayed the sepulchral monuments of Edmund Crouchback, Earl of Lancaster, second son of King Henry III., who died in 1296; of Aymer de Valence, Earl of Pembroke, who died in 1323; and of Aveline, Countess of Lancaster, who died in 1273, the last said to be the earliest monument in the pointed style erected in the Abbey Church. Such an assemblage of magnificent works of art of this remote period, is not to be found elsewhere in Europe. On the southern side of the chancel are the remains of a monument, erected to the memory of the Lady Anne of Cleves, fourth wife of King Henry VIII., from whom he was afterwards divorced; she died in 1557; and nearer to the altar are ornamented canopied stalls, answering in every respect to the exact situation of the seats of the officiating priests, during the celebration of high mass at the altar, and such as are still remaining in many of our ancient churches. These very curious canopied seats have been called erroneously the Tomb of Sebert. The height of the enclosure is 13 feet 9 inches to the top of the finials, and each compartment, four in number, is about 2 feet 7 inches wide, and were originally adorned with a full length figure, painted in oil colours, on a ground of plaster, a more ancient example of the art of painting than is elsewhere to be found, being undoubtedly as early as the reign of Edward I. The first portrait is that of Sebert, King of the East Saxons; it is the most perfect of the series, and merits particular attention, from the fine state of preservation in which it remains; the next compartment retained in 1821, only a small part of its original decoration, the greater portion seeming to have been purposely destroyed, from the dress it appears to have been the figure of an ecclesiastic, and it is supposed that the enclosure of the chancel contained figures of a King and a bishop, in alternate succession; the remains of this picture is now completely obliterated. The portrait of King Henry

III. in the next compartment, is painted on a ground, semé of lions passant guardant, in allusion to the charge in the royal arms. In the fourth panel the figure has been scraped off. The back of the enclosure or canopies has been originally painted, as well as the front towards the choir, but the only figure visible is that of St. Edward the Confessor, in the act of presenting his ring; and the figure of St. John the Baptist was probably that which was next to him, and in the act of receiving his ring, according to the legend.

Sepulchral brasses, a species of memorial entirely disused, were introduced into our churches about the commencement of the thirteenth century; the intrinsic value of the metal alone, has been the cause of much devastation amongst the monuments so decorated. The decay of time, in comparison, has had little effect, but from their situation in the pavement, the surfaces are liable to constant friction. Monuments of this description in the Abbey Church are but few, but those are exceedingly interesting, the earliest is that of John Waltham, Bishop of Salisbury and Lord High Treasurer of England, who died in 1395, in the Chapel of St. Edward the Confessor. The monument of Robert Waldeby, Archbishop of York, who died in 1397, is in the chapel of St. Edmund the King, and near it is that of Eleanor Bohun, Duchess of Gloucester, who died in 1399; in the same chapel is also a monument of Sir Humphrey Bourchier, who died in 1471, the figure has been purloined, but the arms and badges remain; an inlaid marble slab in memory of Sir John Harpeden, who died in 1457, is in the north ambulatory, and near it that of Abbot Esteney, ob. 1498.

The monument of Sir Thomas Vaughan, who died in 1483, is in the Chapel of St. John the Baptist; and that of Sir Humphrey Stanley, who died in 1505, is in the Chapel of St. Nicholas; and the monument of this description of the latest date, is that of Dr. William Bill, Dean of Westminster, who died in 1561.

The arms of the principal benefactors to the Abbey Church, after it was refounded by Henry III., were formerly displayed on twenty shields in each aisle of the nave. The shields were of different descriptions, those in the more ancient part of the church being much larger than the others, and projecting from the walls, to which they appeared attached by straps, pendant from heads. The other shields were flat, and were represented as fixed, not pendant, and having over each the name of the person with whose arms it was charged. Several of these curious memorials have been destroyed and others hidden, by different tombs which have been erected in front of them.

The northern transept has a very rich appearance, arising as well from its style of architecture, as from the splendid monuments by which it is occupied. The southern transept, which has been familiarly termed poets corner, from the many distinguished literary characters who have monuments here, presents the same general character in its architecture, although some differences may be traced in the subordinate members and embellishments; these variations must be ascribed to that ceaseless diversity, both in arrangement and decoration, which belongs to the pointed style, and which constitutes one of its characteristic principles.

The choir forms a most interesting portion of the Abbey Church, and on entering it from the nave, the eye is particularly struck by the grandeur of the perspective, which results from the loftiness of the arches, the elegance of the vaulting, and the "dim religious light" that gleams through the quarries of its eastern windows. The stalls of oak are thirty-two in number, besides those for the dean and sub-dean, and below them are seats for the King's scholars of Westminster, and the choristers. The chancel is paved with a very curious mosaic or tessellated pavement, brought from Rome by Abbot Ware, in the reign of Henry III.; this pavement is so complicated in its design, that no verbal illustration can give an adequate idea of its diversified arrangement, and although it has been greatly injured by wanton spoilation, it must still be regarded as one of the most interesting works of its kind that now exists. The materials of which it is composed, are porphyry, lapis lazuli, jasper, alabaster, Lydian, and serpentine marbles and touchstone.

The fine Organ over the entrance to the choir, has lately been gilt and diapered in the ancient style, by Willemt.

The chapel of St. Edward the Confessor, immediately behind the choir, derives particular interest from the tombs by which it is surrounded, and the sculpture by which it is enriched; here lie enshrined the remains of the royal founder, encircled by the ashes of kindred sovereigns. The screen which extends across this chapel on the west, is one of the most remarkable specimens of ancient art that now remains, and although much damaged by wanton devastation, is still exceedingly interesting and curious. On a sculptured frieze, the principal events of Edward the Confessor's life are represented in alto relievo; the subjects occupy fourteen compartments, separated from each other by trefoils, some of which are faced by shields radiated; these are formed by a broad label and is continued under all the historical compartments. The design of the lower part of this screen is extremely elegant, and the variety of delicate tracery which it exhibits can hardly be paralleled. It was most probably erected in the reign of Henry VI., if not at the expense of that monarch, who is known to have held the memory of the Confessor in high veneration.

The shrine of Edward the Confessor stands nearly in the middle of his chapel. All the ancient part of this shrine is of stone, curiously inlaid with mosaic ornament. Its height, including the cornice, is 9 feet, its width 5 feet 4½ inches, and its length 9 feet 5 inches. It was the work of Pietro Cavallini, who is supposed to have accompanied Abbot Warc to England, after his visit to Rome in the latter part of Henry IIIrd's reign. The upper part of the shrine is of wainscot, and consists of two stories of unequal dimensions, originally inlaid to correspond in some measure with the mosaic enrichments of the ancient part. It was made by order of King James II., and including this portion, the entire height of the shrine is 14 feet 9 inches.

The tombs of sovereigns which surround this chapel, commencing near the northern end of the screen, and continuing to the southern, are those of King Edward I., King Henry III., Queen Eleanor, King Henry V., Queen Philippa, King Edward III., King Richard II., and his first consort Queen Anne. The tomb of King Henry III. is similar in style and material to the shrine of St. Edward. It consists of an elevated basement, raised upon two steps; and of the tomb itself, on which lies a gilt-brass effigy of the monarch whose ashes it contains. The mosaic work with which it was originally decorated, is chiefly composed of small triangular pieces of red and gilt glass, disposed into panels, having guilloché borderings. On each side of the tomb is a polished slab of dark red porphyry, nearly 3 feet in length, and at each angle are two spiral columns, but the tesserae with which they were originally inlaid, are mostly gone. At the foot of this monument is an altar tomb, in which lies buried the young Princess Elizabeth, daughter of King Henry VII., who died at Eltham Palace, 14th September, 1495.

The entire east end of St. Edward's Chapel, is occupied by the tomb and very singular yet elegant monumental chantry of King Henry V. It was probably erected in the early part of the reign of his son, King Henry VI. The tomb is divided, at the sides, into three compartments, and on the upper slab lies a headless figure of the King, carved in oak, said to have been once covered with gilded plates of brass. The chantry is of an oblong form, in plan, and extends from the beautiful octagonal entrance turrets to the eastern wall of the Abbey Church. The altar screen of the chantry is very ingenious in its design, and displays a rich assemblage of statues of different sizes. In the arrangement, the statues of St. George and St. Denis, the patron saints of England and France, are placed at the opposite extremities of the screen. Over it is a window by Willelment. On the screen work above the arches, which extend across the ambulatory of the church, and connect this chapel with its eastern wall, are ranges of curious sculpture, similar in their general design, but differing in particulars. In each are four principal divisions, three of which contain small standing figures in niches, and the fourth a coronation scene in alto relievo; the last is nearly in the centre of the design, and contains on one side nine figures, and on the other five: they are supposed to represent the coronations of Henry V. in England and France; the principal figure in each compartment is certainly intended for that of Henry himself, and resemble all the likenesses which are extant of that monarch. The cavetto over the canopies that surmount the figures, is charged with the King's cognizances of the swan and antelope alternately; these badges are also repeated on the large cornices under the figures, together with the flaming beacon, a favorite device of Henry V. Within a few feet of the tomb of Queen Philippa is a large slab, formerly enriched with inlaid brass, in memory of Thomas of Woodstock, K. G., Duke of Gloucester and Constable of England, the youngest son of King Edward III., who died in 1397. There are no other monuments in this chapel than those already mentioned, although various other persons of distinguished rank have been interred here. One of the principal objects of curiosity in this chapel, is the coronation chair of the English sovereigns, made in the reign of Edward I., to contain the famous stone on which the inauguration of the Scottish Kings was performed, and which Edward I. brought from Scone in Perthshire, according to the old rhyming chronicle:—

Kyng Edward wyth the lang shankes fro Scotland hit fette, Besyde the shryne of Seynt Edward at Westminster het hit sette.

With this chair another is kept, which is stated to have been made for the coronation of Queen Mary in 1689, it is wholly unornamented, but is similar in form to the ancient one.

The upper windows which admit light into this chapel are filled with painted glass, displaying in each principal division a whole length figure standing under a canopy; the figures represent Jesus Christ and the Virgin Mary, King Edward the Confessor and St. John the Evangelist, St. Augustine and Bishop Mellitus; over every figure is a shield of arms, the charges upon which have been disarranged by modern glaziers. The anomalies in the blazoning of these shields need not be pointed out to the heraldic reader, who will at once determine that they never could have been originally represented as they now appear. Numerous pieces of glass have been improperly introduced, which from their style of execution and variation of ornament, were evidently brought from other windows, and are of a date considerably posterior to the figures. All the ancient glass with which these windows are composed, is of the kind called pot metal, from the colors being incorporated with the glass whilst it is in a state of fusion, by which means the stain pervades the entire mass.

St. Benedict's Chapel is the first in order from the south transept of those chapels, which surround the eastern part of the Abbey Church; the site of the altar is now covered by the monument of Frances, Countess of Hertford, ob. 1588. In this chapel, besides other tombs of less interest, is the monument of Simon Langham, Archbishop of Canterbury and Cardinal of Preboste, who died in 1376. In the middle of the chapel is a large altar tomb of Lionel Cranfield, Earl of Middlesex, who died in 1645.

The Chapel of St. Edmund is separated from the ambulatory by an ancient wooden screen; it contains the remarkable monuments of William de Valence, Earl of Pembroke, half brother of King Henry III., who died in 1296; of Edward Talbot, Earl of Shrewsbury, who died in 1617; of Sir Bernard Brocas, Chamberlain to Anne, Queen of Richard II., who died in 1400; of John Lord Russel, who died in 1584; of Lady Katherine Knollys, Lady of the bed chamber to Queen Elizabeth, who died in 1568. Against the screen is the tomb of John of Eltham, Earl of Cornwall, son of Edward II., he died in 1334, and near it is the altar tomb of Frances, Duchess of Suffolk, who died in 1559. The general form and architecture of St. Nicholas's Chapel, is similar to that of St. Edmund; the screen is supposed to have been erected by Abbot William of Colchester, in the reign of Henry IV.; the principal monuments in this chapel are the following: adjoining the screen is that of Philippa, Duchess of York, who died in 1431; against the western wall is the monument of Elizabeth, Duchess of Northumberland, ob. 1776; and in continuations are the monuments of Winifred, Marchioness of Winchester, ob. 1586; William Sutton, Bishop of Durham, ob. 1486; Mildred Lady Burghley, ob. 1589; Sir George Fane, ob. 1618, but the monument was erected in 1764; of Anne, Duchess of Somerset, widow of the Protector, ob. 1587; Elizabeth Lady Cecil, Lady of the bed chamber to Queen Elizabeth, ob. 1591. Near the middle of the chapel is a large altar tomb of Sir George Villiers, ob. 1605.

St. Paul's Chapel, the first on the northern side of the Abbey Church, after passing that of King Henry VII., is separated from the ambulatory by the monument of William Pulteney, Earl of Bath, who died 1764, by Wilton; and by a stone screen enclosing the tomb of Lodowick Robsert Lord Bouchier, standard bearer to King Henry V., who died in 1431: this monument was originally one of the most curious in the church, but its painted decorations, chiefly emblazons, have been obliterated by the want of taste in those whose duty it was to have carefully preserved the tomb entire. The screen is embattled, and consists of two courses of pierced arches with buttresses; the lower part includes an altar tomb, at the ends of which are sculptured large gnomons, supported by a lion and a falcon, and charged with the arms of Robsert and Bouchier quarterly; over the centre of the tomb are the arms and crest, upon a helmet of the time. Almost every part of the screen was enriched with gilding and painting, and besides numerous shields of arms, the whole was strewed with gilded Katherine wheels, the badge of the family. The walls of the chapel are covered with the monuments of Lord Cottington, ob. 1652; Frances, Countess of Sussex, ob. 1589; Dudley Viscount Dorchester, ob. 1631; Sir Thomas Bromley, Lord Chancellor, ob. 1587; Sir J. Puckering, Lord Keeper of the great Seal, ob. 1596. In the area of the chapel is the beautiful tomb of Sir Giles Daubeney, K. G., Lord Chamberlain to King Henry VII., who died in 1507.

St. John Baptist's Chapel in its arrangement and architecture, is almost exactly similar to that of St. Edmund on the opposite side, but it has no screen, although it is completely separated from the ambulatory by the ancient tombs of Abbot Fascet, ob. 1500; Thomas Ruthall, Bishop of Durham, who died in 1522; Abbot Colchester, who died in 1420; and the monument of Admiral Holmes, who died in 1761. The entrance to this chapel is through the small chapel of St. Erasmus. On the northern side is the monument of Colonel Edward Popham, who died in 1651; and against the eastern wall is the costly monument of Henry Carey Lord Hunsdon, K. G., Lord Chamberlain to Queen Elizabeth, who died in 1596, it was erected by his son, and is perhaps the most lofty structure of the kind in the whole kingdom, its height being 36 feet; Elizabeth Savile, Countess of Mexborough, ob. 1821. In the middle of the chapel is the tomb of Thomas Cecil, Earl of Exeter, who died in 1622.

Whether the Chapels of St. Erasmus and Abbot Islip were at any time joined in one, it is now perhaps impossible to ascertain, but there has evidently been a large opening in the masonry, through which the figure of St. Erasmus must have been visible to persons praying near the altar of Islip's Chapel. St. Erasmus's Chapel, the smallest in the whole church, from its peculiar situation seems to have been constructed within one of the main piers. Above the doorway is inscribed Sanctus Erasmus; still higher is a beautifully decorated niche, with a triple headed canopy, the recess of which is occupied by a tablet in memory of a Bishop of Londonderry.

Islip's Chapel corresponded with that of St. Benedict on the opposite side, but was altered by Abbot Islip, about the end of Henry VIIIth's reign. It is separated from the area by a stone screen beautifully executed, the upper division of which is most elegantly designed, and consists of a range of seven niches with canopies and pedestals, surmounted by a cornice, having a moulding of vine branches, and a range of trefoils. The interior of this chapel is wrought in a style of similar elegance to the screen; the eastern end where the altar was originally placed, is occupied by a monument of Sir Christopher Hatton, who died in 1619. In the oratory over this chapel, are presses containing the "ragged regiment" waxen figures of several of the Kings and Queens, &c. now nearly stripped of their robes, and so defaced that it has become impossible to ascertain the particular persons they were intended to represent.

The Chapels of St. John the Evangelist, St. Michael and St. Andrew, occupy the whole of the eastern aisle of the northern transept; the screens that formerly separated them from the transept and from each other, have been entirely destroyed.

In the time of the Stuarts, the lower Convocation-house held its sittings in this division of the Abbey Church, when the upper house sat in King Henry VIIIth's Chapel. The principal monuments in these chapels are as follow: Sir Charles Stuart, K. B., ob. 1801, by Nollekens; Admiral Sir George Pocock, ob. 1792, by Bacon; Sir George Hollis, ob. 1626; Sir Francis Vere, ob. 1609, this monument is of a very singular kind, it consists of a low basement, on which lies the effigies of the knight, and over him is a table slab, supported on the shoulders of four figures of men in armour kneeling, which are remarkably well sculptured and are interesting, on account of the costume: upon the slab is represented a complete suit of armour. Other monuments are those of Aubrey de Vere, Earl of Oxford, K. G., ob. 1702; Captain Edward Cooke, R. N., ob. 1799, by Bacon; Admiral Kempenfelt, ob. 1782; Algernon, Earl of Monrath, ob. 1771, by Wilton; Admiral Totty, ob. 1802; Sarah, Duchess of Somerset, ob. 1692; Lady Elizabeth Nightingale, who died 1734, by Roubiliac, this monument ranks amongst the choicest specimens of the art of sculpture; Francis Thomas, Earl of Kerry, ob. 1818. A considerable part of the area of St. Andrew's Chapel is occupied by the curious monument of Henry Lord Norris of Rycot, who died in 1601: it is of architectural design and very lofty, its height being nearly 24 feet; the six sons of Lord Norris are represented kneeling on the basement at the sides of the tomb, they are all in armour but without helmets, and some of them display so much character, that hardly a doubt can be entertained of their having been actual likenesses: all the statues and arms have been originally painted and gilt.

The monument of General Wolfe, who died at Quebec in 1759, occupies a considerable portion of the southern side of St. John the Evangelist's Chapel: it was designed and executed by Wilton; nearly opposite to this is a monument to John Earl Ligonier, K. B., who died in 1770.

The monuments in the northern transept chiefly worthy of notice are the following: Admiral Sir Peter Warren, K. B., who died in 1752, by Roubiliac, the talents of the sculptor have been most admirably displayed in the design and execution of this monument, it exhibits a figure of Hercules placing a bust of the deceased on a pedestal, near which is a figure of Navigation regarding the bust with a look of veneration; Clement Saunders, Esq., carver in ordinary to King Charles II., James II., and William III., ob. 1695; William Cavendish, Duke of Newcastle, K. G. ob. 1676; John Holles, Duke of Newcastle, K. G. ob. 1711, by Gibbs; Admiral Vernon, ob. 1757, by Rysbrack; Admiral Wager, ob. 1743, by Scheemakers; William, Earl of Chatham, ob. 1778, by Bacon; Captains Bayne, Blair, and Manners, erected in 1793, by Nollekens; William Murray, Earl of Mansfield, ob. 1793, by Flaxman; Charles James Fox, ob. 1806; Sir Eyre Coote, K. B., ob. 1783, by Banks; General Hope, ob. 1789, by Bacon; Jonas Hanway, ob. 1786, by Moore; Sir Clifton Winteringham, Bart., ob. 1794, by Banks; General Coote Manningham, ob. 1809, by Bacon; George Montagu Dunk, Earl of Halifax, ob. 1771, by Bacon; Sir William Saunderson, one of the Gentlemen of the Privy Chamber to King Charles I., ob. 1676. The range of arches over the northern doorway, is occupied by a singular monument to Vice Admiral Watson, ob. 1757, by Scheemakers. Admiral Sir John Balchen, ob. 1744, by Scheemakers; John Warren, Bishop of Bangor, ob. 1800, by Westmacott; Lord Aubrey Beauclerc, ob. 1740, by Scheemakers; General Percy Kirk, ob. 1741, by Scheemakers; Sir Richard Kane, ob. 1736, by Rysbrack; Samuel Bradford, Bishop of Rochester and Dean of Westminster, ob. 1731, by Cheere; Hugh Boulter, Archbishop of Armagh, ob. 1742, by Cheere; Sir Thomas Hesketh, ob. 1605; and Warren Hastings, ob. 1818, by Bacon. The monuments in the northern aisle of the choir of greatest interest, are the following: Hugh Chamberlin, M. D., ob. 1728, by Scheemakers and Delvaux; Dr. Arnold, ob. 1802; Henry Purcell, ob. 1695; Captain George Bryan, ob. 1809, by Bacon; Lord Courcy, ob. 1719; Dr. John Plenderleath, ob. 1811, by Bacon; Sir Thomas Duppa, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, ob. 1694; Robert Viscount Dunbar, ob. 1714; Charles, Earl of Normanton and Archbishop of Dublin, ob. 1809, by Bacon; Dr. Peter Heylin, ob. 1662; Sir Edmund Prideaux, Bart. of Nether-ton, Devon, ob. 1728, by Cheere; Richard Le Neve, ob. 1673; Admiral Temple West, ob. 1757; William Croft, Doctor of Music, ob. 1727; John Blow, Doctor of Music, ob. 1708; Charles Burney, Doctor of Music, ob. 1814; Captain Saumarez, ob. 1747, by Cheere.

The monuments in the nave and aisles of the Abbey Church are very numerous, the following list of persons commemorated, includes the most remarkable for design or execution. Against the screen of the choir are two companion monuments, namely of Sir Isaac Newton, who died in 1726, and of James, Earl of Stanhope, who died in 1720, both of which were designed by Kent, and executed by Rysbrack. Those in the northern aisle occur as follow: Thomas Viscount Teviot, ob. 1710; Sir J. S. Denham, Bart., ob. 1780; Henry Priestman, ob. 1712, by Bird; Miss Johnstone, ob. 1815, by Flaxman; Admiral Baker, ob. 1716; Gilbert Thornburgh, Esq., Gentleman of the Cellar to the King, ob. 1677; Dr. Mead, ob. 1756, by Scheemakers; William Morgan, ob. 1613, and Thomas Mansell, ob. 1684; Mary Beaufoy of Guy's Cliff, Warwickshire, ob. 1705; the Right Honorable Spencer Percival, ob. 1812, by Westmacott; J. G. Loten, ob. 1789, by Banks; Ann Whytell, ob. 1788, by Bacon; Robert Killegrew, ob. 1707, by Bird; William Levinz, ob. 1765, by Hayward; Thomas Banks, R. A., ob. 1805; Dr. Woodward, ob. 1728, by Scheemakers; Anne, Countess of Clanricard, ob. 1732; Captains Harvey and Hutt, ob. 1794, by Bacon; General Lawrence, ob. 1775, by Tyler; Sir Godfrey Kneller, ob. 1723, by Rysbrack. Within the area of the north western tower, is a monument of Captain James Montagu, ob. 1794, by Flaxman; against the eastern wall is a monument of the Honourable G. A. F. Lake, ob. 1808, by Smith; and against the western wall that of William Hormick, ob. 1746.

On the northern side of the great western entrance, is a monument of John Conduitt, Master of the Mint, who died in 1737, by Cheere; and on the southern side is a corresponding monument of Admiral Sir Thomas Hardy, ob. 1732, also by Cheere. Immediately over the great western entrance, is a monument of the Right Honourable William Pitt, ob. 1806, by R. Westmacott, R. A.

On the southern side of the nave, within the westernmost intercolumniation, is a monument of Captain James Cornwall, who died in 1743, upwards of 30 feet in height. It was designed and executed by Sir Robert Taylor, and was the very first monument voted by Parliament, in commemoration of naval heroism.

At the western end of the southern aisle of the nave, and against the wall of the consistory court, is a monument of the Right Honorable James Craggs, Secretary of State, who died in 1721. Over the entrance to the deanery, is that of the Rev. Henry Wharton, ob. 1694; and proceeding eastward, the principal monuments occur in the following order: William Congreve, the Poet, ob. 1728, by Bird; Dr. Friend, ob. 1728, by Rysbrack; Sir Lumley Robinson, Bart. of Kentwell Hall, Suffolk, ob. 1684, by Settle; Dr. Thomas Sprat, Bishop of Rochester and Dean of Westminster, ob. 1713, by Bird; Dr. Joseph Wilcocks, Bishop of Rochester and Dean of Westminster, ob. 1725, by Cheere; within the recess of a window over the three last mentioned, is an extraordinary monument of Admiral Richard Tyrell, ob. 1766, by N. Read, pupil of Roubiliac, the subject is the ascent of the deceased from the depths of ocean into the heavenly regions; the next monument in succession is that of Dr. Zachary Pearce, Bishop of Rochester and Dean of Westminster, ob. 1774, by Tyler; Mrs. Katherina Bovey, ob. 1727, by Gibbs the architect; Dr. John Thomas, Bishop of Rochester and Dean of Westminster, ob. 1793, by J. Bacon, R. A.; General Viscount Howe, ob. 1758, designed by Stuart, and sculptured by Scheemakers; a monumental bust of Colonel Herries of the Light Horse Volunteers, who died in 1819, by Chantrey; within a recess of an adjacent window, is a monument of Field Marshal Wade, who died in 1748, by Roubiliac; it consists of a trophy which Time is advancing to destroy, but is repelled by Fame: it is confidently stated that Bishop Newton was induced to write his "Dissertations on the Prophecies," in consequence of the opinions expressed by Marshal Wade, when in conversation with the Bishop on the subject of Revelation.*

In the next division are two monuments to Carola and Ann, wives of Sir Samuel Morland, Bart., who died in 1674 and 1689, these monuments attract attention from the peculiarity of the inscriptions, written in four different languages by the celebrated orator Henley, viz. in Hebrew, Greek, Ethiopic, and English; John Smith, ob. 1721, by Gibbs; over the last is a monument of General James Fleming, ob. 1750, by Roubiliac; Sidney, Earl of Godolphin, Lord High Treasurer of Great Britain, ob. 1712, by Bird; a conjoined monument to Sir Charles Harford and Clement Cottrell, both of whom died in 1672. In a recess of a window above the last, is the monument of General Hargrave, ob. 1751, by Roubiliac. In the next division is that of Colonel Roger Townshend, ob. 1759, designed by Robert Adam the architect, and executed by Carter; Sir Palmes Fairborne, ob. 1680, by Bushnell; Major Andre, executed by the Americans as a spy in 1780, designed by Robert Adam, and executed by Van Gelder; Sir John Chardin the celebrated Eastern traveller, ob. 1713, by Cheere; Bridget, wife of Charles Radley, gentleman Usher to King Charles II., ob. 1679.

The principal monuments in the southern aisle of the choir, are ranged in the following order, commencing with the first on the northern side, on entering from the nave of the church: Thomas Thynne, Esq. of Longleate, Wilts, who was shot in his own carriage in Pall Mall, near the end of the Haymarket, on Sunday, 12th February, 1682, by three assassins, said to have been hired by Count Koningsmark for the purpose; Sir Thomas Trigge, K. B., ob. 1814, by Bacon; Thomas Owen, ob. 1598; James Kendall, ob. 1708; Lady Grace Gethin, ob. 1697; Sir Thomas Richardson, ob. 1634, by Hubert Le Sueur; William Thynne, Receiver of the Marches to Henry VIII. ob. 1584. On the southern side of the aisle, the chief monuments are those of Admiral Harrison, ob. 1791; Sophia, Marchioness of Annandale, ob. 1716, by Gibbs; Sir John Burland, ob. 1776; Sir Cloudesley Shovell, shipwrecked in 1707; William Wragg, ob. 1777, by Hayward; Rev. Charles Burney, ob. 1818, by Gahaghan; George Stepney, ob. 1707; Dr. Isaac Watts, ob. 1748, by Banks; John Methuen, Lord Chancellor of Ireland, ob. 1706, by Rysbrack; Sir Richard Bingham, ob. 1598; Admiral George Churchill, ob. 1710; General W. Strobe, ob. 1776, by Hayward; Martin Folkes, ob. 1754, designed by Tyler, and sculptured by Ashton.

The monuments in the southern transept, or poets corner, are chiefly arranged in two tiers and are placed in the following order, commencing with the northernmost of the upper tier: David Garrick, ob. 1779, by Webber; John Ernest Grabe, ob. 1711, by Bird; Sir Robert Taylor, architect; ob. 1788; William Camden, ob. 1623; Dr. Isaac Casanbon, ob. 1614; Sir Richard Coxe, taster to Queen Elizabeth and King James I., ob. 1623; James Wyatt, architect, ob. 1813; Sir John Pringle, Bart., ob. 1782; Dr. Wetenhall, ob. 1733; Dr. Stephen Hales, ob. 1761, by Wilton; Dr. Thomas Triplett, ob. 1670; Dr. Isaac Barrow, ob. 1677; Joseph Addison, author of the Spectator, ob. 1719, by Westmacott; G. F. Handel, ob. 1759, one of the last works of Roubiliac; General Sir Archibald Campbell, K. B., hereditary Usher of the White Rod for Scotland, ob. 1791; Sir Thomas Robinson, Bart. of Rokeby, Yorkshire, ob. 1777; Sir Edward Atkyns, ob. 1669; Right Honourable James Steward Mackenzie, ob. 1800, by Nollekens.

At the western end of this transept is a monument of John, Duke of Argyll, K. G., ob. 1743, one of the finest examples of statuary that was ever executed by Roubiliac. Over the entrance to the Chapel of St. Blaise, is a monument of the poet Goldsmith, ob. 1774, by Nollekens; John Gay, the poet, ob. 1732, by Rysbrack; Nicholas Rowe, poet laureat, ob. 1718, by Rysbrack; James Thomson, author of the Seasons, ob. 1748, designed by Robert Adam, and sculptured by H. M. Spang; William Shakespeare, ob. 1616, designed by Kent, and executed by Scheemakers; Mrs. Pritchard, the actress, ob. 1768, by Hayward; Christopher Anstey, author of the Bath Guide, ob. 1805, by Horwell.

In the eastern aisle of this transept are the following memorials, commencing with those on the western side: Mons. St. Evremont, a celebrated French wit, ob. 1703; Granville Sharpe, one of the most effectual opposers of the Slave Trade, ob. 1813, by Chantrey; Matthew Prior, the poet, ob. 1721, designed by Gibbs, and sculptured by Rysbrack, and the bust by Coizevox; Thomas Shadwell, poet laureat, ob. 1692, by Bird; William Mason, ob. 1797, by Bacon; John Milton, author of Paradise Lost, ob. 1674, by Rysbrack; Thomas Gray, the poet, ob. 1771, by Bacon; Samuel Butler, author of Hudibras, ob. 1733; Edmond Spenser, poet laureat to Queen Elizabeth, ob. 1598; Ben Jonson, poet laureat, ob. 1637, by Gibbs. On the eastern side are the following memorials: Michael Draiton, ob. 1631; Barton Booth, a celebrated actor, ob. 1733, by Tyler; John Phillips, author of a poem on "Cyder," ob. 1708; Geoffrey Chaucer, the father of English poetry, ob. 1400, his monument was erected in Henry VIth's reign, by Nicholas Brigham; John Roberts, by Hayward; Abraham Cowley, the poet, ob. 1667; John Dryden, poet laureat and dramatist, ob. 1700, by Scheemakers. Against the enclosure of the choir, at the northern end of this transept, are the three following monuments: Dr. Robert South, ob. 1716; William Vincent, Dean of Westminster, ob. 1815; Dr. Richard Busby, Master of Westminster School, ob. 1695, by Bird. On the opposite pillars of the transept, are monuments of Dr. A. Horneck, ob. 1696; Dr. Samuel Barton, ob. 1715. There are in poets corner, besides the monuments, gravestones for the following persons of distinguished genius and talent; Richard Cumberland, ob. 1811; John Henderson, ob. 1785; Richard Brinsley Sheridan, ob. 1816; Dr. Johnson, ob. 1784; Thomas Parr, ob. 1635, æt 152; Thomas Clifflinch, ob. 1666; Robert Adam, ob. 1792; Sir William Chambers, ob. 1796; Henry Carr, ob. 1690, &c.

The cloisters of the Abbey form a spacious quadrangle on the southern side of the church, and enclose a grass plot of somewhat more than 100 feet square; they are wholly constructed in the pointed style of architecture, but include examples of different styles, from the reign of Henry III. to that of Richard II. There are four entrances into the cloisters; two from the church, one from Dean's-yard, and one from the College School, through a passage usually called the dark cloisters, which is supposed to be a part of the Abbey erected by King Edward the Confessor. The beautiful sculpture and tracery of the architecture in the cloisters, have suffered from the mischievous acts of the Westminster Scholars, and many of the monuments here erected have been broken and damaged from the same practices; so much injury have they been permitted to commit, that scarcely a single sculptured boss remains now perfect, in any part of the vaulting.

In the eastern cloister is an entrance to the Chapter house and Library shamefully mutilated; the gilding and painting with which it was once enriched, are now only to be traced in fragments; near it is an entrance to an ancient chapel, now called the chamber of the Pix. The memorials in the cloisters of the greatest interest are the following: Bonnell George Thornton, ob. 1790; Bonnell Thornton, author of the Connoisseur, ob. 1768; Albany Charles Wallis, ob. 1776; Sir John Kemp, Bart., ob. 1771; George Wicker, yeoman of the Chapel Royal, ob. 1681; Sir Edmund Berry Godfrey, murdered near Chalk Farm, 1678; Arthur Agarde, ob. 1610; Mrs. Addison, mother of the poet, ob. 1715; Colonel Richmond Webb, ob. 1783; Daniel Pulteney, an altar monument designed by Leoni the architect; Edward Tufnell, architect, ob. 1719; John Hay, ob. 1719, by Rysbrach; John Lawrence, ob. 1684; Thomas Saunders Dupuis, ob. 1796, by Wilford; Dr. Jebb, ob. 1787; Dr. Buchan, ob. 1805; William Woollett, ob. 1785, by T. Banks, R. A.; Luttrell Wynn, ob. 1814, by Bacon; Benjamin Cooke, doctor of music, ob. 1793; George Vertue, ob. 1756; Edward Wortley Montagu, ob. 1777; Dr. Ephraim Chambers, author of the Cyclopædia, ob. 1740, and Mrs. E. Atkinson, body laundress to Queen Anne, ob. 1725. Several of the Abbots of this church were interred in the southern walk of the cloisters, but there are now only four gravestones which record any of their names, viz. Vitalis, Gislebritus, Crispinus, Laurentius, and Gervase de Blois, the last is usually called Long Meg of Westminster, it measures 11 feet 10 inches in length and is 5 feet 10 inches in breadth.

KING HENRY THE SEVENTH'S CHAPEL.

This Chapel, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, and situated at the eastern end of the Abbey Church, is the most florid example of the pointed style of architecture that exists in this country; it is likewise the most perfect example, nearly the whole fabric having undergone a complete repair about ten years since, at the national expense.

The first stone of King Henry VIIth's. Chapel was laid in the month of January, 1503; the Chapel of our Lady or the Virgin Mary, which had been founded by King Henry III, a tavern called the White Rose, and a chapel dedicated to St. Erasmus, built by Elizabeth Widville, Edward IVth's. queen, were all taken down to make room for the new structure, the stone for which is said to have been brought from Huddlestone in Yorkshire. The merit of designing this chapel has been generally given to Sir Reginald Bray, but he could have very little concern in the erecting of it, as he died in October, 1503, within a few months after he had assisted Abbot Islip and the King in its foundation. In Speed's History of Great Britain, p. 979, after speaking of the Savoy Hospital and six religious houses built by King Henry, he continues: Of his building also was Richmond Palace, and that most beautiful piece the Chapel at Westminster, the one the place of his death the other of his burial; which forms of most curious and exquisite building, he and Bishop Fox first, as is reported, learned in France and thence brought with them into England. Besides the chapel there was an alms house erected for thirteen poor men, to be called the King's bedes men; the house has been pulled down many years, but twelve almsmen are still supported by the dean and chapter, who attend the Abbey Church on particular solemnities; they wear gowns of a reddish-purple color, with a portcullis, in silver, the royal badge, on the left shoulder. There is no other edifice in the kingdom, the external enrichments of which have been spread over its surface with such exuberance as in this chapel; with the exception of the plinth, every part is covered with sculptured ornament; the octangular buttress turrets are crested by cupolas, enriched with scaled work and crockets, and have niches with inscribed pedestals on every face, the springers are perforated with varied tracery, and the cornices are charged, even to profusion, with armorial cognizances; these consist chiefly of the portcullis, used as a badge by the King, on account of his descent from the Beauforts by the maternal line; the red rose, the distinguishing badge of the Lancastrians during the war of the rival houses; the white rose the badge of the Yorkists; the lion, the ancient crest of the royal arms; the dragon, the ensign of Cadwallader, the last King of the Britons, of whom King Henry VII. claimed descent; the greyhound, a badge of the house of Beaufort, and a fleur de lis of the house of Plantagenet.

The clerestory windows, which are large and finely proportioned, are divided into three stories by embattled transoms, and in the upper parts the mullions spread into very handsome tracery. In the spandrels within radiated quatrefoils, are roses and portcullises of large size, and in the cavetto of the surmounting cornice, are various sculptures in bold relief, including representations of demi angels, oak branches, hawthorns, and grotesque heads. Hence the walls are divided into rich panelling to the uppermost cornice, the cavetto of which is charged with foliage. On the other members of architecture are studded, in full relief, the royal badges; the animals all appear descending, and in each division a lion is placed between either a rose and a portcullis, or a fleur de lis and a portcullis, the dragon and greyhound being placed at the extremities of the division. The present parapet designed by James Wyatt, is supposed to bear little resemblance to the original battlement.

The principal entrance to King Henry VIIth's. Chapel, is from the most eastern part of the ambulatory of the Abbey Church, by a flight of twelve steps, which lead to the brazen gates of the chapel. The doors to the side aisles open from the platform above the steps, and there is at present no other entrance to them; the entire division between the aisles and the nave of the chapel, being occupied by stalls and seats appropriated to the use of the Knights of the Bath. On the revival of this order by King George I. in 1725, Henry VIIth's. Chapel was appointed to the installation of the knights, and the deans of Westminster, were by statute declared to be the perpetual deans of the order. It had, however, been customary for the new made knights to take their oaths here as early as the reign of James I. On entering the body of the chapel, the mind is powerfully affected by the elevation and grandeur of the vaulting; the airy elegance of the architecture and its enrichments, illumined by a flood of light, that pours through the ramifications of its numerous windows. The nave is separated from the aisles by four arches on each side slightly pointed, which spring from slender pillars formed at the angles of the piers. Immediately over the arches and extending completely round the chapel, is a series of demi angels, crowned, supporting between them a succession of the armorial cognizances of the King; rose, portcullis, or fleur de lis also crowned. Above these figures is a range of sculpture, which extends to the base of the clerestory windows, and includes above seventy statues, each about 3 feet in height, representing the principal saints, martyrs, and confessors of the church; they stand in niches on octangular pedestals, labelled, but not inscribed. Many of the statues are wrought with gracefulness, and display both correctness of form and strong expression; the leading circumstance in the legend of each being made a prominent feature in every statue; thus St. Dunstan grasps the tempter firmly by the nose with his forceps. All the small chapels lie open to the eastern end, the arches here being of similar elevation but of greater width than those of the nave; both their architecture and enrichments are in perfect unison with the general character of the building, the panelling being charged with the royal badges, &c. In some respects the northern and southern chapels have been additionally enriched, as the remaining basement and doorway of a once perforated and embossed screen before each, sufficiently shows: the upper parts of these screens were taken down many years ago. In the design and construction of the main vaulting of King Henry VIIth's Chapel, profound geometrical knowledge is combined with the utmost practical science, and the result has been termed a prodigy of art. It is not alone the untutored mind that contemplates with astonishment, the vastness of its extent and the fearful altitude of its pendant decorations; but even the intelligent architect wonders at the ingenuity and daring hardihood, that could arrange and securely poize in air such masses of stone, and counteract the power of gravity by professional skill: vide Brayley's History. The peculiar airiness of this vaulting, arises in a principal degree from the variety and boldness of the tracery, in the disposition of the ribs or groins: these spread over the surface of the ceiling, like a net of lace work, wherein the ground is composed of circles and radii, all the intervening forms being repeated in the same order in every circle, each of which forms an exact counterpart to the same division of the work in each pendant. Additional beauty is given to the pendants, by pierced foliage surrounding the octagonal finials, and which also encircles the second range of panelling above them. The scantlings of stone with which the vaulting is constructed, vary according to their situation, but in general the thickness of each stone, exclusive of sculpture, may be stated at from ten to fourteen inches. Roofs of timber covered with lead extend over the vaulting, both of the body of the chapel and of the side aisles.

All the windows of the chapel were originally filled with painted glass, which possessed so much excellence as to be referred to as an example in the indentures made for glazing the chapel at King's College, Cambridge; the subjects are supposed to have been scriptural, but the only figure of particular importance that now remains, is the portrait of King Henry VII. in the upper eastern window: Strype, the historian of London, speaking of these windows, says, every light is composed of diapered and well painted glass, each pane containing either a red rose, the badge of the house of Lancaster, or a text &c., the initial of the royal builders name. At the present time few panes are thus ornamented; the small lights in the clerestory windows, contain fleurs de lis, roses, lions, &c. In the lower eastern window of the chapel, are numerous quarries having the initials H R, crowned, and amongst the larger specimens are the royal arms, the hawthorn tree, the Tudor rose, &c. On each side of the nave, upon a raised flooring, is a row of oaken stalls surmounted by canopies elaborately wrought; in front are reading desks, and under the last on the pavement are rows of seats. The subsellæ, both of the stalls and seats, are carved with historical and grotesque subjects, little in unison with the sacred character of the building, the general character of which are humorous and indelicate. Since the stalls were appropriated to the use of the Knights of the Bath, small plates of gilt copper, emblazoned with the arms of the Knights, have been fixed against the backs of each. Over the canopies are helmets, crests and swords of the Knights, and above them are large banners painted with their arms.

King Henry VII., the memorable founder of the chapel, lies buried with Elizabeth his queen, under a magnificent tomb, in the midst of the area near the eastern end. The tomb itself, with the metal statues which lie upon it, and the beautiful reliefs on the sides, were the work of Pietro Torrigiano, an Italian artist. The screen, which is altogether in a different style of workmanship, was most probably designed and wrought by Englishmen, it was certainly begun while King Henry lived, and there is no reason to suppose that Torrighiano arrived in England previously to the year 1512. The screen is wholly constructed of gilt brass, having a stone plinth; it is of an oblong form, 19 feet 2 inches by 11 feet 3 inches, and in height about 10 feet 6 inches; the design in the Tudor style of architecture, embraces all the royal cognizances, but the portcullis, the badge of the Beaufort family, is most frequently introduced.

The first of the small chapels on the northern side, is wholly occupied by the monument of George Villiers, Duke of Buckingham, K. G., who died in 1628. Against the eastern wall of the north eastern chapel, stands the lofty monument of John Sheffield, Duke of Buckinghamshire and Normanby, K. G., who died in 1721, designed and executed by Scheemakers and Delvaux. On the northern side of the south eastern chapel, is an altar tomb in memory of Anthony Philip, Duke of Montpensier, second son of the Duke of Orleans, who died in 1807, by Westmacott. The southern chapel is almost entirely occupied by the monuments of Lodowick Stuart, Duke of Richmond and Lenox, K. G., who died in 1624; against the eastern wall of the same chapel is an urn, in which is the heart of Esme Stuart, the last Duke of Richmond and Lenox of his family, who died in 1661. The principal monuments in the northern aisle of King Henry VIII's Chapel, are in memory of the following persons: Charles Montagu, Earl of Halifax, K. G., who died in 1715; George Savile, Marquess of Halifax, ob. 1695. In the area is the monument of Queen Elizabeth, who died at Richmond, 24th March, 1603: originally this tomb was surrounded by curious iron work, which was removed together with many other, by the dean and chapter, whose evident duty is preservation; the railing was surmounted by a continued range of fleurs de lis and roses, and on the frieze were the initials E. R., intermixed with falcons and roses several times repeated, at each angle and in the middle of each side were standards; the whole had formerly been gilt: vide Brayley's History. At the eastern end of this aisle are two monuments of Sophia and Maria, infant daughters of King James I.; the first died in 1617, and the last in 1619. Both monuments were formerly enclosed by a railing, having brass columns gilt, surmounted by balls on the standards and on the coping, the rose, thistle, and the lily also in brass, gilt. In the same vault with the above children, were interred the remains of Queen Anne of Denmark, who died in 1619, and King James I., who died at Theobald's, 27th March, 1625. Within a recess where the altar formerly stood, is a sarcophagus, placed there by command of King Charles II. in 1678, in memory of King Edward V., and his brother Richard, Duke of York. The monuments in the southern aisle of King Henry VIII's Chapel, are to the memory of the following persons: Margaret, Countess of Lenox, who died in 1577; on the iron railing which formerly surrounded this tomb, were family badges and armorial standards. The monument of Mary, Queen of Scots, was erected by her son, King James, within a year or two after his accession to the English throne; the Queen was beheaded in the hall of Fotheringay Castle, Northamptonshire, on 8th February, 1587, and her remains were first buried in Peterborough Cathedral, but were removed to a vault in this chapel by order of King James I. Eastward of this monument is that of Margaret, Countess of Richmond and Derby, and mother of King Henry VII., who died in 1509; this tomb is supposed to be the workmanship of Torrighiano. Near a contiguous pier towards the north, is a statue erected by Horace Walpole, afterwards Lord Orford, in memory of his mother, Katherine, first wife of Sir Robert Walpole, who died in 1737, by Vallory of Rome. Between the easternmost piers, is a monument of George Monck, Duke of Albemarle, K. G., ob. 1670, and Christopher Monck, Duke of Albemarle, K. G., ob. 1617, designed by Kent, sculptured by Scheemakers. King Charles II., who died 6th February, 1685, is buried in a vault below this spot. In the same vault are the remains of Queen Mary, consort of King William III., ob. 8th March, 1703; Prince George of Denmark, K. G., the husband of Queen Anne, ob. 1708; and Queen Anne, ob. 2nd August, 1714. The following persons, together with two infant children of King George the IInd., and a still born child of the present Duke of Cumberland, have been deposited in the royal vault that was made under the nave of King Henry VIII's Chapel, after the decease of Queen Caroline, in 1737; Queen Caroline, Consort to King George II., ob. 20th November, 1737; Frederic, Prince of Wales, father of his Majesty George III., ob. 1751; Princess Caroline Elizabeth, third daughter of King George II., ob. 1757; Princess Elizabeth Caroline, second daughter of Frederic, Prince of Wales, ob. 1759; King George II., ob. 25th October, 1760; William, Duke of Cumberland, ob. 1765; Frederic William V., son of Frederic, Prince of Wales, ob. 1765; Edward, Duke of York, ob. 1767; Princess Louisa Anne, third daughter of Frederic, Prince of Wales, ob. 1768; Augusta, Princess Dowager of Wales, mother of King George III., ob. 1772; Princess Amelia, daughter of King George II., ob. 1786; and Henry, Duke of Cumberland, ob. 1790.

LIBRARY, CHAPTER HOUSE, DEANERY, &c.

The Library belonging to the dean and chapter is entered from the eastern side of the cloisters of the Abbey Church; it was founded by Lord Keeper Williams, whilst Dean of Westminster; it contains some valuable editions of Greek and Latin classics, and of the works of the fathers of the Church.

The Chapter House, built by King Henry III., was very early devoted to state purposes, and the House of Commons held its sittings within it in 1377. In the year 1547, King Edward VI. granted the chapel of St. Stephen for the meetings of the House of Commons, and the Chapter House was subsequently used as a repository for the records of the Exchequer. It is a spacious and lofty building on an octagonal plan, having originally a large pointed arched window, on each of the exposed sides of the octagon, which have been partly built up, and small windows introduced.

The interior is now divided into two stories, connected with each other by several flights of stairs: amongst the more curious records preserved here, are the two volumes of Domesday Book, one of the most ancient records of England, being the register from which judgment was to be given, upon the value, tenure, and services of lands therein described. The exact time when William the Conqueror undertook the survey, is differently stated by historians; but from the memorial of the completion of it, at the end of the second volume, it is evident that it was finished in 1086; this book contains a mine of information, whence illustrations of the most important and the most certain kind, upon our ancient institutions, services, and tenures of lands, are to be drawn. There are also the original great pipe, or treasurer's roll, of the 4th of King John, several royal wills, rolls of Parliament, and all the proceedings of the Court of Wards, from its erection in 1540, to its abolition in 1660.

The ancient Refectory of the Abbey stood on the southern side of the great cloisters, it was nearly 130 feet long by about 38 feet in width, its site is now occupied by a prebendal garden, but the north wall still remains.

The buildings extending westward from the Refectory into Great Dean's-yard, formed part of the monastic offices. The deanery, originally the abbot's lodgings, the Jerusalem chamber, and the college hall and kitchen, were all built by Abbot Litlington, in the early part of Richard IInd's reign; they are connected with each other, and enclose a small quadrangular court, the only entrance to which is from Dean's-yard. In one of the apartments of the deanery, is a portrait of Queen Elizabeth presented by her Majesty to Dean Goodman, other portraits are those of the Deans of Westminster. The Jerusalem chamber is 38 feet by 19 feet in dimension; the chimney piece is curiously carved, and bears the arms of Dr. John Williams, Bishop of Lincoln and Dean of Westminster, between the arms of the See of Lincoln, and those of the College of Westminster; the northern window contains several historical subjects in painted glass, together with armorial designs; against the southern wall of this room, is fixed a very curious portrait of King Richard II., which formerly hung in the choir of the Abbey Church, it was repaired and cleaned by Muss, in 1822. King Henry IVth. breathed his last in this chamber, into which he had been conveyed when seized with illness, whilst engaged in devotion at St. Edward the Confessor's shrine; the apartment is now used for the meetings of the Chapter of Westminster.

The College Hall is spacious and well proportioned; the roof is supported by strong beams, and the walls are partially lined with oak panelling; at the southern end is a gallery, and in the middle of the floor, which is paved with stone, is a raised circular hearth, with a hollow surrounding it, for the consumption of wood, usual in halls in former times.

PARISHES IN THE CITY AND LIBERTY OF WESTMINSTER.

The City of Westminster originally consisted but of two parishes, St. Margaret and St. John the Evangelist; the liberties at present include the following: St. Anne's, Soho; St. Clement Danes; St. George's, Hanover Square; St. James's; St. Martin's in the Fields; St. Mary le Strand; exclusive of the Duchy of Lancaster; and St. Paul's, Covent Garden, besides the extra-parochial liberties of the close of the collegiate church of St. Peter, and the verge of the palaces of St. James's and Whitehall, with Privy Gardens. In the parish of St. James's many houses were demolished upon the building of Regent-street, as well as many houses in Whitcombe-street, Cockspur-street, and the whole of Suffolk-street, in the parish of St. Martin in the Fields.

St. Margaret's Church is situated a small distance from the northern door of the Abbey; it was rebuilt in the reign of Edward I., by the parishioners and merchants of the Staple, excepting the chancel, which was erected at the charge of the Abbot of Westminster. The tower was cased and the whole church repaired in 1735, at the expense of the nation, on account of its being the church where the House of Commons attend divine service on stated days, when the Peers at the same time go to the Abbey Church. In 1758 it was again repaired, when the porch at the west end was erected. The eastern window of this church, the crucifixion, was made by order of the magistrates of Dort, in Holland, and was designed by them as a present to King Henry VII. for his new chapel at Westminster, but the King dying before its completion, it passed into other hands; the time stated to have been occupied in executing it, was five years; the window also contains portraits of King Henry and his Queen, who are kneeling at their devotion, and above them are figures of St. George and St. Katherine, their patron saints, the portraits were copied from pictures sent over to Holland for that purpose. The church is 130 feet in length by 65 feet in breadth, the altitude of the tower to the top of the pinnacles, is 85 feet. It is a rectory in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Westminster.

The parochial Church of St. John the Evangelist, stands southward from Westminster Abbey. It was commenced in 1721, and completed in 1728, by Archer, when the parish was taken out of that of St. Margaret. It is a rectory in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Westminster. Beyond this church is the ancient Horse Ferry, between this City and Lambeth, which was suppressed on the building of Westminster Bridge, and a sum of £3,000. settled on the Archbishop of Canterbury, the proprietor of the Ferry, in lieu of the profit arising from it.

The liberty of the City of Westminster extends to Temple Bar, on the outside of which begins the liberty of the Duchy of Lancaster, granted to Peter de Savoy, Earl of Richmond, uncle to Queen Eleanor, wife of King Henry III., from whom it passed to the House of Lancaster. It was specified in the grant to consist of all those houses upon the Thames, which sometime pertained to Brian de Lisle, without the walls of the City of London, in the way or street called the Strand. The extent of this liberty includes all the buildings between the southern side of the Strand and the Thames, from Temple Bar to the eastern side of Cecil-street. Anciently this spot was occupied by the houses of the chief nobility, the names of which are still preserved in the streets built on their site, and on the gardens belonging to them: hence Essex-street, Devereux-court, Arundel-street, Norfolk-street, Howard-street, Surrey-street, Burleigh-street, Exeter-street, Craven-buildings, Drury-lane, &c.

On the northern side of the Strand near Temple Bar, is the parish church of St. Clement Danes, rebuilt in 1682 by Sir Christopher Wren. It is a rectory in the patronage of the Earl of Exeter. About 1793, Butcher-row was taken down and Pickett-street built, and the street on the southern side of St. Clement's Church, was widened at the same time. Opposite to the end of Drury-lane stands the church of St. Mary le Strand, rebuilt in 1714, by Gibbs; being the very first of the fifty new churches. It is a rectory in the patronage of the Bishop of Winchester.

Opposite to this church was Somerset House, erected by the Duke of Somerset, Protector of England, in 1549, the Duke being soon afterwards attainted by Parliament, it came into the possession of the crown. In this palace Anne of Denmark, Queen of James I., kept her court, whence it was called Denmark House during that reign. It was afterwards the residence of Katherine of Braganza, Queen Dowager of Charles II., and by an act passed in the 2nd year of the reign of George III. it was settled upon his Queen, but was exchanged for Buckingham House; when an act of Parliament was obtained for embanking the River Thames before Somerset House, and for building on on the ground various public offices; these occupy a space 500 feet in depth and nearly 800 feet in width, and include a court 340 feet by 210 feet, the whole erected after designs by Sir William Chambers; the length of the front towards the Strand is 135 feet, which is chiefly occupied by the Royal Society, the Society of Antiquaries, and the Royal Academy. In front of the entrance is a statue of King George III. in bronze, by Bacon.

Westward of Somerset House, the site of the ancient Savoy Palace is occupied by Wellington-street, the approach to Waterloo Bridge, whence a new street is in progress northward towards the British Museum.

The ancient chapel called St. Mary le Savoy, was repaired in 1721, at the expense of the King; it is extra-parochial, and contains many ancient monuments.

The parish of St. Paul, Covent Garden, was taken out of that of St. Martin in the Fields, its site was anciently a large garden belonging to the Abbot and Convent of Westminster, whence its present appellation. It was granted in 1552, to John Earl of Bedford, together with a field on the northern side, denominated the seven acres, which from its length was commonly called the Long acres. The Earl of Bedford built a house for his own residence on the side of the Strand, where Southampton-street is at present situated, with a garden behind it, under the northern wall of which the market was originally held.

In 1704, when Southampton and Tavistock-streets and Maiden-lane, were erected on the site of Bedford-house and garden, the market was removed into the square designed by Inigo Jones. The church situated on the western side of this square, was erected about 1638, from designs by the same architect, and dedicated to St. Paul; after the restoration it was constituted an independent parish, and the patronage of the rectory is vested in the Duke of Bedford, who nominates a churchwarden, the rector nominates another, and the parishioners elect a third; the election for members to serve in parliament for the City of Westminster, is held on hustings erected for the purpose in front of this church.

The parish of St. Anne's, Soho, was separated from that of St. Martin in the Fields, by act of Parliament in 1661, but the church was not built till 1675. It is a rectory in the patronage of the Bishop of London. Behind the garden of Leicester House, where Lisle-street now is, was a military ground, established by Henry, Prince of Wales, son of King James I.; farther north was Gerard House, the residence of Charles Gerard, Earl of Macclesfield in the reign of Charles II. Soho or King's-square was originally called Monmouth square, and the mansion of the Duke stood on the southern side of it. Its present name is derived from the watchword at the battle of Sedgemoor. In the centre of this square is a statue of King Charles II.

The parish church of St. James's is situated on the southern side of Piccadilly. It was erected by Henry Jermyn, Earl of St. Alban's, in 1684, and was, it is said, dedicated to St. James, in compliment to the Duke of York; the next year it was made a distinct parish, and separated from St. Martin in the Fields. It is a rectory in the patronage of the Bishop of London; the font in this church was sculptured by Gibbons. Piccadilly, in which the church is situated, appears to have taken its name from a gaming house, called Pick a dilly, and described in 1640, as a fair house for entertainment and gaming, with handsome gravel walks with shade, and where were an upper and lower bowling green, whither many of the nobility and gentry of the best quality resorted, both for exercise and conversation. the street was completed in 1642, as far as Berkeley-street. Burlington House, when erected, was considered to be quite out of the town. Devonshire House is built on the site of the mansion of the Berkeley's; and opposite St. James's Church is Albany, erected on the gardens of Melbourne House, once the residence of the late Duke of York. Northward is Uxbridge House, the mansion of the Marquess of Anglesey. Westward of St. James's parish is that of St. George's, Hanover-square, the church of which stands in Great George-street; it was erected in 1724, and is a rectory in the patronage of the Bishop of London. Westward from Hanover-square, named after the present royal family, and adorned by a statue of William Pitt, by Chantrey, is Grosvenor-square, named after Sir Thomas Grosvenor, the owner of the estate; it is adorned by a statue of King George I. in the centre. In Conduit-street, which terminates the southern end of Great George-street, is Trinity Chapel, erected in 1716; from the western end of Conduit-street is Bruton-street, leading into Berkeley-square, named from its vicinity to the mansion of Lord Berkeley of Stratton; the whole of its southern side is occupied by the residence of the Marquess of Lansdowne, lord president of the council, &c. Westward of Berkeley-square is May-fair, on the northern side of which is Chesterfield House, the residence of the Earl of Chesterfield, erected in 1750, after which Stanhope-street was built.

The parish of St. Martin in the Fields, is named from the dedication of the parish church, and its original situation in the fields. A small church was built here at the expence of King Henry VIII., which was enlarged in 1607, at the charge of Prince Henry and some of the nobility. The whole was taken down in 1721, and the present building was completed in 1726; it is a noble structure of the Corinthian order, by Gibbs: the beauties of this church were entirely concealed by the near approximation of the houses in St. Martin's-lane, till they were removed in 1826, to make room for Trafalgar-square. It is a vicarage in the patronage of the Bishop of London. At the south western corner of the Strand, opposite Trafalgar-square, is Northumberland House, erected by Henry Howard, Earl of Northampton, in the reign of James I. About 1642, it came into the possession of Algernon, Earl of Northumberland, from which time it has borne its present name. The front towards the street was rebuilt by Algernon, Duke of Somerset, in 1748. At the western end of the Strand is Charing Cross, where King Edward I. caused a monumental cross to be erected for his Queen Eleanor, which was destroyed by the populace in the reign of Charles I. After the Restoration an equestrian statue of King Charles was erected on the spot where the cross formerly stood. The statue of bronze was cast in 1633, by Le Sueur; it is most beautifully executed, and may certainly vie with the most celebrated equestrian statues of antiquity, the modern it far surpasses; the pedestal on which it stands is finely elevated, and is not less admirable for its sculpture by Gibbons. Northward of Charing Cross is Trafalgar-square, on the site of the King's Mews, the building erected by King George II. in 1732, is now, 1833, about to be removed, when a National Gallery, for the reception of works of art, will be erected on the spot.

ANCIENT PALACE AND HOUSES OF PARLIAMENT.

Eastward of Westminster Abbey, and extending to the River Thames, is the site of the ancient Palace of Westminster, founded by King Edward the Confessor, now called New and Old Palace Yards; many parts of this palace still exist, converted to other uses. The Great Hall rebuilt by King Richard II. in 1397, was called the New Palace, to distinguish it from the Old Palace, where the Houses of Lords and Commons now assemble.

Westminster Hall, considered to be the largest room in Europe unsupported by pillars, is 270 feet in length and 74 feet in breadth. It was the great dining room of the royal palace, and King Richard II. on its completion in 1399, solemnized Christmas by a feast held in it with characteristic profusion; it is stated that the King and his guests sat down every day to the number of 10,000. Excepting the northern end, which being the principal front, is adorned with a porch and a number of tabernacles for statues, Westminster Hall presents but little architectural enrichment externally. Its deep roof has been stripped of its lead covering and mean looking slates substituted, but it has still an air of grandeur inseparable from such vast dimensions. The interior however makes ample amends for any external want of elegance; the roof delights the scientific spectator with the intricate and skilful arrangement of its timbers, in which lightness, strength and ornament are combined in the happiest manner. It is pleasing to reflect that the whole structure reposes in perfect security, after more than four centuries after its first erection. Figures of angels form the most striking decoration of the roof; they have a bold and fine effect, whether looked up to or viewed in a range perspective. Each holds a large shield, charged with the arms of France and England quarterly, as borne by the royal founder. The stone corbels, from which the timber arches spring, are sculptured with the arms attributed to King Edward the Confessor, supported by two harts. King Richard II. assumed these arms, and sometimes bore them impaled with the abovementioned, in veneration of his sainted predecessor.

Parliaments have frequently sat in this Hall, and here was held the ancient Court of Justice, in which the King presided. The Court of Exchequer and the three great Courts of Chancery, King's Bench and Common Pleas, are still held in rooms adjoining, the entrances to which are in this hall.

In Westminster Hall the Kings of England have constantly held their coronation feasts, it is also generally used for the trials of Peers accused of high treason, or other crimes against the state, and it was in this Hall that King Charles I. was tried.

Southward of Westminster Hall was part of the Old Palace used for the meeting of the House of Lords, but since the union of Great Britain and Ireland, the Court of Requests has been used for the purpose, the tapestry hangings of the former House of Lords having been removed hither.

The present House of Lords does not occupy the whole of the Court of Requests, part of the northern end being formed into a lobby, by which the Commons pass to the House of Peers. The old tapestry with which the room is hung, represents the defeat of the Spanish Armada in 1588, the design was made by Cornelius Vroom, and the tapestry was executed by Francis Spiering, for the Earl of Nottingham, Lord High Admiral and Commanded in Chief in the engagement. King James I. purchased it, but it was not put up till the year 1650, during the period of the Commonwealth, when the apartment in which it formerly hung, was used as a committee room by the House of Commons.

The King's Throne was erected for George IVth. Adjoining to the House of Lords, is the Princes Chamber or King's robing room. A new entrance for his Majesty to the House was erected in 1826, from designs by Sir John Soane.

St. Stephen's Chapel, south westward of Westminster Hall, was erected in the reign of Edward III.; the whole edifice appears from its remaining parts, to have been a splendid example of the architecture of the fourteenth century. After the Reformation this royal establishment was granted by King Edward VI. to the Commons of England for their sessions, and to that purpose it has ever since been appropriated. Various alterations have been made in the interior of this edifice at different periods. On removing the panelling previously to its enlargement on the Union with Ireland in 1800, it was discovered that the walls had been richly decorated with arcades, &c., the effect of which was heightened by a profusion of figures and ornaments, painted and gilt. In the crypt beneath the Old House of Lords is the cellar, in which the conspirators of 1605, lodged the gunpowder designed to annihilate the estates of the realm.

PALACES AND PARKS.

York Place, the residence of the Archbishop of York, which had been rebuilt by Cardinal Wolsey, was seized by King Henry VIII. in 1529, when the Cardinal incurred a premunire, by which all his estates were forfeited. The King was no sooner possessed of this palace than he named it Whitehall, and enclosed the park for the use of this and the palace of St. James's. It became the residence of the Kings of England, and so continued till the year 1697, when by an accidental fire it was nearly destroyed, excepting the Banqueting house, which had been erected by King James I. in 1619, after a design by Inigo Jones, and was part of a plan for the rebuilding of the whole palace. The ceiling of this magnificent room was painted by Rubens, and represents the apotheosis of James I. On the morning of the execution of King Charles I., he was conducted hither from St. James's Palace, and after passing a short time in his bed room, went through a breach in the wall at the northern end of the room, upon the scaffold; the passage still remains, and is the entrance to a small additional building. In the Court behind the Banqueting house, is an excellent statue in bronze of King James II. by Gilbons. This last remain of the palace has been converted to a Military Chapel, where are now deposited the French eagles captured at Salamanca in 1812.

The palace of Whitehall lay in ruins for many years, the site of it is now, together with a great part of the Privy Gardens, covered by houses of noblemen and gentlemen, amongst which Fife House, the residence of the Earl of Harrington and that of the Duke of Buccleuch, are the most conspicuous.

Richmond terrace was built in 1826, on the site of the residence of the Dukes of Richmond.

Opposite to Whitehall Chapel is the Tilt-yard and the Horse Guards, where the King's guard of horse is stationed; it was rebuilt in 1754. In the centre of the building is an arched entrance to St. James's Park, and the Parade where the reliefs for the different guards about the Palace are inspected every morning. At the southern end of the parade is the Treasury, beneath which is an arched passage leading to Downing-street; beyond this is another entrance to the park, called Storey's gate; near it formerly stood a storehouse for ordnance, whence the corruption.

St. James's Park, nearly a mile and a half in circumference, was originally enclosed by King Henry VIII., who laid it out in walks, and collected the waters together, it having been marshy ground. After the restoration, when King Charles II. came to reside at Whitehall, his majesty sent for Andrew Le Notre, comptroller of the royal edifices of France, to give a new disposition to St. James's and Greenwich Parks, he formed the Mall and made the canal, which was then 2800 feet long and 100 feet broad. The Mall on the northern side is a vista, nearly half a mile in length, which derived its name from the game of Pale Maille, a kind of an antique cricket, played with a mallet in a hollow smooth walk, enclosed on each side by a border of wood, and having an iron hoop at one end. King Charles II.'s usual exercise was a brisk four hours walk up and down the Mall. The park was at this time stored with several sorts of ordinary and extraordinary wild fowl, breeding about the decoy which had been formed by the King, with withy pots a little above the surface of the water for the fowls to lay in, there were also deer of several kinds, as red deer, roe bucks, stags, and an elk; Lords Castlehaven and Arran, alone, run down and killed a buck in the park before the King for a wager in 1664, and in 1657 there was a wrestling match between the western and northern men, in which the western men won, held before his Majesty in St. James's Park for £1000.

The Boccage, or avenue, on the southern side of the Park, was by corruption called the Bird Cage walk. The public were allowed the privilege of walking in it, and King William III. in 1699, granted permission to make a passage into the Park from Spring Gardens.

In the year 1827, great alterations were made in St. James's Park, and an entire new disposition given to the enclosure, by numerous plantations; the Ha ha fence which formerly surrounded it, was removed and palisades were erected, with several gates of entrance for the accommodation of the public, who before this were excluded. The water, by extension on one bank and contraction on the other, was made to assume a sinuous form, and at the end towards the parade, is expanded into an ample lake; the tasteful promenades in the interior of the enclosure, have rendered this spot one of the most attractive in the metropolis; a new road has been opened from Great George-street along the Bird Cage Walk, with a very handsome lodge and gateway, opening upon James's-street, Pimlico; on the other side of the road are spacious Barracks lately erected for the foot guards. On the opposite side of the park Carlton House has been pulled down, and on the site of the gardens of that ancient seat of royalty, is built a Terrace of surpassing magnificence, consisting of two uniform ranges of buildings, divided in the centre by the termination of Waterloo-place, where a column is erected to the memory of the Duke of York. The column, designed by Benj. Wyatt, was founded in May, 1830, the height is 124 feet, and is intended to be surmounted by a statue of the Duke, by Westmacott, 14 feet high, when the total height will be, from the top of the steps to the top of the figure 138 feet, and from the bottom of the steps or level of the park, 156 feet; the masonry was executed by Nowell of Pimlico.

ST. JAMES'S PALACE.

This Palace is built on the site of a hospital, dedicated to St. James, the custody of which was granted by King Henry VI. to Eton College, by whom in 1531, it was surrendered to King Henry VIII., who entirely demolished the old building and erected the present edifice, which from its original dedication was called St. James's manor house. In this Palace the Court has been kept ever since Whitehall was destroyed by fire in the year 1697; so many alterations have been at various times made in the buildings, that but little trace of the magnificent style of architecture, characteristic of the Tudor period, remains. On the front towards St. James's-street is a Gate-House, but the windows have been altered, and the mouldings so pared down and levelled with the surface of the walls, that it scarcely can be referred to as an example of the original edifice, which is said to have been designed by Holbein. The Gate-House opens upon a small square court, called the Flag-yard, where some specimens of the Tudor architecture are yet to be seen; on the western side of this court is the Chapel Royal, for the use of the Royal family and the household of the King, in which choral service is performed, this has been preserved nearly in its original state, and the architectural style may be seen from the Ambassador's Court, on which side the building has been little deteriorated. Notwithstanding the irregular appearance of the exterior of St. James's Palace, the state rooms are acknowledged to be the most commodious for holding a court of any in Europe. There are two public entrances, the ministers of state and foreign ambassadors, and others having the privilege of entree, approach by the hall in the Ambassador's Court on the western side of the palace. The public in general approach by an entrance from the Chapel Court on the eastern side. In this court is the Queen's Chapel, distinct from the Chapel Royal, and where the service is at present performed in German.

Persons having the entree, proceed through the picture gallery to the waiting room. In this gallery are whole length portraits of the sovereigns of England, from the time of Henry VIII. to that of James II. The public entry from the opposite side of the palace, is by a corridor leading to the grand staircase, which opens to the guard chamber and presence chamber, adjoining which last is the waiting room, this room with the ante room and throne room, complete the suite of state apartments, excepting the King's closet, which is behind the throne room; besides these in another part of the palace, is the Banqueting room, a very splendid apartment. In the reign of George III., the Palace was more extensive, and contained private apartments for the use of the royal family, but in January, 1809, great part of it was consumed by a fire, which broke out in the south eastern angle of the palace, by this event the King's and Queen's private apartments, and those of the Duke of Cambridge, were destroyed, and have never been rebuilt. In 1822 a general restoration of the palace was made, by command of King George IV.; previously to the alteration then contemplated, the old bed chamber at the eastern end of the south front, in which James Francis Edward, called the Pretender, was born, was pulled down. Eastward of St. James's Palace is Marlborough House, built on part of the royal gardens in the reign of Queen Anne, it is at present tenanted by Leopold, King of the Belgians.

On the western side of the Palace are the apartments of his Royal Highness the Duke of Cumberland. Beyond these and adjoining the Green Park is the stable yard, in which are the Queen's house and the residence of the Princess Augusta; here also was the residence of the late Duke of York, by whom the mansion was rebuilt in a magnificent style, after designs by Benj. Wyatt. His royal highness dying before it was entirely completed, it became the property of the Marquess of Stafford, K. G., by whom it was finished for his town residence; his arms are sculptured on the tympan of the portico, on the north front. The Marquess was created Duke of Sutherland a short time before his decease in 1833, and it now belongs to his eldest son, the present Duke of Sutherland.

THE NEW PALACE IN ST. JAMES'S PARK.

The situation of this Palace at the western end of St. James's Park, fronting the Mall, is not without its advantages, it commands a pleasing view of the public gardens in the centre of the Park, the ornamental lake, and well decorated plantations, bounded by the noble range of buildings fronting the parade towards Whitehall; on the garden front is a spacious terrace, whence is a view of beautiful scenery, the grounds presenting a diversified surface, being laid out with very great taste, and having an appearance of extent much greater than in reality the gardens contain.

The first edifice on this spot was known by the name of Arlington House, which being purchased by John Sheffield, Duke of Buckinghamshire, who rebuilt it in 1703, it was called Buckingham House, till the year 1762, when it was purchased by King George III. and having been settled on Queen Charlotte in 1775, in lieu of Somerset House, it obtained the name of the Queen's Palace. The whole was taken down in the year 1825, when the present noble edifice was commenced by his Majesty George IVth., from designs by Nash. In front of the Palace is a marble arch, intended to be surmounted by an equestrian statue of the founder, 18 feet high. The court immediately in front will be enclosed by a dwarf wall and iron palisades, but the front of the wings and the great extent of the palace on each side will be entirely laid open to the Park. Since the accession of his present Majesty, great alterations have been made from the original plan, and the works have been carried on from the designs and under the entire direction of Blore, the architect of Lambeth Palace. The extent of the principal rooms en suite is about 380 feet, but the extreme length of the front of the Palace towards St. James's Park, will exceed 520 feet; beyond the northern wing will be carried a Doric screen, or facade, enclosing the Queen's apartments, which are on this side the Palace, and on the southern side a similar screen will mask the offices and guard house. The grand portico, of the Doric order, under which carriages set down, opens upon a Hall entirely of marble, the capitals of the Corinthian columns only excepted, which are composed of mosaic gold; on the garden front, upon the ground floor, is a very handsome and spacious suite of rooms, devoted to a library, opening upon the terrace; a corridor between the library and hall, is intended for a statue gallery. Turning to the left, at the southern end of the hall, is the grand staircase; the balustrade of the steps is formed of mosaic gold, of a remarkably tasteful design.

A small guard chamber at the head of the stairs, opens upon an ante room of noble dimensions, beyond which is the magnificent Throne Room. The frieze in the last is sculptured with a series of subjects, representing the wars of the rival houses of York and Lancaster, and the union of the crowns at the marriage of King Henry VII., who held the title of Duke of Lancaster, with Elizabeth of York, the heiress of the rival house. The pilasters, of the Corinthian order of architecture, are of scagliola, and the rooms are hung with the richest silks of English manufacture.

In the centre of the Palace is the Picture Gallery, 160 feet long, lighted from the apertures of the roof, which is curiously constructed and highly enriched with ornament; the chimney pieces and doorways of this room are sculptured with emblematical subjects relative to painting.

On the garden front are three beautiful drawing rooms en suite, a state bed room and a dressing room; the Queen's apartments occupy the northern wing, near which is a flower garden; and the southern wing is destined for the apartments of the Lord Steward, and officers immediately concerned in the regulation of the royal household. At the southern end is also the State Dining Room, a very noble apartment, and near it is the armoury, occupying the precise spot where the valuable library of George III. was deposited, and which was so generously presented by his late Majesty to the public. The building is at present, 1833, nearly completed, under the superintendence of Mr Hogg, resident clerk of the works. The architect, Mr. Blore, had an exceedingly difficult task to perform, when, at the desire of his present Majesty, he undertook the completion of the Palace at the sum allowed by parliament; his alterations have given such complete satisfaction, and have been made with so much judgment, as to increase the high reputation he had already obtained. Confining himself in some degree to the designs, executed by Mr. Nash, with regard to the enrichments and the general disposition of the state rooms, Mr. Blore has contrived to admit light and air, both of which were much wanted in the original palace, and has at the same time considerably improved the habitable parts, by adding the convenient requisites for a much larger establishment than was at first contemplated.

THE GREEN PARK AND HYDE PARK.

On the northwestern side of the New Palace in St. James's Park, is the Green Park, extending hence to Piccadilly, from which it is separated by iron palisades. At the top of the drive called Constitution Hill, is a magnificent entrance arch of the Corinthian order of architecture, erected from designs by Decimus Burton, in 1826, by command of his Majesty George IV., which is one of the most distinguished ornaments of the metropolis. The inequalities of ground within the limits of the park, produce great variation in the scenery, and the Ranger's lodge fronting towards Piccadilly, with its garden, forms a very picturesque object. The basin or canal on the northern side was considerably deepened, and improved by a light iron fence erected round it, in 1828. Hence, on the eastern side of the park, is a broad promenade called the Queen's walk, bordered by a line of mansions belonging to the nobility and gentry, the most distinguished of which is the residence of Earl Spencer, K. G., erected from designs by Vardy, in the reign of George II.; on this side is also the western front of Bridgewater House, the residence of Lord Francis Leveson Gower, built from designs by Tatham; here the last Duke of Bridgewater's extensive and valuable collection of pictures are deposited in a suite of rooms, the extreme length of which is 215 feet. Stafford House is the most conspicuous, and last, in this range of noblemen's houses, all of which have gardens attached to them.

The opportunities of recreation the park affords to persons of all classes, may be reasonably supposed to conduce to the health of the inhabitants of the metropolis, the salubrity of which is a subject of equal satisfaction and astonishment.

Hyde Park is another royal demesne at the western extremity of the metropolis, extending between the great western road on its southern side and the road to Oxford on its northern, to Kensington Gardens and Palace, described in page 62 ante. This Park is part of the manor of Hida, which formerly belonged to the Abbot and Convent of Westminster, but became the property of the Crown by exchange, in the reign of Henry VIII. Its actual extent is 394 acres, 2 roods, and 38 poles, and within this space by judicious attention, the scenery has been made very pleasing, the natural beauties being heightened by numerous plantations and by a sheet of water, named the Serpentine River, which was formed by Queen Caroline about the year 1730, by enlarging the channel of a small stream, which running northward from Bayswater in the Oxford-road, passes through Kensington Gardens and Hyde Park to Knightsbridge, and falls into the Thames below Chelsea Hospital. Lodges for the deputy ranger of the park and keepers, are situated on the northern bank of the river, one, a half timbered edifice, is of considerable antiquity, and was known by the name of The Cake House in the beginning of the last century; near it is a very tasteful boat house, in the same style of architecture; a beautiful drive has been made on the banks of this stream, and a very elegant bridge erected over the Serpentine, at the point where the deer Park adjoins Kensington Gardens; the bridge was designed and executed by Rennie, and consists of five elliptical arches. The roadway of the bridge is perfectly level.

On the southern side of the Park are barracks for the life guards, and here also is a carriage road to Kensington Palace, and a fine ride called Routine or Rotten-row, frequented in season by the whole world of fashion. Park-lane on the eastern side of Hyde Park, contains many very handsome buildings, the most conspicuous of which is the residence of the Marquess Conyngham, built originally for Earl Dudley; here are also Holderness House, the residence of the Marquess of Londonderry; Grosvenor House of the Marquess of Westminster; the Duke of Argyll's and Marquess of Bredalbane's. All the principal entrances to Hyde Park are on the eastern side, Cumberland gate from Oxford-street, Grosvenor gate from upper Grosvenor-street, Stanhope gate from Stanhope-street, and the grand entrance from Piccadilly, all of which were designed by Decimus Burton; the last is composed of three arches, and connecting colonnades of the Ionic order of architecture. The attic of the centre arch is sculptured with a triumphant equestrian procession, in the Athenian style, by Henning, executed in basso relievo; adjoining this noble entrance to Hyde Park, is Apsley House, the town residence of the Duke of Wellington, K. G. It is of the Corinthian order, and was nearly rebuilt in 1823, from designs by Benj. Watt. On a rising ground in the Park; nearly opposite the centre arch of entrance is a colossal bronze statue of Achilles, copied from a figure on Monte Cavallo at Rome, by Westmacott, and placed on its massive granite pedestal here in 1822, by command of his Majesty George IV. It is consecrated by their countrywomen to Arthur Duke of Wellington and his brave companions in arms, and was cast from cannon taken in the victories of Salamanca, Vittoria, Thoulouse, and Waterloo.

REGENT'S PARK, MARY LE BONE.

This Park is part of the Manor of Tyburn, which derived its name from a stream rising near Hampstead, that passes through the Regent's Park, and by a subterranean channel, crosses Oxford-street near Stratford-place. It afterwards runs across Piccadilly.

through St. James's Park and Tothill Fields, and falls into the Thames at King's Scholars Pond, Westminster. It was formerly the property of the Crown under the name of Marybone Park, but was disparked before the Restoration, and let on leases, which had expired previously to the improvements projected in this part of the metropolis. The estate contained 543 acres 17 perches, about two thirds of which is situated in the parish of St. Mary le Bone, and the rest in that of St. Pancras. It extends along the New-road on the northern side of London from Great Portland-street on the east, to Harley-street on the west. The Commissioners of Woods and Forests commenced this extensive, and, to the public, very beneficial alteration and improvement, about the year 1812, upon a plan submitted to his late Majesty by Nash, the celebrated architect, by whom it was completed in about ten years, and is in every respect worthy of the nation and the metropolis.

One of the principal entrances to this park is York gate, opposite Marybone Church, where the drive is carried round the park by way of York-terrace and Cornwall-terrace, noble ranges of building at the eastern end of which is an entrance from Baker-street, and continuing the drive, the houses next in succession are those of Clarence-place, Sussex-place, and Hanover-terrace; at the northern end of the last is Hanover gate, an entrance to the park from the south bank of the Regent's canal. The canal, from this point, forms the northern boundary of the park, which here presents a perfectly rural scene, interspersed with gentlemen's seats: Albany cottage, Hanover lodge, Grove house, and the Marquess of Hertford's villa, are situated between the last named terrace and Macclesfield bridge over the Regent's canal, where is an entrance to the park from Primrose-hill road by Macclesfield gate. The grounds of the park descend a precipitous bank to the canal, which here flows in a deep valley, planted on either side to the summit of the bank. For some distance on this northern side, the park is occupied by the Zoological Society's Gardens, extending even to the opposite bank of the Regent's canal.

The Zoological Society was instituted in 1826, under the auspices of Sir T. Stamford Raffles, Sir Humphrey Davy, Bart., and other eminent persons, for the advancement of Zoology, and the introduction and exhibition of subjects of the animal kingdom alive, or in a state of preservation. The society consists of a president, Lord Stanley; a council and fellows, elected by ballot.

Besides a Museum in Bruton-street, and the Gardens in the Regent's Park, the Society have a farm at Kingston Hill in Surrey, under the superintendence of a committee of the most active members of the council. The gardens in the Regent's park, occupying about twenty acres of ground, prove highly attractive to the public, both on account of their arrangement, and for the number and variety of the living animals which have been constantly kept here. Amongst the number of animals exhibited, are many of extreme rarity, and several of which have never before been exhibited in Europe. One of the most important and gratifying of the gratuitous acquisitions of this society, is the donation by his Majesty William IVth., of all the animals belonging to the Crown, formerly maintained at the Tower of London; amongst the birds an important point in domestication appears to have been gained, in the fact of the American summer ducks, Anas sponsa, and the Chinese Mandarin duck, having bred freely in the gardens, and with their progeny having borne our climate without artificial care during the winter seasons. The Reeves' Pheasant has also been exhibited during the winter in full health and splendid plumage. Hopes are entertained of the society's being able to naturalize many of the valuable birds of India, more particularly those of the mountainous districts, as the splendid pheasants of the Himalayan mountains, &c. The society are in possession of a collection of 120 specimens of birds from these mountains of Imaus, presented by Mr. Gould, which formed the basis of his work on the ornithology of that country, and includes several of the most magnificent, as well as the rarest, species ever brought to Europe. Within the gardens, the walks, grass plots and borders, are placed in the best order, the requisite buildings being erected with very great taste; opposite the entrance lodges is a carriage sweep of 200 feet in diameter, with a curious turnstile for the egress of visitors from the northern garden. In this garden is a paddock enclosed with iron palisades, including a pond for the elephant. Eastward of the south garden have lately been formed three ponds, the larger one including several islands, and a mound has been raised, and planted along the eastern boundary of the gardens. The Zoological Society, it appears, has rapidly advanced towards the attainment of the most important objects for which it was established: the number of fellows is at present no less than 2321, and there is also a continual increase in the number of valuable correspondents in all parts of the world: a decided mark of its progressive prosperity.

Beyond the gardens is Gloucester gate, an entrance to the Regent's Park from Park Village and Camden Town. Gloucester-terrace is situated on the eastern side of the Park, and the next buildings in succession, upon this side, are St. Katherine's Chapel and Hospital buildings. The Chapel in the centre of the eastern side of the quadrangle, is erected in the pointed style of architecture which prevailed at the commencement of the fifteenth century, from designs by Poynster; the interior is very beautiful, all the remarkable ancient monuments having been removed from the old Chapel, as well as the curiously carved pulpit; here are also the arms of all the Queen Consorts of England, patronesses of the hospital, from the time of the foundation, and over the altar a very fine armorial eastern window, painted by Willement, quite in harmony with the architectural design of the building; a chapter house and school are attached to the sides of the Chapel, which is connected with the houses of the brothers and sisters of the establishment by an arcade. The houses are built in the old English domestic style of the sixteenth century, of brick with stone dressings: the windows in the ends of the structure, the pointed gables, and the ornamental chimney shafts, give an extremely picturesque effect to the collegiate buildings. Two armorial compartments, surmounted by weather cornices, are sculptured on the ends of the houses towards the Park; that on the north is the arms of King Henry IIIrd's. Queen, Eleanor of Provence, founder of the Hospital, the other on the south is the arms of King George IV., in whose reign the hospital was removed and built in this park. The antique character given to the armorial bearings and enrichment, is highly creditable to the architect. On the opposite side of the road is the residence of the master of the Hospital, Sir Herbert Taylor; the style of architecture is the same as the houses of the brothers and sisters, but the enrichments are more lavishly applied, the entrance porch being surmounted by a pierced parapet, above which is an oriel window; on each side the entrance are bay windows, and the whole is finished by ornamental gables and chimney shafts, in the Tudor style.

Cumberland-terrace is the next range of buildings on the eastern side of the Park; Chester-terrace and Cambridge-terrace succeed, and near the south-eastern angle of the Park, is the Colosseum, a singular building, erected from designs by Decimus Burton. It comprises a polygon of sixteen sides, 130 feet in diameter, each angle being strengthened by double antæ of the Doric order, which support an entablature that circumscribes the edifice; the cornice is surmounted by an attic to give height to the building, and on the summit is a magnificent cupola. The portico of the Grecian Doric order, is one of the finest and best proportioned in the metropolis; the lodges also are in good taste. St. Andrew's-place continues the line of building to Park-square, in the centre of the eastern side of this square is the Diorama, a very curious exhibition, constructed from the designs and under the direction of Pugin. Beyond Park-square the southern side of Regent's Park is bounded by similar magnificent ranges of buildings, under the name of Ulster-terrace, and another portion of York-terrace, on the eastern side of the grand entrance at York Gate.

The ground occupied by the Regent's Park is about 450 acres, the plantations are very numerous and tastefully disposed, and the water is extensive, sometimes appearing as a narrow stream overshadowed by trees, and at others like a lake, with swans on its surface. The villas in the interior of the grounds are planted out from the view of each other, where the grounds nearly adjoin; South Villa and the Holme, with the villa built by Mr. Maberley, are the chief. In the very centre of the park, is a circular plantation of about a mile in circumference, chiefly occupied by Jenkins's nursery, where a fancy fair, in support of charitable institutions, has frequently been held.

THE BOROUGH OF MARY LE BONE.

This Borough, which returns two members to Parliament, according to the Reform Bill of 1832, consists of the several parishes of St. Mary le Bone, St. Pancras, and Paddington. Mary le Bone, now an important division of the metropolis, may be described as bounded by Hampstead on the north, the parishes of St. Giles's in the Fields and St. Pancras on the east, by the City of Westminster on the south, and by Paddington on the West. It is above eight miles in circumference, and is computed to contain 2500 acres of ground. The improvements of the metropolis in this district, has been more rapid and of greater extent than in any other quarter. In the year 1715, the plan for building Cavendish-square was first suggested, and the ground was laid out about two years afterwards. The whole of the northern side was intended to be occupied by a town residence of the Duke of Chandos, of which the wings only were built. In the space between these mansions, were erected two edifices of the Corinthian order of architecture, designed by James of Greenwich. Harcourt House on the western side, now the residence of the Duke of Portland, had been previously built from designs by Inigo Jones; but it was several years before this square was entirely finished. In 1770 an equestrian statue of William, Duke of Cumberland, was erected in the centre of the plantation. Oxford Chapel in Vere-street was erected in 1724, from designs by Gibbs; and Oxford Market in the same neighbourhood, was opened in 1732. The houses on the northern side of Tyburn-road were completed in 1729, and it was then first called Oxford-street; many other streets in this quarter deriving their names from the noble families of Cavendish, Holles, Vere, Harley, and Ogle, were laid out about the same time, on the estate of their representative, the Duke of Portland.

One of the first improvements westward of Cavendish-square, was the erection of Portman-square, the northern side of which was commenced in 1764, but it was nearly twenty years before the square was completed; at the north-western corner is Montagu House. In the year 1770, a continuation of Harley-street and Mansfield-street was begun, and soon afterwards Portland-place, 125 feet in width was erected, from designs by Robert Adam, extending from Foley House to Marybone Park. The site of Foley House is now occupied by Langham-place, and by a sweep round Sir James Langham's house to Regent-street; and the northern extremity of Portland-place is terminated by Park-crescent, erected about 1820, and its semicircular plantation, in front of which is a bronze colossal statue of the Duke of Kent, by Gahaghan.

Stafford-place was built about the year 1774, on the estate of the Earl of Aldborough, at its northern extremity, in the centre of the space before the mansion of the Earl, was formerly a column, surmounted by a statue of King George III. now removed. Cumberland-place was commenced about 1775, but the buildings received a check for about ten years, from which time till the year 1792, they increased with rapidity, when all the Duke of Portland's property in Mary le bone was let on building leases. Manchester-square, began in 1776, by the erection of a mansion for the Duke of Manchester, now occupied by the Marchioness of Hertford, was not completed till 1788.

The Old Parish Church of St. Mary le bone in High-street, was built in 1741, but a new church having been erected, it is now a parochial Chapel of Ease belonging to the parish.

Four other Churches have been erected under an act of Parliament, passed during the regency of George IVth.

St. Mary le bone Church in the New-road, opposite York Gate, Regent's Park, was erected between the years 1813 and 1818, by Hardwicke. It is of the Corinthian order of architecture, and the northern facade is grand and imposing: the portico, composed of eight columns, six in front and two in flank, raised on a flight of steps, and sustaining an entablature and pediment, is derived from that of the Pantheon at Rome. The tower of this Church is in three stories, the first is rusticated, and forms a plinth to a peristyle of twelve columns, upon which is a circular temple, pierced with arched openings; the piers between the arches are sculptured with caryatid figures of angels supporting the entablature, which is crowned with a spherical dome, and finished with a small pedestal sustaining a vane.

The Church of All Souls in Langham-place, was commenced in 1822 and finished in 1825; it was erected from designs by Nash. Its principal feature is a circular peristyle of the Ionic order, the capitals of the columns being fancifully formed of winged cherubim; above the balustrade which crowns the entablature, rises a circular peripteral campanile, or bell tower, surmounted by a fluted spire of remarkably taper proportions, but without a vane, the usual termination of church spires, this omission produces a similar effect to the appearance of a column without a capital.

St. Mary's Church in Wyndham-place, Bryanston-square, was erected prior to the year 1824, from designs by Smirke. The principal front of this Church, contrary to the usual arrangement of ecclesiastical edifices, is southern, in the centre of which is the portico and tower. In its plan the building consists of a nave and aisles, a portion of the design at the angles, being taken out of the plan to form vestrys, &c., makes the nave longer than the aisles; an Ionic hexastyle portico sweeps round that portion of the tower which projects from the main building; above the parapet the tower is continued on a circular plan, and forms a stylobate to a second story of the Corinthian order of architecture, the cornice being finished with Grecian tiles; upon this story is a pedestal, still continuing the same form, and sustaining a circular temple, crowned with a conical dome, on the vertex of which is a gilded cross. Near the eastern end of the Church is the Western National School, erected by the same architect in a corresponding style with the Church.

Trinity Church, opposite the northern end of Great Portland-street in the New Road, was erected in 1827, from designs by Sir John Soane. It has a tetrastyle portico of the Ionic order, derived from the Temple at Ilyssus; immediately above which rises the campanile or bell tower of the Church. The lower story of the tower is of the Corinthian order of architecture, derived from the fine specimen at Tivoli: and is surmounted by a peristyle, the columns of which are derived from those of the portico of the octagonal temple of the winds at Athens, and terminated by a semi-elliptical cupola and vane.

Christ Church in Stafford-street, Lisson-green, was completed in 1825, from designs by Hardwicke; this neighbourhood has become exceedingly populous, extending by Grove-road to Portland-town on the northern bank of the Regent's canal, a chapelry of Mary le bone parish; a very large cemetery is attached to the handsome Chapel, which is dedicated to St. John, and is situated at the northern end of Park-road, very near the Regent's Park.

St. Pancras Church, one of the most magnificent in the metropolis, was erected by the Parish, in consequence of the want of accommodation in the Old Church, which like that of St. Mary le bone, is preserved entire, and the new structure built in another part of the Parish. It is situated on the eastern side of Euston-square, near Somer's Town. The design of this building by W. and H. W. Inwood, is derived from the Temple of Erectheus at Athens. The western front consists of a hexastyle portico of the Ionic order of architecture sustaining a pediment. The tower rises above the Church in three principal stories, each of which has its stylobate, and forms in itself a small temple; the whole being finished by a conical roof of stone, on the apex of which a groupe of elegant foliage sustains a cross, forming an appropriate finish to the elevation. The wings attached to the eastern ends of the sides of the Church, are imitated from the Pandroseum at Athens, having a caryatid portico, composed of four female figures. On the eastern front, the architects have boldly deviated from the design of the original building at Athens. In the semicircular sweep, they have borne in mind the tribune of the patriarchal Churches, and in finishing the main building above this projection with a pediment, they have made that proper distinction between the nave and chancel, which ought ever to mark a Church. The eastern part is considered by Mr. Carless, one of the most distinguished architectural critics of the day, to be a chaste and elegant composition, considering that the architects were under the necessity of accommodating their building to the purposes of a christian Church. Such an edifice, he continues, does honor to the country at large, and is a monument to its immediate neighbourhood, which the inhabitants have good cause to pride themselves upon. The building was commenced in 1819, by the Duke of York laying the first stone, and it was finished in 1822.

REGENT STREET.

Although this street was originally planned by Mr. Nash about the year 1810, several designs by the principal architects in the kingdom, contribute to form the splendid ranges of building of which it is composed. The two Club Houses fronting Waterloo-place are amongst the most conspicuous, that on the eastern side, belonging to the United Service Club, was erected from designs by Nash; but the Athenæum on the western side of Waterloo-place, was designed by Decimus Burton. The distinctive character of this edifice, is its bold Corinthian cornice and enriched frieze, sculptured by Henning, and exhibiting the Panathenaic procession, one of the sculptures which embellished the Parthenon, as appropriate to the name of the club, which is professedly connected with literature and the fine arts. Over the principal entrance to the Athenæum, is placed a copy of the Pallas of Velletri, by Baily. The Junior United Service Club, at the corner of Charles-street, was erected from designs by Smirke. A little further on the same side is Mr. Nash's own house, remarkable for its saloon or gallery, embellished with painted arabesque designs in the Italian style, one of the finest rooms of its kind in the whole kingdom.

Nearly opposite is St. Philip's Chapel, designed by Nash. The water front of Old Somerset House, by Inigo Jones, was said to be the first chaste design in architecture, formed upon the antique, erected in this country. The County Fire Office, at the commencement of the Quadrant and fronting the upper part of Regent-street, presents the actual elevation, upon the scale of the original, and is hardly exceeded by any of the neighbouring buildings, in purity of taste or elegant simplicity. The Quadrant is an admirable instance of the architects' ingenuity and judgment; by the erection of this really magnificent portion of Regent-street, with its Doric colonnades, he obtained an inclination westward of the extent required.

The new front of Archbishop Tenison's Chapel, was designed by Cockerell in 1823; and the range of buildings opposite New Burlington-street, by Sir John Soane, others by Abraham, succeed. Hanover Chapel, on the western side of the street, was erected from designs by Cockerell, in 1823, it is of the Ionic order of architecture, derived from the Temple of Minerva Polias at Priene; the front ranges with the houses in the street, and the portico covers the foot path; the building is thus rendered conspicuous in a lateral point of view, and not, like many other noble edifices, so concealed, that thousands pass daily and are strangers to the beauties they contain. The front of this Chapel is one of the greatest ornaments of Regent-street, and decidedly the best specimen of architecture in it, but the square turrets which finish the elevation have been justly objected to, as not suiting the character of the edifice to which they are attached. There is said to be in the arrangement of the interior of this Chapel, a resemblance to that of St. Stephen's Church, Wallbrook, was there nothing more to recommend it, this would not be its least merit. The columns of the interior are specimens of an order of architecture, as yet without a name, but approaching nearest to the Corinthian. The capitals have the basket and encurved abacus of that order, but have only a single row of leaves set perpendicularly in the astragal; the cauliculae are omitted, and upon the volutes are placed doves, with expanded wings, corresponding with each angle of the abacus. In the centre of the ceiling is a cupola, on the inner circumference of which is placed eight corbels, representing cherubim, from which the same number of concave ribs spring, and between the ribs are glazed windows: a very considerable portion of light being thus thrown into the building by this tasteful cupola, in which elegance and utility are happily combined.* The Circus in Oxford-street is of the Corinthian order, and designed by Nash; hence the lower part of Regent-street is carried towards Portland-place, by ranges of elegant shops.

IMPROVEMENTS IN THE STRAND AND AT CHARING CROSS.

The Act of Parliament to effect these improvements, was passed in 1825, and was an extension of that under which the Commissioners of the Woods and Forests acted, in the erection of Regent-street, and in the laying out of Regent's Park. Its object was to continue Pall Mall eastward to St. Martin's Church, and thence to the Strand; forming at the same time an open space fronting Parliament-street, which is now called Trafalgar-square. Its width from west to east is 500 feet, and from the northern front of the square to the statue of King Charles I., is the same distance. The western side of this square is formed by the Union Club House and the College of Physicians, of the Doric order of architecture, designed by Smirke. On the eastern side is a line of building of correspondent grandeur of design, which ranges with the magnificent portico of St. Martin's Church, an object principally regarded in all the arrangements made by Mr. Nash, for the improvement of this part of the Metropolis.

The northern side of Trafalgar-square, is to be entirely occupied by a National Gallery, from designs by Wilkins. In that part of St. Martin's-lane which has been rebuilt, is situated the house of the Royal Society of Literature, erected from designs by Decimus Burton; a paved walk on the northern side of St. Martin's Church, leads to the Lowther Arcade, which derived its name from Lord Viscount Lowther. It was built from designs by Herbert, and is 245 feet long by 20 feet wide, and is 35 feet high. The range of building of which this is a component part, is triangular, and extends along the western part of the Strand; King William-street and Adelaide-street form the other sides; each of the angles of this very beautiful range, is terminated by a circular edifice of the composite order, surmounted by a balustrade and a cupola. The eastern boundary of these improvements is Agar-street, in which is the Charing Cross Hospital; and the angle between King William-street and Chandos-street, is occupied by the Ophthalmic Hospital, designed by Cockerell. At the eastern corner of Agar-street in the Strand, is the British Fire Office, erected from designs by the same architect; the elevation of this last edifice is so extraordinary, and so much at variance with the generally received rules of good taste, that it is difficult to conceive under what circumstances the architect could have permitted its erection. It is a deviation from the severe attic style, in which the elegant simplicity of the Greeks is left quite out of the composition. In the smaller triangle of buildings at the westernmost end of the Strand, is the New Golden Cross Inn and Stables, and a Branch Office belonging to the General Post Office.

On the opposite side of the Strand, extending to the Banks of the River Thames, a very extensive improvement has been made by the restoration of Hungerford Market, on a grand scale, from designs by Fowler; which had become the more necessary, in consequence of St. James's Market, Westminster Market and Carnaby Market, having been entirely swept away, by the arrangements made for the improvement of the western part of the town. Hungerford Market was established by Royal Charter, in the reign of Charles II., and the want of a Fish Market at the west end of the town had been felt in modern times. No situation could be more appropriate for its several objects, than the spot chosen by the architect; a commodious quay has been formed, which is available at all times of the tide, and a Fish Market has been constructed adjacent to the river, which being on a lower level than the other buildings, is rendered distinct; hence is an ascent by a spacious flight of steps in the centre, externally, and two staircases within, at the extremities of the portico, which is separated from the Hall by a screen of arches. The Hall, or principal Market House, is 151 feet long by 120 feet wide, containing ranges of shops against the side walls, with galleries over them. These Galleries are approached by four staircases at the extremities, which afford a ready communication to every part, and are disposed in the manner of a Bazaar, with ranges of counters, &c.

The Upper Court of Hungerford Market corresponds nearly with that containing the Fish Market, but at the level of a story above it. The colonnades are here combined with shops and dwellings.

Hungerford-street, opening from the Strand, has been rebuilt in a central position, and of increased width. The total length of building from Hungerford-street to the River Thames, is 475 feet 6 inches. The Market was opened to the public on 2nd July, 1833.

The extent of width that has been given to the Strand as far as Wellington-street, is one of the most advantageous improvements to the public.

Nearly on the site of Exeter Change, is a building called Panadelpion, or Exeter Hall, containing one of the largest rooms in Europe, several committee rooms, and other offices. It was completed in 1831, from designs by J. P. Gandy Deering. The great room appropriated to the meeting of the various religious, charitable, and scientific institutions of the metropolis; is 138 feet by 90 feet in dimension, and is 48 feet in height, and is calculated to hold above 3,000 persons without the slightest inconvenience. The entrance from the Strand is the only portion of the exterior possessing an enriched architectural character. The portico consists of an entablature, surmounted by an attic, and supported by two columns and the same number of antæ, raised on a stylobate of bold proportions. The capitals of the antæ and columns, are composed from Grecian examples of great beauty. The portico opens upon a bold and lofty staircase, leading to the Great Hall, occupying the principal story of the building.

The Duke of Bedford, with a degree of liberality and public spirit, about the same period, rebuilt Covent Garden Market, from designs by Fowler, in which the new works are substantial buildings of the Tuscan order, in the centre of the area.

IMPROVEMENTS IN THE VICINITY OF THE NEW PALACE.

Westward of Grosvenor-place and the gardens of the New Palace, a very considerable improvement has been made, between Knightsbridge and Piccadilly, chiefly on the estate of the Marquess of Westminster, from whose family and possessions the names of the principal squares and streets in this quarter are derived. Belgrave-square, one of the largest in the metropolis, is said to contain nearly ten acres within its area; the houses forming the sides, built from designs by Bassevi, are all so large as to confine them to the highest class of inhabitants, their external appearance presents a uniform whole, exceedingly handsome and appropriate. In Belgrave-street, at the northern angle of Eaton-square, is St. Peter's Church, erected from designs by Hakewill, in the Ionic style of architecture, which is not deficient in chastity and elegance, the peculiar characteristic of that order. The garden of Eaton-square presents the largest enclosed space in the metropolis, being nearly one third of a mile in length, and containing within its area above 13 acres of ground. The whole of this district indeed appears to have been laid out, entirely with a view to the obtaining of broad and handsome streets. Belgrave-chapel in Halkin-street, was erected from designs by Smirke, after the beautiful example of the Ionic Temple on the Banks of the Illyssus.

The Pantechnicon, situated in Halkin-street west, and Motcombe-street near Belgrave-square, is an immense establishment, chiefly for the sale of carriages, works of art, and property of every description. It consists of two buildings, the northern and the southern. The ground on which the northern building is erected, is in length 500 feet, and it has a frontage of 93 feet: with the exception of the reading room, auction room and offices, each floor is one great enclosure for the exhibition of carriages for sale. All the staircases and the inclined planes from the entrance to the ground and first floors, are of stone; the boarded floors are covered with iron plates, the ceilings are lathed with iron and covered with composition, and the supports are cast iron pillars: thus the whole building is fire proof, not any wood work being exposed. The southern division of the Pantechnicon has two fronts, one in Motcombe-street, 117 feet long, and one in Halkin-street west, 112 feet long. The ground floor is divided by two galleries, the eastern and the western, forming passages, leading directly to the entrance of the great northern building; on each side of these galleries are shops, similar to those of the Burlington and Lowther Arcades; a corridor in the middle of the edifice connects the two galleries, the longest of which is 115 feet in extent. Above the shops are two other floors for Bazaars, &c. The surrounding streets are Wilton-place, Wilton-crescent, Cadogan-place, and Lownes-square. From Belgrave-square, Chester-square, and Eaton-square are also approaches to the Pantechnicon.

The following sketch by W. H. Leeds, an accomplished architectural critic, comprises all that need be said upon the recent improvements of the metropolis, in a work professedly topographical, it will form the best addenda to the statistical account of the editor.

MODERN ARCHITECTURE OF THE METROPOLIS.

Briefly as the subject must be here treated, it is too interesting in itself, and too intimately connected with the history and topography of the metropolis to be entirely passed over; I shall therefore take a rapid glance at the present state of architecture in the British capital. In order fairly to estimate this, I shall not merely look at particular examples, but consider the aggregate condition of the art now and at former periods. It is undeniable that no edifice has been erected which can compete with St. Paul's Cathedral in magnitude and dignity, yet to infer from that circumstance that we have retrograded rather than advanced, would be a most unfair fallacy; nor would be short of a positive untruth, to set up that structure as a standard of contemporaneous architectural taste. Were we to do so, we should imagine that London at the beginning of the eighteenth century, must have displayed a most noble style of building; whereas, with a very few exceptions, which have on that very account obtained more admiration than would have fallen to their share, if now produced; both the public buildings and houses were of a very homely description. "He who has but one eye," says the Italian proverb, "is a prodigy among a nation of blind men;" and it is only from similar reasons that we can account for the exaggerated commendations bestowed upon many buildings, to which a very inferior rank would now be assigned. On the other hand, it certainly would not be difficult to point out more than one instance of bad taste and abortive attempt at the present day; yet this is no more than might be expected, in consequence of some degree of architectural embellishment being more frequently aimed at, and not seldom with very inadequate means. Even among buildings, too, of by no means the very first class, many will be found to exhibit much elegance and taste, unimportant as they may be as regards dimensions or material. And here it may not be out of place, to advert to a circumstance which is sometimes invidiously brought forward, for the purpose of unfairly depreciating our modern improvements, namely, that they are not what they pretend to be, stucco, cement, and composition being substituted for stone. Such undoubtedly is the case, and could it be shown but that for the introduction of substitutes, what is constructed with them would have been built of real stone, it might be reasonable matter for regret. The fact, however, is, that were it not for such cheap and cheaply worked materials, which enable us to produce the richest mouldings and other ornaments at a comparatively trifling expense, what are now handsome façades would be plain brick fronts, without even so much as a simple cornice. Consequently all that is so constructed, ought rather to be set down as so much positive gain, as regards the architectural appearance of our streets; nor can it be denied that in respect to mere elegance of design and taste, as much ability may be shown in this way as with stone. Had Roman cement entirely superseded the use of stone, we might admit that some of our older structures would survive the present 'upstart' race; but the truth is, that within the lapse of a very few years, a greater number of stone buildings of most substantial construction have been erected, than at any former period. It will be sufficient to mention Waterloo Bridge and the New London Bridge, the Post Office, Goldsmiths' Hall, Fishmongers' Hall, &c., to disprove the allegations of those who are pleased to assert in sweeping terms, that modern London is mere 'lath and plaster!'

Whatever may be thought of the buildings in Regent-street and the Regent's Park, the majority of which will, undoubtedly, not stand the test of a very critical examination, they must be allowed to form an epoch in our street architecture; and even these, with all their manifold faults and imperfections, are preferable to the water-gruel insipidity which till then characterized the whole of the west end of the town, where house after house and street after street, presented to the eye the same wearisome quaker uniform of lines of plain sash windows, and, architecturally speaking, a 'universal blank.' The example set by Regent-street has now extended far and wide, so that hardly a house is new fronted or even repaired, without some degree of embellishment being bestowed upon it. Improvements of this kind are, it must be confessed, merely confined to the trading streets, for the houses of the more opulent classes do not yet exhibit any corresponding change. This, however, may be easily accounted for, because being more respectably built, they do not require such extensive repairs or such frequent renovation as others; where, on the contrary, houses of this description have been lately erected, as in Belgrave-square, their fronts are not in the same bold style as formerly, nor in that sort of timid architectural taste which marks Portland-place. With the exception of Sutherland House, and perhaps that of the Duke of Wellington, and the single wing to the Marquess of Westminsters'; nothing of the palazzo character has been added to the list of the residences of the nobility. But a number of palazzi of a different class, aristocratic enough in appearance, although somewhat republican in their constitution, have arisen of late years, and give an air of grandeur to their respective situations, we mean Club houses and similar establishments, many of which are of very superior design, and fitted up internally with both richness and elegance. Among those most deserving of being here pointed out, are the Athenæum, the Travellers, and the University. The City Club, almost adjoining the Excise Office in Broad-street, is not yet completed, with the exception of the façade, which is a handsome piece of Palladian design.

From these elegant and palace-like structures to markets, does not seem a very natural transition, yet the latter may be associated with the former in one respect, because like them they are a class of buildings novel to this country. Till very lately none of the markets in the metropolis exhibited any thing that could entitle them to notice among its buildings, as they consisted only of rows of sheds. New Covent Garden and Farringdon Markets, are more remarkable for the improvement they exhibit, as regards comfort and convenience, than for any strictly architectural quality; but Hungerford Market is a noble edifice, and the upper hall with its piles of solid granite columns, clearly refutes those libellous complaints that have already been alluded to. This and similar examples serve also to remove the strange and inconsiderately adopted error, that neither open halls nor porticos are suitable to this country, because every one must now be sensible of the great advantages of shelter if not of shade in a climate like ours; this species of luxury may also be appreciated by the pedestrian on a rainy day, beneath the colonnades of the Opera house, and the Quadrant in Regent-street; and also in such covered streets as the Burlington and Lowther Arcades. The last mentioned of these must also be noticed here, as being by no means the least interesting or the least novel among the recent improvements. In point of architecture and taste, it is as superior to the other as can very well be imagined, and is in fact a most delightful and elegant gallery, where we enjoy at the same instant, the beauties both of external and internal architecture.

Striking improvements have of late years taken place in the building of shops; instead of the awkward projecting lowered windows formerly in fashion, the windows are now flat, which is not only favorable to the general appearance of the streets, but also shows the goods in them better than the old mode. Shop fronts too have assumed a more architectural and substantial character, withal are less gaudy, but far more elegantly and expensively fitted up than formerly, in many instances without regard to cost, either internally or externally. Plate glass windows, scagliole columns, costly mirrors of extraordinary dimensions, elegant stoves, and chandeliers and lamps, together with a profusion of brilliant brass work, and mahogany, independently of their other attractions render some of the more splendid shops foremost among the sights of London. Many of them, too, are remarkable for the peculiar elegance of their elevations, the whole front of the house forming one uniform design. A very elegant shop on the last side of Old Bond-street, by Inwood; another in Tavistock-place; a third in Southampton-street, distinguish themselves among numerous others; and to these may be added, as well on account of its singularity as its merit, it being in the Elizabeth style, the front of Fair's rooms in Mortimer-street. Although for the most part they are in a tawdry, outré style, overloaded with coarsely executed vulgar ornament, à la Greque, some good features and clever bits may occasionally be met with, in the newly erected liquor shops about town, whose ostentatious finery frequently forms a striking contrast to the squalid neighbourhoods where they are to be met with. The new front of the Mermaid Tavern, opposite the north side of Drury Lane Theatre, may rank as a superior specimen of this class, being like most of them, in a sort of fancy à la Greque taste, and having many prettinesses in its design.

In addition to the various classes of buildings hitherto specified, there is another, which contributes to the embellishment of our metropolis. This, which may be said to hold a kind of intermediate rank between our public and private edifices, comprises Insurance Offices, Banking Houses, and similar establishments. Few of these, excepting the very recent ones, possess much claim to notice, on account of their architecture; and among the latter may be mentioned the British Commercial Assurance Company, Cornhill; the County Fire Office, Regent-street; and the British Insurance Office in the Strand, in the last mentioned, of which Cockerell is the architect, is a more singular than happy attempt to amalgamate the severest Doric style, with features of a totally dissimilar character.

The preceding remarks are intended to show how much has been done, and is still doing in architecture, independently of buildings of a higher class; and if none of the specimens just pointed out are of any great individual importance, by their number and diversity, they contribute to the embellishment of the metropolis. The difference between the improved street architecture at the west end of the town and that in the City, was till lately striking enough; but since the erection of the New London Bridge, similar improvements are now going on in that district. A spacious and handsome street of shops has been formed from the north end of the Bridge; and another street will be continued in an oblique direction to this, so as to come into Lombard-street, just by St. Mary Woolnoth's. These improvements will not only conduce to the airiness, cheerfulness, and commodiousness of the vicinity, but by proving attractive, will also be beneficial to the retail trade of the City. They will, most likely, occasion a spirit of rivalry in the neighbouring streets, and thus gradually give rise to other architectural undertakings. Some few years back Mr. Elmes brought forward a plan for widening and symmetrizing the whole of the area around St. Paul's; and although the scheme did not succeed then, it is not altogether improbable that something of the kind will in the course of time be carried into effect.

As yet we have said nothing of the more recent public buildings; nor can we do more than enumerate the principal ones, for they have multiplied in a most unprecedented manner of late years. The new Churches alone form a numerous class; and although the majority of them can only be termed handsome, some few hardly that, others there are that merit far higher praise; the Church of St. Pancras, by Messrs. Inwood, is an exquisitely finished gem; derived in all parts from Athenian models, and so far, possessing no great claims to originality, but truly admirable for its details and execution. The little Ionic Chapel in North Audley-street, Deering Architect, is likewise exceedingly tasteful, nor do its beauties suffer by the recollection of the very ugly building it has displaced. This Church is also remarkable for its spacious and temple-like vestibule within. The Church of St. Dunstan in the West, Shaw architect, that in Gordon-square, Vulliamy architect, and a third in Exeter-street, Savage architect, are good modern specimens of the pointed style, and the first mentioned has a particularly elegant lanthorn-tower. Other places of worship belonging to various sects, contribute likewise to the embellishment of many parts of the town: among them we may reckon the Scotch Church, Regent-square, Tite architect, with a rich facade, the idea of which is borrowed from York Minster; the Catholic Chapel, Finsbury Circus; and neighbouring Chapel of somewhat unusual design, by Mr. Brooks, the architect of the London Institution.

The Clubhouses have already been spoken of, and we shall now mention another class of buildings, which, till very lately, have been almost devoid of architectural pretension, viz. Hospitals. Of these there are two which must rank high among our public structures, namely, St. George's Hospital, Wilkins architect, and the new Westminster Hospital. This latter, which is by Messrs. Inwood, is remarkable as being in the Tudor style; and the principal front has some good features, particularly the oriels at the angles. The establishing two public Seminaries, has also been favourable in an architectural point of view, since it has given us the London University, Wilkins architect, and King's College, Smirke architect. Although as yet unfinished, and likely to remain so, the former of these is the more important piece of architecture, were it only on account of its decastyle portico (the only example of the kind we yet possess,) and dome. The warm discussions relative to the architect's designs for the National Gallery, have caused the merits of this portico to be much discussed, and among other objections, it has been alledged that it overpowers the rest of the building, yet it is not quite fair to judge it very strictly by the appearance it now makes, so much being wanted to complete the entire plan. King's College may rather be considered a portion of the buildings of Somerset House, than an independent structure. Besides these, there is the new building of St. Paul's School, G. Smith architect, and also Mercer's School, a smaller but handsome structure by the same architect, who likewise built the New Corn Exchange, Mark-lane, an excellent specimen both of the Grecian Doric order, and of classical design.

While, as in the last mentioned instances, many of our former public edifices have been replaced by others in a more elegant style, several buildings have been erected for new purposes;—such as the Law Institution, Chancery-lane, Vulliamy architect; Exeter Hall, Deering architect, an elegant and spacious building in the Strand, for public meetings, exhibitions, &c. And among these we may place such novel ornamental structures as the entrance into Hyde Park, with the opposite Gateway, and the Duke of York's Column. Both the gates we have just alluded to, do great credit to Mr. Decimus Burton's taste, particularly that now leading into the Green Park, which is at once simple in its mass, and exceedingly rich in its details; neither should we omit to observe, that the bronzed metal work belonging to these entrances is in a very superior style.

The recently finished new State Paper Office, by Sir J. Soane, in St. James's Park, is a handsome stone edifice, exhibiting some peculiarities of design, although not such as are calculated to strike the general observer. The range of building at the corner of Downing-street, for the Board of Trade, &c. by the same architect, offers a very rich example of the Corinthian order, namely, that of the Temple of Jupiter Stator; but unfortunately this pile, like its opposite neighbour the Banqueting House, is but a portion of a more extensive structure, nor is there at present any likelihood of its ever being completed.

Some remarks will be expected from us, relative to the New Palace, to which we ought perhaps to have given some precedence. This structure has incurred great vituperation, and it certainly is neither what it ought to have been, nor what it might have been rendered for the same expense. So far from being in a more dignified style than other public buildings, it is inferior to many of them in architectural character; being, although of considerable extent in itself, an assemblage of trifling parts, with some prettinesses but with no grandeur. There is nothing bold or original in the design itself; while the columns, windows, and other features are all upon too insignificant a scale; so much so as to give the idea of its containing only low and moderate sized rooms. Owing to the addition of an attic, not contemplated in the original design, the centre portico now looks smaller and more depressed than it did at first; besides which it exhibits the unclassical solecism of coupled columns, placed beneath a pediment in a projecting portico. This defect, again, is rendered so much the more obvious, the porticos to the wings having only single columns; and being only tetrastyle, these look as much too weak and open for their situation, as the other does heavy and dumpy. Together with such extravagance, there has likewise been no little parsimony, for while £70,000 have been expended on a marble arch, which might have been erected at any time; Bath stone has been employed in the construction of the Palace itself, instead of Portland; and on the other hand a richly carved frieze is carried along the southern side of the edifice, although that part has no pretensions either to regularity or beauty. The New Palace is certainly not particularly creditable to the architectural talent of the country, and much inferior to what the nation had reason to anticipate. Much stress therefore cannot be laid upon this building, in estimating our recent architectural acquisitions.

The National Gallery will, it is to be hoped, prove a nobler ornament to the Metropolis; and with this immediate prospect before us of another important architectural work, dissimilar in character from any thing we yet possess, we here conclude these extended yet imperfect remarks.

THE BRITISH MUSEUM.

This building on the northern side of Great Russel-street, is the depository of an extensive national collection of books, sculpture, and subjects relative to natural history. On entering the gates of the Museum, a spacious quadrangle presents itself, with an Ionic colonnade on the southern side, and the main building in the northern, the two wings being allotted for the dwellings of the officers. The architect, Peter Puget, was sent over from Paris by Ralph, first Duke of Montagu, for the sole purpose of constructing this splendid mansion. The ground floor, consisting of sixteen rooms, contains a library of printed books. The decorations of the Hall and Staircase are chiefly by James Rousseau, whose particular skill in perspective was held in high estimation, but the ceiling of the staircase, representing Phaeton petitioning Apollo for leave to drive his Chariot, is by Charles de la Fosse, one of the best colourists of the French School. The ceiling of the Saloon, also painted by La Fosse, represents the birth of Minerva. The landscape and architectural decorations are by Rousseau, and the garlands are by John Baptist Monoyer, the most eminent flower painter of his day.

Sir Hans Sloane, a celebrated naturalist, who died in 1753, directed by his will that his Museum should be offered to the public for £20,000, Parliament readily embraced the proposal, and an act was passed for that purpose, and also for the purchase of Harleian Collection of Manuscripts, and for providing a general repository for the reception of those collections and of the Cottonian Library, as well as for additions to be made thereto. In order to increase this national collection, his Majesty George II. directed that the Royal Library of Manuscripts should be added to the Cottonian Library.

Since this period many valuable additions have been made in every department of the Museum, amongst which may be particularized a collection of tracts, published during the reign of Charles I., given by King George III.; a collection of Biography, presented by Sir William Musgrave; the library of Clayton Cracherode, bequeathed in 1799; Garrick's Collection of Old Plays; a cabinet of Anglo-Saxon coins, collected by Tyssen; a collection of casts of ancient seals, by J. Doubleday, a most ingenious artist, have been liberally presented by him to the Museum; Antiquities from Herculaneum, by Sir William Hamilton; and Egyptian Antiquities captured during the war with France. The Lansdowne Library of Manuscripts. Dr. Birch's MSS. Hasted's MSS. relative to Kent, &c. Public Acts collected by Rymer, but not printed in the Fœdera; Rolls of Parliament, ordered by the House of Lords to be deposited in the Museum; Forty-seven volumes relating to Ireland, presented by Dean Milles; Icelandic MSS. and printed books, by Sir Joseph Banks; Sir John Hawkin's Collection, relating to his History of Music; Church Music by James Matthias; Sir William Burrells collection towards a History of Sussex; Colcs MSS. relative to the University of Cambridge; Da Costas Hebrew MSS., &c. &c. &c.

The British Museum is said to contain the best library of natural history in the world. Sir Joseph Banks collection alone embraces 24,000 volumes of all that is curious on that subject. The Royal Library presented by George IV., embraces 60,000 volumes of all that is rare and erudite in the range of literature and art; many of these volumes are in the most costly bindings, not a few of them are bound by that excellent workman Roger Payne. The King's Library is also rich in works of topography, the books are systematically arranged in presses according to subjects, and the tables on the floor of the room, are occupied by a most curious splendid and useful collection of geography; maps of every part of the globe, and numerous plans of towns, buildings, gardens, &c. The Long Gallery above the King's Library, is appropriated to the collections of Mineralogy and Geology, including secondary fossils. The system of arrangement adopted in the Minerals, with occasional slight deviation, is that of Professor Berzelius, founded upon the electro-chemical theory and the doctrine of definite proportions. In the Cases of the eastern wall of the centre compartment, is deposited a collection of Minerals from the Hartz mountains, presented by his late Majesty King George IVth.; the sculptured tortoise in the same compartment, is wrought out of nephrite or jade, and was found in Hindostan.

In one of the rooms is a collection of bas reliefs, representing the battle of the Centaurs and Lapithæ, and the combat between the Greeks and the Amazons, from the Temple of Apollo Epicurius, or the Deliverer, on mount Cotyion, near the ancient city of Phigalia in Arcadia, and which formerly composed the frieze in the interior of the Cella; a circumstance which adds very much to the interest of these marbles, is the knowledge of the precise time when they were executed: Pausanias in his description of the Temple, informs us it was built by Ictinus, an architect contemporary with Pericles, and who built the Parthenon at Athens. The Egyptian Paintings in the same room, were taken from the wall of a tomb underground, in 1820. The Sculptures called the Elgin Marbles, arranged in a large and beautiful room erected for the purpose, consist of the metopes belonging to the Parthenon, which alternately with the tryglyphs, ornamented the frieze of the entablature, surmounting the colonnade of that celebrated Temple at Athens; they represent the battle between the Centaurs and Lapithæ, or rather between the Centaurs and Athenians, who under Theseus, joined the Lapithæ, a people of Thessaly, in this contest. In some of these sculptures the Centaurs are victorious, in others the Athenians have the advantage, while in others again the victory seems doubtful, with respect to either of the combatants. These magnificent specimens of ancient art, are executed with great spirit in alto relievo. The sculptures which composed the exterior frieze of the cella of the Parthenon, within the colonnade, was continued in an uninterrupted series entirely round the Temple. The subject, executed in very low relief, represents the sacred procession which took place at the Panathenæa, a festival observed every fifth year at Athens, in honor of Minerva, the patroness of the City.

Other sculptures now in the British Museum were taken from the pediments of the Parthenon; the subject of the eastern pediment is the birth of Minerva. On the western pediment was represented the contest between Minerva and Neptune, for the honor of giving name to the City of Athens. Here are also several capitals and pieces of the shafts of the Doric columns of the Parthenon; and pieces of the shafts and the capital of an Ionic column from the portico of the Erechtheum at Athens. The building to which this singularly beautiful piece of architecture belonged, was a double Temple, dedicated to Minerva Polias and Pandrosus. In the same collection is an architectural statue, one of the Caryatides, which supported the roof under which the olive tree of Minerva was sheltered in the Temple of Pandrosus at Athens. The British Museum is kept open for public inspection, every Monday, Wednesday, and Friday in the week.

THE ROYAL SOCIETY.

The Royal Society was founded by King Charles II. in 1662, and incorporated by Royal Charter. Robert Boyle, one of the most illustrious philosophers of modern times, was appointed one of the council, and continued one of its most useful and industrious members during the whole course of his life. It was originally established in Gresham College, whence the society removed about the year 1711, to Crane-court, Fleet-street. In 1780, the Royal Society had an apartment granted for the purpose of holding their meetings in Somerset-place, and assembled at their new rooms for the first time on 30th November of that year. The publication of Philosophical Transactions was commenced in 1665, and are submitted to the direction of a committee of the Royal Society. The subjects treated of in these volumes, are natural history, mathematics, mechanical philosophy and chemistry, some are miscellaneous. This Society may be considered as the origin whence sprung the Linnæan and Zoological Societies. Dr. Birch wrote "The History of the Royal Society of London, for improving of natural knowledge from its first rise;" in which the most considerable of those papers communicated to the Society, which have hitherto not been published, are inserted in their proper order, as a supplement to the Philosophical Transactions. The two first volumes were published in 1756, and two other volumes in 1757, in which the history is carried on to the end of the year 1687; it contains many curious and entertaining anecdotes, concerning the manner of the Society's proceedings at their first establishment, and is enriched likewise with a number of personal circumstances relative to the members, and with biographical accounts of such of the more considerable of them in chronological order; a history of the Society was published by Thomson in 1812.

The Royal Society hold their meetings every Thursday, from the beginning of November to the end of Trinity Term, at eight o'clock, when papers are read, and to which meetings strangers are admitted.

THE SOCIETY OF ANTIQUARIES.

This Society was incorporated by his Majesty George II. in 1752, having existed without a charter from the time of Queen Elizabeth in 1572. It is held in apartments of Somerset-place, and in conjunction with the Royal Society, occupy nearly the whole of the eastern part of the northern front of the building towards the Strand. The library of the Society of Antiquities is on the ground floor, and above is their room of meeting, large and commodious, where the first assemblage took place on the 11th of January, 1781. This Society has published no less than 24 volumes of their transactions, under the title of Archæologia, and several other works on antiquities. Their meetings are held every Thursday evening, at half past seven, from the beginning of November to the end of Trinity Term, and visitors are admitted to the room where papers on the subjects preserved by the Society are read.

ROYAL ACADEMY.

The Royal Academy was instituted in the year 1768, by his Majesty George III., and consists of a president, professors of architecture, perspective, painting, sculpture, anatomy, and ancient literature; two secretaries, two auditors, thirty-three Royal academicians, twenty associates, and six associate engravers. The Royal Academy possess a collection of about 80 pictures and sculpture, presented by the academicians on their election; the Cartoons of Raffaello, copied by Sir James Thornhill, and some copies from the pictures of Rubens; a collection of casts and models from the antique, to which his Majesty George IVth., when Prince Regent, made a splendid addition. In the council room are also portraits of George III. and Queen Charlotte, painted by Sir Joshua Reynolds, and presented to the Royal Academy by the founder.

The paintings in the centre compartment of the ceiling of the Council Room are by B. West; the circular picture represents the Graces unveiling Nature; those surrounding it the four Elements; the four large oval paintings at the extremities of the ceiling, represent Composition, Invention, Design, and Coloring, and were executed by Angelica Kaufman, R. A. In the angles of the ceiling are four heads by Biagio Rebecca, A. R. A.

Every year an exhibition is made of the works of painters and sculptors, at their rooms in Somerset-place, amounting in number to between 1,200 and 1,300 articles: the receipts for this exhibition are sufficient to pay all the expences of the Academy.

SOCIETY FOR THE ENCOURAGEMENT OF ARTS, MANUFACTURES AND COMMERCE.

The object of this Society is to encourage the arts, manufactures, and commerce of the kingdom, by giving premiums for useful machines, inventions, discoveries, and improvements. It was instituted in 1753, but has never been incorporated. The Society's House is situated in John-street, Adelphi; the great room of meeting is decorated by the celebrated pictures of Barry, who in 1777, commenced the series under discouraging circumstances; the choice of subjects was allowed him, and the Society defrayed the expence of canvas, colour, and models: the work employed him seven years. Of this great undertaking, a series of six pictures, representing the progress of society and civilization amongst mankind; it has been said that it surpasses any work which has been executed within these two centuries, and any that is now extant. As the production of one man, it is undoubtedly entitled to high praise; but it has all Barry's defects in drawing and coloring, defects the more remarkable, because in his lectures, his theory on these subjects is accurate and unexceptionable. The Society every year offer premiums on various subjects, which they publish, with the result of their success, in their Transactions. They have also a day annually, on which the prizes are publicly distributed by their presidents. This meeting is generally held on the last Tuesday in May, in Exeter Hall, their own large room not being sufficiently capacious for the numerous assembly.

ROYAL INSTITUTION.

This Institution appears to have arisen under Royal patronage, for it was chartered before it was opened in March, 1800, under the title of The Royal Institution of Great Britain, for the purpose of facilitating the introduction of useful inventions and improvements, and by courses of lectures and experiments, to connect science with the present purposes of life. It was from its foundation well supported, and very extensive premises in Albemarle-street, were taken for the purpose, to which additions have been since made: a lecture room has been erected, capable of holding nine hundred persons; a chemical laboratory has also been prepared, and also a repository for machines and productions of art; lectures are read in natural philosophy, chemistry, botany, &c. Subscribers have admission to the library, reading and news room, and to the public lectures. Sir Humphrey Davy, whose important discoveries and improvements have extended his fame over the whole civilized world, was for some years professor of Chemistry to the Royal Institution.

BRITISH INSTITUTION.

This Society for promoting the Fine Arts in the United Kingdom, was established in the year 1805. The subscriptions were liberal, and the members have been enabled to do much in encouragement of British artists. They not only give premiums, but have purchased some fine pictures, particularly West's Christ Healing the Sick, for 3,000 guineas, which have been publicly exhibited and also for the improvement of students. The Society purchased the Shakspeare Gallery in Pall Mall, which was erected about 1787, from designs by Banks, obtaining at the same time a central situation and good light for the pictures, which are submitted to the inspection of the public. At the rooms of the British Institution, are two exhibitions every year, which are judiciously confined to certain classes of pictures; at one time of Italian, at another of the Flemish School, and some have been appropriated exclusively to English artists; one in the year of 1813, of the works of Sir Joshua Reynolds, this exhibition was made for the avowed purpose of calling attention generally to British, in preference to Foreign art, and to oppose the genuine excellence of the modern, to the counterfeited semblance of ancient productions, which under the authority of names deservedly venerable, absorb the wealth and patronage which ought to foster and protect the British School. Twenty-four of the pictures in this exhibition were left in the Gallery to be copied, until the end of November of that year. To those who had seen the works of the immediate predecessors of this artist, and viewed the splendid exhibition then offered to the public, and at the same time considered that the pictures only formed part of the superior productions of one individual; it was made evident, that no painter ever raised the art from so low a state of degradation, to so high a point of excellence, or had left more splendid and instructive examples for the imitation of his successors.

NATIONAL GALLERY.

The foundation of a National Gallery of Pictures commenced in the reign of George IVth. After the death of John Julius Angerstein, 22nd January, 1823, government deemed it expedient to purchase the collection of pictures belonging to that gentleman for the use of the public, and also made arrangements with his executors for the occupation of the house in Pall Mall, where they are at present deposited, during the remainder of the term for which it was held by Mr. Angerstein, at the rent he paid for it. It is placed under the care of a keeper, who has the charge of the collection, attends to the preservation of the pictures, and superintends the arrangements for admission, &c. &c. Since the Angerstein collection was purchased in 1824, to form the ground work of a National Gallery, several beautiful pictures have been added. Twenty were presented also by Sir George Beaumont, and an important addition was made in 1831, by the acquisition of a collection of pictures, bequeathed by the Rev. Holwell Carr; these munificent bequests are worthy of the exalted taste and disinterested attachment to the arts, for which the above gentlemen were so distinguished in their lives.

In the year 1831, Mr. Wilkins submitted his plan for a National Gallery, for the reception of the pictures now exhibited in the Gallery in Pall Mall, of the sculptures at present deposited in the British Museum, and for a Royal Academy to the Lords of the Treasury, which was adopted by them, and the site fixed for the northern side of Trafalgar-square; the building, which is to be upon a most magnificent scale, is now proceeding with.

It may be reasonably hoped that on the completion of the building, the collection of pictures will be materially increased by donation or purchase, the utility and advantages of which will be appreciated by every admirer of genius.

THE SOCIETY OF BRITISH ARTISTS.

An Institution under the title of The Society of British Artists, was established in the year 1824, when a Gallery for the exhibition of pictures was erected in Suffolk-street, Pall Mall East; at these rooms an exhibition is made twice every year, the one of old pictures and the other of modern works of art, pictures, water color drawings, sculpture, engravings, &c. The plan adopted by this Society, affords a view of British art replete with advantages, by contrasting the works of former English painters, with the productions of those actually engaged in the arena of modern art. But it must be observed, that in the exhibition of the old masters, the finest specimens of the English school which can be obtained, are exposed, while the works of modern art are not always the finest of the respective artists, but still the advantages of comparison will be obvious to all.

THE SOCIETY OF PAINTERS IN WATER COLORS.

Painting in water colors, though not a new art, may be said to have been revived in England at the period of the formation of this Institution. The council room of the Royal Academy, was formerly devoted to the exhibition of paintings in water colors; and in it were to be seen the splendid creations of Turner, the finest artist of any age or country. It was the fascination of this room which led to the idea of forming the present society, and in 1805, sixteen individuals produced an exhibition at Tresham's Rooms in Lower Brook-street. The Society removed thence to Bond-street, and at length to the Great Room in Spring Gardens, when this room was pulled down, the Society removed to the Egyptian Hall, Piccadilly, and finally to their present rooms in Pall Mall East. Within the last five and thirty years, the art of painting in water colors has made the most stupendous advances towards perfection; on entering the room of this Society, the eye is instantly pleased with the harmonious effect, partly arising from the nature of the vehicle used, but principally from the eminent abilities of the artists, the greater majority of the performances being of a very high order of excellence. The prosperity of this Society is intimately connected with the name of G. F. Robson, lately deceased, of whom an interesting memoir appeared in "Lo Studio," to which this account is indebted.

THE ASSOCIATED PAINTERS IN WATER COLORS.

This Society was founded in the year 1832, and commenced their exhibition at No. 216, Old Bond-street. There cannot be too many channels through which the public may gain an acquaintance with the merits of living artists, and if the conduct of the managers of this new association keeps pace with their professions, there is little doubt of their receiving encouragement equivalent to their exertions. It is upon the principle of personal merit that this Institution has been founded, and its regulations formed, and it being solely by the talent displayed in his works, that an artist can claim any preference; men of merit have an opportunity of displaying their drawings at the exhibition of this society without restraint, and may here make known their pretensions to distinction.

PRIVATE GALLERIES OF PICTURES.

There are several Galleries in the Metropolis formed by private individuals, to which admission is readily obtained, on appointed days, by application to the possessors for tickets; the principal of these in extent and interest, are the Bridgewater Gallery, belonging to Lord Francis Egerton, in Cleveland-square, St. James's; the Grosvenor Gallery, belonging to the Marquess of Westminster, in Upper Grosvenor-street, and the Gallery formed by the late Thomas Hope, Esq. in Duchess-street, Portland-place. In the last is a remarkably fine collection of pictures by old and celebrated Dutch and Flemish painters.

PANORAMA AND DIORAMA.

The Panorama is an exhibition of a peculiar kind, the room in which it is held is in Leicester-square, on the site of the gardens of Leicester House, formerly the residence of Frederic, Prince of Wales. It comprises a large circular painting, having no apparent beginning or end, from the centre of which the beholder views distinctly the several objects of the representation: the word is new, and implies a view of all. It was originally opened by Mr. Barker, and is at present under the direction of Mr. Burford; there are two views constantly on exhibition.

The Diorama was projected and erected under the direction of Mr. Pugin, and is constructed with a purpose of assisting the effect in the view of the objects by refraction of the light. Two views are on exhibition, and the seats of the spectators move round to each in succession.

THE LINNÆAN SOCIETY.

This Society, originally instituted in 1788, was incorporated by royal charter in 1802. Its object is the cultivation of the science of Natural History in all its branches, and more especially of the Natural History of Great Britain and Ireland, and is under the direction of a council, president, treasurer, and secretary. The Society meet at their house in Soho-square, formerly belonging to Sir Joseph Banks, every first and third Tuesday evening, from November to June, where papers are read, and to which meetings any person introduced by a fellow of the Society is admitted. In 1827, the Society purchased the late president Sir James Edward Smith's collection of Natural History, consisting of the collection and library of Linnæus and his son, and the president's own collection and library. The Society are also in possession of Sir Joseph Banks collection of insects, and the Pulteney collection of shells. One room is entirely devoted to a cabinet of birds from New Holland. The library of the Society, rich in every department of Natural History, chiefly presentation copies of splendid books, is open on Mondays, Tuesdays, and Thursdays, from 12 to 4 o'clock; and the Museum is open during the same hours, on Wednesdays and Fridays. The Banksian Botanical collections were left to the British Museum, of which Robert Brown, Esq. F.R.S., and vice-president of this Society, is now keeper. The published Transactions of the Linnæan Society extend to sixteen volumes, and are accompanied by many plates, some of them beautifully colored.

THE HORTICULTURAL SOCIETY.

A Society for the improvement of Horticulture, was formed about the year 1803, and was incorporated in 1808. It is held in Regent-street, and is governed by a president, treasurer, secretary, and a council of fifteen, three of whom go out every year, when others are elected. The Society have a large experimental garden at Chiswick, and publish their Transactions, which are embellished with plates of fruit finely colored.

THE BOARD OF AGRICULTURE.

In the year 1793, Sir John Sinclair, a gentleman who had devoted great part of his life to the improvement of agriculture, established this Society, in which he was assisted by Arthur Young, and it promised to become one of the most useful institutions in England. But the Society applied for aid of government, and procured a grant of £3000, to be continued annually; after which Sir John Sinclair, the founder, was removed from the office of president, and the institution has existed without spirit and energy.

The Society issued questions relative to agriculture, to a distinguished person in each County of England, Wales, and Scotland, with a view to an agricultural survey of Great Britain, to which returns were made, but not so satisfactory as to be relied on for their accuracy. The Board of Agriculture have published several volumes of their communications.

THE ZOOLOGICAL SOCIETY.

An account of this Society will be found under the description of the Gardens, at page 122* ante. Their Museum in Bruton-street, is amply stored with specimens of animals and birds from all parts of the world, and is open to the public by means of tickets, which it is in the power of any member of the society to issue.

THE GEOLOGICAL SOCIETY.

Geology forms part of pursuits of the Royal and Linnæan Societies, but in the year 1807 this Society originated, and was incorporated in 1813, for the advancement of Geological science, more particularly as connected with the mineral history of the British Isles. Their meetings are held in Somerset-place, on the first and third Friday in every month, from November to June, inclusive, at eight o'clock. The officers are a president, four vice-presidents, a treasurer, two secretaries, and a council of twelve.

Distinguished mineralogists, or persons who have by their communications or contributions, promoted the objects of the Society, are admitted as honorary members. The fellows of the Geological Society must be proposed by three members, and are elected by ballot. Several volumes of the Transactions of the Society are published, and belonging to it is a most excellent museum.

THE LONDON UNIVERSITY.

The College of the London University is situated on the eastern side of Gower-street, Bedford-square, and occupies more than seven acres of ground. The first stone of the building, erected from designs by W. Wilkins, was laid by his royal highness the Duke of Sussex, on 30th April, 1827, and on 30th September, 1828, the first meeting of the proprietors was held within its walls; the first lecture was delivered on the following day; an instance of celerity in construction not equalled by any other University in Europe.

The College, when entirely completed, will consist of a centre with two wings, advancing at right angles from each extremity. The grand entrance is by a flight of steps in the central division, leading to a remarkably fine portico of the Corinthian order, having ten columns in front, and one in each flank. This portico is generally pronounced to be the longest in extent, as well as the most beautiful in England. The proportions of the order are derived from the Choragic monument of Lysicrates at Athens, commonly called the Lantern of Demosthenes, excepting the enrichments of the capital, which are similar to those of the Arch of Trajan. The broad steps of the portico, broken in their flight by massive pedestals, intended to be surmounted by colossal statues; the great elevation of the portico, with the dome rising and receding above, complete the pyramid, and render the whole at once graceful and dignified. It is, however, objected that the great height and enrichment of the portico, throw the ranges of the building on each side of it, too much into the shade, a defect expected to be less visible when the wings are erected; this portion of the building not having been yet completed (1833). The northern and southern ranges each contain on the principal story eleven windows, separated by antæ, or pilasters, of the same order as the portico: entrances to the lecture rooms and theatres being on the ground story of each range. The centre door of the northern range opens upon a corridor, having lecture rooms, 46 feet by 24 feet, on either side; here are also a room for the professor of Chemistry, a common room for the professors, and a robing room. The Chemical Laboratory is in this range, near the Northern Theatre, which is a semi-circular room, 65 feet by 50 feet, lighted by six large windows in the circumference. Ten rows of concentric seats rise with a gradual increase. Behind the lecturer's table are several furnaces, occasionally used in the experiments exhibited during the lectures. Opposite the Chemical Laboratory is the Museum of Materia Medica, containing Dr. A. T. Thomson's collection for the illustration of his lectures. It contains a hortus siccus, and an extensive collection of prints and drawings on a large scale, of all medicinal plants, together with specimens, illustrative of the natural history of the various articles of the Materia Medica, and specimens of them when prepared for use as medicines. The Museum of Anatomy contains a very large collection of anatomical preparations, by C. Bell, to which additions are constantly being made. Under the Dome is a vestibule of an octangular form, 36 feet in diameter, and to the crown of the dome about 65 feet in height. The grand Portico opens upon this room, whence the whole extent of the building is visible; eastward is the Hall, 90 feet by 45 feet, intended for public examinations and other meetings of ceremony. The great Library is of the same dimension and form as the Museum of Natural History. A smaller Library is filled with such works as the students require to consult in the prosecution of their studies. In the southern range of building is a Cloister, 107 feet by 23 feet in dimension, for exercise during the intervals of lecture, corresponding with one in the northern range. In this building is a Law Library, for the use of gentlemen attending the classes of law, jurisprudence, and medical jurisprudence; the collection of books is very valuable, containing all the standard legal works, &c. Above the Lecture Room of Natural Philosophy, which is in this range, are rooms containing the different models used in the lectures, showing the application of mechanical philosophy to the arts; amongst these models is a beautiful little brass locomotive steam engine, about a foot long, which travels with wonderful celerity. A series of rooms are appropriated to that department of anatomical instruction, which is more immediately under the superintendence of the demonstrator. The University is under the government of a council.

KING'S COLLEGE.

This College, situated on the eastern side of Somerset-place, on the Strand, was intended in its design to preserve a general uniformity with that building, and to occupy the site of its eastern wing, not completed by Sir William Chambers. The entrance to King's College from the Strand, is by an archway, over which are placed the symbolical figures of Holiness and Wisdom, as supporters of the royal arms, with the motto: SANCTE ET SAPIENTER. The College extends from the Strand to the River Thames, where the buildings form an essential part of the southern façade of Somerset House. The western front of King's College is 304 feet in length, and was designed by Sir Robert Smirke, in the same style of architecture as the other parts of Somerset House. The area before it is of a quadrangular form, having public offices on the western side of the court.

The building was commenced in September, 1829, and on the 8th October, 1831, the ceremony of opening the College took place. The first introductory lecture on Anatomy and Physiology, was delivered by Professor Mayo, on the 10th October, 1831, the public being admitted by tickets; and the next day Professor Daniell, delivered a lecture on chemistry.

His Majesty's charter, dated 14th August, 1819, to this Institution, declares in the preamble, that it is founded with the intent, that "Instruction in the duties and doctrines of Christianity, as taught by the United Church of England and Ireland, shall be for ever combined with instruction in the various branches of literature and science." The charter appoints the Lord Chancellor and eight others, including the Vice-Chancellor and Chief Justice of Common Pleas, in virtue of their office, as perpetual governors, a treasurer, twenty-four members of council, and three auditors; the whole of whom must be members of the established Protestant Church, or otherwise become incompetent to act. The Corporation is designated "The Governors and Proprietors of King's College, London." The Archbishop of Canterbury is visitor.

The interior of the College is very capacious, and is well calculated for the objects in view. A large Chapel occupies the centre of the building on the first floor, calculated to provide sittings for upwards of eight hundred students, its length being 72 feet, and its breadth 52 feet. Under the Chapel is a public Hall of similar dimension, for examinations and other occasions of ceremony. The Lecture Rooms are of different forms and sizes, so as to afford accommodation in the best manner, for the purposes to which they are applied, and for the different classes which occupy them. The number of pupils of the higher department which these lecture rooms are calculated to contain, is about two thousand. The rooms intended for the lower department, occupying the northern portion of the building on the lower story, are of sufficient extent to receive conveniently four hundred pupils. An extensive suite of rooms on the first floor, are appropriated to the library of the College, and to Museums, and collections of Natural History, connected with the course of study in the various departments. The Museum contains an extensive selection of anatomical preparations, and models of the most varied character, botanical specimens, &c. That part of King's College next the River Thames, contains the residence of the principal of the college, the Rev. William Otter, M.A., and several apartments for the professors. There is also a suite of apartments for the professors, extending along the whole western front of the building on the second story.

The front of Somerset House towards the River Thames, of which King's College now forms an essential part, is the most splendid part of the vast structure, and partakes in its architectural character of more variety than is found in any other of its elevations. This front has a projecting centre, with a loggia and lateral pilasters, and is crowned with a dome. The buildings east and west of the centre, are in the style of the northern part of the quadrangle, while the projecting extremities are enriched with pilasters, and varied by central loggie supporting pediments. This superstructure is seated on an immense basement, having in front a spacious terrace, which commands a very fine view of the river, with Waterloo, Westminster, and Blackfriars Bridges, and the various objects which rise on the shores of the Thames.

The terrace extends from east to west 111 feet, and is supported by a lofty arcade, relieved by projections, which are heightened by rusticated columns of the Doric order. The arches are twenty-two in number, besides a water gate in the centre, the key stone of which is enriched with a colossal mask of a river god. The eighth arch from either side of the centre, more lofty than the others, is a landing place, and above these arches upon the balustrade, which is continued along the front of the terrace, are sculptured lions couchant, admirably executed. It has been objected that this front of Somerset House, presenting itself to the Thames, is broken into too many parts, which, although separately considered, are elegant, do not combine so as to produce one grand and simple object, a defect which becomes more evident, when viewed from the water; but it is at the same time readily acknowledged, that there are many parts of the edifice, which determine beyond all challenge, the classical taste and professional superiority of Sir William Chambers; and no doubt can be entertained, but that Somerset House may still be considered as one of the principal ornaments of the Metropolis.

The course of education pursued at King's College, comprises religious and moral instruction, in conformity with the principles of the established Church; and the students received into the College or senior department, consist of King's College students, Medical students, and occasional students, who are admitted to attend any particular course of lectures, but are not entitled to compete for the prizes.

WESTMINSTER SCHOOL.

There appears to have been a school attached to the Abbey of Westminster from the time of its foundation. Ingulphus, Abbot of Crowland, mentions having been educated at it, and speaks of the disputations he maintained with the Queen of Edward the Confessor, and of the presents she made him in money in his boyish days. The present royal School or College, situated on the southern side of the Abbey Church, was founded by Queen Elizabeth in the year 1590, for the education of forty boys, who are called the Queen's or King's scholars, according to the reigning sovereign. This school is one of the most considerable in the kingdom, having been the place of education for the sons of the nobility and gentry for many years past, for the accommodation of whom, there are several boarding houses in the neighbourhood. The opportunities here presented, of laying the foundation of intimacies with men, capable and likely to advance the fortunes of their associates in after life, are amongst the strongest arguments which the supporters of a public system of education have to advance, and are indeed arguments of great weight and importance. A certain number of scholars on the foundation, when properly qualified, are sent to Trinity College, Cambridge, or to Christ Church, Oxford, where they have a competent maintenance allowed. Four scholars are distinguished by the name of the Lords scholars, who receive an annual stipend out of certain rents settled for that purpose, by John Williams, D. D., Archbishop of York and Lord Keeper of the Great Seal.

THE ROYAL SOCIETY OF LITERATURE.

The House in which the meetings of this Society are now held, is in St. Martin's-place, opposite St. Martin's Church, a wide street lately made by the improvements in this neighbourhood, and was erected from designs by Decimus Burton. The Society was founded by George IV., and the first general meeting of this Society took place 17th June, 1823, when the constitution and regulations were settled. The Society was instituted for the advancement of literature, by the publication of inedited remains of ancient literature, and of such works as may be of great intrinsic value, but not of that popular character which usually claims the attention of publishers; by the promotion of discoveries in literature; by endeavour to fix the standard as far as it is practicable; and to preserve the purity of our language, by the critical improvement of our lexicography. By the reading at public meetings of interesting papers, on history, philosophy, poetry, philology, and the arts, and the publication of such of those papers, as shall be approved of, in the Society's Transactions. By the assignment of honorary rewards to works of great literary merit, and to important discoveries in literature, and by establishing a correspondence with learned men in Foreign Countries, for the purpose of literary enquiry and information. As a main auxiliary towards the attainment of these objects, his Majesty George IV. was pleased to assign to ten associates, the annual sum of 100 guineas, and also two medals of 50 guineas each, to be adjudged to literary works of eminent merit, and to important discoveries in literature. The great object of the Royal Society of Literature, is to render its pursuit honorable in itself, and beneficial in its results to society, by encouraging a strictly classical taste, an impartial and just system of criticism, pure morality, and sound learning. The president is the Bishop of Salisbury, and the librarian the Rev. Henry H. Baber.

THE RUSSELL INSTITUTION.

The building appropriated to the purposes of the Russell Institution, is situated in Great Coram-street, Russell-square, and was originally erected about 1801, from designs by Burton. It is ornamented by a well proportioned tetrastyle portico of the Pæstian Doric order, and in other respects displays great symmetrical beauty, and a correct observance of the principles of architecture in the profiles of the entablature, as well as the capitals of the columns. The Society was formed in the year 1808, with a view to promote the same objects as the Royal and London Institutions, in the neighbourhood in which it is established. It is governed by a president, vice-presidents, four trustees, eight managers, and a committee of sixteen members. They possess a valuable library, the whole length of the building in extent; at the formation of the institution, Nathaniel Highmore, L. L. D., was appointed to the office of librarian, but in 1825, Edward Wedlake Brayley, F. S. A., was appointed to the joint offices of secretary and librarian, by the managers and committee. A catalogue of the library, newly classed and arranged, with the rules for the government of the Institution, was printed in 1826. Besides a theatre for lectures, the building contains a convenient news room.

WESTERN INSTITUTION.

This Society, instituted for the diffusion of useful knowledge, amongst persons engaged in commercial and professional pursuits, is held in Leicester-square, where they have a good library, and rooms set apart for consulting books at the Institution, and another room in which newspapers and periodical publications may be read. The books, with some exceptions, are allowed to circulate amongst the subscribers.

LITERARY AND SCIENTIFIC INSTITUTIONS.

The above mentioned Societies are the most considerable, but there are others of great importance, although the objects for which they are designed, are not of such a general nature. The Highland Society of London, instituted in 1778, and incorporated in 1816, was established with a view to effect the following purposes: 1. The restoration of the Highland dress. 2. The preservation of the ancient Highland music. 3. Promoting the cultivation of the Celtic language. 4. Preserving the remains of Celtic literature. 5. Establishing public Institutions or Gaelic Schools, a Caledonian Asylum and Gaelic Chapel. 6. To extend the British Fishery. 7. To relieve distressed Highlanders distant from their home. 8. To keep up a martial spirit. And 9. To promote agricultural improvement. No less than three societies have already emanated from this patriotic society. As a literary body, they have published the poems of Ossian in the original language. None can be admitted as members, who are not natives or connected with the Highlands of Scotland, excepting twenty honorary members.

The Royal Asiatic Society, incorporated in 1824, is held in Grafton-street, Piccadilly, where also is their Museum.

A committee for the inspection of National Monuments was appointed in 1820; the meetings are held at No. 57, Lincoln's Inn Fields.

The Medico Botanical Society of London, formed in 1821, is held in Sackville-street, Piccadilly.

The Royal Academy of Music, instituted in 1822, is held in Tenterden-street, Hanover-square.

The Outman Society, instituted in 1820, for securing the advantages of benevolence and justice, with the aid of monitory suggestions in critical and ethical lectures, where no other provision can easily be made for that purpose, is held in New-street, Spring Gardens.

The Society for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge, is held at No. 59

Lincoln's Inn Fields, and is under the government of a committee, of which Lord Brougham is chairman, and Lord John Russell, vice-chairman.

The African Institution, instituted in 1807, is held in Fludyer-street, Westminster.

The Gwyneddigion Society was established in 1771, for the cultivation of the language and literature of Wales; the president is Hugh Hughes, Esq.

The Geographical Society, very lately formed, at present hold their meetings at the rooms of the Horticultural Society in Regent-street.

THE COLLEGE OF PHYSICIANS.

The College of Physicians, built from designs by Sir Robert Smirke, is situated in Pall Mall East, where it forms part of a fine groupe on the western side of Trafalgar-square. The College was chartered by King Henry VIII., and its incorporation was confirmed by Parliament in 1523. The body is allowed to have a common seal.

The arms of the College of Physicians, are Sable, a hand issuing from clouds feeling the pulse of an arm, also issuing from the sinister side of the shield, proper. In base, a pomegranate between five demi fleurs de lis bordering the edge of the escutcheon, or.

Thomas Linacre, who was successively physician to the Kings Henry VII., Henry VIII., Edward VI., and to the Princess Mary, is reputed the founder of the Royal College of Physicians in London, and obtained letters patent in 1518, from King Henry VIII., constituting a body of regular bred physicians, in whom was vested the sole right of examining and admitting persons to practice within the City of London, and seven miles round it; and also of licensing practitioners throughout the whole kingdom, excepting such as were graduates of Oxford or Cambridge, who, by virtue of their degrees, were independent of the College, excepting within London and its precincts. The College of Physicians likewise obtained authority to examine prescriptions and drugs in apothecaries shops. Dr. Linacre was the first president of the College, and continued in that office during the remainder of his life; at his death he bequeathed to the College his house in Knightrider-street, in which its meetings were held. They afterwards removed to a house in Amen Corner; here Dr. Harvey, an eminent physician, who first discovered the circulation of the blood, built a library, museum, and a public hall or convocation room; he also instituted an annual feast, at which a Latin oration should be spoken, in commemoration of the benefactors of the College. This building was entirely destroyed by the great fire of London in 1666, after which the College was rebuilt from a design by Sir Christopher Wren, on the western side of Warwick-lane, whence the learned body removed, 25th July, 1825, to the present College in Pall Mall east. On its principal front is a very fine hexastyle portico of the Ionic order. The new College was opened in the presence of their Royal Highnesses the Dukes of York, Sussex, Cambridge, and Gloucester, Prince Leopold, several Cabinet Ministers, and other distinguished persons; Sir Henry Hallford, Bart., the president, who on the same day received from his Majesty the Guelphic order, delivered an oration in Latin, attended by the officers of the Corporation, electors, censors, fellows, candidates, inceptor candidates, licentiates, &c., all the doctors who had honors wearing their scarlet robes. The opening of the New College is celebrated annually.

THE COLLEGE OF SURGEONS.

This edifice is situated on the southern side of Lincoln's Inn Square, and presents on its front a beautiful hexastyle portico of the Ionic order, derived from the Temple on the banks of the Ilyssus at Athens, surpassing many other attempts in Grecian architecture, in chaste simplicity and harmony of proportion; on the frieze is inscribed COLLEGIUM REGALE CHIRURGICVM. On the upper surface of the cornice is raised an attic, composed of a solid stylobate, with slight projections over each column, on these are placed antique bronze tripods, attributes of Apollo Medicus, and over the central intercolumniation are the armorial bearings of the College, supported by the classical figures of Machaon and Polidarius; the arms are quarterly, first and fourth Or, a serpent nowed with the head erect vert, second and third argent, a lion couchant proper, over all, on a cross engrailed azure, a regal crown between two portcullisses in fesse, and as many anchors in pale, all of the first. Crest, A hawk regardant, holding in its beak a broken arrow. Motto, Quæ prosunt omnibus artes.

The Surgeons and Barbers were by Charter in 1461, originally formed into one company, vide p. 95 ante, but by an act of Parliament in 1745, the Surgeons were declared a separate body. In the year 1800, they received from King George III. a charter, erecting the Surgeons into a Royal College. It consists of a master, two governors, and twenty assistants, with curators of the museums, professors, and honorary professors.

No person can practice surgery without being examined and approved by the College, and no person can be admitted into the situation of surgeon in the army or navy, until he has undergone an examination, and received a certificate from the College. The Institution of the College of Surgeons, and the power lately given by Parliament to them, and to the Company of Apothecaries, have placed medical practitioners in a much more respectable situation than they before stood. John Hunter, one of the most profound anatomists, and a sagacious and expert surgeon, who died in 1793, by his will, directed that his Museum should be offered to the purchase of Government, and after negociation it was bought for the public use for the sum of £15,000, and given to the College of Surgeons, on condition of exposing it to public view on certain days in the week, and giving a course of annual lectures explanatory of its contents. A large museum for its reception has been built, adjoining the College, and in 1810, the first course of lectures was delivered by Sir Everard Home, and Sir William Blizard. The collection of comparative anatomy which Mr. Hunter left behind him, must be considered as a proof of talent, assiduity and labour, which cannot be contemplated without admiration. His attempt in this collection has been to exhibit the gradations of nature, from the most simple state in which life is found to exist up to the most perfect and complex of the animal creation, to man himself. By his art and care he has been able so to expose and preserve in a dried state or in spirits, the corresponding parts of animal bodies, that the various links in the chain of perfectness, may be readily followed and clearly understood. They are classed in the following order: First, The parts constructed for motion. Secondly, The parts essential to animals, as respecting their own internal economy. Thirdly, Parts super-added for purposes concerned with external objects. Fourthly, Parts designed for the propagation of the species, and the maintenance and preservation of the young. To go farther into these particulars would lead to a detail, inconsistent with the nature of this work, but they are of the most curious kind, and may be found described in a manner at once clear and instructive, in the life of Sir John Hunter by Sir Everard Home. John Hunter was a man such as few ages produce, who by his contributions to the stores of knowledge, will ever deserve the gratitude and veneration of posterity.

WESTMINSTER HOSPITAL.

This Hospital, established as early as the year 1719, has been lately rebuilt by subscription, on an enlarged scale, near the western entrance to the Abbey Church. It is erected in the old English style of architecture; the hospital is supported by voluntary contribution, and is under the patronage of the King; the vice patron being the Duke of Sussex; there are also a president and vice presidents, and two treasurers; patients are admitted on the recommendation of governors, but accidents are received at all times, and the hospital has also a great number of out patients.

ST. GEORGE'S HOSPITAL

This Hospital was established in 1733, to receive all poor sick and lame persons recommended by a governor, who are supplied with advice, medicine, diet, and washing, during their stay in the Hospital, and sometimes with clothes. Out patients are also admitted. It is under the patronage of the King; there are also six vice presidents, and a treasurer. The Hospital, situated at Hyde Park Corner, with a front towards Grosvenor-place, was rebuilt in 1827, from designs by Wilkins, in a style of architecture sufficiently magnificent for the residence of a nobleman of the highest distinction. It seems to be of little importance to an architect, whether a palace or a barrack, a hospital or a theatre is to be built, the Temples of Greece are to be resorted to in all cases for a model, but surely some distinguishing character might be given to buildings, which are destined for such widely different purposes.

ROYAL CHARING CROSS HOSPITAL.

This building, in King William-street, Charing Cross, was founded 15th September, 1831, his Royal Highness the Duke of Sussex laying the first stone. It is under the patronage of the Dukes of Cumberland, Sussex, Cambridge, Gloucester, and of Leopold, King of the Belgians; the patronesses are the Queen, the Princesses Augusta and Sophia, the Duchesses of Kent, Cumberland, and Cambridge; the vice patrons are numerous, chiefly the nobility, and there are two treasurers. It was opened in 1833, for the reception of patients.

THE FOUNDLING HOSPITAL.

The Foundling Hospital, situated in Guildford-street, Russell-square, consists of two large buildings directly opposite to each other, having between them a chapel, and in front a large open space, with a colonnade on each side, extending to the entrance gates; these colonnades are now enclosed as workshops, where the children are taught sundry handicraft trades. In erecting this Hospital, particular care seems to have been taken to render the building neat and substantial, without resorting to the costly enrichments of architecture; but it was scarcely completed, when several of the most eminent artists contributed many works of art, which are still preserved here, as monuments of the abilities and of the charitable benefactions of the respective artists.

Thomas Coram, an eminent philanthropist, bred to the sea, originally projected the Foundling Hospital, in which humane design he persevered many years, and at last obtained the royal charter for it. For many years after its institution, this Hospital was an object of popular attention, numbers of affluent persons were ardent to encourage it, and benefactions to the Hospital flowed in, in great abundance. It was taken under the direction of Parliament, and from the year 1756 to 1759, annual and liberal grants were made for its support, in consequence of which children were poured in from every part of the kingdom. The indiscriminate admission of infants into the Hospital, was at length put a stop to; parliamentary support was withdrawn, and the Institution left to be maintained by the generosity of individuals.

In the year 1739, the Governors took a house in Hatton Garden for temporary use, and in 1741 admitted children; they afterwards made a purchase of the land on which the present Hospital was built in 1750. Children are here received in infancy, baptized, and sent to nurse in the country till a certain age, then educated in the Hospital, and, at a proper time, bound as apprentices to trades.

In the Court Room of the Hospital are four pictures from Scriptural History, painted by Hayman, Hogarth, Highmore, and Wills, besides drawings of the most considerable Hospitals in and about London, by Hartley, Wilson, Wale, and Gainsborough; other ornaments in the Court Room, were presented by artists who were desirous of contributing towards its embellishment. The stucco work is by Wilton; a table with a curiously carved stand by Sanderson, the glass by Hallett, and the marble chimney piece by Deval; over the chimney piece is a bas relief, representing children employed in husbandry and navigation, executed and presented by Rysbrack. In other rooms of the Hospital are portraits of several governors and benefactors, King George II. by Shakelton, Captain Coram by Hogarth, Mr. Milner by Hudson, Dr. Mead by Ramsey, Mr. Jacobson by Hudson, Mr. Emerson by Highmore, the Earl of Dartmouth by Sir Joshua Reynolds, Taylor White, Esq., in crayons, by Coates, &c. In the Dining Hall is a picture of the English Fleet in the Downs, by Monamy; and in another room is The March to Finchley, by Hogarth. The altar piece in the Chapel is by West; and the first organ was presented by Handel, who occasionally performed on it for the benefit of the charity at its foundation. By the Charter of the Hospital, the governors were empowered to purchase landed property of the value of £4,000. per annum, in pursuance of which they became possessed of considerable land in the vicinity of the Hospital; several streets and two squares have been erected upon it, on the western side of the Hospital is Brunswick-square, and on the eastern is Mecklenburgh-square. The streets are distinguished by the names of persons who have been active in promoting the interests of the Charity.

THE MIDDLESEX HOSPITAL.

This Hospital, situated at the end of Berners-street in Charles-street, was instituted in the year 1745, and was originally carried on in Windmill-street, Tottenham Court-road. The Governors in 1747, extended their plan, when the great increase of patients obliged them to enlarge the edifice, and the benefactions of the public having at the same time considerably increased, the present building was erected in 1755, at which time it was situated in the open fields. It is plain in its exterior, but has within every convenience necessary for the charitable purposes to which it is applied.

The Hospital is principally devoted for lying-in married women, but in 1792, a ward was opened for the cure of cancer. Patients are admitted on the recommendation of a Governor. The Hospital is governed by a board, a medical committee, and a committee of accounts.

DISPENSARIES AND MEDICAL CHARITIES.

London has been characterized as surpassing every other City in the world, in the number and extent of its Charitable Institutions; besides the Hospitals already mentioned, there are numerous societies in Westminster, formed for the relief of the sick and poor. Little more can be done here than to enumerate them, and describe such as have any thing peculiar in their construction.

The Lock Hospital in Grosvenor-place, near Hyde Park Corner, was instituted about 1746, for patients suffering under the venereal disease, who were excluded from other charities; the patient can never be relieved twice, and the house is formed with a view to reformation. To this Society, as at the London and St. George's Hospitals, another is attached, called the Lock Asylum, for the support of those who are destitute of friends, until they can procure employment, on the excellent plan of the Samaritan Society, which is annexed to the London Hospital.

The principal Lying-in Charities not enumerated, are the British, in Chapel-street, May Fair, instituted in 1749.

The Queen's Charity, Lisson-green, established in 1752, and the Westminster Lying-in Hospital, lately rebuilt in York-road, Lambeth.

The Asylum and Magdalen Hospitals have been already mentioned.

The Infirmary of most importance, are The Royal Infirmary for diseases of the eye, established in 1804, in Cork-street, Burlington-gardens. The Royal Westminster Infirmary, established in 1806, and situated in Mary-le-bone-street, Piccadilly. An Infirmary for diseases of the spine, in St. Martin's-lane; the utility of charities which afford relief in particular disorders is obvious, as it enables the medical practitioner by attention to one complaint, the better to subdue it.

The Dispensaries are highly useful establishments, formed generally on the same uniform plan, and differ only in their situation. They have all persons of high rank as their presidents, &c. and are governed by committees. The Westminster General Dispensary in Gerrard-street, Soho, was instituted in 1774. The Endeavour and Benevolent Society, founded in 1794. Mary-le-bone General Dispensary in Welbeck-street, was instituted in 1785. The Western Dispensary for the relief of the sick poor and for vaccination, in Charles-street, Westminster, was instituted in 1789. The Bloomsbury Dispensary, under the patronage of the Duke of Bedford, was instituted in 1801, and is held in Great Russell-street. A Rupture Society for the relief of both sexes, was instituted in 1804. The Royal Jennerian Society, for the extermination of the small pox by the extension of vaccination, was founded in 1803, and is under the patronage of the King, and the whole of the Royal family. The National Vaccine Establishment, in Russell-place, Fitzroy-square, has for its president, the president of the College of Physicians; the physicians are the two senior censors of the College of Physicians; and the surgeons are the president and senior vice-president of the College of Surgeons. The Royal Universal Infirmary for Children, instituted in 1816, is situated in Waterloo Bridge Road. The Royal Dispensary, for diseases of the ear, in Dean-street, Soho, was instituted in 1816. At this dispensary the deaf and dumb are also admitted.

OLD THEATRES OF LONDON.

In the year 1574, a patent was granted to James Burbage and others, servants to the Earl of Leicester, who was then Lord Steward of the Household to Queen Elizabeth, and this appears to have been the first company of players on record. Twelve players were afterwards allowed wages and livery, as grooms of the chamber in the royal household: whence the principal company are still called his Majesty's servants, under that title they were originally licenced to perform by King James in 1603. The Rose Theatre, one of the earliest playhouses, stood on the Bankside, Southwark, and was built before the year 1590. It was occupied by the respective companies of the Lord Strange, the Earl of Sussex, the Lord Admiral, and the Earl of Pembroke. About the year 1613, it was entirely forsaken, but was re-opened about seven years afterwards for a short time, with an exhibition of prize fighters.

The Hope Theatre was also situated on the Bankside, here the servants of the Lady Elizabeth performed in 1613, and it was at this theatre that the "Bartholomew fair" of Ben Jonson was produced; the theatre was converted into his Majesty's Bear garden, in the year 1632. That savage diversion for above two centuries, was considered as an appendage to Royalty, and one of the usual sights of London.

The Swan Theatre, also on the Bankside, is mentioned as existing in 1613, but is known to have afterwards served for exhibitions of prize fighting. The Hope and the Swan are described as standing very near the Globe, and forming three famous Amphitheatres.

The precise date of the erection of the Globe Theatre, is supposed to have been 1597. It was of considerable size, and built of wood, with a roof covered with rushes, and having the area open, it being intended as a summer theatre; a turret above the roof served to display a flag, the common distinction of places used for public diversion. Whence the name of the theatre was derived is now uncertain, but on the front of the building is said to have been a painting of Hercules, supporting the globe, with the appropriate motto: Totus mundus agit histrionem. Here it was that Shakspeare himself performed, and many of his celebrated plays were the foundation and continued the popularity of the Globe Theatre. The players at the Globe were known as the Lord Chamberlain's servants, until the grant of King James's licence in 1603, when they first obtained the title of the King's servants, and continued acting at this theatre at stated periods, until a fire consumed the whole premises on St. Peter's Day, 29th June, 1613. This accident happened during the discharge of a peal of chambers, or small cannon, in Shakspeare's play of Henry VIIIth., when the stopple of one of them having lodged in the thatch, while the attention of the audience was too much engaged with the actors to notice the danger, the fire spread rapidly, and the whole building was destroyed in two hours. In the following year a larger theatre was built of an oval form, and with more of ornament in its construction, which was repossessed by the company acting at the Blackfriars, who continued to perform at the Globe with undiminished popularity, until the Revolution. The exact spot upon which this theatre stood, is said to be in Maid-lane, near the foot of the Southwark Bridge. Its site is described as extending from the western side of Counter-alley, to the northern side of the passage leading to Brook's cooperage, and was bounded on the east by Globe-alley.

The Fortune Theatre, between Golden-lane and Whitecross-street, was erected in 1599, by Henslowe and Alleyn the actors, and was opened by Alleyn with the Lord Admiral's servants, who had previously performed at the Rose, and who, in 1603, changed their patron for the gallant Henry Frederic, Prince of Wales. It is usually described as "a vast theatre," and continued a favorite place of amusement with the public for several years. The theatre took fire on 9th December, 1621, and was entirely destroyed, but was speedily rebuilt on an extended scale, forming a large round brick building, with a figure of Fortune on the front. The new theatre was opened by the Palgraves servants, who appear to have continued performing here till 1640, when they removed to the Red Bull. It was devised by the will of Alleyn to Dulwich College, who took possession of the theatre in 1649, and upon the Archbishop's visitation in 1667, it was stated that the College had been brought in debt by the fall of the Fortune playhouse. It is sometimes mentioned as "The Old Playhouse in Redcross-street."

The site of the White Friars Theatre, was between the eastern gate of the Temple and Water-lane, Fleet-street, upon the precincts of the once noted Kingdom of Alsatia, whose lawless origin is not clearly ascertained. The comedy of "Woman is a Weathercock," printed in 1612, was acted divers times privately at the White Friars, by the children of the Revels; but traces of this theatre are very indistinct.

The Salisbury Court Theatre, built in 1629, was usually called the Private House, Dorset-court, the meaning of which distinction has not hitherto been explained. The Blackfriars Theatre, and the Cock Pit in Drury-lane, were also called private houses, and it is generally understood that the three were built exactly alike, having pits enclosed for the gentry, and that they acted by candle light. This house was shut up during the Commonwealth, but was re-opened in June, 1660. In the month of November following, it was taken possession of by D'Avenant, whose company probably played here alternately with the Cock Pit, until the removal in 1662, to the New Theatre in Portugal-row, the site of which is now occupied by the extensive warehouses of china and glass, belonging to Messrs. Spode and Copeland.

The house in Portugal-row proving too small, Sir William D'Avenant projected a larger theatre in Dorset Gardens, his Patent of January, 1663, granting the power to build in "the Cities of London and Westminster, or the suburbs thereof." The design of this theatre is attributed to Sir Christopher Wren, and it was opened by D'Avenant's widow, aided by Betterton, at the head of the Duke of York's company, 9th November, 1671. The novel introduction of operas and farces, and the revival of such old plays as admitted a display of scenery, proved sufficient attraction for some time, but the embellishments and dresses required for some of the plays, proved too costly for the actors to derive a competent salary; which circumstance led to the junction of the Duke of York's company with their rivals, the King's company, at Drury Lane Theatre.

On 10th August, 1682, the united company performed the tragedy of Romulus and Hirsilia, or the Sabine War, with an epilogue written by Mrs. Behn, and spoken by Lady Slingsby, which reflecting on the Duke of Monmouth, the Lord Chamberlain is said to have ordered both ladies into custody, to answer for the affront. This playhouse is generally described as The Duke's Theatre in Dorset Gardens, but upon the accession to the throne of the Duke of York, the house was distinguished as The Queen's Theatre, which name was not afterwards altered; and theatrical performances at this house appear to have finally terminated with the season of 1697; the building was totally deserted in 1703, having existed only 32 years.

The first Theatre built after the Restoration of King Charles II., was in Vere-street, Clare Market, then recently established, on the site of a tennis court and bowling alley, which formerly stood in what was called St. Clement's Fields. It was erected by Charles Gibbons, and was opened on 8th November, 1660, with the play of Henry IV. by the company from the Red Bull in St. John-street, under the direction of Thomas Killigrew, groom of the bed chamber to the King; and on 6th December the same year, upon the performance of Othello, the first time that season, it is said an actress first appeared on the English stage, but the name of the heroine is not preserved. In the previous reign, masques and balls had been frequently represented at court, by the Queen of Charles I. and her ladies. At the Vere-street Theatre, Killigrew's company continued under the title of the King and Queen's company till 1673, when they removed to the newly built theatre in Drury-lane, and it does not appear that this house was again used for dramatic representations. The building must have been very substantial, as reputedly it stood till destroyed by a fire in 1809. Drury Lane Theatre was originally erected in 1674, and was under the management of Betterton, an actor, who at the command of the King, went to Paris for the purpose of examining the French scenery, and at his return, made such improvements here, as added greatly to the lustre of the English stage. He it was who afterwards built the playhouse in Lincoln's Inn Fields, which was opened in 1695; he retired from the stage in 1705, at the age of 70.

OLD DRURY LANE THEATRE.

It was at this Theatre that Barton Booth, a celebrated tragedian, made his appearance, in Addison's play of Cato, in 1712. The reputation which he acquired by the performance of this character, induced him to desire a share in the management of the theatre, and through the interest of Lord Bolingbroke, all former licenses were recalled, and a new one granted in 1713, in which Booth's name was added to those of Cibber, Wilks, and Dogget. After the death of Queen Anne, King George I. granted a patent to Sir Richard Steele, who joined Wilks, Cibber, and Booth. Steele's patent being revoked by the King, he published "a state of the case between the Lord Chamberlain of his Majesty's Household, and the Governor of the Royal Company of Comedians," in 1720. In 1736, the whole of the theatre became the property of Charles Fleetwood, who in 1744 sold the patent, a third share of which fell into the hands of Lacey. David Garrick, an unrivalled actor, made his first appearance at Goodman's Fields Theatre in 1741, he afterwards entered into an engagement with Fleetwood, at Drury Lane, of which theatre he became joint patentee with Lacey in 1747. On 20th September of that year, it was opened with a pro logue, written by Dr. Johnson, and it will never be forgotten how much the reputation of Shakspeare was revived by the excellence of Garrick's performance. His share in directing the public taste towards the study of Shakspeare, was perhaps greater than that of any individual in his time, and such was his zeal and such his success in this laudable attempt, that he may be readily forgiven the ridiculous jubilee at Stratford on Avon, Shakspeare's birth place, which he projected in 1769. In 1773 Lacey died, and left his share to his son, and the whole management now devolving on Garrick, he made several alterations and enlarged the theatre, of which Louthembourg superintended the scenery and costume. Garrick finally left the stage in June, 1776, and disposed of his share of the patent to Sheridan, Linley, and Ford, who soon afterwards purchased the other share of Lacey. In 1791, the theatre was pulled down for the purpose of rebuilding it, from designs by Holland, and it was re-opened on 12th March, 1794, with an oratorio, and on 21st April, with Macbeth, and a prologue by General Fitz Patrick. The dimensions of the theatre were 320 feet by 155 feet, the pit held 800 persons, and the receipts of the house when completely filled, were £826. The roof was surmounted by a colossal statue of Apollo. On the evening of 24th February, 1809, this theatre was burnt to the ground. Mr. Whitbread projected the plan of the new theatre, and for that purpose brought a bill into Parliament in 1810. The first stone of the present building was laid 29th October, 1811, and it was opened on 10th October, 1812. It was erected from designs by Benj. Wyatt; and the plan was derived from that of the great theatre at Bourdeaux, supposed to be the best in Europe for the accurate conveyance of musical sounds.

NEW DRURY LANE THEATRE.

The general form of The Theatre Royal Drury Lane, is that of a parallelogram, 237 feet by 131 feet, independently of scene rooms, which extend 93 feet farther eastward. The principal front in Brydges-street, is of the Grecian Ionic order, to which in 1820 was added a portico, surmounted by a statue of Shakspeare. The front in Russell-street has a continued colonnade, beneath which is a range of spacious doorways and windows. The easternmost entrance communicates with the stage, but the building is on this front masked by the houses in Drury-lane. The entrance Hall opens upon a rotunda and staircase to the boxes as well as to the pit lobbies. The Rotunda, a very beautiful portion of the interior, is 30 feet in diameter, and contains a circular gallery, crowned by an elegant dome. In the basement story fronting the entrance, is a statue of Shakspeare, inscribed with this characteristic verse: "He was not for an age, but for all time." The staircases are flanked by Ionic columns of porphyry, and the walls of the rotunda in the upper story, are enriched by Corinthian columns, having a niche between every alternate column, filled with statues of tragedy, comedy, music, and dancing. The Saloon of the theatre is 87 feet 6 inches, by 27 feet 6 inches in dimension, and the height from the floor is 31 feet. The enrichments are of the Corinthian order. Refreshment rooms adjoin the extremities of the saloon. The auditory of the theatre is extremely chaste and beautiful, the form being nearly that of the ancient lyre, having a distance from the front of the opposite boxes to the curtain, of 48 feet. There are three circles of boxes, the upper circle and tiers including both the slips and lower gallery, are each supported in front by slender shafts reeded, and at the back by pilasters. Grecian ornaments in running patterns, adorn the facie of the different tiers. From brackets attached to the bases of the shafts in the first and second tiers, rich cut glass lustres are suspended; and the seats of the pit have a railed back attached to each alternate row. The pit will contain 800 persons, and the total number the theatre will hold, is 3060 persons. The ceiling is formed by a vast circle including a lesser one, classically ornamented, and from the centre descends a very large cut glass lustre, lighted by gas. When Elliston in 1818 became manager of this theatre, the proscenium was altered, and stage doors were introduced, there having been none in the original building, large tripods with lustres occupying the place usually appropriated to those characteristics of a theatre. On each side the proscenium are two columns of the Corinthian order fluted, and elevated on pedestals supporting an entablature, above which in niches are figures of tragedy and comedy. Spanning the curtain is an elliptical arch, from which descends a representation of drapery, having the royal arms in its centre. The width of the proscenium is 40 feet, and its height to the centre of the arch is 43 feet. In the construction of this building, care has been taken to secure the safety of the audience in case of fire; all the corridors, lobbies and staircases are of stone, and of sufficient size to contain the entire number of persons that can at any one time be assembled in the theatre, by which means a safe egress for the audience is at all times certain. The stage is of great extent, being carried to the extremity of the outward wall, 96 feet 3 inches, and is in width 77 feet 5 inches. The floor is pierced by numerous apertures for descent, and for raising of machinery, the apparatus for which is on a floor beneath the stage. The painting room, 70 feet long and about 30 feet wide, is over the extremity of the stage. The manager's room, actresses dressing rooms, &c., are on the northern side of the stage, and on the opposite side are the two green rooms, the prompter's room, the actors dressing rooms, &c. In the principal green room is a large looking glass in panels, and busts of Shakspeare, Garrick, and of Mrs. Siddons. The several departments of the theatre are those of the stage, the orchestra, the painting room, the machinery, the wardrobe, and the house department, in all of which there must be many subdivisions in an establishment of such magnitude.

COVENT GARDEN THEATRE.

The first Theatre erected in Covent Garden, was opened by John Rich, the celebrated harlequin, son of Christopher Rich, patentee of Drury Lane Theatre, and who makes a conspicuous figure in Cibber's Apology, and in the Tatler. On the death of his father in 1715, John Rich opened the theatre in Lincoln's Inn Fields, and spoke a prologue on the occasion. The patent was afterwards removed to Covent Garden, where having a peculiar talent for pantomimes, and a spirit which spared no expence in rendering them captivating by their splendor; he withstood the force of the most excellent actors that ever appeared on the English stage, and amassed a considerable fortune for his family. Rich may be called the inventor of the English harlequin, which is very different from the harlequin of the Italian stage. His own inimitable performance of the character, under the fictitious name of Lun, was thus alluded to:

When Lun appeared, with matchless art and whim,
He gave the power of speech to every limb,
Tho' mask'd and mute, conveyed his quick intent,
And told, in frolic gestures, all he meant.

He died in the 70th year of his age, having been forty years manager of a theatre, without a partner.

Rich left the theatre to Beard, a singer, who had married his daughter, to Wilford brother of Mrs. Rich, and others. Beard's first appearance after he became manager, was on 10th October, 1759, in the character of Macheath in Gay's Beggars Opera.

In 1767, Messrs. Colman, Harris, Powell and Rutherford, purchased the theatre of Rich's heirs, but in about seven years Harris became the principal proprietor. In 1792, the theatre was partly rebuilt from a design by Holland. On 20th September, 1808, Covent Garden Theatre was burned to the ground, several adjoining houses were likewise destroyed, and twenty persons killed by the falling of the walls of the theatre. In addition to the usual scenic stock, a quantity of new scenery was consumed; an organ left by Handel, as a bequest to the theatre, and valued at £1,000, was burnt; and amongst other losses sustained, the Beef-Steak Club, which held their meetings at the top of the theatre, lost all their stock of old wine.

The foundation stone of Covent Garden New Theatre, was laid by his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, on 31st December, 1808. It was rebuilt from designs by Sir Robert Smirke, and was opened 18th September, 1809, with the tragedy of Macbeth. The theatre stands upon an area of about 220 feet by 170 feet, and is insulated on the west by Princes-place, on the south by the Bedford Avenue, and on north and east by Hart-street and Bow-street. The principal front in Bow-street, is adorned by a massive tetrastyle portico of the Grecian Doric order, derived from the Temple of Minerva in the Acropolis at Athens, but the ornaments of the frieze and tympan are omitted. On this front of the theatre are sculptured bassi relievi, designed by Flaxman, divided by the intervention of the portico into two parts, that on the northern side representing the ancient, and the other on the southern the modern drama. In the centre of the sculpture representing the ancient drama, sit three Greek poets, Eschylus, Aristophanes, and Menander, before the latter, Thalia presents herself as the object of their imitation, and is followed by Polyhymnia, Euterpe, Clio, and Terpsichore, attended by three nymphs, who are governing Pegasus, the favorite of the muses. Minerva is placed opposite to Eschylus, the father of tragedy, near whom is Bacchus, and behind the goddess of wisdom is Melpomene. Two furies are pursuing Orestes, who implores the aid of Apollo. The modern drama is typified by a central figure of Shakspeare summoning Caliban, Ferdinand, and Miranda, with Prospero; above is represented Ariel, playing on a lyre; this part of the composition is terminated by Hecate and Lady Macbeth, followed by Macbeth, who turns from the body of Duncan. Near Shakspeare is Milton contemplating Urania, and Sampson Agonistes chained at his feet; the remaining figures refer to the Masque of Comus; the two brothers drive before them Comus and the Bacchanals, the enchanted lady is seated in a chair, and the sculpture is terminated by two tigers. The statues of Melpomene and Thalia, are placed in niches at each extremity of this front, the former by Rossi, and the latter by Flaxman. The principal entrance to the theatre from Bow-street, opens upon a vestibule 40 feet square, ornamented by Grecian lamps upon pedestals of porphyry. On each side of the grand staircase is an Ionic colonnade. The columns are of porphyry, and the walls Sienna marble. The ante room is decorated with pilasters, corresponding with the columns of the staircase. In the centre of this room is a statue of Shakspeare by Rossi, represented standing in a graceful attitude, folding his drapery round him. The Allegro and Pensive are painted in bas relief, over the entrance of the opposite corridor. The Saloon, 60 feet by 20 in dimension, is enriched by paintings from scenes in the plays of Shakspeare, and eight mythological statues from the antique. The Auditory is of the horseshoe form, the depth from the front lights of the stage to the front of the boxes opposite, being 52 feet 9 inches. There are three circles of boxes, and there are seven boxes above, which are parallel with the lower gallery. The pit will contain 750 persons. The coup d'œil of the audience part of the theatre is very splendid and imposing: around the circles of boxes are the national emblems, the lyre and other appropriate devices in rich classical borderings. The boxes are supported by small columns, fluted and gilt. The middle part of the ceiling is circular, and from its centre is suspended a chandelier, illumined by two circles of gas lights. The proscenium is decorated by pilasters of Sienna marble with gilded capitals, on each side, supporting an elliptical arch 42 feet in diameter; the royal arms are placed above the arch, with the motto Veluti in Speculum, and the drapery of scarlet hanging within the arch, is enriched with golden wreaths; the height from the stage to the centre of the arch, is 36 feet 9 inches. The stage is very spacious, and measures from the front lights to the back wall 68 feet, having a width from wall to wall of 82 feet 6 inches. The fly's, as they are called, over the stage, consist of two stories, where the machinery for raising the scenes is situated, and adjoining them is a painting room, 72 feet by 32 feet in dimension. By means of slides the stage can be opened at any part, to admit of sinking the scenes, or for the traps. About ten feet below this is another stage, where the machinery is placed; under both these stages is a room, of sufficient depth to allow a scene the entire height of the stage to be sunk down, and so complete is all this machinery, that a scene the whole extent of the stage, will, if required, disappear in a moment, either by sinking, rising, or going off at the sides. In the construction of the theatre, the security of the audience was consulted in every part, as far as was practicable and consistent with the nature and uses of such a building. The basement story is arched, and all the principal staircases are of stone. The theatre is only calculated to contain 2800 persons, but on December 3rd, 1823, when the King was present, 4255 persons paid at the doors.

The Theatres Royal Drury Lane and Covent Garden, are usually termed The Winter Theatres; they generally open in October, and close within the month of June.

There are no dramatic performances on 30th January, the anniversary of King Charles's martyrdom, Ash Wednesday, on Wednesday and Friday during Lent, Whitsun Eve and Christmas Eve, and during Passion Week they are entirely closed.

THE KING'S THEATRE, OR ITALIAN OPERA HOUSE.

The first company of Italian singers was brought by Killigrew from Venice to London, about the year 1688, they performed detached pieces in the houses of the nobility. The first opera performed entirely in Italian and by Italian singers on the English stage, was Handel's Rinaldo, produced in 1711. Sir John Vanbrugh, a gentleman eminent in the very different characters of dramatic poet and architect, raised a subscription of thirty persons of rank at £100 each, for building a theatre in the Haymarket; on the first stone of which was inscribed the words "Little Whig," as a compliment to Lady Sunderland, a celebrated beauty, the toast and pride of that party. The theatre being finished, it was opened under the management of Vanbrugh and Congreve, 9th April, 1705, with "The Triumph of Love," a translated opera set to Italian music, which met with a cold reception, and was followed by "The Confederacy," produced almost immediately afterwards by Sir John Vanbrugh, who shortly became sole manager. The spaciousness of the dome in the new theatre, by preventing the actors from being distinctly heard, was an inconvenience not to be surmounted. It continued open with doubtful success, till the year 1720, when a sum of £50,000, was raised by subscription, to support the Italian opera in London, to which King George I. contributed £1,000. Handel was commissioned to engage the singers, and the first opera performed under this establishment was called "Numitor," composed by Giovanni Porta, of Venice.

On 18th June, 1789, the whole of this superb edifice, which had been erected by Sir John Vanbrugh, was in less than two hours utterly destroyed by fire, with the exception of the beautiful and unique staircase leading to the galleries.

The first stone of the new building was laid by the Earl of Buckinghamshire, 3rd April, 1790. It was designed and erected by Signor Novelsiowski. In dimension the Opera House very nearly approaches the great theatre at Milan. The stage is 60 feet deep, and 80 feet wide; from the orchestra to the centre of the front boxes is 66 feet, and the pit will hold 800 persons. There are five tiers of boxes each box enclosed by curtains in the manner of the Neapolitan Theatres, and is furnished with chairs. Attached to the establishment is a Concert room, 95 feet by 46 feet. The structure of the King's Theatre is much admired, for the adaptation of its shape to the purpose of effectually transmitting the sound from the stage to the audience. The company of performers at this theatre, are of two distinct classes, as attached to the opera and ballet. The whole of the exterior of the King's Theatre, was rebuilt from designs by Nash and Repton, in a Palladian style of architecture, with arcades and colonnades, very necessary appendages to such a building. In the centre of the front towards the Haymarket, is a sculptured panel in basso relievo, representing the origin and progress of music, executed from designs by Bubb.

THEATRE ROYAL HAYMARKET.

This Theatre stands on the eastern side of the Haymarket, where a building called the Little Theatre was erected in 1720, by Potter, a builder, on a speculation of letting it to Companies of Foreign performers, at that time encouraged by the nobility, through whose influence they procured licenses to perform. In 1747, Foote commenced here the representation of a new species of entertainment, written and performed by himself, called "The Diversions of the Morning," this piece was nothing more than the introduction of well known characters in real life, whose manner of conversing and expressing themselves, he had the talent of imitating, copying not only the manner and voice, but in some degree, even the persons of those he ridiculed, the author being warmly patronized, altered the title of his piece to "Mr. Foote's giving tea to his Friends;" he represented it for upwards of forty mornings to crowded audiences. He afterwards produced "An Auction of Pictures," in which he introduced several new characters, all however popular and extremely well known; he himself represented all the principal characters of each piece, where his mimic powers were necessarily shifting from one to another, with all the dexterity of Proteus. Foote, in the year 1766, obtained a royal licence to act plays at the Haymarket Theatre during his natural life, the seasons commencing on 15th May, and concluding on 15th September. Foote purchased the premises, and incorporated a house in Little Suffolk-street with the theatre, built a portico on the front, and added a second gallery to the auditory. At Foote's death, Colman obtained the theatre, who in 1805 sold a share to Morris, who at present is in possession of the whole. At the close of the season of 1820, the Old Theatre was pulled down, and a few feet distant from its site, a new building was erected from the designs of Nash. Upon the entrance front is a hexastyle Corinthian portico, and above the pediment are nine circular windows, contrived to give light to the lobbies of the gallery in a tasteful manner. The auditory is remarkable for having the sides strait, an inconvenient arrangement for which no good reason can possibly be given. It differs in this respect from any other theatre in London, and is also the only theatre in which gas has not been introduced. The arch of the proscenium and that part of the auditory where the side and front boxes join, are supported by palm trees richly gilt. Over the proscenium are the royal arms: the entrance to the stage is on the eastern front in Suffolk-street.

Some of the pieces performed at the Haymarket Theatre in the reign of George II., were the production of Fielding, who, for popularity, was most unsparing of the prime minister, Sir Robert Walpole and his friends, which circumstance, it is believed, confirmed the opinion of the minister in the necessity of restraining theatrical productions and performances, and hastened the passing of the licensing act in 1737, the restrictions of which commenced on 24th June. It is entitled "A Bill for restraining the number of Houses for playing of Interludes, and for the better regulating common players of Interludes." It was at that time proposed to limit the number of playhouses, and for that purpose recited the letters patent granted to Killigrew, &c. to D'Avenant, &c. to Wilks, Cibber, and Booth, for 21 years, and the charter for 21 years held by the Royal Academy of Music, under which last the company at the King's Theatre performed Italian Operas. Various memorials were presented to the House of Commons against the Bill, and the strong representation of facts made by the several cases, deferred the measures at first proposed, which however became established as a law in 1737, by an act passed to explain the old vagrant act.

THE ENGLISH OPERA HOUSE.

In the year 1808, S. A. Arnold, the son of Dr. Arnold, an eminent musical composer, obtained leave from the Lord Chamberlain to establish an English Opera, who immediately entered into a treaty for the purchase of the Lyceum, originally built by a society of painters, as an exhibition room. Here, during the summer, English Operas continued to be performed under his direction.

In 1816, this theatre was rebuilt from designs by Beazley, and in 1828 it was elegantly fitted up for the regular performance of French Plays, the season being terminated by the commencement of that of the English Opera. On 16th February, 1830, the theatre was destroyed by fire, but is at present rebuilding with a front towards the new street, intended to be formed as a direct communication from Waterloo Bridge with the northern part of the metropolis.

THE ADELPHI THEATRE.

This Theatre, formerly called the Sans Pareil, is situated in the Strand, and was built in 1802 by John Scott, who obtained a licence for burlettas, ballet, and pantomime. He sold it to Rodwell, by whom it was named The Adelphi Theatre, and who produced here the celebrated burletta of "Tom and Jerry, or Life in London," which was performed upwards of 300 nights. In 1825, Terry and Yates were almost equally successful in the production of the "Pilot," which was performed here more than 200 nights, but after all the situation of this theatre is its best recommendation, it is in the very centre of "the mighty heart," and is on that account considered the best theatrical speculation in London. The performances at the Adelphi Theatre, principally consist of burlettas, melodrames, and comic sketches, written to introduce the versatile talents and broad humour of the present managers, Mathews and Yates, formerly tutor and pupil in mimicry; another great "comic lion" at this theatre, is John Reeve, whose imitations are generally considered to be on a par with the celebrated comedians before mentioned.

THE OLYMPIC THEATRE.

In the year 1806, Philip Astley of the Amphitheatre, Westminster Bridge, built this Theatre for the representation of horsemanship, under the name of The Olympic Pavilion. It stands in Wych-street, Strand, nearly on the site of Drury House, whence the name of the adjoining street, Drury-lane, was derived. Astley sold the premises to Elliston, who produced here the popular burletta of "Giovanni in London," which has since been acted at the patent theatres with splendid success; this theatre is now under the management of Madame Vestris, whose fame was founded by her performance in the abovementioned successful drama, and who has since attained eminence in public favor.

MINOR THEATRES.

The West London, Tottenham-street, Queen's or Regency Theatre, as it has been variously called, was originally built for a concert room, being in the neighbourhood of Fitzroy-square. It was the first theatre at which French plays were acted, after the Peace with France in 1815. The usual performances at this theatre, are comic sketches, anecdotal pieces, melodrames, and burlettas, in which sentiment, song, and dance are interspersed.

The Pavilion Theatre is situated in one of the streets leading out of the Whitechapel-road, and was opened about 1828. The establishment is very small, but tragedy, comedy, and opera, are at present performed at the Pavilion, where also has been exhibited a well executed moving dioramic picture of the scenery from London to Gravesend.

A Minor Theatre in Catherine-street, Strand, erected about 1810, for amateur performers, is occasionally opened, but money is not received at the doors, and without a ticket admission cannot be obtained.

The Surrey Theatre, formerly called the Royal Circus, is situated in Great Surrey-street, near the Obelisk, at the junction of the cross roads. It was originally built about the year 1779, for equestrian exhibitions and burlettas, and was opened under the direction of Hughes and Dibdin. In 1805 the theatre was burnt down, but immediately rebuilt, and in 1809, Elliston covered the ride and converted it into an extensive pit, changing at the same time the name of the Circus for that of the Surrey Theatre. He altered some of the best plays of Shakspeare, to make them come within the terms of his licence, and performed the principal character himself, exhibiting a versatility of talent rarely equalled. This theatre was afterwards held by Thomas Dibdin, the most prolific dramatic writer of his day, who adapted Sir Walter Scott's "Heart of Mid Lothian," to this stage, with great success. The company at the Surrey Theatre have since performed the regular drama, as tragedy, comedy, opera, and farce.

The Royal Victoria Theatre, named after the heir presumptive of the British throne, was originally called The Royal Cobourg Theatre, in compliment to Prince Leopold, now King of the Belgians, and the first stone was laid by proxy of his Royal Highness. It was opened on Whitmonday, 1817. The builder of the theatre was M. Cabinelle, from France; and the scenery has, from its opening, been of a description very superior to that of other minor theatres. It was here that the taste and talent of Stanfield was first made known to the public. The novel but expensive idea of a looking glass curtain was also introduced here, it consisted of a number of large plates of looking glass, in a broad richly gilded frame, let down by machinery at the conclusion of the first piece, in which the crowded audience were delighted by seeing themselves in an immense mirror.

ASTLEY'S AMPHITHEATRE.

This Theatre was built by Philip Astley, a remarkably expert horseman, who, after his discharge from the army, made equestrian exercises his profession, and it still retains the founder's name. He commenced his performances with only two horses in an open field in Lambeth, and afterwards engaged part of a timber yard, (upon the site of which the present Amphitheatre stands,) enclosed it with boarding, and erected seats for an audience where he exhibited, with the canopy of heaven for a covering, during the morning. The profits of his performances enabled him to purchase the whole timber yard. In the year 1780, he constructed a roofed building, which he opened as The Amphitheatre Riding House, and by successive enlargements, the whole extent of the ground in his possession was built upon. In order to compete with the Royal Circus, he added a stage and scenery to his riding circle, and performed similar entertainments with those at that theatre. He obtained a licence through the interest of Lord Chancellor Thurlow, shortly after which the Amphitheatre was burned down. The Royal Amphitheatre was rebuilt, and opened on Easter Monday, 1795, under the patronage of the Prince of Wales and the Duke of York. In 1803 it was again destroyed by fire, but was rebuilt and opened in 1804, under Astley his son. Philip Astley died in 1814, and his son in 1821. It is now under the management of Ducrow, whose equestrian performances prove equally attractive with those of its original projector. The Amphitheatre stands in Bridge Road, Lambeth, a short distance from Westminster Bridge, and has an access to the stables in Stangate-street. The proscenium is large and moveable, for widening and heightening the stage, which is very spacious and convenient; the platforms here used for equestrian spectacles are very massive, and by means of several outlets, considerable effect is given to the scenic exhibitions. In a representation of "The Battle of Waterloo," the evolutions of horses were admirably introduced, and this spectacle met with success unprecedented in theatrical history, the impersonation of Napoleon being considered perfectly unique. The stables for the stud, consisting of about forty horses, extend over a large space of ground on one side of the stage; here the horses are kept in the highest order, and are attended by several of the most experienced grooms in the kingdom. The equestrian performances must require great study and practice, but their excellence proves what popular applause will induce men to accomplish. Ducrow's attitudes are extremely graceful and characteristic, some of them being nicely copied or studied from the classical models of antiquity, so as to delight even the most fastidious critics. The late Philip Astley was accustomed to give an exhibition of fire-works, on the 4th of June, the birth day of his Majesty George III., from barges moored in the centre of the Thames, opposite his theatre, when the performances were concluded. A prize wherry was afterwards substituted, but this custom was discontinued a year or two after his death.

SADLER'S WELLS, &c.

Soon after the Restoration of King Charles II., a novel species of amusement became general, under the name of Musick Houses, one of the earliest of which was Coleman's Musick House near the Lamb's Conduit, there were also Musick Houses in Rosemary-lane, at Stepney, and in other places, but not one of these has preserved the celebrity of Sadler's Musick House, which was originally a wooden building on the northern side of the New River-head at Islington, and was erected before the year 1683. Sadler, the proprietor, in digging for gravel in his garden, discovered a well of mineral water, which obtained great repute for its medicinal qualities. "A true and exact account of Sadler's Wells, or the New Mineral Waters lately found at Islington," was published by T. G., Doctor of Physick, in 1684, in which it is described as a spring in the middle of a garden belonging to the Musick House, built by Mr. Sadler, the water of this well it appears was famed, before the Reformation, for several extraordinary cures, whence it obtained the name of Holy Well, and was much frequented by the Monks of the Priory of Clerkenwell; but after the dissolution of that Monastery, being considered superstitious, it was filled up, but was discovered again by accident. After describing the effect of the water, the diseases to be relieved, and the manner of taking it, the patients are informed in the account mentioned above, that "it is very convenient for those who smoke tobacco," &c. At the time the discovery was made by Sadler, the Wells at Tunbridge and Epsom had long been places of fashionable resort. The Ebbisham or Epsom water was discovered in 1630, or soon after, and supposed to be the first of its peculiar quality known in England. The Clerks' Well, which now gives name to the populous parish of Clerkenwell, is the most ancient of the holy wells in the vicinity of the metropolis, and is indebted for its fame to its connection with the history of the Drama. Hampstead Wells were discovered about 1698, and Islington Wells, now called Islington Spa, or New Tunbridge Wells, were in repute at the time of Sadler's discovery; but musick was not originally performed there, although there was a coffee house attached to the premises.

Richmond Wells were discovered about 1680; concerts, both vocal and instrumental, were performed in the Great Room at the Wells, and dancing was occasionally advertised, with particulars of the tide, for "the convenience" of returning.

Lambeth Wells, consisting of two wells, distinguished as the nearer and farther well, were open before 1697, in which year a concert was given there, in imitation of the regular one, then newly established at York-buildings. Streatham Wells were known as early as 1660, and there was a concert twice a week during the summer in the year 1701.

Acton Wells are mentioned in 1612, and were in repute about the middle of the last century. Assemblies were held there, and public breakfasts, as late as 1775.

Bagnigge Wells, situated on the banks of a small stream, called the river Bagnigg, is an ancient building bearing this inscription: "S. T. this is Bagnigge House neare the Pinder a Wakefeilde, 1680." This House is said to have been the country residence of Nell Gwynn, a special favorite of King Charles II. About the year 1760, upon the discovery of two mineral springs, the house and gardens were opened to the public, and called "The Royal Bagnigge Wells," and the gardens were much frequented on Sundays.

Pancras Wells were numerous attended when in fashion; there appears to have been two pump houses and a long room attached to the premises.

Kilburn Wells had a great room for music, dancing, or other entertainment, and were in some repute in the year 1773.

St. George's Spa, or the Dog and Duck, was long a favorite resort as a public tea garden, in which was a spring, discovered about 1750.

In addition to these Wells, possessing a local celebrity, were several Chalybeate and other springs, situated in the vicinity of London, as Sydenham, Dulwich, or Lewisham Wells, discovered about 1640. Barnet Wells, in repute about the middle of the 17th century, Northall Wells, known before 1690, Woodford Wells, Shadwell Spa, and St. Chad's Well, near Battle Bridge. In the neighbourhood of Clerkenwell, there were several, as Skinner's Well, Fag's Well, Tode Well, Loder's Well, and Rad Well.

After the decease of the original proprietor, says Sir John Hawkins in his History of Music, Francis Forcer, a composer and musician, became the occupier of Sadler's Wells and Music House; his son and successor was the first that exhibited here the diversions of rope dancing, tumbling, &c. He died in 1743. The name of the next proprietor was Rosoman, who erected a theatre here in 1765, which in 1778 was altered and improved; it acquired a degree of beauty from its plan, and the simplicity of its ornaments. Dibdin composed several pieces for this theatre, and the pantomimes were celebrated for their comic tricks and changes, in which they were supported by that truly excellent master of dumb show, Signor Grimaldi, whose genius and humour seemed to have descended on his son and grandson; all three were popular performers in their day. In 1802, a variation of the usual entertainment was produced, under the title of "Naumachia," a scene upon real water, introduced in a representation of the "Siege of Gibraltar;" this singular introduction of the aquatic element, upon so large a scale within the walls of a theatre, was from necessity limited to the concluding scene, and was effected by removing the whole flooring of the stage, which exposed a large basin of water, the proximity of the New River enabling the proprietors to complete this novel exhibition, upon which floated ships, boats, and sea monsters, superior in size to the pasteboard illusions of the general theatres. The scenery at this theatre is not inferior in point of design and execution to any other in London, such vast improvements have been made in this description of decoration, that none but first rate painters find employment in a theatre. Moveable scenes were first used in England in the early part of the reign of James I., when they are generally described in the old plays as "painted cloths," the previous mode of indicating locality in a scene, was by introducing such properties as were consistent with it; thus a table and a chair sufficed to convey an idea of an apartment; a walking staff of the street, and a platform at the upper end of the stage, served for battlements or any other elevated position. It was also usual in Shakspeare's time, to write the names of the different places of action in a position visible to the audience. D'Avenant in his Siege of Rhodes, published in 1656, says, on the middle of the frieze was a compartment, whereon was written "Rhodes;" he afterwards produced an opera at Dorset Gardens, with "expensive scenery." Kemble in 1794, engaged W. Capon to paint the scenes for Drury Lane, on account of his antiquarian knowledge, Louthenbourg had been previously celebrated. Stanfield, Andrews, and Marinari, have placed the scenic department of Drury Lane on a par with that of any theatre in Europe. Roberts, at Covent Garden Theatre, is the finest architectural scenic draughtsman of the day; and the Messrs. Grieve of the same theatre, have long been famous for their excellent pantomime scenery, presenting the nearest possible approach to reality in these splendid compositions: Panorama Views on the Rhine, on the Alps, of Venice, of Antwerp, &c. are now occasionally introduced.

BAZAARS.

The name Bazaar, Bazar or Buzzar, is originally Persian, but is commonly used in the commercial language of the East Indies, to imply a covered building of great extent, in which a constant market is held. The Bazaar of Tauris, a city of Persia, is said to be of such extent, that it has more than once afforded covering for 30,000 men, ranged in order of battle. The first establishment of this kind in London, was opened in 1816, in the house of Mr. Trotter, Soho-square, the premises are very large and commodious for the purpose, and here counters are prepared and let by the foot length, the tenant of each paying for the space and time he may occupy it. The plan of collecting various productions of art and ingenuity into one focus, certainly resembles the Eastern Bazaar, beyond which they have nothing in common. The establishment of the Bazaar in Soho-square, was speedily followed by others of the same description, as The Western Exchange, near the Burlington Arcade, a Bazaar in the Egyptian Hall, Piccadilly, the Queen's Bazaar in Oxford-street, a Bazaar in Leicester-square, and one of considerable extent in Gray's-Inn-lane, near King's Cross, where also was a Horse and Carriage Repository; there is a Bazaar at the Pantheon on a similar plan, and a Horse Bazaar in King-street, Portman-square. A very noble building, erected in 1831, called St. James's Bazaar, is in St. James's-street, at the corner of King-street; and it is in contemplation to convert the Pantheon, in Oxford-street, to a Bazaar upon a very large scale: this was originally erected in 1771, from designs by James Wyatt, for concerts and musical performances. In 1784, the Pantheon was used for one of the occasions of the commemoration of Handel. In 1791 it was converted into an Opera House, and in 1792 destroyed by fire, excepting the outer walls, but was soon afterwards rebuilt.

THE MARKETS OF WESTMINSTER.

The principal Market at Westminster is Hungerford Market, already described at p. 124*. Covent Garden Market has been rebuilt, and is mentioned at p. 118*. Clare Market, near St. Clement's Inn, receives its name from John Hollis, Earl of Clare, by whom it was founded in the year 1656: it consists of two Market Houses, and is amply supplied with all sorts of provisions. Carnaby Market, eastward of Regent-street and north from Golden-square, was built about 1710, on the site of the Pest Field, so called from a Lazaretto having been erected there after the plague in 1665. Newport Market, northward of Leicester-square, is of more modern foundation. The establishment of May Fair is generally attributed to King Charles II., but the following advertisement appeared in the Gazette of 24th September, 1688, a very short time before the landing of the Prince of Orange: "His Majesty hath been graciously pleased to grant a Market for live Cattle, to be held in Brook Field, near Hyde Park Corner, on Tuesday and Thursday in every week. The first Market day will be held on the first Thursday in October next, and afterwards to continue weekly; the Thursday Market to begin at twelve at noon, and the Tuesday Market in the morning for Cattle, and the afternoon for Horses." Another from the same authority, 28th February, 1695: "There is a Fair granted to be kept in Brookfield Market place, near the east corner of Hyde Park, in Middlesex, for all sorts of goods, and the first two days will be for live Cattle. The Fair will begin on the first day of May next, and continue till the 16th day, and so will be held yearly at the same time and place." At the celebration of the Fair on the next year, 1696, there was a Droll performed, called, "King William's happy Deliverance and glorious Triumph over his Enemies, or the whole form of the Siege of Namur." The Fair continued in high vogue during his reign, but in the next there was a presentment from the grand Jury at Westminster, describing the Fair as a public nuisance, very dangerous to her Majesty's royal person, and an occasion of many breaches of the peace, which was followed by a royal proclamation, strictly enjoining the proprietors and owners of the Fair, not to permit any booths or stalls to be erected, while the Fair should be holden, for any plays, shows, gaming, music meetings, or other disorderly assemblies; a pamphlet was also printed in 1709, entitled, "Reasons for Suppressing the Yearly Fair in Brook Field, Westminster, commonly called May Fair, recommended to the consideration of all persons of honor and virtue." Brook Field comprised what are now called Shepherd's Market, White Horse-street, Shepherd's-court, Sun-court, Market-court, and extended westward to Park-lane; the whole space is now built upon, and consists of Chapel-street, Shepherd's-street, Market-street, Hertford-street, &c.; southward was the Ducking pond house and gardens, since built upon, in a Riding School, Carrington-street, &c. It has been stated that the whole site of the present Market is intended to be formed into a Square, with an entrance from Piccadilly.

PUBLIC OFFICES AT WHITEHALL, &c.

The chief Offices of State are situated near the site of the ancient Palace of Whitehall, of which they formerly made an integral part. There are few parts of the metropolis which within these few years, have undergone greater improvement, than the environs of Whitehall, these are principally conspicuous at the southern extremity of this ancient seat of Royalty, but its vicinity to the northward has not been neglected; Whitehall-place commands a fine view of the River and of Waterloo Bridge in its whole length.

THE COUNCIL OFFICE.

This Office forms part only of a magnificent plan by Sir John Soane, for rebuilding Whitehall. The King's Privy Council is unlimited in number, but those only whose presence is required, are summoned to attend; their duty is to advise the King for the good of the public, and to enquire into all offences against the government. To determine on appeal causes from the Plantations or Admiralty; a standing committee of the council acting as a board of trade and plantations. The Lord President of the Council is the fourth great officer of state; there are three clerks of the Council, one of whom signs all orders and proclamations issued from the Council. Attendance is given daily, but appeals are generally heard during the sitting of Parliament.

The Lord Chancellor, the Archbishop of Canterbury, with most of the Cabinet Ministers, form part of the Board of Trade, to which a president and vice-president are appointed, there is also a secretary and an assistant secretary, and it is attended by two clerks of the Privy Council in ordinary. The principal business of State is transacted in a Cabinet Council, consisting of a certain number of the Ministers of State, a mode which originated in the reign of Charles I., and took its rise in the select meeting which attended the King, upon the occasion of that Prince's return from Madrid.

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

The Home Office is held at Whitehall, in the last portion left of the ancient palace built by Cardinal Wolsey, but the Foreign and Colonial Offices are in Downing-street. The general business of the Secretaries of State, is to receive and answer all letters and dispatches, placing such as are necessary before the Privy Council; they also prepare all warrants and sign them. The principal secretary for the Home Department, is in correspondence occasionally with every department of the civil establishment, and is assisted by two under secretaries and a chief clerk, who superintends the books and accounts of the office, and has a private secretary and a precis writer, to abridge papers for the use of the principal secretary. Under the control of the Home Department, is the Irish Secretary's Office, with clerks who maintain a correspondence with Ireland; the immediate business of which is carried on in Great George-street, Westminster.

The Foreign department has the whole correspondence with Foreign Ministers, to whom the secretary of the department gives audience, receives and answers their memorials; the patronage of this office is very great, all the British Ambassadors, Envoys, &c. are appointed by him, as well as the British Consuls abroad. The Secretary of State for the Colonial department, has precisely the same duty to perform for the Colonies as the other secretaries have for their respective departments. The principal offices under the control of the Secretaries of State, are the Alien Office, where a registry is kept of all aliens; the State Paper Office, in Great George-street, Westminster; the Gazette Office and Signet Office, the Secretary of State being the keeper of the King's signet, affixed to certain documents which then become warrants to the keeper of the Privy seal. A secretary for the Latin language, an interpreter of Oriental languages, and thirty messengers are under the Secretaries of State.

THE ADMIRALTY.

The Office of the Lord High Admiral was formerly held in a large house at the southern end of Duke-street, Westminster, which overlooks St. James's Park. By act of Parliament in 1689, commissioners were appointed, and vested with the authority and power of the Lord High Admiral, and about the same time the Office was removed to Wallingford House, on the same spot as the present building, which was erected in the reign of George II., from designs by Ripley, an architect of considerable note, who was Comptroller of the Board of Works. It is a massive building of brick and stone, nearly concealed from view by a very handsome Doric screen, designed by Adam. Besides a hall and apartments for transacting business in the main building, the wings contain houses adapted for the residence of the six Lords of the Admiralty. Their power extends over the whole of the Royal Navy and Marine, and they have also a judicial power limited to acts done on the sea, and this jurisdiction extends to every part of the coast not within the limits of a county. By virtue of their power and the King's commission, the Lords of the Admiralty sign all commissions in the Navy, all orders and instructions, and have control over the Navy Office, the Navy Pay Office, and Victualling Offices; they also issue commissions to try by Court Martial, and letters of Marque to make reprisals. Besides two secretaries there is a chief clerk, a librarian, and translator of Foreign papers. The first secretary is usually secretary to the Office of Widows Pensions, which are paid at the Paymaster's Chambers in Lincoln's Inn New Square.

The Board of Longitude consists of several of the first officers of the Admiralty and Royal Navy, the Astronomer Royal, the President and some members of the Royal Society, who act gratis.

Maps, Charts, and books of Geography and Navigation, are entrusted to the care of the Hydrographer, an officer who carefully notes all discoveries made, all corrections in latitude or longitude, all rocks, shoals, and every other circumstance which can improve the art of Navigation.

The Admiralty Court is a delegation from the Lord High Admiral, and is held in Doctor's Commons, hence an appeal lies to the King in council.

The Judge of the Admiralty holds his Court as often as necessary, for the determination of Admiralty causes, and presides occasionally in a criminal court, usually held in the Sessions House in the Old Bailey, he then acts under a special commission from the King, and has some of the Judges associated with him.

The expenditure of the Royal Navy is voted annually in the House of Commons. Previously to the meeting of Parliament, estimates are prepared, of the probable scale of expenditure for the ensuing year, which are classed under the following heads: 1, Wages of Seamen, including Marines. 2, Victualling. 3, Wear and Tear. 4, Ordnance of the Navy. 5, Salaries of Admirals, &c. 6, Salaries of Dock Yards in Great Britain and Abroad. 7, Ordinary of the Navy and victualling the same. 8, Ordinary repairs. 9, Half-pay, pensions, and superannuations. 10, Building Ships. 11, Expences of the Transport service. 12, Provisions for Ships abroad. 13, Sick and Wounded Seamen. 14, Miscellaneous charges. Towards the end of every session of Parliament, the appropriation act is passed, which consigns such grants as have been made during the session to the general service, and under the sanction of this act, the money is issued to the service for which it has been voted. The money is issued under special letters of Privy Seal, by which the Treasurer of the Navy has credit on the Exchequer, and applies to the Treasury by memorial for certain specified services. The Lords of the Treasury direct the issue, and the money is then paid into the Bank of England for public services, and is thence drawn by the Treasurer of the Navy, or his paymaster.

The whole business of the British Navy is under the control of the Board of Admiralty, and is conducted by three offices,—The Navy Office, Victualling Office, and Navy Pay Office.

THE HORSE GUARDS.

The Offices of the Commander in Chief, of the Adjutant General, and of the Quarter-Master General, are all at the Horse Guards, Whitehall. All officers who have a general duty to perform in the Army are called the staff, and consist of a Commander in Chief, an Adjutant General, a Quarter Master General, a Commissary in Chief, a Commissary of Musters, a Judge Advocate General, an Inspector General of Fortifications, an Apothecary General, a Chaplain General, and a Wagon Master General. Under the present regulation, the office of Commander in Chief is filled by Lord Hill, who is termed General Commanding in Chief, and is invested with less power than the late Duke of York, who held the office many years. He has the whole patronage of the Army, and is authorized to revise Courts Martial; his establishment consists of a military secretary and assistants, four aids de camps, chief clerk, &c. The duty of the Adjutant General is occasionally to inspect the regiments, and to make up all dispatches for the Commander in Chief. The Quarter Master General provides all quarters or stations for the army, by order from the War Office. England is divided into three districts, the Northern, the Southern, and Western, which have each a General Officer, with aids de camps and a staff. The establishment of the British Army, during the war, was immense; the peace regulation is very great. The number of troops and regiments to be kept up is fixed by the King in council, and notice is given to the Secretary at War, who may be termed the King's Military Secretary; he prepares the charge for pay, incidental expences, and other estimates. The expences of the Army abroad are paid by the Officers, who draw on the Treasury or War Office, this is called the extraordinary charge of the Army, and is examined minutely by the Comptrollers of Army accounts, and then put into the Secretary at War's estimates. The ordinary charge of the Army is usually arranged under The Household Troops; Infantry and Cavalry in England; Infantry and Cavalry in Ireland; Embodied Militia; General Officers not having Regiments; Supernumerary Officers; Half-Pay and Allowances; Chelsea and Kilmainham Hospitals; Widows Pensions and Compassionate List;

Retired Chaplains; Barracks in England and Ireland; Commissariat, &c.; Recruiting Charges; Civil Officers Superannuated; Staff of the Army; Allowances to Officers for losses in Service; Volunteer Corps; Local Militia; Exchequer Fees; Storekeeper's department; Disembodied Militia. About twenty thousand of the King's troops are serving in India, who are paid by the East India Company, and consequently are not included in the estimates.

THE TREASURY.

The Office of Lord High Treasurer of England, was formerly executed by one person, generally a nobleman of high rank, deemed the third great officer of state, but on the accession of George I., the Treasury was put into commission, which now consists of a first Lord, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and three junior Lords, whose business is to consider and determine all matters relative to the Civil List, and the revenues of the Crown. Also to give directions for the conduct of all the boards and persons entrusted with the receipt, management, and expenditure of the Revenue of Great Britain. The patronage of this office is immense, it having the appointment or recommendation of most of the boards of revenue. Two joint Secretaries of the Treasury attend the board, and superintend the conduct of the whole business. There are four chief clerks attached to the office, and six senior clerks, who conduct the business in divisions. The first of the six clerks attends to the army, the comptroller of the army, the navy, ordnance, America, West India, Gibraltar and Mediterranean business. The second to the customs and excise of England, Scotland, and Ireland, the council, and board of trade. The third to the taxes, stamps, post office, mint, stationery, alienation, hackney coaches, hanaper, hawking and pedlars, first fruits, tenths, King's printer, &c. The fourth to the woods, parks and forests, crown leases, land revenue, secretaries of state, police, sheriffs, and convicts. The fifth to the Funds, Bank, South Sea and East India Companies, Exchequer, lottery, King's proctor and solicitor. The sixth to the board of works, and all business not included in the other five divisions. The Clerk for expiring Laws gives information to the Law Clerk of expiring laws, that application if necessary may be made to Parliament for a renewal. The principal Clerk to the Secretaries, the Clerk of the Bills of Exchange and the Receiver of Fees, have a Bill room and a Fee room where they transact business.

The Superintendant for Parliamentary business, applies to public offices for accounts when called for, which it is his duty to digest and lay before Parliament.

The Clerks of the Revenue department of the Treasury, make up a statement of the income and issues of the various boards of Revenue, from weekly returns made by the different offices, and from them make out the annual returns to Parliament.

The Commissariat department of the Treasury supplies the Army with provisions and certain stores: it is divided into three departments, the Home department, the Foreign department, and the Accountant's department. There are also two auditors of the Treasury, who audit the accounts of such officers as have money advanced, and which are not placed before the auditors of the public accounts.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer, also styled under Treasurer, has the peculiar care of the interest of the Crown, and great power in the management of the royal revenue. He generally takes the lead in all matters of finance in the House of Commons.

The Tellers of the Exchequer receive all monies payable to the King, and pay all monies due by the King, or rather they keep account of what is received and paid, as clerks are sent from the Bank of England daily, and the money is actually received and paid by them.

The Tally Court derived its name from the Tally, a notched stick, formerly used to keep accounts by, the tallies being cut in two, conformed with each other, and one being delivered to the person who paid the money, the other became a voucher to the Chamberlain of the Exchequer, who kept the account.

The establishment of the Pells consists of a Clerk of the Pells, first Clerk, Clerk of the Introitus or receipts, Clerk of the Exitus or issues, a Clerk of the cash book, Clerk of the debentures, Clerk of the patents, &c. The duty of the Clerk of the Pells is to enter every Tellers Bill in parchment rolls, called Pellis acceptorum and Pellis exituum, the rolls of receipt and disbursement.

Besides the Office for Auditing the Public Accounts at Somerset-place, there is a very considerable detached establishment in Whitehall-place. The number of accounts which came before the auditors, making it impossible to dispatch them in any moderate space of time, & new Board was therefore established, to take cognizance of all accounts from the Colonies.

PUBLIC OFFICES IN SOMERSET HOUSE.

The original design of this building was to unite, in a central situation, numerous offices, and by that means to facilitate public business, which might be here conducted in a style corresponding with the opulence and dignity of a great commercial country. In the year 1775, the whole of the mansion raised by Edward, Duke of Somerset, in the reign of Edward VI., was demolished by act of Parliament, and Mr. Robinson, of the office of works, prepared designs for a building in a plain substantial style, but with little or no pretensions to decorative architecture. Upon that gentleman's resignation, or demise, Sir William Chambers was selected by the Government to make entirely new designs; these were approved, and being ordered to be carried into execution, the first stone was laid in the year 1776. How he succeeded in this great undertaking, the public have long since judged. As the edifice however arose, it did not fail to attract the severity of criticism, and the public journals teemed with observations on the structure before it was completed. It has been well observed, that "all men have eyes, but few have judgment," and in this instance the remark was strongly verified. It must, however, be admitted, that amidst an abundance of architectural beauties, some faults and improprieties are discernable. The dignity and grandeur which ought to prevail in a building of this character, is in some degree weakened by the multiplicity of the parts, which too much interfere with each other, and the incongruous mixture of rusticated architecture with the principal order, which is Corinthian, tends to destroy the effect its correct and beautiful proportion would otherwise produce; still after all that has been said upon the subject, by this, one of the most magnificent of the public buildings of the metropolis, Sir William Chambers established his reputation as an architect of superior genius and taste.

The principal front of Somerset House, towards the Strand, 135 feet in length, is in a bold and simple style, and may be considered as one of the best modern attempts, to unite the chastity and order of the Venetian school of architecture with the majesty and grandeur of the Roman. This division of the building consists of a rusticated basement, supporting a Corinthian colonnade, crowned in the centre with an attic, and at the extremities with a balustrade. Nine large arches compose the basement, the three in the centre are open and form the entrance to the quadrangle, the three at each end are furnished with windows of the Doric order, enriched with pilasters, entablatures, and pediments. Above the basement rise ten Corinthian columns on pedestals, with a regular entablature, and the attic story extends over three intercolumniations. The attic is divided into three parts, by four colossal statues placed over the columns of the order, the centre division being reserved for an inscription, and the sides having oval windows enriched with garlands of oak and laurel. The four statues represent Lictors bearing the fasces, emblematical of strength derived from unanimity. The whole terminates with the Royal arms of England, supported by Genius and Fame.

The three open arches form the only entrance upon this front, and communicate with a vestibule containing the entrances to the Royal Academy, the Royal Society, and to the Society of Antiquaries.

The Quadrangle of Somerset House affords a view of architectural correctness and splendor, so uniformly supported as scarcely to be excelled by any building in Europe. It is not to be denied, but that some parts of a few structures, separately taken, are more magnificent, but the architect, rightly considering that he was neither building a Temple, a National Theatre, nor an Imperial Palace, suited the style of ornament to the purpose to which the edifice is devoted. The general principle upon which it is erected, is that of a rusticated basement supporting a Corinthian order, which contains a principal and attic story.

The basement is well proportioned to the superstructure, and is not deficient in harmony with the Corinthian character with which it is surmounted. The Terrace, on the river front of this magnificent building, is a bold effort of conception; Sir William Chambers's designs for interior arrangements were excellent, but his staircases are considered his master pieces, particularly those leading to the principal rooms of the Royal Society, and to the Society of Antiquaries.

The Public Offices held in Somerset House, are the Navy Office, the Navy Pay Office, Treasurer of the Navy, Tax Office, Stamp Office, Transport Office, Audit Office, Lottery Office, Pipe Office, Lord Treasurer's Office, Exchequer Offices, Privy Seal and Signet Office, Foreign Opposer's Office, Victualling Office, Legacy Duty Office, and Duchy of Cornwall Office.

THE NAVY OFFICE.

The Board of Commissioners of the Royal Navy, under the direction of the Lords of the Admiralty, transact all affairs relative to the civil establishment of his Majesty's Navy; make contracts for stores and direct the distribution of them; prepare estimates of the expense of the Navy; direct all monies voted for Naval services into the hands of the Treasurer of the Navy, and examine and certify accounts for payment. The Board is divided into Committees, who superintend particular departments, subject to control of the Board.

The Comptroller of the Navy presides over payments, visits the dock yards occasionally, and attends the Lords of the Admiralty when required.

The Bill branch of the Navy Office is under the direction of the Committee of Accounts, and the clerks examine all bills of parcels for stores delivered, and make out Navy bills for payment of the same.

The Surveyor of the Navy examines the reports of all surveys of his Majesty's ships; considers the propriety of repairs, sales, &c.; directs what ships are to be first worked in every yard; directs drawings to be made of all ships intended to be built, their dimensions, &c. He visits the Dock Yard at Woolwich, weekly, and the other Yards occasionally, and inspects all buildings or new Docks.

The Storekeeper General of the Navy, inspects all slops or seamen's clothing sent in by the contractors, for which he grants certificates, and issues them to the pursers. He also settles the purser's accounts in this article.

The Wages branch of the Navy Office is very extensive and complicated, the clerks in this department having to make up the books of every ship in the Royal Navy in Sea pay, to estimate the amount of wages due to each man, to assist in making up ships books in ordinary, and dockyard books, half pay lists, &c. To examine the state of the accounts of the Commanders of the Navy, and to keep an account of all men sent sick on shore, to examine the pursers accounts for clothes, provisions, &c., in order to check them at the Victualling Office. To keep lists for paying claims, such as officers annual pay, arrears, defalcations, &c.

NAVY PAY OFFICE AND TREASURER OF THE NAVY.

The Treasurer of the Navy delegates a power to the Paymaster, who executes the duties of this office; but the Treasurer is responsible for all the money which may come into the Paymaster's hands. The Paymaster presents memorials for money when wanted, and certifies its receipt and issue to the respective boards. At stated periods he transmits his account to the Navy Board, and makes up the annual accounts of the Treasurer of the Navy. The offices of this department are six in number: The Pay Branch, The Navy Branch, The Victualling Branch, The Accountant's Branch, The Inspector's Branch, and The Allotment Branch.

TAX OFFICE.

The Tax Office has the collection of two species of revenue, the Land Tax and Assessed Taxes, and is under the control of a Board, consisting of a chairman and three commissioners, who, under various acts of Parliament for levying taxes, have full power to raise, collect, or mitigate the taxes. Their officers in the various counties of England, Wales and Scotland are very numerous; every county in England and Wales has distinct receivers general, with inspectors of taxes, besides superintending and resident Surveyors.

STAMP OFFICE.

The Officers of this department of the public revenue, act under a Board of Commissioners, who have a solicitor, a receiver, and many clerks, a register of warrants, an inspector of courts and corporations in the country, and various officers in the different departments. The duties levied consist of stamps on deeds and law proceedings; on legacies and probates of wills; on bills of exchange and promissory notes, receipts, and newspapers; on deeds, pamphlets, advertisements, stage coaches, post horses and race horses; on medicines, cards, and silver plate; on fire and sea insurances. The Sea Policy Office is in Abchurch-lane, Lombard-street.

LEGACY DUTY OFFICE.

Copies of every Will proved in England are sent to this office, by which means all legacies are ascertained. The duty must be paid within fourteen days after the delivery of the particulars required, under a penalty of treble the value of the duty; and all accumulations, down to the time of the payment of the duty, are to be accounted for. The office is under the direction of a Comptroller.

THE OFFICE OF ORDNANCE, PALL MALL.

The large Mansion in which this Office is now held, was originally built about the year 1760, from designs by Brettingham, as a town residence for Edward, Duke of York, brother of his Majesty George III. It was afterwards the residence of Henry, Duke of Cumberland, and for a short period after the Union with Ireland, the house belonged to The Union Club.

The Ordnance department is under the control of a Master General, who, in his military capacity, has entire control over the whole department. He can do any act which can otherwise be done by the Board.

The Board of Ordnance consists of a Surveyor General, the Clerk of the Ordnance, the Storekeeper, and Clerk of the Deliveries; one part of its duty is to make out annual estimates, and lay them before the House of Commons.

It is the duty of the Ordnance department to supply all military stores for the Army and Navy, to regulate the corps of artillery and engineers, as well as other branches of service attached to the Ordnance.

To pay the charges for building and repairing fortifications at home and abroad, excepting field works abroad, and those fortifications which a Commander in Chief abroad may judge expedient to erect without orders from home. All contingent expences for Ordnance stores, camp equipage for the artillery, and tents for the whole army, are paid for by this department.

The chief business of the Board of Ordnance is carried on in Pall Mall, and thence all the orders are issued; but many of the stores are kept in the Tower of London, and the military department is stationed at Woolwich. It consists of a regiment of artillery, a corps of cadets, and a corps of engineers. The cadets are pupils of the Royal Military Academy at Woolwich, of which the Master General of the Ordnance is Governor.

Other stations of the Ordnance in England, are Chatham, Sheerness, Portsmouth, Dover, Plymouth, Pendennis Castle, Yarmouth, Faversham, Waltham Abbey, Upnor Castle, Gravesend, Tilbury Fort, Purfleet, Priddy's Hard, Gosport, and Keyham Point, Devonport, also at Guernsey and Jersey; besides which there are powder magazines in Hyde Park, Tipner Point, and Marchwood, and many ordnance depots for small arms.

THE CLUBS OF LONDON.

One of the principal features of modern London, is the existence of splendid mansions, supported by and belonging to numerous Clubs, or Societies of gentlemen, chiefly formed with a view of making known their political opinions. The principal of these, in point of notoriety, is Crockford's, or St. James's Club, consisting of 500 members. The exterior of their Club House in James's-street is an imposing structure, in which the general effect of the building, designed by B. and P. Wyatt, is broad and simple; it is altogether of a superior order, and the design certainly exhibits a great improvement in street architecture. The entrance hall opens upon a staircase, the walls of which are panelled with scagliola of various colors and tints. The landing is sustained by Corinthian columns, over which, on a balustrade with scagliola pedestals, is placed another tier of Corinthian columns, supporting a cornice elaborately enriched and gilt; above the cornice is an elliptical coved lantern light. The railway on the steps is formed of brass foliage, of exquisite design and workmanship. The drawing room, or evening suite of apartments, consist of four chambers, the ante room opening upon a saloon, embellished to a degree almost beyond description; a cabinet and supper saloon: all these apartments are panelled in the fanciful and gorgeous style which prevailed in France during the reign of Louis XIV. The ceilings are divided into oddly fashioned panels, so richly gilt, that it is next to impossible to convey an idea of their form or magnificence. The walls are not inferior in splendor and variety to the ceilings, the whole surface being resolved into curiously shaped panels, filled with looking glass, silk, or gilded enrichments. A billiard room on the upper floor, with a coffee room, dining room and library on the ground floor, complete the apartments within this splendid building.

The Senior United Service Club, in Waterloo-place, consists of 1,500 members; and the Junior United Service Club, in Regent-street, of the same number. The Athenæum, in Waterloo-place, consists of 1,000 members. The same number of members belong to the Union Club in Trafalgar-square, and to the United University Club in Pall Mall East, at the corner of Suffolk-street; the last mansion was erected from designs by Wilkins and Deering. Brooke's Club and White's Club, both in St. James's-street, consist of 500 members each. The Albion Club, in St. James's-street, consists of 400 members. The Alfred, in Albemarle-street, of 500 members; the same number of members are associated under the name of the Travellers Club in Pall Mall. The Club House is said to have been erected by Barry, from a design by Raffaello. Arthur's Club, in St. James's-street, consists of 800 members; the Club House was erected from a design by Hopper. Wyndham's Club consists of 400 members, and the Guards Club, in St. James's-street, of the same number. The Colonial Club, in St. James's-street, consists of 400 members; and the Stratford Club, in Stratford-place, of 500 members. The Oriental Club, in Grosvenor-street, consists of 1,000 members; besides these there are other Clubs of inferior note in various parts of the Town.

THE BOROUGH OF FINSBURY.

The recently constituted Borough of Finsbury has been mentioned at p. 99* ante, and the chief part of the borough has been described in the account of the northern Suburbs of London; the parishes in the north-westward, which have not been noticed in our account, are those of St. Giles's in the Fields and St. George's, Bloomsbury.

The Parish Church of St. Giles's in the Fields, on the southern side of High-street, is supposed to have originated on the dissolution of a Hospital, founded here by Matilda, Queen of Henry I., about the year 1117, which afterwards became a cell to the Hospital of Burton Lazars in Leicestershire, and continued subordinate to that House till the general suppression of religious houses. In the year 1545, King Henry VIII. granted this Hospital, with its Chapel, to John Dudley, Lord Lisle; soon after which it appears to have been made parochial. It is a rectory in the patronage of the Crown, and on 20th April, 1547, William Rawlinson was instituted rector, being the first upon record.

The Hospital, with the gardens belonging to it, were situated between Denmark-street and Crown-street, nearly opposite to which spot St. Giles's Pound formerly stood. On the removal of the place of execution from the Elms in Smithfield, about the year 1413, the gallows was set up at the northern corner of this garden wall, and condemned persons stopped at this Hospital in their way to it, where they were presented with a bowl of ale, as their last refreshment in this life.

The Church was rebuilt in 1632, but the ground in its neighbourhood having been gradually raised to the height of eight feet above the floor; it was taken down in 1730, and in April 1734, the present edifice was opened for divine service. It is entirely built of Portland stone, and was erected from designs by Flitcroft. The steeple is 160 feet high, and consists of a rusticated basement supporting a Doric order, and over the clock is an octangular tower, enriched with Ionic columns attached to the building, having above the entablature a balustrade and ornamental vases; from this tower rises the spire, which is also octangular and belted. The Church of St. Giles was raised at a comparatively little expence, £10026. 15s. 9d. being the total amount, which included a Parliamentary grant of £8000. It has very few ornaments, and little besides the propriety of its component parts, and the general harmony of the whole structure to excite attention; but its superiority to most of the modern Churches of the metropolis is evident. The eastern end of the building is plain and majestic, while the steeple is light and airy, and indicates considerable genius in the architect; its effect in the distant prospect is admirable. Over the entrance to the churchyard is a very curious piece of sculpture, representing the Resurrection of the Dead, containing a great number of figures. It was originally set up in 1686, but the arch of entrance has been rebuilt.

In the Churchyard is Pendrel's tomb, to whom King Charles II. owed his preservation after the battle of Worcester; and also against the west end of the Church, is the monument of Lord John Bellasysse, who died in 1689; the monument was erected in 1736, by Lady Webb, of Canford in Dorsetshire.

Near this Church was the house of Alice, Duchess Dudley, called the English Paula; her name is still preserved in Dudley-court, leading out of High-street; she was a person of most exemplary piety and charity: she died here 22nd January, 1670, æt 90, and was buried at Stoneleigh in Warwickshire, where is a monument to her memory, there is also a memorial in St. Giles's Church.

Northeastward of St. Giles's Parish is that of St. George, Bloomsbury; the name of St. George was given to it in honor of his Majesty George the First, and it received the epithet of Bloomsbury, from Lomesbury, the ancient name of a hamlet on this spot, where the King's stables were situated previously to the year 1354, when they were destroyed by fire. The Parish Church in Hart-street, is one of the fifty new churches appointed to be built by act of Parliament, within the bills of mortality. It is a rectory in the patronage of the Crown. The portico on the southern front is of the Corinthian order, and produces a fine effect, but the tower and its steeple is a very extraordinary structure. It consists of a square pyramid, at the angles of which, near the base, are a lion and unicorn alternately; these animals being very large, are injudiciously placed over small columns, which make them appear monsters in size. On the top of this pyramid is a circular pedestal, bearing a colossal statue of King George I. The Church was erected at the public expense, from designs by Hawksmoor, and was consecrated in January, 1731; a district for its parish was, by authority of Parliament, taken out of that of St. Giles. Near Tottenham Court road on the western side of this parish, is Bedford-square, one of the most uniform in the metropolis, and at the eastern end of Great Russell-street is Bloomsbury-square, originally called Southampton-square. The whole of its northern side was formerly occupied by Bedford House, a mansion built by Inigo Jones. Its site is now built upon, forming a wide street called Bedford-place, leading to Russell-square, on the site of the gardens of Bedford House. In Bloomsbury-square is a sitting figure of Charles James Fox, and facing it, at the other extremity of Bedford-place, is a statue of Francis, Duke of Bedford, in which an attempt has been made to give the effect of ancient drapery to modern vestments. The Duke is represented in his senatorial robes, with his shirt collar open and his throat bare. The northern and southern sides of Russell-square are uniform, but the western and eastern are of dissimilar character; the last consisting partly of the buildings at the northern end of Southampton-row, and of Loughborough House, originally built by Lord Baltimore. On the north of Russell-square is Tavistock-square and Gordon-square, and on the northwest is Woburn-square and Torrington-square. More northward is Euston-square, which adjoins Southampton-place on the west, and completes the connexion with Tottenham Court-road.

The New Road from Paddington to the City of London when first made, intersected level green fields from Tottenham Court-road to Battle Bridge; about midway, on the southern side of the road, was a bowling green and house adjoining, which had been famous almost a century before as a country retreat. Nearly opposite, but more eastward, was the Brill Tavern, still more ancient than its rival, the Bowling Green. A few houses near what is now Camden Town and the Old Church of St. Pancras Parish, were the only buildings in the view from Bedford House, Queen's-square, and the Foundling Hospital. A private road belonging to the Duke of Bedford, commenced at Southampton-row, Bloomsbury, and communicated with the New Road, and the fields on either side were intersected by paths in various directions. Somers-place was first built on the northern side of the New Road, and at length Somers Town was planned on property belonging to Lord Somers; various streets were erected, and a Polygon in the centre of Clarendon-square. Gradual advances were at the same time made, by the erection of houses on the northern side of the New Road from Tottenham Court-road, and the buildings on the southern side reached the line of Gower-street, Bedford-square. The influx of emigrants from France at the Revolution in 1793, contributed towards the completion of Somers Town, by their occupation of the houses; the demand for ground on building leases, soon after that period greatly increased, the consequence of which was the erection of Guildford-street, Bernard-street, Brunswick and Russell-squares, &c., on ground belonging to the Duke of Bedford, and to the Foundling Hospital. Judd's-place, in the New Road, belongs to the Skinners' Company; a street, named after that Company, leads to Brill-row and Brill-terrace, the site of the Brill Tavern before mentioned. To the Skinners' Company also belongs the ground on which Burton-crescent, Judd-street, Tonbridgeplace, &c. are erected, and Somers Town is now completely annexed to London.

The Chapel of St. James, built in 1792, stands on the eastern side of the Hampstead-road, and although locally situated in the parish of Pancras, is made, by Act of Parliament, to belong to the parish of St. James's, Westminster. Also the Chapel of St. Giles, erected in 1804, near the old Church of St. Pancras, is made to belong to the parish of St. Giles's in the Fields.

The population of the Borough of Finsbury, according to the census of 1831, is 224,839 persons; of the City of London, 122,395 persons; of the Borough of Marylebone, 234,294; of the Tower Hamlets 302,519; of the City of Westminster, 202,460.

THE ENVIRONS OF LONDON,

With a Map.

The Map of the Metropolitan Boroughs, as defined by the Reform Bill of 1832, extends to a distance of five miles round the General Post Office, and is laid down to a scale of two inches to a mile. The Map of the Environs of London attached to this account, extends eleven miles westward, and nine miles eastward from the General Post Office; and to seven miles northward, and the same distance southward from that point. It is a subject of no little perplexity, in ascertaining the precise distance of any particular spot, that the roads leading from the Metropolis are measured from different standards. The Kent roads are measured from the Surrey side of London Bridge, through Great Dover-street. The Portsmouth road, and all those branching from it, are generally measured from the Stones End in the Borough of Southwark, near the King's Bench Prison; while the Croydon, Reigate, Epsom, and Brighton roads, are measured from the Surrey side of Westminster Bridge, and from the Standard in Cornhill, and the mile stones are generally numbered from both these places. The Southampton, Dorsetshire, Devonshire, Cornwall, Wiltshire, and all the roads in the southwestern part of the kingdom, are measured from Hyde Park Corner through Brentford. The Uxbridge, Edgeware, Birmingham, Shrewsbury, and most of the roads in the western part of the kingdom, are chiefly measured from the place where Tyburn Turnpike formerly stood, at the bottom of Oxford-street, no indication of which is left to mark the point of admeasurement.

The Highgate and Hampstead roads are measured from Holborn Bars, near Gray's-Inn-lane, and also from the top of Oxford-street, where St. Giles's Pound formerly stood. The Barnet road, and all the roads in the northern and northwestern parts of the kingdom, are measured from the place where Hicks's Hall formerly stood. A stone in front of one of the houses at the end of St. John's-lane, St. John-street, West Smithfield, has an inscription pointing out the precise spot. The Ware and Huntingdon roads, with all the branches therefrom, are measured from Shoreditch Church as far northwards as Alconbury-hill, where the roads join the great North Road. The Essex roads northeast from the Metropolis, are all measured from Whitechapel Church. It is necessary to make this statement to account for the variation that will be discovered in taking the distance from one given point in the Map, and a comparison with the mile stones on the different roads from the City of London.

London Stone, mentioned at p. 67 ante, has been called a Roman Milliarium, but Mile End appears to have been so denominated from its distance of one mile from Ald-Gate, as also Mile End in Essex precisely one mile north from Colchester, a decidedly Roman town. "The Traveller's Pocket Book," published in the year 1759, gives all the distances from London according to the newly erected mile stones; shortly before that year they were probably set up for the first time. The first general Law regarding the Highways of the Kingdom, it is well known was enacted in 1555, when they were appointed to be repaired by a parish duty all over England. Toll bars, or turnpikes, were not erected till after the Revolution, and the idea of repairing the roads, by a tax collected from travellers, was perhaps taken from Holland. The turnpike road to Attleborough in Norfolk, is said to have been the very first in the kingdom, and was made by an Act of Parliament in 1707.

The Anglo Saxon Mila, a mile, derived its name from the mille passus, or thousand paces, of which the Roman mile consisted, and there is little doubt but that they are one and the same measure.

The ordinary mile of England in former times, appears to have been more of a traditionary than an ascertained measure, and was undoubtedly nearly a mile and a half of the present standard.

The establishment of a national Milliarium, like that of ancient Rome, would, it is conceived, be of general benefit, and it is known that such an idea was entertained by Sir Francis Freeling, when the plan of the New Post Office was under his consideration. If it should be adopted, no place would be more appropriate than in front of that edifice; London Stone might be moved, like the Elgin marbles, and would form an interesting memorial in the pedestal of a Milliarium column, or unvarying Standard of admeasurement, whence the distances of the provincial towns might be ascertained with precision. The delivery of letters by the Two-penny Post, by a regulation made 12th December, 1833, extends to a circle of twelve miles measured from the General Post Office, and the following places are now included within that range: Barnet and Waltham Cross, in Hertfordshire, Romford, Dagenham, and Rainham, in Essex, Bexley, Crayford, Erith, Bromley, Foot's Cray, and East Wickham, in Kent, Cheam, Kingston, and Sutton, in Surrey, and Edgeware, Hayes, Hadley, Hounslow, Southall, and Stanmore, in Middlesex.

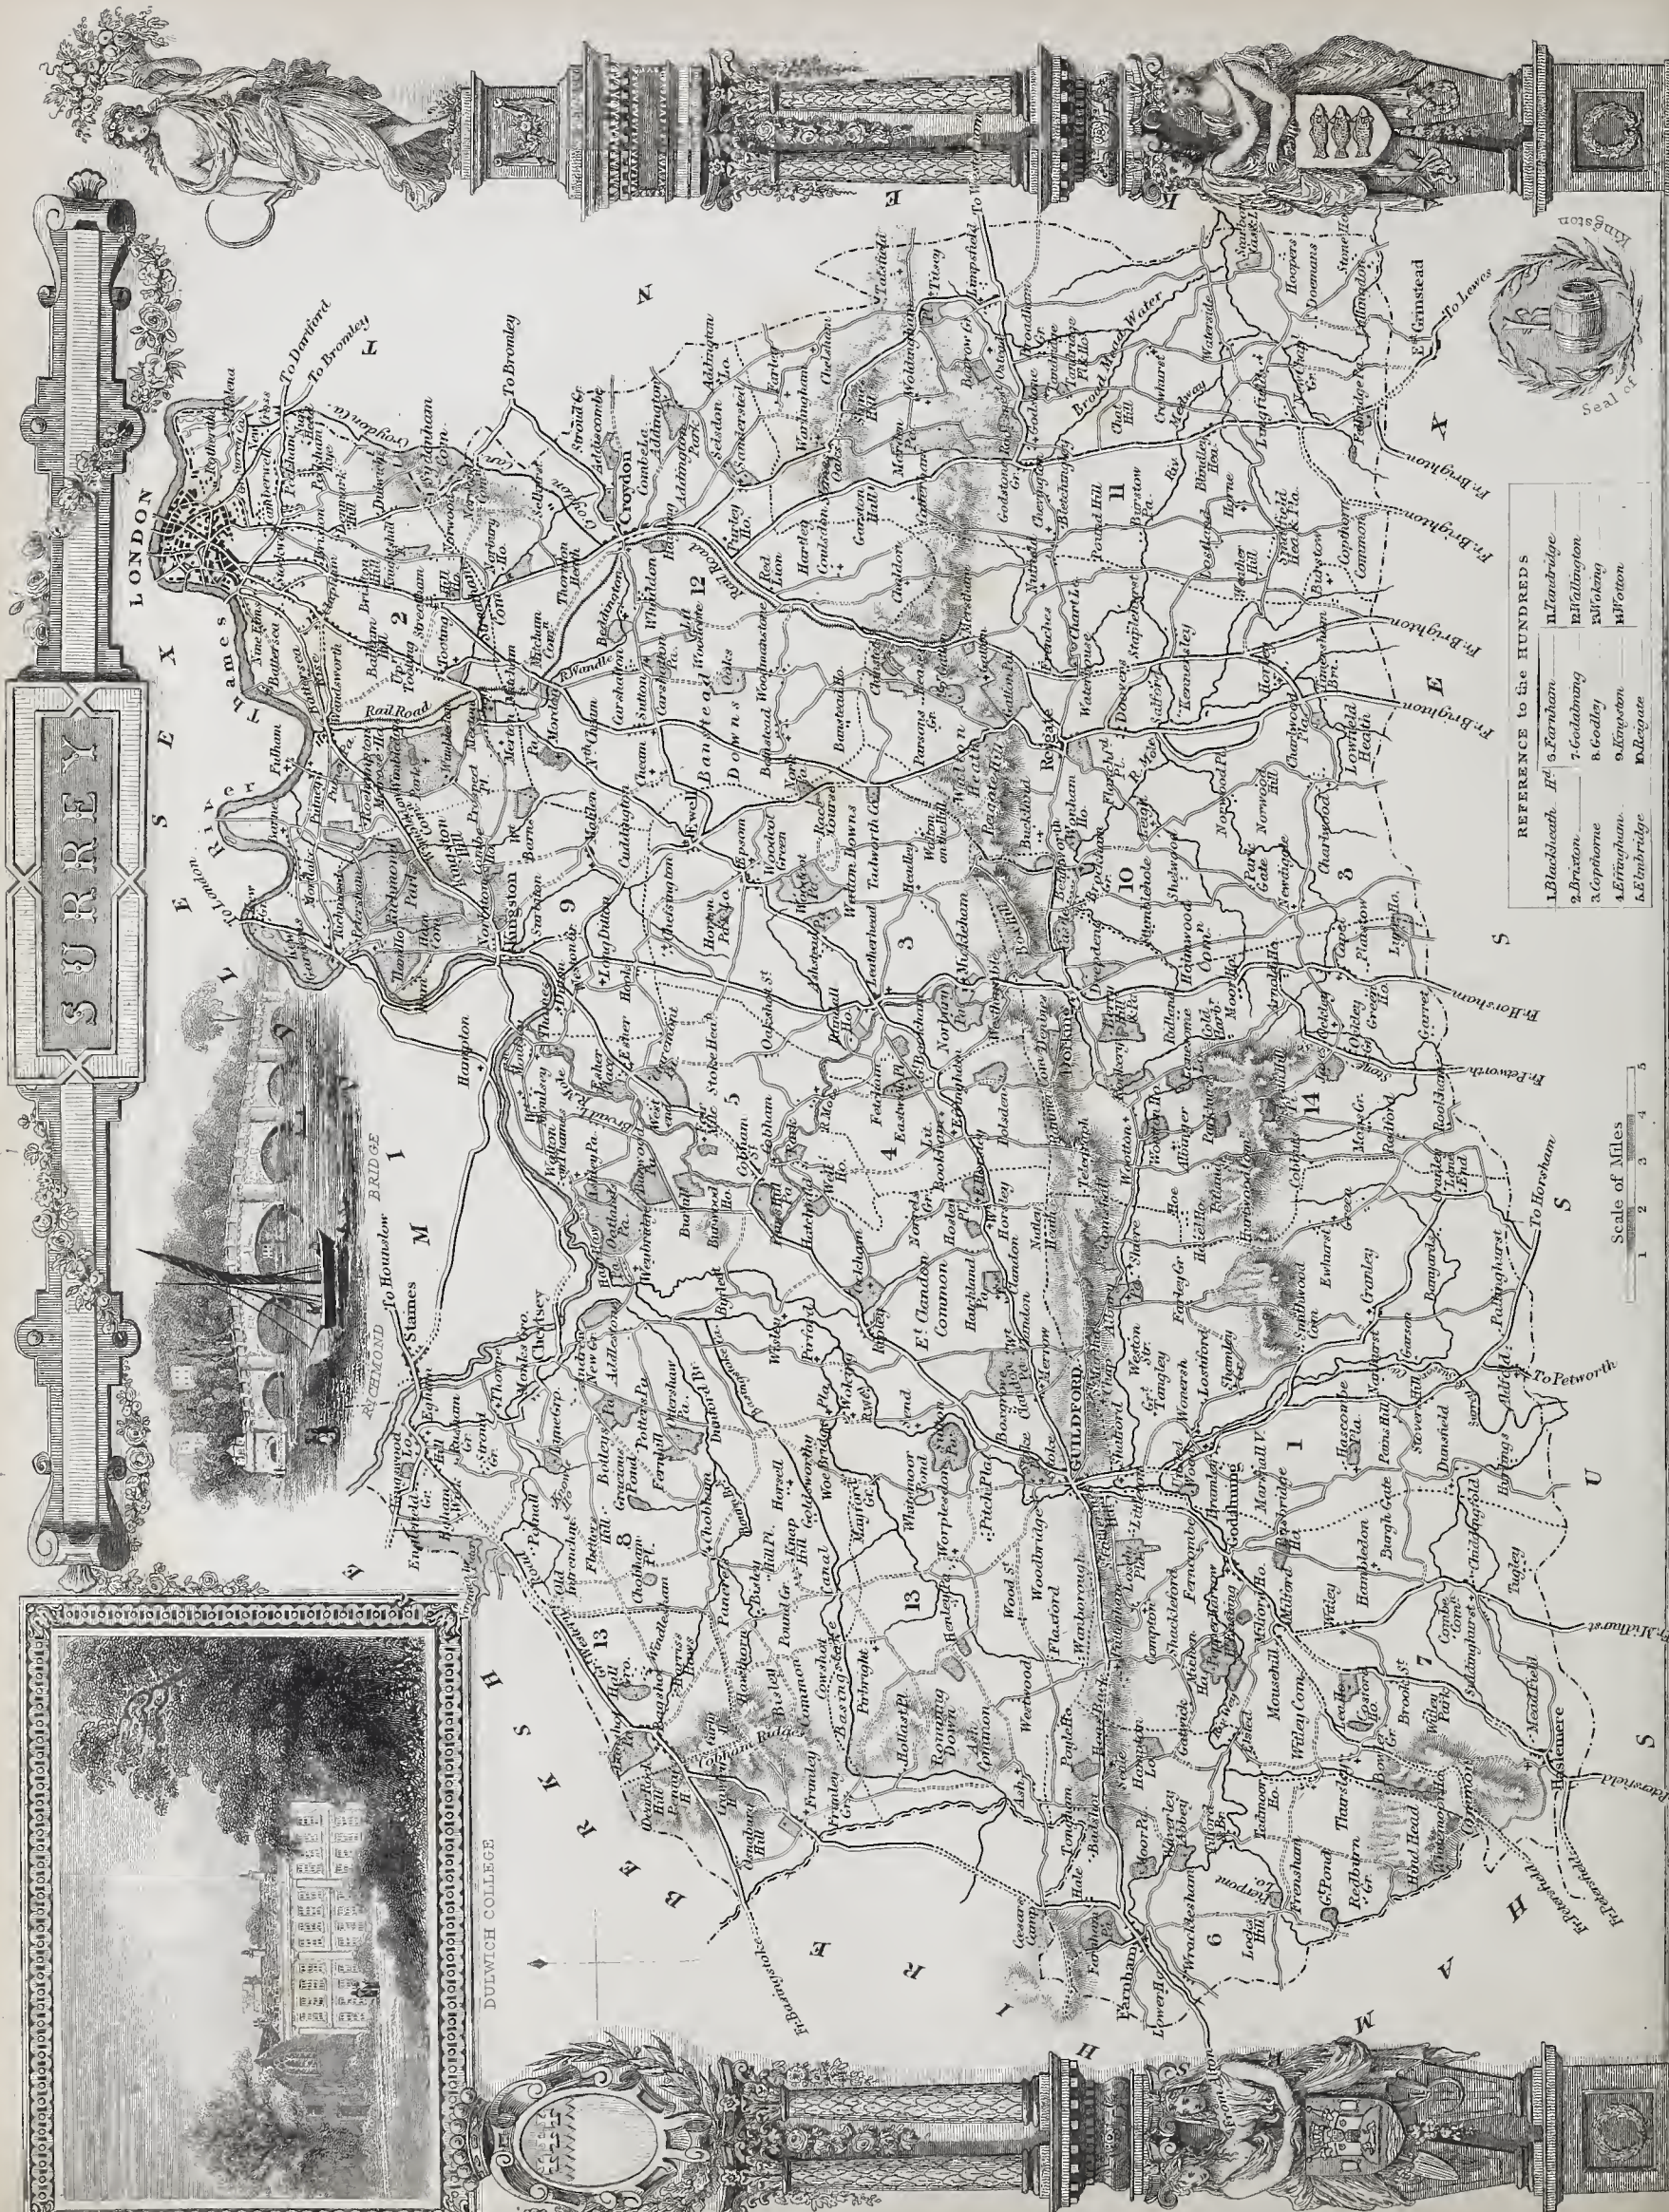

The Environs of the City of London present many attractive spots, which have been improved even since the accounts of the several Counties in the vicinity of the Metropolis were written. In Surrey, Zoological Gardens, not inferior in picturesque effect to those of the Regent's Park, have been established at Walworth; and more distant is the Beulah Spa, an agreeable promenade, in the vicinity of Norwood.

In Kent, a Rail Road for Steam Carriages is in progress, which it is proposed to conduct from London Bridge to Thornton-row, Greenwich, passing over Bermondsey-street, and through the gardens and meadow lands between Deptford and the new Church at Bermondsey; the whole extent will be three miles and three quarters, and carriages are expected to perform the distance in one quarter of an hour. The intended mode of constructing the Rail Road, is by elevating it on arches of such height and width, that if it were to cross any thoroughfare, it will not offer obstruction to the usual traffic. It will thus cross the High-street at Deptford, and it is contemplated, that upon the completion of this London and Greenwich Rail Road, the navigation of the Thames will be lessened, by Steam Boats being limited in their passage to proceed no higher than Greenwich.

In Middlesex a General Cemetery, on the plan of that of the celebrated Pere la Chaise, at Paris, has been laid out near Kensall Green, in the Harrow-road, called All Soul's Cemetery; a Chapel has been erected; the ground planted with flowers and shrubs, and walks in various directions, give the grounds rather a pleasing appearance. By the regulations, monuments are to be erected within six months after the purchase of the exclusive right of interment in any vault or grave, and no grave stone or monument is to be erected excepting the exclusive right of burial is purchased.

The London and Birmingham Rail Road, now in progress, will pass under Primrose Hill, by Watford, Northampton, and Kilsby, and enter Warwickshire near the village of Farnborough, six miles and a half south eastward from Kingston. It is proposed to be one hundred and twelve miles and a half long, with a rise of two hundred and fifty-six feet; the different levels require one rise of three hundred and fifteen feet in fifteen miles; there will be ten tunnels and two lines of road, six feet distant, with places for turning out. The travelling on this rail road is contemplated to be performed at the rate of twenty miles an hour, and the whole distance completed in five hours and a half, or between breakfast and dinner. A similar rail road is in progress from Birmingham to Manchester, which will complete a communication between that populous town and London, in about ten hours.

SURREY.—Home Circuit.

THIS county is bounded on the north by the river Thames, which separates it from Buckinghamshire and Middlesex; on the east by Kent; on the south by Sussex; and on the west by Berkshire and Hampshire. It is about twenty-six miles in length, thirty-eight in breadth, and one hundred and twelve miles in circumference. The British inhabitants were called Segontiaci by the Romans, under whom the county formed part of the province of Britannia Prima, when the people were denominated Regni, in conjunction with those of Hampshire. Woodcote, near Epsom, or Croydon, is supposed to have been a Roman station, the Novus Magus of Antoninus's Itinerary. At Walton-on-the-Hill Roman remains have been found. Under the Anglo-Saxon Heptarchy this county formed part of the kingdom of Southsex, and receives its present name of Surrey from the Saxon words Sud and Rey, the former signifying south, and the latter a river, indicating its situation on the south side of the river Thames. There are ancient encampments at Bottle Hill, Anstie Bury, Warlingham, Hascomb, Chelsham, Holmbury Hill, Ockley, Ladlands, Oatlands, and Walton-on-Thames; at the last Cæsar encamped previously to his crossing the Thames. Others are Bensbury, near Wimbledon, formed in 568, War Coppice Hill, Caterham, Beechworth Hill, Oldbury Hill near Chertsey, and one on the Common near Effingham. The Danes, after sacking London in the year 851, passed into this county, but were defeated at Ockley by Ethelwolf and his son Ethelbald: they are supposed to have been pursued to Fetcham, where, near the bottom of Hawkesworth Hill, many of them were killed. On this spot, at different times, many bones have been found; and upon Standard Hill, on the road from Leatherhead to Guildford, is a large tumulus, where bones also have been found. In the year 893 the Danes committed great depredations near Godalming, but at Farnham Alfred defeated them, and Edward the Elder was crowned at Kingston in the year 900. The castles of its earlier lords were at Guildford, Beechworth, Blechingley, Farnham, Horn, and Reigate. Eslier Palace was an ancient seat of the Bishops of Winchester, and Lambeth Palace of the Bishops of Rochester and Archbishops of Canterbury, Primate of all England. Shêen, afterwards called Richmond, was a palace of the early sovereigns of the kingdom. There were formerly abbeys at Bermondsey, Chertsey, and Waverley; and priories at Merton, Newark near Ripley, Reigate, Sheen, St. Mary Overies, Tandridge, and Tooting. This county contains one county-town, Guildford, fourteen market-towns, one hundred and forty parishes, 64,790 houses, and 398,658 inhabitants, and returns fourteen members to Parliament, viz. two for Southwark; two for Blechingley; two for Gatton; two for Reigate; two for Guildford; two for Haslemere; and two for the county, who at present are William Joseph Dennison, Esq. of Denbies, near Dorking, and John Ivatt Briscoe, of Botleys, near Chertsey. Surrey is in general a most delightful county, various parts of it being beautifully diversified with hills, valleys, and woods. In the middle of the county is an irregular ridge of hills extending from east to west; this is chiefly composed of chalk, but intermixed with sandy heaths and open downs. The northern part of the county, which is skirted by the Thames, is remarkable for the fertility of its meadows, for the excellence of its cultivation, and for the number of elegant mansions. The north-western side is occupied by Bagshot Heath; the south-western angle of the county is noted for growing some of the finest hops in the kingdom; the south side is well watered and finely varied with wood, arable, and pasture; and the south-east side is a rough woody district, called Holmsdale, extending into the county of Kent. The principal eminences of this county are the Addington Hills, near Croydon; Albury Hill, near Guildford, whence the whole extent of the Weald, clothed with wood, appears, with an occasional glimpse of the sea through the breaks of the Sussex Downs, which form the back-ground; Anstie Bury; Bagshot Heath; Banstead Downs,—the prospect hence is singularly diversified and pleasing; Blechingley Hill, on which the castle formerly stood, commanding an extensive view of Holmsdale in every direction; Botley Hill; Box Hill,—whence is a view of Sussex and great part of Middlesex; Dorking Hills,—the prospect here is unparalleled by that of any inland county in the kingdom; the road from Guildford to Farnham, particularly the first five miles of it; Hascomb Hill, commanding extensive views on every side; Headley Heath; Hind Head Hill; Katherine Hill near Guildford; Leith Hill, the highest ground in the county, and commanding a most extensive prospect; Norbury Park, Nunhead Hill; near London, with a fine view of the metropolis; Old Bury, or St. Anne's Hill, with a very extensive prospect; Richmond Hill; Tilbuster Hill, near Godstone; and Woodmansterne, the highest ground in the county, excepting Leith Hill. The rivers of Surrey are the Lodden, the Mole, the Thames, the Wandle, and the Wey. The Thames, forming the northern boundary to this county, first reaches it at Lion's Green on the north-west, and flowing past Chertsey, continues its course to Kingston, Richmond, and Kew, and takes a serpentine course to Mortlake, Putney, Wandsworth, Battersea, Southwark, and Rotherhithe, where it leaves the county. The river Wey rises at Hartley, below Alton, in Hampshire, and enters this county about two miles below Farnham, whence it flows to Godalming, Guildford, and Weybridge, near which it falls into the Thames. The Wandle rises near Croydon, and passes Beddington, Carshalton, Mitcham, Merton, and Wandsworth, where it falls into the Thames. The Mole rises on the borders of Sussex, and passing Dorking, Leatherhead, and Cobham, also falls into the Thames. The canals intersecting this county are the Basingstoke, the Surrey, and the Croydon and Rotherhithe. The Surrey canal passes from Rotherhithe to Deptford, and unites with the Croydon canal, which passes Camberwell, Walworth, Lambeth, Kennington, Stockwell, Clapham, Balham, Streatham, Tooting, and Mitcham, to Croydon. Surrey, from its vicinity to the metropolis, and from the convenience of its streams for water-carriage, has numerous manufactures established in it. The course of the river Wandle from Croydon to the Thames, which is not more than ten miles in extent, supplies a great number of flour, paper, snuff, and oil mills; also mills for preparing leather and parchment, and for grinding logwood, besides affording excellent water and convenient grounds on its banks for large calico and printing works; the last are principally in the parishes of Croydon and Mitcham. The flour-mills at Merton are supposed to be amongst the largest and most complete in England, having been erected and supplied with water at a great expense. The river Mole, besides several flour-mills, turns the iron-mills near Cobham, and the flatting-mills at Ember Court. There are many paper-mills on the several branches of the Wey. A very extensive iron-work is carried on at Garrat Lane, in the immediate vicinity of the Wandle. At Godalming are some manufactories for weaving stockings, combing wool, and making worsted, blankets, sails, and collar cloths. There are several distilleries in Surrey, in the neighbourhood of London, on a very extensive scale, particularly at Battersea and Lambeth: at the last-mentioned place are manufactories of patent shot. Numerous manufactures, also, are carried on in the Borough of Southwark, and in the immediate vicinity of the metropolis.—Nork House, near Epsom, is the seat of Lord Arden, Lord Lieutenant of the county.

1. Blackheath Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Woking hundred; on the east by Wootton hundred; on the south by the county of Sussex; and on the west by Godalming hundred. It is separated into First and Second Divisions.

FIRST DIVISION.

ALFOLD, on the borders of Sussex, 8 miles S.E. from Godalming, contains 91 houses, and 470 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 6*l.* 11*s.* 3*d.*

BRAMLEY, on a branch of the river Wey, 3 miles S. from Guildford, contains 106 houses, and 707 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is a curacy.

CHILWORTH, on the Tillingbourne, a branch of the Wey, 2½ miles S.E. from Guildford, contains 40 houses, and 197 inhabitants. The chapel, dedicated to St. Martha, which is frequented by the inhabitants of this village, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Duke of Marlborough. It is very ancient, and is situated on an eminence, commonly called Martyr's Hill, commanding a fine view.

DUNSFOLD, 5 miles S. from Godalming, contains 87 houses, and 578 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 12*l.* 0*s.* 7*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

HASCOMB, 3 miles S.E. from Godalming, contains 47 houses, and 253 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 6*l.* 3*s.* 9*d.*

SHALFORD, on the Tillingbourne, near its junction with the Wey, one mile S. from Guildford, contains 143 houses, and 744 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 4*s.* 7*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown: it was rebuilt in 1790 by Robert Austen, Esq., to whose memory is a mural monument in the chancel, by Bacon: he died in 1797. This gentleman also presented the painted window at the east end, and the altar-piece, the Resurrection, after a picture by Carlo Dolce. Shalford House is the seat of Henry Edmund Austen, Esq.: it was built in the reign of James I., on the site of the rectorial manor-house, by John Austen, Esq.; but a carved oak chimney-piece, with his arms, &c. is the only vestige to denote its antiquity. The front has been modernized. Besides several family portraits by Jansen, Kneller, Dance, Syme, and Gauguin, there is a collection of pictures chiefly from the Orleans gallery. The grounds are very extensive; and by large plantations and other improvements, Mr. Austen has greatly embellished the environs of this village. On the banks of the river is Katherine Hill, so called, from the remains of a chapel on its summit, dedicated to St. Katherine, founded probably about the time of Henry III. To this chapel Richard de Wanney, parson of St. Nicholas parish, in the town of Guildford, procured a charter in 1328 for holding a fair annually on this hill on the eve, day and morrow of St. Matthew, which is still observed, according to the new style. Mr. Austen, of Shalford House, has, with much taste, carefully prevented the destruction of this interesting ruin, by repairs of the walls and arches.

WONERSH, or Ognersh, on a branch of the Wey, 3 miles S. from Guildford, contains 185 houses, and 918 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a vicarage, value 15*l.* 1*s.* 3*d.*, in the patronage of Lord Grantley. Wonersh House is the seat of Lord Grantley.

SECOND DIVISION.

ALBURY, or Alderbury, on the Tillingbourne, 4 miles S.E. from Guildford, contains 143 houses, and 765 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a rectory, value 17*l.* 12*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Earl of Aylesford. Albury Park, the seat of Henry Drummond, Esq., is celebrated as the favourite residence of Thomas Earl of Arundel, in the reign of Charles I.: it stands in a rich valley, surmounted by wooded eminences, beautifully diversified. The park is of less extent, and the grounds have undergone many changes since they were originally laid out by Evelyn, the author of "Sylva;" but beauty is still the prevailing character of the scenes which the walks present. The Tillingbourne winds at the foot of the lawn, on the north front of the house, and noble oaks, beeches, and Spanish chestnut-trees adorn the park; while nearer the house is a flower-garden, botanically arranged according to the Linnæan system, having at its extremity a broad terrace of great length, in the centre of which is a semicircular basin of clear water, beneath which is a room called the Roman Bath, having niches in the walls for the reception of statues. The house has been partly rebuilt in excellent taste, under the direction of Hakevill, with clustered chimneys of moulded bricks, which are highly ornamental. The entrance hall contains some curious ancient portraits of the earlier sovereigns of England, down to the time of Henry VIII. Prince Arthur is represented holding the seed of the dandelyon in his hand,—a royal badge. Here are also portraits of Lord Burghley, Cecil Earl of Salisbury, and a whole-length of Queen Elizabeth. In the dining-room is a portrait of the Honourable Andrew Drummond, by Reynolds, which has not been engraved, together with other family pictures, and a few by the old masters. Albury Cottage, near this village, is the seat of the Rev. — Malpas. From Newland's Corner is a very extensive prospect.

CRANLEY, 7½ miles S. from Guildford, contains 166 houses, and 1182 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a rectory, value 20*l.* 18*s.* 1*d.* Vachary is a hamlet of this parish.

EWHURST, or Iwhurst, 8 miles S.W. from Dorking, contains 156 houses, and 821 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a rectory, value 12*l.* 7*s.* 3*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

SHERE, or Shire, on the Tillingbourne, 5 miles E. from Guildford, contains 202 houses, and 1077 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a rectory, value 26*l.* 1*s.* 5*d.*, in the patronage of William Bray, Esq. of Tower Hill, the historian of this county, and editor of "The Memoirs of Evelyn." Gomshall, or Gumsele, is a hamlet of this parish; and Netley Place is the seat of E. S. Lomax, Esq.

2. Brixton Hundred

Is bounded on the north by the river Thames and Middlesex; on the east by the county of Kent; on the south by Croydon hundred; and on the east by Kingston hundred. It is separated into Eastern and Western Divisions.

EASTERN DIVISION.

BERMONDSEY, within the bills of mortality, on the south-eastern side of London, contains 4278 houses, and 25,235 inhabitants. It may be called the great wool staple of the kingdom, most of the country weavers being hence supplied with that commodity. The various preparations of skins and leather are also here carried on to a great extent. The master, wardens, and commonalty of the art or mystery of tanners of Bermondsey are incorporated by a charter of 5th of July in the second year of the reign of Queen Anne. Here is a free-school, founded in 1718, by Josiah Bacon. The church, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen, is a rectory, value 15*l.* 8*s.* 11*d.*: it was built in 1680. The new church, dedicated to St. James, in the Spa-road, stands in an extensive burial-ground, inclosed with iron palisades: it is in the Grecian style of architecture, and was erected in 1829, from designs by Savage.

Adjoining to the spot where the old church now stands, Alwine Child, a citizen of London, founded a Cluniac priory in 1082. King William Rufus endowed it in 1094 with the manor of Bermondsey, which grant was confirmed by King Henry I. in 1127, who at the same time gave it the manor of Rotherhithe and Dulwich, when Walcheline Maminot granted it the moiety of the manor of Greenwich. King Henry III. granted the monks a market every Monday at Charlton, and a fair on Trinity Sunday yearly. This priory, which was a cell to La Charité in France, was made denizen in 1380, and erected into an abbey by Pope Boniface IX. in 1399: it was endowed with a yearly income, valued at 548*l.* 2*s.* 5*d.*, and after the Dissolution the site was granted in 1541 to Sir Robert Southwell, Master of the Rolls, who sold it to Sir Thomas Pope: the last pulled down the abbey church, and built a mansion upon its site, which afterwards became the residence of the Earls of Sussex, who erected a church for public worship near the spot where the present church stands. In the abbey church were interred the following persons of note:—William de Morton Earl of Cornwall, in the reign of Henry I.; Margaret de la Pole, ob. 1473; and the widow of John Lord Audley, ob. 1497. The last remains of this venerable abbey of Bermondsey were taken down about 1810.

CAMBERWELL, 3 miles S. from London, contains 3010 houses, and 17,876 inhabitants, including the hamlets of Dulwich and Peckham. A spring, whence the name of this increasing parish originates, is situate near the summit of the Grove, and now supplies several houses with water. The church, dedicated to St. Giles, is a vicarage, value 20*l.*: in the chancel were interred many of the family of Bowyer, long resident in the village. Grove Hill was the seat of the late J. C. Lettsom, M.D.; it is sufficiently elevated to command a view over the adjacent counties. From Denmark Hill also are several picturesque views, on which account several handsome villas have been erected on it. Champion Hill was the seat of Sir Claude de Crespigny, created baronet in 1805. A new church, dedicated to St. George, has been built from designs by F. Bedford; it stands on the south bank of the Surrey canal, near the high road. The first stone was laid in March 7, 1822, by the Bishop of Winchester, and the edifice was consecrated March 26, 1824. To the western front is attached a portico, consisting of six fluted columns of the Grecian Doric order. The steeple, between a tower and a spire, possesses some merit for its originality, and in many points of view is not an inelegant object: it contains a musical peal of bells, much admired for their melody. The font is an antique vase, enriched with mouldings, standing on a square pedestal.

The western side of Camberwell, including the Proprietary chapel, erected in 1795, is within the dean's liberty in the parish of Lambeth.

The manor of Dulwich belongs to the college, founded here in 1614 by Edward Alleyn, a celebrated comedian, and Keeper of the King's Bear Garden, who named it the College, of God's Gift, and endowed it with large and increasing revenues, for the maintenance of a master and warden, who ought to be of the blood and surname;

but of late those of the name of Allen have been admitted, with four fellows, three of whom are to be divines, and the fourth an organist; six brethren and six sisters; twelve scholars, six assistants, and thirty out-members. Upon the death of the master, the warden succeeds; and out of the candidates, duly qualified according to the statutes, a new warden must be chosen by lot. Both master and warden must continue unmarried. The two senior fellows must be Masters of Arts and officiate as preachers; the two juniors, who must be graduates and in holy orders, are to act as schoolmaster and usher; they must all be unmarried. The brethren and sisters must be sixty years of age, and unmarried at their admission; they are to be chosen as vacancies occur from the thirty out-members, who are to be of the parishes of St. Saviour, Southwark; St. Botolph, Bishopsgate; and St. Giles's, Cripplegate,—ten of each parish, and are to be lodged in almshouses, which the founder ordered by his will to be built for their reception. The scholars are to be six or eight years of age at their admission, and are to be educated till they are eighteen; and when their education is finished, either to be appointed at the charge of the college, or sent to the University, where there are never to be less than four. The Archbishop of Canterbury is visitor of the college, and the churchwardens of the three parishes whence the out-members are chosen, are appointed assistants in the government of it.

The original edifice was designed by Inigo Jones, and formed three sides of a quadrangle. In the centre are the apartments of the master and warden. In the chapel is a font, upon which is the Boustrophedon inscription, a cancrine or recurrent verse,—

NIYON · ANOMHMATA · MH · MONAN · OYIN.

The altar-piece is a valuable copy, by Julio Romano, of Raphael's Transfiguration, presented to the college in 1796 by Thomas Mills, Esq., of Great Swaffham, Cambridgeshire. A Picture-gallery has also been erected from designs by Soane,—the bequest of Sir Francis Bourgeois, R.A., who died 8th Jan. 1811, according to the terms of his will, and left the Desenfans' collection of pictures to Dulwich College, besides 10,000*l.* to keep them in due preservation, and 2000*l.* for the purpose of repairing the gallery in the college for their reception. He also bequeathed legacies of 1000*l.* each to the master of the college, and to the chaplain; and the fellows of the college to be the residuary legatees, and who are to possess, for its advantage, all the rest of his property of every denomination. He also directed that the body of Noel Desenfans and his own should be entombed in a sarcophagus to be placed in the chapel of Dulwich College.

Edward Alleyn, the founder, was the first master of his college; so that according to Haywood, one of his contemporaries, "he was so mingled with humility and charity that he became his own pensioner, humbly submitting himself to that proportion of diet and clothes which he had bestowed on others." He died 25th Nov. 1626, and was buried in the chapel, where there is a monument to his memory.

Part of the founder's library, consisting of a valuable collection of old plays, given by the college to Garrick, have found their way to the British Museum.

Dulwich was celebrated for a mineral spring found in 1739 near the Green Man, which became a house of resort for company; the water at length lost its reputation, and the house was occupied by Lord Thurlow during the time his seat at Knight's Hill was erecting. Opposite to this house is an avenue through a wood to the top of the hill, whence is still a delightful prospect, although the great increase of buildings has materially altered it within memory.

CLAPHAM, 4 miles S.W. from London, contains 1132 houses, and 7151 inhabitants. The principal part of this village consists of a number of very handsome houses dispersed round the extensive Common on rising ground, containing not less than 200 acres, and affording some very pleasing views. The disposition and arrangement of the villas on this spot is said to be owing to the exertions of Christopher Baldwin, Esq., under whose direction the roads and plantations were made, which give the Common the appearance of a park: near the road to Wandsworth is a reservoir of fine water, whence the whole village is supplied. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is a rectory, value 8*l.* 0*s.* 10*d.*: it was rebuilt in 1776, and is situated at the north-eastern corner of the Common. Neither in the church itself, nor in the ground which is inclosed around it, are any interments allowed. The south aisle of the old church, which stands on an eminence near the Kingston road, is reserved for the performance of the funeral service in the adjoining cemetery: in this aisle are two very fine monuments of the Atkins family, and a monument of Dr. Martin Lister, author of "Synopsis Conchylium," a work which re-fleets honour on his country, and as a naturalist places him in the highest class. Near the old church is the manor-house, now a boarding-school. A chapel-of-ease, dedicated to St. Paul, has been erected for the accommodation of this part of the parish.

LAMBETH, or Lamehithe, adjoining London on the S.W. and within the bills of mortality, contains 9294 houses, and 57,638 inhabitants, including the hamlets of Brixton Causeway, Kennington, Stockwell and Vauxhall, and Lambeth Palace, which is extra-parochial. The parish is divided into four liberties, and those subdivided into eight precincts, viz. the Bishop's, the Prince's, Vauxhall, Kennington, the Marsh, the Wall, Stockwell, and the Dean's. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 32*l.* 15*s.* 7*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury: the edifice was rebuilt between the years 1374 and 1377. The north and south aisles were built about 1505, and the western end by Archbishop Warham in 1519.

The eastern end of the north aisle was built in 1522 by the Duke of Norfolk, and is called the Howard chapel. In one of the windows of the church is a small figure of a pedlar and his dog, the representation of a benefactor to the parish, according to tradition: part of the land is still called Pedlar's Acre. There are monuments of the following Archbishops of Canterbury: Archbishop Bancroft, ob. 1610; Archbishop Parker, ob. 1575; Archbishop Tenison, ob. 1689; Archbishop Hutton, ob. 1758; Archbishop Secker, ob. 1768; Archbishop Cornwallis, ob. 1783; and Archbishop Moore, ob. 1805. In the churchyard is the tomb of the Tradescants, father and son, the first persons who formed a collection of natural history: in their garden at South Lambeth was an arrangement of trees, plants and flowers. This monument was erected in 1662, but was restored at the expense of the parish in 1773.

The manor of Lambeth became, as early as 1197, the property of the see of Canterbury, by exchange between Glanville Bishop of Rochester, and Archbishop Hubert Walter, who, as well as his successor Cardinal Langton, lived at the manor-house. Archbishop Boniface, in the year 1262, obtained a bull for disposing of part of the offerings at Becket's shrine to rebuild the house at Lambeth; Archbishop Reynolds considerably repaired it in 1321; Archbishop Chicheley built the Lollard's Tower in 1435; after the civil wars Cardinal Archbishop Morton restored the palace and built the present magnificent gate-house about the year 1490; Archbishop Cranmer built the great parlour in 1553; Archbishop Laud restored the chapel, and repaired the windows containing the history of the Old and New Testament, which had been put up by Archbishop Morton. The great hall was rebuilt by Archbishop Juxon in the reign of Charles II., on the ancient model: here the Archbishop with his particular friends sat at the high table, the steward and retainers sat at the table on the right hand, the almoner and chaplains and other clergy at the table on the left. The open worked timber roof of this hall is framed in the manner of that at Westminster, with a lantern in the centre. The hall, remarkable for its grandeur and beautiful proportion, is in dimension ninety-three feet by thirty-eight: this room remains, and has been converted into the archiepiscopal library; but the principal part of the palace was rebuilt in 1830 by the present Archbishop of Canterbury the Right Honourable William Howley, D.D., from designs by, and under the superintendence of, Edward Blore, in the Tudor style of architecture, which in this building he has most admirably adapted to all the purposes of state as well as to the present more retired mode of living, and furnished with every convenient apartment that modern refinement can require. The edifice, with the gardens and pleasure ground attached, occupies about thirteen acres of land. In the palace are portraits of all the Archbishops from Warham to the present time; there is also a portrait of Archbishop Arundel, copied from an original at Penshurst in Kent.

A church, dedicated to St. John, was built in 1824 in Waterloo-road, from designs by Bedford; on the front is a hexastyle portico of the Doric order of architecture, over the pediment of which is the steeple, of considerable height, containing a peal of bells. In the centre aisle of the interior is a font of white marble, presented to the church by the Rev. Dr. Barrett, the first incumbent.

The manor of Kennington in the reign of Edward III. was made part of the duchy of Cornwall, to which it still continues annexed. Edward the Black Prince resided here, and also his son King Richard II. The royal palace stood near the spot now called Kennington Cross, and was the occasional residence of several monarchs till the time of Henry VII. King Charles I., when Prince of Wales, is said to have lived in a house built on the site of part of the palace, but on his accession to the throne it was let out.

The new church of Kennington, built by the parliamentary commissioners, stands on the upper part of the Common near the Brixton-road, and on the actual spot which once served for the common place of execution for the county, distinguished by the martyrdom, in the last century, of several who here suffered an ignominious death for their devotion to the Stuart cause. The church, which is of the Doric order, is dedicated to St. Mark, and was erected in 1824 from designs by D. Roper. The churchyard is inclosed with palisades on a granite plinth, and set off by piers of the same material.

Stockwell is a hamlet of Lambeth parish. The manor anciently bore the name of South Lambeth, when it probably comprehended Stockwell, South Lambeth, and Vauxhall. A chapel was built here in 1767, towards which Archbishop Secker contributed. At South Lambeth also, which lies between Stockwell and Vauxhall, is a chapel built by the inhabitants.

Vauxhall is about a mile southward from Lambeth church, and here is a light and elegant cast iron bridge over the Thames, erected by subscription in the year 1814. At Vauxhall are also the most celebrated public gardens in Europe, the earliest record of which is probably in No. 383 of the Spectator, dated 20th May, 1712, where they are mentioned as a place of great resort. About 1730, Mr. Jonathan Tyers gave a ridotto al fresco on successive evenings, which increased their popularity, which has since that time been maintained by galas. Hayman and Hogarth were both employed in painting the pavilions.

At Brixton a new church, dedicated to St. Matthew, has been erected by the parliamentary commissioners; and Norwood church, dedicated to St. Luke, built in 1825 by Bedford, is also in this parish.

NEWINGTON, or Neweton, adjoining Southwark on the west, contains 5819 houses, and 33,047 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Walworth. Mr. Lysons is of opinion that the church of this parish stood originally at Walworth, and that on its removal to the present site the buildings which were erected around it acquired the name of The New Town, called more recently Newington Butts, from the butts placed there for archers to shoot at. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 16*l.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Worcester. The edifice was rebuilt in 1793. The parsonage-house, built of wood, appears to be ancient; it is surrounded by a moat. Northward of the church are the Fishmongers' Alms-houses, comprising St. Peter's hospital, founded in 1618 by the Fishmongers' Company; and another founded in 1719 by James Hulbert, a statue of whom is placed in front of the house. In the parish are also Drapers' Alms-houses, founded by John Walters in 1651. Westward of the church is the Philanthropic Institution, founded in 1788, for the reform of the criminal poor, comprising workshops for various trades, and a chapel. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, built by the parliamentary commissioners in 1824, from designs by Bedford, stands upon ground given to the parish by the corporation of the Trinity House, who are owners of considerable property in the vicinity: it is situated in a small square on the south side of Suffolk-street East, nearly on the verge of the parish. In front is a hexastyle portico of the Corinthian order, and the building is surmounted by a tower, containing a peal of eight powerful bells. The hamlet of Walworth extends from Newington Butts to Camberwell, and gives name to the only manor in the parish.

ROTHERHITHE, or Redriff, on the banks of the Thames, 2 miles S.E. from London, contains 2098 houses, and 12,523 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 18*l.*, in the patronage of Clare Hall, Cambridge. In the vestry room of this church is a portrait of the royal martyr King Charles I. in his robes, kneeling at an altar and holding a crown of thorns. In the churchyard was buried Prince Le Boo, who died in 1784, æt. 20. In 1805, an Act of Parliament was obtained for making a tunnel under the Thames hence to Limehouse, but after being considerably advanced towards completion by Mr. Brunel, was suspended in 1828 for want of means to carry it on, and is not likely to be resumed; a brick wall is now erected at the extremity of the excavation. In the eastern part of this parish are the Greenland Docks, where the vessels employed in that trade are secured during the winter season, and their cargoes warehoused and prepared for sale. The greater dock is supposed to have been the mouth of the famous canal cut by Canute in order to avoid the impediment of London Bridge, and to lay siege to the capital by bringing his fleet to the western side.

SOUTHWARK, the most populous borough of this county, is within the jurisdiction of the City of London, from which it is only separated by the river Thames. It comprises Bridge Ward-without, and contains 12,477 houses, and 85,905 inhabitants, including the parishes of Christ-church, St. George, St. John, St. Olave, St. Saviour, and St. Thomas, and extends from London Bridge to Newington in the south, almost to Lambeth in the south-west, and to Rotherhithe in the east. The principal streets are St. Margaret's Hill, High-street, Blackman-street, Long-lane, Kent-street, Tooley-or St. Olave's-street, and Union-street. Bridge Ward-without is only nominal, the alderman not being elected, nor have the inhabitants any representative in the Court of Common Council: the senior alderman of London is generally appointed to this ward as a relief from the fatigue of business. A steward and bailiff are appointed by the Lord Mayor and Common Council: the former holds a court of record at St. Margaret's Hill. Besides that part of the Borough which is subject to the City of London, called the Borough Liberty, is another division called the Liberty of the Clink, subject to the Bishop of Winchester, who also appoints a steward and bailiff, under whom this district is governed. The Surrey magistrates also have considerable influence here as justices of the peace for the county. At a small distance from the foot of London Bridge on the north side of Tooley-street is St. Olave's church, a rectory, value 68*l.* 4*s.* 9*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown: it was rebuilt in 1739. Near the church is the bridge-house, containing stores of timber, &c., for the repair of London Bridge, which is under the management of bridge-masters. Adjoining the Bridge-House yard formerly stood a residence of the Abbot of St. Augustine's at Canterbury, which became the property of Sir Anthony St. Leger, the site of which is now Sellinger's wharf. On the eastern side of Bridge Yard was the mansion of the Abbot of Battle, the name of which is preserved in Battle-bridge, and the gardens in that of the Maze. The prior of Lewes also had a mansion in Tooley-street.

St. John's Horsleydown was formerly part of the parish of St. Olave. The church, dedicated to St. John the Evangelist, is a rectory, in the patronage of the Crown: it was built in 1732.

At the foot of New London Bridge is the church of St. Saviour, commonly called St. Mary Overie, having been built on the site of a Priory dedicated to the Virgin Mary, and founded by the owner of a ferry over the river at this point. This edifice, one of the largest parish churches in the kingdom, is now seen to great advantage, the large space cleared for the approaches to the new bridge having thrown the church completely open to view. Previously to the opening being made, a considerable portion of the church, including the east end of the choir, was restored in a singularly tasteful manner by George Gwilt, an architect of distinguished celebrity. In this church are monuments of the poet Gower, Launcelot Andrews, Bishop of Winchester, ob. 1626, and many others. In the central tower, which is square and well proportioned, is a fine peal of bells. Adjoining the church is Montague Close, the site of the mansion of Lord Montague; near which was that of Lord Montague, who discovered the gunpowder plot in the reign of James I. At the west end of St. Saviour's church was formerly the palace of the Bishops of Winchester, adjoining which on the south was that of the Bishop of Rochester. The stews in this vicinity were suppressed by proclamation in the reign of Henry VIII., but the prison of the Clink is still in existence. More westward of the church is Stoney-street, a supposed continuation of Watling-street, a Roman road: near the middle of High-street, on the eastern side, is St. Thomas's Hospital, an institution of very early origin, under the government of the Lord Mayor and Commonalty of London, by charter from King Edw. VI., in 1552.

The hospital consists of three quadrangles. In the centre of the second court from the street is a bronze statue of King Edward VI. by Scheemaker, erected at the expense of Charles Joyce, Esq. in 1737. In the centre of the third court is a stone statue of Sir Robert Clayton in his robes as Lord Mayor, erected by the governors in his lifetime, 1701. The mode of admitting patients is the same as at St. Bartholomew's Hospital, for which purpose a committee of governors sit every Thursday.

The parish church of St. Thomas was originally erected for the use of the hospital, and afterwards made parochial. The living is an impropriation, in the gift of the governors, who choose one out of two persons elected by the parishioners.

Behind St. Thomas's Hospital is another founded by Thomas Guy in 1721; in the centre of the quadrangle is a statue of the founder, by Scheemaker. On St. Margaret's Hill is the Town Hall, where the election for members of Parliament is held, a privilege conferred in the reign of Edward I.; the right of election is vested in the inhabitants paying scot and lot: the present members are Charles Calvert, Esq., and William Brougham, Esq.

On the east side of this street are the Marshalsea prison and Palace Court; more southward is St. George's church, rebuilt in 1736: the living is a rectory, value 18*l.* 13*s.* 9*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. Bishop Bonner was buried in the cemetery under the east window of the church; he died in the Marshalsea prison. Opposite to this church was the residence of Charles Brandon Duke of Suffolk in the reign of Henry VIII.: after whose death the king established a royal Mint here; the name of which is still preserved in Mint-street. In Union-street is Union Hall, one of the Police-offices; and in a road leading to Westminster Bridge is the King's Bench prison, nearly opposite to which, in Horsemonger-lane, is the county prison. In that part of St. George's Fields where the roads from the several bridges meet, is an obelisk, inscribed with the exact distances. The road hence to Blackfriars Bridge is spacious; on the west side of it is the parish of Christ-church, which consists principally of the manor of Paris Garden, where formerly stood the Globe Theatre and the Bear Garden. The present church was built in 1737, and is a rectory, in the patronage of the representatives of the founder, Mr. John Marshal, who endowed it in 1627. The Magdalen Hospital was built in 1769, and is supported by voluntary contributions. The Asylum for Female Orphans was founded in 1759, agreeably to a proposal of John Fielding, Esq., one of the Justices for the liberty of Westminster.

STREATHAM, 7 miles S. from London, contains 535 houses, and 3616 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Leonard, is a rectory, value 18*l.* 13*s.* 9*d.*, in the patronage of the Duke of Bedford, who also bears the title of Lord Howland of Streatham: the church being upon high ground, the spire forms a conspicuous object for several miles round. In the church are monuments of Henry Thrale, Esq., and Mrs. Salusbury, mother of Mrs. Piozzi, with inscriptions by Dr. Johnson; and of James Price, M.D., who died in 1783.

The village was once celebrated for its mineral wells, and concerts were occasionally held here on account of the resort of company: these have ceased more than a century, but the water is still esteemed for its cathartic quality. Between Streatham and Tooting is the villa which belonged to Mr. Thrale, and where Dr. Johnson frequently resided as an inmate. Streatham Park is the seat of T. Harrison, Esq.; Mount Nod of Edmund Fry, Esq.; and Norbury Farm of R. Sanderson, Esq.

WESTERN DIVISION.

BARNES, on the banks of the Thames, 6 miles S.W. from London, contains 208 houses, and 1240 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 9*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's Cathedral: it is one of the most ancient structures in the vicinity of the metropolis, but the tower at the west end is of modern erection. Between two of the buttresses on the south side is a tablet to Edward Rose, citizen of London, who died in 1653, with rose-trees planted and kept up pursuant to his will. Barn Elms, the manor-house, was the residence of Tonson the bookseller, secretary to the celebrated Kit Cat Club, who built a gallery for the reception of the portraits of the members of the club, painted by Sir Godfrey Kneller. Barn Elms is now the seat of H. H. Hoare, Esq. This village has already derived considerable improvement from the erection of Hammersmith Suspension Bridge, and the new roads of communication with the western parts of London.

BATTERSEA, on the banks of the Thames, 3 miles S.W. from London, contains 801 houses, and 4764 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 13*l.* 15*s.* 2*d.*: it was rebuilt in 1777, when the east window of painted glass was carefully replaced: it contains portraits of King Henry VII., his grandmother Margaret Beauchamp, and Queen Elizabeth; with arms and quarterings of the St. John family, the royal arms, &c. &c. In the church is a beautiful monument of Henry Viscount Bolingbroke and his second wife the niece of Madame de Maintenon. Thomas Astle the Antiquary, who died in 1802; and Arthur Collins, the author of the English Peerage, who died in 1760, are also buried here. Bolingbroke House, the ancient seat of the St. Johns, was pulled down in 1778, and the site was occupied by a horizontal air-mill. York House, near the river, is supposed to have been built by Laurence Booth Archbishop of York, and annexed to the see as a residence.

This parish has long been noted for its garden grounds, in which asparagus and other vegetables are cultivated for the use of the metropolis. In Battersca fields, near Nine Elms, a chapel, dedicated to St. George, was erected in 1828, from designs by Blore, in the pointed style of the thirteenth century. The hamlet of Penge, on the borders of Kent, near Sydenham, is in this parish.

MERTON, 9 miles S.W. from London, contains 186 houses, and 1177 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a curacy: against the north wall of the church hangs a large but much damaged picture of Christ bearing the Cross, by Luca Jordano. Sir Thomas Robinson, Bart. ob. 1777, is buried in the chancel.

An abbey of Canons Regular, of the Order of St. Austin, was founded here in 1117, by Gilbert Norman, sheriff of this county, at whose request King Henry I. bestowed the tower upon the monks in 1121. The revenues were 1039*l.* 5*s.* 3*d.* per annum; and the site was granted in 1558 towards the endowment of a recently erected monastery at Sheen. At a Parliament held in 1236 in this abbey, the "Provisions of Merton," the most ancient body of laws excepting Magna Charta, were enacted; and here the barons gave that celebrated answer to the clergy, "Nolumus leges Angliæ mutari." In the civil war in the reign of Charles I. the abbey was used as a garrison. Little now remains of the edifice except the walls which surrounded the demesne, and include an area of nearly sixty acres. The site of the house was converted in 1724 into a manufactory for printing calicoes; and another of the same nature was established in 1752.

The bridge over the Wandle was built in 1633; the arch is turned with tiles. Merton Place was the favourite residence of Lord Nelson, the hero of Trafalgar; and Merton gives the title of Viscount to his heirs.

MORTLAKE, on the banks of the Thames, 9 miles S.W. from London, contains 403 houses, and 2484 inhabitants, including the hamlet of East Sheen. Part of Richmond Park is also within this parish; and a Lodge upon the hill, designed by the Earl of Pembroke, was finished for the Princess Amelia when Ranger of Richmond Park. The church of Mortlake, which is a curacy, in the presentation of the Dean and Chapter of Worcester, was founded in 1348, but the present structure was erected in 1543; the font was the gift of Bouchier Archbishop of Canterbury, in the reign of Henry VI. The manor-house, formerly a residence of the Archbishops of Canterbury, was alienated to King Henry VIII. by Archbishop Cranmer, and was soon after pulled down. Four alms-houses were founded by John Juxon in 1628, and a school was endowed here by Lady Capel in 1719. A manufactory of tapestry was established here in 1619 by Sir Francis Crane, which obtained some celebrity, and is often alluded to by the old dramatists; but it was ruined by the civil war. The parish was latterly remarkable for the quantity of asparagus and lavender cultivated here.

PUTNEY, on the banks of the Thames, 5 miles S.W. from London, contains 539 houses, and 3394 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Dean and Chapter of Worcester: it is an ancient and interesting structure, but its chief ornament is Bishop West's chapel, attached to the south side. Nicholas West Bishop of Ely, and Thomas Cromwell Earl of Essex, were contemporaries; and the coincidence which marked their lives is remarkable. They were both natives of this village, and both of humble origin, the father of one being a baker, and of the other a blacksmith; both attained high civil and ecclesiastical dignities, were favourites of the same capricious monarch, and the victims of his displeasure. Cromwell Earl of Essex was beheaded; and it is always said that grief for the loss of his sovereign's favour aggravated the disease which terminated the life of Bishop West. A series of illustrations of this beautiful chapel was published in 1825 by J. G. Jackson, architect; the ceiling, form and profile of the mullions, ribs, and capitals bear a close resemblance to the entrance of Henry the Seventh's chapel at Westminster, which was erected about the same period: it is a perfect architectural bijou, and the veneration in which it is held will no doubt insure its preservation. In the churchyard were buried John Toland, the founder of modern Deism, ob. 1722; and Robert Wood, the scientific traveller and classical writer, ob. 1771. The wooden bridge over the Thames to Fulham was erected in 1729 by subscription. The verge of Putney Heath commands a very extensive and beautiful prospect over the river and the whole county of Middlesex; on it, as well as on the banks of the river, are numerous elegant villas. Roehampton, a hamlet of Putney, is situated at the western extremity of the heath. Roehampton Grove, on the site of the ancient royal park of Putney, was granted by King Charles I. to Sir Richard Weston, afterwards Earl of Portland, on whose death the house and park became the property of Christian Countess of Devonshire, a lady of considerable celebrity, and a very singular character, who died in 1674. Roehampton House is now the seat of Viscount Clifden; it was erected from designs by James Wyatt, and the north front commands a beautiful and striking view over the Thames. On the south front are a lawn and flower-garden, with a conservatory upon the west. Amongst the pictures which ornament the principal apartments is the portrait of the Fair Quaker, the favourite of King George III., by Sir Joshua Reynolds. The seat of the Earl of Bessborough, southward of the above, was erected from designs by Sir William Chambers: it contains some valuable antiques, and a small collection of pictures by French and Italian masters. In this hamlet is a chapel built in 1777, when the old chapel in Roehampton Grove House was pulled down; the altar piece is The Last Supper, said to be by Zuccherò. Putney House is the seat of the Hon. H. Legge; Lime Grove, of Edward Fletcher, Esq.; and Putney Hill of W. Leader, Esq.

TOOTING, 7 miles S.W. from London, contains 241 houses, and 1863 inhabitants. It is situated in the road to Epsom, and is divided into Upper and Lower Tooting, as it was formerly into the two manors of Tooting Bec and Tooting Graveney. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a rectory, value 8*l.* 8*s.* 6*d.*, and is situated at Lower Tooting. At Tooting Bec, which is a hamlet of Streatham was formerly an alien priory belonging to the abbey of Bec in Normandy, which was granted to Eton College by Henry VI.

WANDSWORTH, or Wandlesworth, on the banks of the Thames, 5 miles S.W. from London, contains 984 houses, and 6702 inhabitants. It is situated at the confluence of the river Wandle with the Thames, whence it derives many advantages in consequence of the establishment of manufactures which require the use of water, as iron, white lead, and oil-mills, distilleries, printing grounds both for calico and woollen stuffs, and very extensive dye-houses. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 15*l.* 5*s.* 5*d.*; the edifice was built in 1780, but the square tower at the west end is of the date of 1630. In the church are the tomb of a knight who died in 1420, and a beautiful monument of Henry Smith, Esq., a great benefactor to this county. At the extremities of the village are two hills, called from their position East and West Hill. From East Hill is a fine view of the Thames between Battersea and Putney, the two churches of Fulham and Putney rising above the trees, with the picturesque bridge; a distant view of Harrow on the Hill, Hampstead, and Highgate complete the landscape. West Hill, in which is a seat of the Marquess of Stafford, K.G., is not less pleasantly situated; it commands a view of the Thames towards London, as well as of the diversified face of the country towards Merton, Dulwich, and Shooter's Hill. On St. Ann's Hill, at the south-eastern extremity of Wandsworth, a new church was erected in 1824; it is dedicated to St. Anne, and was built from designs by Smirke. The portico of the Ionic order, copied from the temple at Ilyssus, is all that bears the mark of talent in this edifice. Garrat Lane was the scene of a mock election for a mayor of Garrat, long kept up by a subscription of the neighbouring publicans.

WIMBLEDON, 8 miles S.W. from London, contains 318 houses, and 2195 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 35*l.* 2*s.* 11*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Worcester: it was rebuilt, the chancel excepted, in 1788. In the chancel windows are some remains of ancient painted glass, amongst which are figures of St. John the Baptist, St. Christopher, and a knight completely armed. In the church are monuments to Sir Edward Cecil, grandson to Lord Treasurer Burghley, and Sir Richard Wynne, gentleman of the privy chamber to King Charles I. In the churchyard is buried John Hopkins, commonly called Vulture

Hopkins, who died in 1732. The manor, which included that of Mortlake, belonged formerly to the see of Canterbury, and afterwards became the property of Thomas Cromwell Earl of Essex, Queen Catherine Parr, Sir Christopher Hatton, Sir Thomas Cecil, afterwards Earl of Exeter, Queen Henrietta Maria, and Sarah Duchess of Marlborough; the last pulled down the mansion built here in 1588 by Sir Thomas Cecil, and rebuilt it after a design of the Earl of Pembroke. It descended to Earl Spencer, who formed here one of the finest parks in England, containing 1200 acres, and a sheet of water of fifty acres. The eminences present many delightful points of view, including Harrow, the Metropolis, Norwood, and Epsom Downs. The house at Wimbledon Park was burnt down in 1785, but has been partly rebuilt for occasional residence. On the south-western side of the common is an ancient encampment. Wimbledon House is the seat of Sir W. Rush.

3. Copthorne Hundred

Is bounded on the north-west by Elmbridge hundred; on the east by Croydon hundred; on the south by Reigate and Wotton hundreds; and on the west by Effingham hundred.

FIRST DIVISION.

BANSTEAD, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles S.E. from Ewell, contains 165 houses, and 940 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 13*l.* 8*s.* 7½*d.* Banstead Downs, the beautiful undulating surface of which is celebrated for the fineness of the turf, covered with short grass, intermixed with thyme and other fragrant herbs, feed immense flocks of sheep, in great demand for the superior delicacy of the flesh. The prospect on every side is extensive and pleasant. Banstead House is the seat of Miss Motteux.

EPSOM, $15\frac{1}{2}$ miles N.E. from Guildford, and $14\frac{1}{2}$ miles from London, contains 430 houses, and 2890 inhabitants. The petty sessions are held here, and a fair on August 6. The church, dedicated to Saint Martin, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 9*s.* 9½*d.* Sir William Parsons was created baronet April 9th, 1661. Epsom Wells were discovered about 1630, and were formerly much frequented for their medicinal qualities; the properties of these springs were nearly similar to those at Cheltenham. Nork House is the seat of Lord Arden, Lord Lieutenant of the County; Durdans, of Sir Gilbert Heathcote, Bart.; Horton Park, of John Trotter, Esq.; Horton Lodge, of — Browning, Esq.; Woodcote Park, of James Tessier, Esq.; Hookfield Grove, of E. Knight, Esq.; and Headley Hill, of Captain Bolton.

EWELL, 17 miles N.E. from Guildford, containing 290 houses, and 1550 inhabitants, is pleasantly situated, and remarkable for its springs. The market is held on Thursday, and the fairs on 12th May and 29th October, for horses, bullocks, sheep, and toys. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 8*l.*: in it are some curious monuments of considerable antiquity. Sir Richard Glynn of Ewell, Lord Mayor of London, was created a baronet September 25th, 1759. The seat of Lady Glynn is near the church. Ewell Grove is the seat of — Read, Esq.; and Ewell Court, of Mrs. Barrett.

WALTON ON THE HILL, 5 miles S. from Ewell, contains 42 houses, and 314 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 12*l.* 6*s.* 5½*d.* Here is said to have been a Roman station.

SECOND DIVISION.

ASHSTEAD, 2 miles S.W. from Epsom, contains 94 houses, and 579 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Giles, is a rectory, value 13*l.* 15*s.* 5*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Worcester; it is situated within Ashstead park. In the chancel are several monuments of the Howard family. Ashstead Park, the seat of Colonel the Honourable Fulke Greville Howard, consists of about one hundred and forty acres, finely diversified and adorned with well grown timber, the whole surrounded by a brick wall. This was the seat and property of Sir Robert Howard, a younger son of Thomas first Earl of Berkshire, a very accomplished gentleman, Chancellor of the Exchequer to King Charles II., who was frequently entertained here; and there is still preserved in the farm-house the identical table at which the monarch dined. Richard the son of Sir Walter Bagot, who upon his marriage changed his name to Howard, rebuilt the mansion, which is now an elegant and commodious structure: it is nearly quadrangular, surrounded by a bold cornice; the entrance, in the centre of the principal front, is by a small Doric portico. The stables adjoining are very handsome. The beautiful situation of Ashstead Park, between Epsom and Leatherhead, claimed the particular attention of Toland, who in his description of Epsom Wells, originally published in 1711, designated it "The sweetest spot of ground in our British world."

CHESSINGTON, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles N.W. from Epsom, contains 28 houses, and 150 inhabitants. It is a curacy.

CUDDINGTON, one mile N.E. from Ewell, contains 19 houses, and 117 inhabitants. The church is in ruins. The palace of Nonsuch was begun here by King Henry VIII.; Henry Earl of Arundel bought it of Queen Mary and completed it. Queen Elizabeth resided at this Palace, and it was afterwards settled on Anne of Denmark, Queen of James I., and then on Henrietta Maria Queen of Charles I. Pepys in his memoirs gives the following account of Nonsuch: "A fine place it hath heretofore been, all the house on the outside being filled with figures of stories, and good paintings of Rubens' or Holbens' doing. And most of the house is covered, I mean the post and quarters in the walls, with lead and gilded." Charles II. gave it to Barbara Villiers Lady Castlemain, who in 1670 was created Baroness Nonsuch, Countess of Southampton, and Duchess of Cleveland: this lady pulled it down and sold the materials, with which the Earl of Berkshire afterwards built Durdans. The park contained 671 acres. Nonsuch park is the seat of Samuel Farmer, Esq.

FETCHAM, or Fecham, one mile W. from Leatherhead, contains 61 houses, and 377 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 21*l.* 10*s.* 5*d.* Fetcham Park is the seat of — Hankey, Esq.

HEADLEY, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles S.E. from Leatherhead, contains 43 houses, and 184 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 8*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

LEATHERHEAD, 12 miles E. from Guildford, containing 256 houses, and 1478 inhabitants, is very pleasantly situated on a rising bank by the side of the river Mole, over which there is a bridge. The valley in which it stands is surrounded by beautifully wooded hills, and the scenery is of the most pleasing description. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary and St. Nicholas, is a vicarage, value 14*l.* 6*s.* 0½*d.*, in the presentation of the Dean and Chapter of Rochester. In the east window is some ancient painted glass brought from Hereford Cathedral, consisting of the arms of John Duke of Bedford, son of Henry IV., his badge of the white swan, old heads, &c.; besides which are the arms of Merton College Oxford, and the Bishopric of Rochester. This church was lately repaired at a small expense, under the tasteful direction of the Rev. James Dallaway, whose house, from the peculiar beauty of its situation and the improvements of the proprietor, is the most delightful in the neighbourhood. There is an annual fair on October 10. Randalls is the seat of Nath. Bland, Esq.; Elm Bank, of Captain Clarke; Vale Lodge, of T. Dickens, Esq.; Thorncroft, of — Stirling, Esq.; and Givens Grove, of H. Bolton, Esq.

MICKLEHAM, 2 miles S. from Leatherhead, contains 81 houses, and 505 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 13*l.*; the edifice was restored by Robinson about the year 1825. Southward of the village is Burford bridge. Few places are to be compared with Norbury Park for healthiness of situation, variety of landscape, and cheerfulness of prospect; it is the seat of Henry P. Sperling, Esq., and forms one of the finest objects included in the view from the summit of Box Hill. Here are some magnificent beech- and yew-trees. The entrance lodge, intended to be in the ancient castellated style, was recently erected from a design by Robinson. Juniper Hill was the seat of Sir Lucas Pepys, Bart.; Juniper Hall, of Thomas Broadwood, Esq.; and Fridley, of — Sharp, Esq.

NEWDIGATE, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles S. from Dorking, containing 48 houses, and 372 inhabitants, is locally situated in Reigate hundred, in which part of the parish is comprised. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 8*l.* 18*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. Here is a mineral spring similar to that of Epsom.

4. Effingham Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Elmbridge hundred; on the east by Copthorne hundred; on the south by Wotton hundred; and on the west by Woking hundred.

GREAT BOOKHAM, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles S.W. from Leatherhead, contains 124 houses, and 732 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 17*s.* 3*d.* In Slyfield chapel, at the east end of the south aisle, is a brass plate, on which is a poetical epitaph to the memory of Edmund Slyfield, sheriff of Surrey in the reign of Queen Elizabeth. Eastwick Park, northward of the village, is the seat of L. Bazelguette, Esq.; Slyfield House, of Lieutenant-General Wallis; and Hill House, of Sir James Langham, Bart.

Polcsden, the seat of Joseph Bonsor, Esq., is pleasantly situated in one of the most picturesque parts of the county of Surrey, having that much admired spot Box Hill in full view from the house and lawn to the east, and the beautiful wood on Rammore Common to the south. The estate contains about four hundred and thirty acres, admirably disposed so as to gain every advantage of distant view and home scenery. The grounds are remarkable for a fine terrace walk, forty feet wide and thirteen hundred feet in length which commands, a most extensive and beautiful prospect, and is shaded from the north by a grove of stately beech-trees. Polesden was the property of the late Right Honourable Richard Brinsley Sheridan, at the time of his marriage with Miss Ogle, daughter of the Dean of Winchester. The present mansion was entirely built by Mr. Bonsor.

LITTLE BOOKHAM, 3 miles S.W. from Leatherhead, contains 22 houses, and 153 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 6*l.* 15*s.* 7*d.*

EFFINGHAM, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles S.W. from Leatherhead, contains 64 houses, and 499 inhabitants. It has a fair on St. Lawrence's day. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 18*s.* 9*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. Effingham House is the seat of Sir Thomas Hussey Apreece, Bart.

5. Elmbridge Hundred

Is bounded on the north by the river Thames and the county of Middlesex; on the east by Kingston hundred; on the south by Copthorne hundred; and on the west by Chertsey and Woking hundreds. It is separated into two divisions.

FIRST DIVISION.

EAST MOULSEY, or Molesey, at the confluence of the river Mole or Moule, with the Thames, 2 miles W. from Kingston, and 12 miles S.W. from London, contains 97 houses, and 526 inhabitants. It has a bridge over the river to Hampton Court, and is a curacy. Moulsey Hurst, a beautiful level on the banks of the river, is now nearly inclosed. Ember Court is the seat of R. Taylor, Esq.

WEST MOULSEY, a mile westward from the above, contains 71 houses, and 430 inhabitants. It is a curacy. Abbs Court is situated in this parish.

WALTON UPON THAMES, 3 miles N.W. from Esher, and 4 miles S.W. from Hampton in Middlesex, contains 330 houses, and 1891 inhabitants, including Hersham and Burwood. The bridge over the Thames here was erected in 1787. It has a fair on the Wednesday in Easter week for horses, cattle, and sheep. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 12*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. In the chancel is a monument of John Selwyn, Keeper of Oatlands Park in the reign of Elizabeth, who performed a singular feat of activity; the brass plate represents him seated on the back of a stag, while he is cutting the throat of the animal. There is also a monument of William Lilly the astrologer, who resided at Hersham in this parish; and one to the memory of Richard Viscount Shannon, who died in 1740, by Roubiliac; one to Jerome Weston Earl of Portland, ob. 1662; and to Henry Skrine, ob. 1803. At Coway Stakes have been found several stakes, about sixteen feet long, shod with iron, the wood very black, and hard enough to turn an axe, supposed to be the remains of those mentioned by early writers as having been placed in the river by Cass-wilan to prevent the passage of the Romans under Cæsar, fifty-one years before Christ.

Ashley Park, the seat of Sir Henry Fletcher, Bart., contains one hundred and thirty-six acres, surrounded by a wall, excepting on the side adjoining Oatlands. The pleasure-grounds are ornamented by some fir-trees of remarkable height and size. The house is ancient, and is stated to have been built by Cardinal Wolsey. From Richard Boyle Earl of Shannon it descended to his daughter and heirress the Countess of Middlesex, Mistress of the Robes to Augusta Princess of Wales. Oatlands, the seat of Lord Francis Leveson Gower, was the residence of the late Duke of York, brother of His Majesty: it was destroyed by fire in 1793, when the Duke was in Flanders; and the Duchess with difficulty escaped. The present mansion was erected by Holland: it stands on a noble terrace near the middle of the park, and the prospects from it are both extensive and beautiful. Below the terrace is a serpentine piece of water, which appears crossed by Walton Bridge in the distance; and in an adjoining shrubbery is a grotto, containing two rooms and a bath. On St. George's Hill, southward of the park, is an ancient encampment, with a trench extending to Oatlands. Walton House is the seat of Earl Tankerville; Burhill, of Colonel Tynte; and Burwood Park, near Hersham, of Sir John Frederick, Bart.

WEYBRIDGE, on the banks of the river Wey, near its junction with the Thames, 4 miles W. from Esher, contains 177 houses, and 897 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a rectory, value 7*l.* 0*s.* 5*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

SECOND DIVISION.

COBHAM, on the river Mole, 10 miles N.E. from Guildford, and 20 miles S.W. from London, contains 253 houses, and 1340 inhabitants. There are two bridges here over the river, which abounds with excellent fish, and has on its banks both copper and iron-works. The town was once noted for its medicinal springs. The annual fairs are 17th March, and 11th Dec. for horses and sheep. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 17*s.* 11*d.* At Church Cobham is Brook's Place, the seat of Admiral Sir Graham Moore; Cobham Park, the seat of H. Coombe, Esq.; Cobham Court, the seat of D. Wetherall, Esq.; and Cobham Place, the seat of Sir William Abdy, Bart. Near Cobham-street, about a mile from the church, is Pains Hill, the seat of the Dowager Countess of Carhampton. The pleasure-grounds of this seat are of comparatively modern creation, having been originally formed by the Hon. Charles Hamilton, son of the Earl of Abercorn, about 1750. As one of the earliest instances of cultivation being applied to the formation of landscape scenery, it is a remarkable spot: all the original features which contributed to its celebrity are still preserved. Benjamin Bond Hopkins, Esq., who purchased the estate of Mr. Hamilton, made several judicious alterations, and entirely erected the present mansion about 1776, which stands on the brow of a hill near the river Mole. Pains Hill is little benefited by external circumstances, but the scenes within itself are exceedingly beautiful; the disposition of the gardens affording frequent opportunities of viewing the several parts in a variety of advantageous situations. From an open building seated on the edge of a high steep, which rises immediately above a fine expanse of water, is a very beautiful landscape; the lake is never wholly seen, and by its form, as well as the disposition of the islands upon it, always seems much larger than it is. On the left luxuriant plantations confine the view, but on the right is a fine open scene within the grounds, and in front beyond the water is a hanging wood presenting every variety of foliage: issuing from the lake is a river of considerable width, which flows under a bridge of five arches towards the wood. An easy winding descent leads to a broad walk on the banks of the lake, and skirted by a wood bordered with shrubs and flowers, whence is a transition to a large tract of uneven surface covered with larches and firs mixed with birch; this is the hanging wood before described as so fine an object. Sir Joseph Banks and Dr. Solander, in company with Charles Von Linnæus, son of the eminent botanist, visited this seat about 1781, when Linnæus asserted that a greater variety of the fir was to be found on this spot than in any other part of the world which he had ever seen. On the top of the hill the sides of which are covered with the wood, is a tower, whence is an extensive prospect. In another part of the grounds, amidst a scene rich with flowering shrubs and groups of majestic trees, is a building called the Temple of Bacchus, of the Doric order, which formerly contained an antique colossal statue of superior merit, afterwards removed to Fonthill.

ESHER, on the river Mole, 13 miles N.E. from Guildford, and 16 miles S.W. from London, contains 190 houses, and 1108 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. George, is a rectory, value 9*l*. 18*s*. 4*d*. Here is an annual fair, 4th Sept., for horses, &c. Esher Place was formerly one of the seats of the Bishop of Winchester: the house, built by William of Waynfleet, was improved and enlarged by Cardinal Wolsey, who removed from York House, now Whitehall, to this seat in the year 1529. Wolsey's Well, within the demesne, is all that remains of its former grandeur; the whole was rebuilt, excepting the towers in the centre, by the Right Hon. Henry Pelham, when the grounds were laid out by Kent. Esher Place is now the seat of J. Spicer, Esq.; Esher Lodge, of Mrs. Terry; and Barwell Court, of J. Sykes, Esq.; Claremont, purchased in 1816 for the residence of the lamented Princess Charlotte and her consort Prince Leopold, was erected from designs by Brown, an architect better known for his taste in landscape gardening: it is of the Corinthian order, and stands in a well chosen situation, each of its four fronts commanding very fine views. Claremont "has received from nature and art such liberal advantages as have brought it the nearest to perfection of any seat in this kingdom, and is certainly an instance where great expense has produced grandeur, convenience, firmness, delight and enjoyment." It received its name from a mount erected in the park by the Earl of Clare; and while in the possession of that nobleman was celebrated in a poem by Garth.

STOKE D'ABERNON, on the river Mole, 2 miles S.E. from Cobham, contains 48 houses, and 317 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 13*l*. 11*s*. 3*d*. Thomas Vincent, Esq. married the daughter and heiress of Thomas Lyfield, of Stoke, and became possessed of the manor in the reign of Elizabeth, which is called D'Abern on from its ancient lords. In the chancel of the church are buried Sir John D'Abern on and Sir William D'Abern on, with their figures and arms inlaid in brass on marble slabs. There is also a small marble monument to the memory of Sir John Norbury, whose effigy is represented kneeling. On the north side of the chancel is a monument of the above Thomas Vincent, Esq. and his lady; he died in 1613. Queen Elizabeth visited him at his seat here 25th Sept. 1601, at which time Her Majesty conferred upon him the honour of knighthood. Sir Francis Vincent, his son, knighted by King James at Whitehall in 1603, was created baronet 26th July, 1620.

6. Farnham Hundred

Is bounded on the north, south and west by Hampshire; towards the east it is bounded on the north by Woking hundred; and on the east by Godalming hundred.

ELSTEAD, on the river Wey, 4½ miles S.E. from Farnham, contains 112 houses, and 608 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a curacy.

FARNHAM, on the borders of Hampshire, 10 miles W. from Guildford and 38 from London, contains 571 houses, and 3132 inhabitants. The town is situated on the banks of the Wey, and is surrounded by hop plantations, for the culture and quality of which it is greatly famed. Its corn market was formerly considered one of the largest in the kingdom, four hundred loads of wheat having been sold here in one day; this is said to have been reduced in consequence of the Sussex and Hampshire farmers now sending their corn by sea to London. The market is held on Thursday, and there are annual fairs on Holy Thursday, 4th June, and 13th Nov., for horses and cattle. The town is under the government of twelve masters or burgesses, two of whom act as bailiffs under the appointment of the Bishop of Winchester, and hold a court every three weeks. The petty sessions are held here.

Farnham Castle, the seat of the Bishop of Winchester, stands on a very considerable eminence, on the north side of the town. This edifice is said to have been built in 1129, by Henry de Blois, brother of King Stephen, and Bishop of Winchester, and was held of the King by the Bishop as part of the barony, by his service of five knights' fees. In the course of the barons' wars in the reign of Henry III. it was seized by Lewis the Dauphin and the barons opposed to the King, and was afterwards demolished by the King's party; but was speedily rebuilt in the usual style of the castellated mansions of that period, with a deep moat and donjon tower or keep. In the year 1642 Sir John Denham secured this castle for the King, and was appointed governor, but it was afterwards taken by Sir William Waller, the parliamentary general. The command of the castle was then given to George Wither, a name well known to the readers of old English poetry. In 1648 the committee at Derby House ordered it to be rendered incapable of defence; in consequence of this the castle was in a considerable degree demolished. After the Restoration this ancient castle reverted to the see of Winchester, and Bishop Morley expended a large sum in substantial repairs. The gate-house, of the time of Henry VII., is constructed of brick, and adds much effect to the edifice. The remains of the more ancient parts of the castle are considerable, and a foss surrounds the greatest part of the outworks, but is now dry and planted with oaks. A chantry was founded in the chapel of the castle by Bishop Edinton, in the reign of Edward III. The priests' house is supposed to be that now occupied by the master of the school. The Bishops of Winchester formerly appointed the offices of constable of the castle, keeper of the park, keeper of the north and south chase, and of Frensham ponds, with the swans therein. The Bishop is lord of the hundred of Farnham, and his courts are held at Lady House, on the north side of the castle. To this castle formerly belonged two parks, one called the Great Park, containing about 1000 acres, disparted after the Restoration: the Little Park is that which now adjoins the eastern side of the castle, containing about 300 acres, watered by the river Loddon, which rises in the neighbourhood, and joins the Wey below the town; across the park is an avenue of elms about three quarters of a mile in length, which adds to the stately appearance of the ancient castle. On an eminence in the park is a lodge and green-house: from this spot are several beautiful openings into the surrounding country, one in particular towards Crooksbury Hill, crowned with firs, and rising above the plantations of Moor Park.

Moor Park, which is pleasantly situated on the banks of the Wey, south-eastward of Farnham, is the seat of Robert Lang, Esq.

Bagshot, Runfold, Runwick, Culverlands, Tilford, Wrecklesham, and Bourn Tythings, are in the parish of Farnham. Sir Richard Rycroft, of Farnham, whose paternal name was Nelson, assumed that of Rycroft, in 1758, and was created baronet 10th Dec. 1783. Sir Richard Henry Charles Rycroft is the present baronet.

FRENSHAM, on the borders of Hampshire, 3½ miles S. from Farnham, contains 95 houses, and 554 inhabitants. It is an extensive parish, situated on the confines of the forests of Holt and Wilmer. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a curacy: in the vestry hangs a large caldron, about which numerous traditions are extant, it is said to have been brought from Borough Hill, about a mile from the village, on which is a stone about six feet long: here the villagers were accustomed to knock and declare what they wanted, which appears once to have been a kettle and trevet; at the time appointed they found this identical caldron, but did not return it at the precise moment fixed; and although it was afterwards carried back, it would not be received, and all subsequent applications have been fruitless. Another tradition states that it was borrowed in a similar manner from a celebrated witch, who lived at Mother Ludlow's Hole, a cavern in the vicinity of Farnham, and forgotten to be returned. The antiquaries, whose curiosity has induced them to examine this famous caldron, have supposed that it was brought from Waverley Abbey, or that it is a remnant of ancient parochial hospitality used at weddings or church ales. Chart, Pitfold and Dockenfield are tithings of this parish; the last is locally situated in Hampshire.

SEAL, 3½ miles E. from Farnham, contains 68 houses, and 364 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Tongham. It is a curacy. Poyle estate was formerly held by the service of attending the King, when the court was at Guildford, as marshal of the household or usher of the chamber; or, as the words of the grant express, "marisehallus meretricium."

WAVERLEY, on the banks of the river Wey, 2 miles S.E. from Farnham, is extra-parochial; the village contains 9 houses, and 58 inhabitants. The abbey, which William Gifford Bishop of Winchester founded here in the year 1128, near his episcopal seat Farnham Castle, was the first house in the possession of the Cistercian order in England. Henry of Blois Bishop of Winchester confirmed the grants of his predecessor, and added to his donation; Bishop Toelive was also a benefactor to this monastery; and all the grants made to it were confirmed by King Richard I. The abbey was dedicated to the Virgin Mary, and was endowed at the Dissolution with 196*l.* 13*s.* 11*d.* per annum. The abbey, with all the estates belonging to it, was granted in 1536 to Sir William Fitz William. Waverley Abbey is now the seat of John Poulett Thomson, Esq.

7. Godalming Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Woking hundred; on the east by Blackheath hundred; on the south by the counties of Sussex and Hampshire; and on the west by Farnham. It is in two divisions.

FIRST DIVISION.

COMPTON, 3 miles N. from Godalming, and 3 miles S.W. from Guildford, contains 49 houses, and 423 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a rectory, value 15*l.* 4*s.* 9*d.*

GODALMING, on the river Wey, 4 miles S. from Guildford, contains 724 houses, and 4098 inhabitants, including the tithings of Binscombe, Catteshill, Eashing, Fernecombe, Hertmere, Leybourne, Shackleford, and Tewsley. The town is situated in a beautiful valley, where the river is divided into several streams, and was incorporated by Queen Elizabeth: it is governed by a warden, bailiff, and eight assistants. The market is held on Wednesday, and there are annual fairs on 13th February and 10th July. The manufactures are all kinds of worsted, blankets, &c.: the town is also noted for excellent carrots and liquorice, which are sent to the London markets. The peat dug in the neighbouring heaths is used for fuel. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a vicarage, value 23*l.* 17*s.* 11*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean of Salisbury. In the chancel is a tablet to the memory of the Rev. Owen Manning, vicar of the parish, and historian of this county, who died in 1801. Here is a charity-school; and on the common is a hospital founded and endowed for ten old men. In this town it was that Mary Toft, practised the imposition of being delivered of live rabbits in 1726, celebrated by Hogarth in his "Cunicularii."

The river Wey is navigable hence to its junction with the Thames at Weybridge. Godalming-bridge, originally private property, was opened for public use in 1783. Westbrook Place is the seat of S. Godbold, Esq.; and Northbrook Place, of W. Keen, Esq. Busbridge, the seat of Robert Monro, Esq., one mile southward of the town, was the estate of Philip Carteret Webb, Esq., solicitor to the Treasury, who died about 1770; after which it was purchased by Sir Robert Barker, Commander in Chief of the East India Company's forces in Bengal, and created baronet in 1781. In the pleasure-grounds is a fine piece of water, and a conservatory opening upon a bold terrace walk, at the end of which is a cavern or passage cut in a rock in a winding direction, more than one hundred and forty feet in length, and terminating in a circular apartment supported by a massive pier in the centre, also hewn out of the rock: the mansion and estate were purchased by the present proprietor in 1823. Upper Eashing is the seat of — Frankland, Esq.; and Mousell, of J. Stilwell, Esq.

HAMBLEDON, or Hameldon, 3 miles S. from Godalming, contains 61 houses, and 381 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 6*l.* 7*s.* 11*d.*, in the patronage of the Earl of Radnor.

PEPER HARROW, or Pipard Harrow, on the banks of the Wey, 2 miles W. from Godalming, contains 22 houses, and 130 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a rectory, value 6*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of Viscount Middleton: in the chancel are memorials for several of the Broderick family. Peper Harrow Park is the seat of Viscount Middleton; the mansion formerly belonged to Denzil Lord Holles, and contains a collection of original portraits; amongst which are those of the Emperor Charles V., by Titian, and Sir Alan Broderick, Lord Chancellor of Ireland. The mansion, rebuilt about 1766, is sheltered on the north and east sides by elevated grounds covered with luxuriant plantations.

PUTTENHAM, 4½ miles W. from Guildford, contains 72 houses, and 389 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a rectory, value 11*l.* 17*s.* 11*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. Wanborough is a hamlet of this parish.

SECOND DIVISION.

CHIDDINGFOLD, 6 miles S. from Godalming, contains 174 houses, and 999 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 26*l.* 4*s.* 7*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean of Salisbury.

HASLEMERE, on the borders of Hampshire and Sussex, 13 miles S.W. from Guildford, contains 167 houses, and 887 inhabitants. The market is held on Tuesday, at which formerly a great deal of poultry was sold. The fairs are on 12th May, and 25th September, for horses, cattle, sheep, and hogs. This town is governed by a bailiff and constable, returns two members to Parliament, a privilege granted by Queen Elizabeth. The right of election is vested in the freeholders within the borough and manor of Haslemere, exclusive of lands or tenements, which are, or have been, parcel of the waste-ground of the manor. The present members for the town are Sir John Beckett, Bart., and William Holmes, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, is a curacy. In the east window are several compartments of ancient painted glass, comprising the following subjects:—Adam and Eve in Paradise; the Entrance of Noah into the Ark; the Wise Men's Offering; the Ascension of Christ; the Four Evangelists; and the Conversion of Saul. In the church is a monument to John More Molyneux, Esq., M.P. for the town, who died in 1759, erected by the corporation as a mark of esteem for his memory: also a memorial of Sir Robert Austen, Bart. of Tenterden, ob. 1772. The town is in an elevated situation, but surrounded on all sides, excepting the east, by the loftier hills of Black Down, Marlow, and Hind Head. Eastward is an uninterrupted prospect over the whole Weald of Sussex. The springs on the east side of the town, after being increased by other brooks, join the river Arun, near Wisborough, in Sussex, while the springs on the west side of the town carry their tributary waters into the Thames. About a mile westward from the town are large paper manufactories.

THURSLEY, or Thirsley, 5 miles S.W. from Godalming, contains 95 houses, and 608 inhabitants: it is a curacy. In this parish are extensive tracts of heath. Hind Head is situated partly in it, and partly in that of Frensham. Between Thursley and Frensham are three remarkable conical-shaped hills, called the Devil's Three Jumps. The eastern hill is the largest both in height and circumference, and the centre hill the least and lowest. These hills consist of hard rock, barely covered with light black mould, which gives a scanty nourishment to moss and stunted heaths: their bases are nearly surrounded by a foss, which in some places appears to be artificial. In the fosses are springs, which assist in forming Abbot's pond, a large piece of water, formerly part of the possessions of the convent at Waverley. On the eastern hill a merry-making used to be held upon Whit Tuesday.

WITLEY, 3½ miles S.W. from Godalming, contains 169 houses, and 1264 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 17*l.* 15*s.* 10*d.*

8. Godley Hundred

Is bounded on the north-west by Berkshire; on the north-east by Buckinghamshire and Middlesex; on the east by Elmbridge hundred; and on the south and west by Woking hundred. It is in two divisions.

FIRST DIVISION.

BISLEY, 4½ miles S.E. from Bagshot, contains 49 houses, and 273 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a rectory, value 7*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.*

BYFLEET, on a branch of the Wey, 3 miles W. from Cobham, contains 81 houses, and 427 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 9*l.* 11*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. The celebrated Stephen Duck, who from a thresher became a poet, died rector of this parish in 1756. Some of his Essays, (no longer in repute,) falling into the hands of a lady who attended on Queen Caroline, he was by her introduced to Her Majesty. In 1733 he was appointed one of the yeomen of the guard, from which situation, by a singular transition, he was admitted into orders, attained the living of Byfleet, and was made keeper of the Queen's library in Merlin's Cave, in Richmond Gardens, by extraordinary good fortune. Here for several years resided the Rev. Joseph Spence, author of "Polymetis;" he lived in an age when taste first appeared amongst us, and literature first began to diffuse itself among the nation. By his habits, a man of letters; by his skill, a classical and elegant critic; and by the sweetness of his manners and perpetual curiosity, Spence was well adapted to promote, as well as to record, the many conversations he has preserved for posterity in that much admired and very pleasing work, "Observations, Anecdotes, and Characters, of Books and Men." West Hall Lodge is the seat of J. Sparkes, Esq., and Byfleet Park, of — Langton, Esq.

CHOBHAM, on the Bourne, 5 miles E. from Bagshot, contains 306 houses, and 1719 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is a vicarage, value 10*l.* 2*s.* 1*d.* Chobham Place is the seat of S. Thornton, Esq.

FRIMLEY, 3½ miles S.W. from Bagshot, contains 247 houses, and 1284 inhabitants. It is a chapelry, in the parish of Ash. Frimley House is the seat of T. Knight, Esq.

HORSELL, or Horeskill, 4½ miles N.W. from Ripley, contains 90 houses, and 617 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a curacy.

PYRFORD, or Piriford, 2 miles N.W. from Ripley, contains 45 houses, and 294 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, annexed to the rectory of Wisley.

SECOND DIVISION.

CHERTSEY, on the borders of Middlesex, 3½ miles S. from Staines, contains 805 houses, and 4279 inhabitants. The town is pleasantly situated on a branch of the Thames, about a quarter of a mile from its junction with that river. Chertsey-bridge, over the river Thames, in the road to Shepperton and Hampton, was built at the expense of the counties of Middlesex and Surrey, and finished in 1785, after a design by Payn: it consists of five principal, and two collateral arches. Here are manufactures of thread and malt. The market is held on Wednesday, and there are annual fairs the first Monday in Lent, 14th May, 6th August, and 25th September, for horses, cattle, and hops. The town is governed by a bailiff, appointed by letters-patent from the Exchequer, who enjoys the office for life: it has also, together with the hundred of Godley, or as it is sometimes called Chertsey hundred, the special privilege of exemption from the jurisdiction of the sheriff of the county. The petty sessions are held here. At a house in the town, called the Porch House, is the following inscription:—"The porch of this house, which projected ten feet into the highway, was taken down in the year 1786, for the safety and accommodation of the public. Here the last accents flowed from Cowley's tongue." At this residence Cowley died in 1667. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 13*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*: it was rebuilt in 1808. About the year 666, Erkenwald, afterwards Bishop of London, began the foundation of a monastery here, which was finished and endowed chiefly by the munificence of Frithwald Earl of Surrey, under Wolphere King of the Mercians. This building was destroyed by the Danes, but was soon afterwards refounded for monks of the Benedictine order, by King Edgar and Bishop Ethelwold, in honour of St. Peter: it was a noble pile, with a revenue of 744*l.* 13*s.* 6*d.* per annum, and the precincts are said to have extended over four acres of ground. The unfortunate King Henry VI., who died in the tower in 1471, was buried in the abbey, but his body was afterwards removed to the south aisle of St. George's Chapel, Windsor, by order of King Richard III. Upon the surrender of the abbey in 1537, the King granted it with all its lands to the Abbey of Bisham, in Berkshire; and after the Dissolution of that house, the site of Chertsey Abbey was granted in 1553 to Sir William Fitz William. Very little, excepting the walls of the precinct, remains of this venerable building. The abbey house was built of the materials, by Sir Henry Carew, master of the buck-hounds to King Charles II. At Anningsley, in this parish, resided the eccentric Thomas Day, Esq., author of "Sandford and Merton," &c. Ham Haw Park is the seat of the Earl of Portmore; and Woburn Farm, of Admiral Stirling. About a mile westward from Chertsey is St. Anne's Hill, remarkable for its extensive prospect: upon the hill are the remains of St. Anne's Priory, which was subject to the abbey at Chertsey. On the southern side, near the verge of the hill, is the seat of the late Right Hon. Charles James Fox; and on the declivity of the hill is Monk's Grove, the seat of Lord Montfort. Lyne Grove is situated on an adjacent hill, which commands a variety of picturesque views, and a great expanse of country.

EGHAM, on the banks of the Thames, 1½ mile W. from Staines, in Middlesex, contains 598 houses, and 3616 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a vicarage, value 11*l.* 9*s.* 7*d.*: it was rebuilt in 1818, the very ancient and curious structure, which formerly ornamented the town, having been previously demolished; it contained a monument of the father of the poet Denham, who also resided here. Enfield, Strode, and Hythe are tithings of this parish. A conference between King John and the Barons of En- of was appointed on 15th June 1215, at Runney Mead, on the banks gland the river Thames, in this parish. The two parties encamped apart, like open enemies; and after a debate of a few days, the King, with a facility somewhat suspicious, signed and sealed on the 19th of the same month the charter which was required of him. This famous deed, known by the name of Magna Charta, either granted or secured very important liberties and privileges to every order of men in the kingdom, to the clergy, to the barons, and to the people. On this celebrated field Egham races are now annually held. Englefield Green is two miles west from Egham: near it is Windsor Great Park, part of which is in this county. Near Virginia Water is Wentworth, the seat of Cullen Charles Smith, Esq.; and Portnall, the seat of the Rev. T. Biss. At Shrub's Hill, on the verge of the county, is Coworth House, the seat of S. Homfrey, Esq.; and Knowl Hill, about a mile eastward.

THORPE, 2 miles S. from Staines, contains 71 houses, and 509 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. Thorpe House is the seat of the Rev. — Bennet.

9. Kingston Hundred

Is bounded on the north by the river Thames and the county of Middlesex; on the east by Brixton and Croydon hundreds; on the south by Elmbridge hundred; and on the west by Elmbridge hundred and Middlesex. It is separated into two divisions.

FIRST DIVISION.

KINGSTON UPON THAMES, 12 miles S.W. from London, contains 843 houses, and 4908 inhabitants. This very ancient and considerable town is celebrated in history for having been the spot selected for the coronation of the following Anglo-Saxon kings:—Edward the Elder in the year 900; his son Athelstan in 925; Edmund in 940; Eldred in 946; Edwy in 955; Edward the Martyr in 975; Ethelred in 978; and Edgar in 959. In St. Mary's chapel were formerly to be seen the portraits of several kings crowned here; and also of King John, who granted the town their first charter: it is governed by two bailiffs, a high steward, recorder, and town-clerk. The petty sessions and the assizes in the Lent circuit are held here. The town-hall stands in the market-place. The arms of the town are, azure three salmons haurient, argent. The corporation seal bears a tun over it in chief an Anglo-Saxon K, the whole encircled with two olive branches. Here is a market on Saturday, and annual fairs on Thursday, Friday, and Saturday, in Whitsun week; 2nd August, 3rd August, and 13th November, for horses and cattle. The bridge over the river Thames, formerly of wood, was rebuilt of stone in 1825. The master and brethren of the bridge at Kingston are mentioned in records so early as the beginning of the reign of Henry III. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 20*l.* 6*s.* 3*d.*, in the patronage of G. Hardinge, Esq. : the edifice appears to have been erected in the reign of Richard II. The chapel of St. Mary, in which the Anglo-Saxon monarchs were crowned, fell down in 1730. In the church are several ancient monuments ; the oldest of which is that of Robert Skerne and his wife. Amongst the modern monuments is that of Lieut.-Col. George Jenkinson, C.B., cousin of the late and present Earl of Liverpool, who died in 1823. A free grammar-school was founded by Queen Elizabeth on the site of an ancient chapel, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen, the revenues of which, on the Suppression, went to the Crown : the chapel is now the school-room. In the hamlet of Surbiton, two miles south from Kingston, is Surbiton Place, the gardens of which extend to the river Thames. Norbiton Place is the seat of C. N. Palmer, Esq. Coomb Wood was the seat of the late Earl of Liverpool, K.G., who died here 4th December 1828. The corporation of Kingston, of which he was high steward, attended the funeral : his body was interred at Hawkesbury, in Gloucestershire. Ham, Hatch, and Hook, are hamlets of this parish. Ham House, the seat of the Countess of Dysart, is situated near the river Thames, opposite to Twickenham ; it was built in 1610, and was intended, it is said, for the residence of Henry Prince of Wales : the house underwent considerable alteration by the Duke and Duchess of Lauderdale, in the reign of Charles II., and remains a very curious specimen of the domestic architecture of that age. In the centre of the house is a large hall, surrounded with an open gallery ; on the western side of the house is a gallery ninety-two feet in length, hung with portraits. The house also contains some very fine pictures by the old masters, amongst which the works of Vanderveldt and Wouvermans are most conspicuous. The gardens at Ham have been but little altered since they were originally formed ; they are distinguished by perfect symmetry ; terrace below terrace slope towards the river. In front of the mansion is a colossal reclining figure of father Thames, and the walls with which the garden is inclosed contain a series of well sculptured busts ; these are also continued on the principal façade of the house. The beautiful groves which environ the mansion, known by the name of Ham Walks, have been celebrated by several of our poets. Ham Lodge is the seat of Captain Halliday, R.N.

PETERSHAM, on the banks of the Thames, 10 miles S.W. from London, contains 71 houses, and 516 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a curacy. Petersham Lodge, the seat of Lord Huntingtower, was the residence of His present Majesty when Duke of Clarence, and was erected about 1721, after a design by the Earl of Burlington. Part of Richmond Park is in this parish. Sudbrook House was the residence of the Duke of Buccleuch.

RICHMOND, on the banks of the Thames, 9 miles S.W. from London, contains 976 houses, and 5994 inhabitants. From the singular beauty of its situation this village has been termed the Frescati of England. Richmond-hill is the subject of a descriptive and historical poem by the late Thomas Maurice. "Whoever," says the poet, "has from that eminence calmly contemplated the vast, the varied, the delightful landscape which it commands will scarcely think any description of its charms, however bold and glowing the language, an exaggeration." In this wide survey many grand and interesting objects strike the eye, and many important historical events crowd upon the attention. There seems to have been immemorially a palace here ; a variety of public acts during the reigns of Edward I. and Edward II. are dated at Sheen, as it was then called. Edward III., after a long and victorious reign, died at his palace of Sheen, 21st June 1377. The beloved Queen of Richard II. expired within its walls ; and that monarch was so affected by the circumstance, that, according to Aubrey, he caused it to be demolished. King Henry V. is affirmed to have restored it to its former splendour. In the year 1498 it was accidentally consumed by fire ; but King Henry VII. rebuilt it from the ground in a magnificent manner, and gave it his own name of Richmond : he died here in the year 1509. King Henry VIII. occasionally resided here, and a beautiful elevated spot in the park still bears the name of King Henry's Mount ; from its summit, which commands a view of London, that sanguinary prince is recorded to have watched with impatience the ascent of a rocket, which was fired to announce the execution of Queen Ann Boleyn ; that execution which opened the way to his immediate marriage with Lady Jane Seymour. Richmond was a very favourite residence of Queen Elizabeth, whose death at this palace, in 1603, and the melancholy circumstances of it, are recorded with so much interest and apparent veracity by Sir Robert Cary. King Charles I. must have been partial to the spot, from his making the New Park eight miles in circumference, and surrounding the whole with a brick wall. In a survey made by the commissioners of Parliament, in the year 1649, Richmond Palace is denominated "a large and fair structure of freestone, of three stories high, covered with lead. The great hall is said to have been 100 feet in length and 40 in breadth. The chapel 96 feet long and 40 broad, with cathedral seats ;" and the whole building to have been embattled, and to have had erected upon it "fourteen turrets standing a convenient height above the leads ; which turrets very much adorn and set forth the fabric of the whole structure, being perspicuous to the country round about." Its exact boundaries, as well as the whole extent of ground on which it stood, are accurately ascertained in the concluding paragraph of the survey : "The whole messuage, called Richmond Court, and the site thereof is bounded by Richmond Green upon the north, with a lane leading from the said green to the Thames on the west, with the said river upon the south-west, with a parcel of land called the Fryery upon the south, and with a way or lane leading from Richmond Green into the said Fryery upon the east, and contains upon admeasurement ten acres one rood and ten perch." The survey was preparatory to the sale of the premises. Soon after the return of King Charles II. it was restored to the Royal family, but probably in a dismantled condition, as after this period the palace fell rapidly into decay ; the greatest part of it was taken down during the last century, and the site granted on lease to various noblemen and gentlemen. Upon that site at present stand the Duke of Queensbury's, the Countess of Northampton's, and the elegant villa which belonged to Witsied Keene, Esq., built after a design by Sir Robert Taylor. What remains of the old palace is let on lease, and the ancient gate-house is tenanted by Sir David Dundas, Bart.

A mansion built here by the Duke of Ormond, who received from King William III. a grant of land at Richmond, as a reward for his military services, devolved to the Crown on the attainder of the Duke in the reign of George I. ; and was by George II. granted to Queen Caroline, who built a Royal dairy-house, Merlin's Cave, a hermitage, &c. The gardens underwent a new arrangement in the time of George III. These Royal gardens are about four miles in circumference, extending northward along the banks of the Thames, towards Kew, forming a noble terrace. Richmond Green is surrounded with lofty elms ; the village extends up the hill from East Sheen to the New Park, sloping all the way towards the Thames, over which is a stone bridge of five arches, erected in 1777 from a design by Paine. The church, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen, is a curacy.

At West Sheen King Henry V., with the professed view of expiating the murder of Richard, by which crime his family had mounted the throne in 1414, founded a Carthusian priory, called the House of Jesus of Bethlehem : at the Suppression its revenue was estimated at 96*l.* 11*s.* 6*d.* The site of the priory was granted in 1540 to Edward Earl of Hertford : the gate-house, the last remain of the edifice, was pulled down in 1770, when the whole hamlet of West Sheen was annihilated ; and the site being formed into a lawn, was added to the King's inclosures. Thomson, the poet of the Seasons, spent his last years at Rosedale House, now the seat of the Earl of Shaftesbury, in Kew Foot lane, where he died in 1748, and was buried in the church. Under the hill is a seat of the Duke of Buccleuch.

SECOND DIVISION.

LONG DITTON, 2½ miles S. from Kingston, contains 52 houses, and 361 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 12*l.* 0*s.* 5*d.* In the chancel is a monument of Sir Joseph Alston, Bart. ; the date of his death is not mentioned : his lady, who was also buried here, was Penelope, daughter and heiress of Sir Edward Evelyn, Bart. of Long Ditton, created 17th Feb. 1683, and was descended from John Evelyn of Kingston, who married the daughter of David Vincent, lord of the manor of Long Ditton, in 1520. Talworth, situated about a mile and a half eastward of the village, is a hamlet of this parish. Cleygate, southward of the village, and about a mile and a half from Esher, is a manor of Thames Ditton, which parish is in Elmbridge hundred, and contains 302 houses, and 1592 inhabitants, including Ember and Weston hamlets. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a curacy.

KEW, on the banks of the Thames, 7 miles W. from London, contains 111 houses, and 683 inhabitants: hence to Brentford is a stone bridge, erected in 1789 from a design by Paine. The church, dedicated to St. Anne, is a curacy: it is a small brick structure, and was erected in 1714, at the expense of the nobility and gentry of the neighbourhood, on ground presented for that purpose by Queen Anne. In the church is a tablet in memory of Jeremiah Meyer, miniature painter; and in the churchyard were buried Thomas Gainsborough, R.A., and Joshua Kirby, writer on perspective. Kew Palace, formerly the seat of Mr. Samuel Molyneux, Secretary to King George II., became the property of Frederick Prince of Wales, and was long the favourite residence of King George III. Sir William Chambers was employed by His Majesty to lay out the grounds, and to design a number of buildings and temples in a variety of styles, both European and Asiatic, to embellish the spot. The Botanical Garden here is considered superior to every other in the world, and is enriched with a number and variety of new and curious plants, which have been increased by an immense variety of nondescripts from most parts of the globe, but principally from New South Wales.

MALDEN, or Maldon, 3 miles S.E. from Kingston, contains 41 houses, and 250 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 5*s.*, in the patronage of Merton College Oxford. The Rev. Rogers Ruding, author of the Annals of the English Coinage, was vicar of this parish; he died in 1820. Walter de Merton, in 1264, obtained from Richard de Clare Earl of Gloucester the disposal of Malden and Farley manors, and founded here a learned establishment, called The House of the Scholars of Merton, "for the support, in perpetuity, of twenty scholars residing in a house of learning at Oxford, or at some other place in which at any future time learning may happen to flourish; and for the support also of two or three ministers of the altar of Christ, residing in the aforesaid house at Malden." The society was afterwards removed to Merton College Oxford.

10. Reigate Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Croydon hundred; on the east by Tandridge hundred; on the south by Sussex; and on the west by Wootton hundred. It is in two divisions.

FIRST DIVISION.

BETCHWORTH, or East Beechworth, on the river Mole, 3 miles from Reigate, and the same distance east from Dorking, contains 177 houses, and 909 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 8*s.* 11*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Canons of Windsor. Beechworth Castle, above a mile eastward from the village, was the seat of the Earls of Warren and Surrey for many generations, and passed in the year 1437 to the family of Brown. Sir Amb. Brown of Beechworth Castle was created baronet 7th July 1627. It is now the seat of Henry Peters, Esq.: the park is adorned with noble timber; here are oaks, chestnut-trees, elms, &c., of the largest dimensions.

BUCKLAND, 2 miles W. from Reigate, contains 38 houses, and 292 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 11*l.* 12*s.* 11*d.*, in the patronage of All Souls' College Oxford.

CHARLWOOD, on the borders of the county, 7 miles S. from Reigate, and 3 miles N.W. from Crawley in Sussex, contains 156 houses, and 1134 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a rectory, value 19*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.* Charlwood Place is the seat of James Woodbridge, Esq.

HORLEY, 5 miles S. from Reigate, contains 176 houses, and 1063 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, is a vicarage, value 14*l.* 1*s.*, in the patronage of the Governors of Christ's Hospital London. Thunderfield, a large common, is in this parish.

LEIGH, on a branch of the river Mole, 3½ miles S.W. from Reigate, contains 65 houses, and 453 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew the Great, is a rectory, value 15*l.* 10*s.* 5*d.* In the chancel are several slabs inlaid with brass, principally memorials of the Arderne family. Leigh Place, the seat of Richard Caffyn Dendy, Esq., is surrounded by a moat. The greatest portion of this parish is in the manor of Shellwood, where is a manor-house. Dunshott is a hamlet of Leigh. At Swains, a farm-house in the parish, there is a tradition that Ben Jonson resided; one of the rooms is called his study.

REIGATE, or Reygate, 19 miles E. from Guildford, and 21 from London, contains 213 houses, and 1328 inhabitants. The town is situated in Holmsdale, on a rock of beautiful white sand. The town-hall is built on the site of a chapel, dedicated to St. Thomas à Becket. To the manor belong a court-leet and a court-baron, at the first of which are annually elected a bailiff, constable, tithing-man, &c., also a constable for the foreign division, with a tithing-man for each of the subdivisions or tithings. This town is a borough by prescription, and returns two members to Parliament, a privilege conferred in the reign of Edward I., the right of election being vested in the freeholders, who amount to about two hundred: the bailiff is the returning officer. The present member is James Yorke, Esq.; Sir Joseph Yorke, Bart., since deceased, was the other member returned. The petty-sessions are held in the town-hall. Here is a market on Tuesday, and annual fairs on Whit-Monday, and on the first Wednesday in every month for cattle. The church, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen, is a vicarage, value 20*l.* 5*s.* 5*d.*: it is situated at the east end of the town, and contains some costly monuments. In the church was interred "Charles Howarde Earle of Nottingham, Lord High Admirall of Englande, Generall of Queene Elizabeth's Navy Royall at sea agaynst the Spanyard's inviusible navy, in the Yeare of our Lorde, 1588." In the chancel is a marble monument in memory of Richard Ladbroke, of Frenches in this parish, ob. 1730. In the reign of Henry III. William Earl of Warren and Surrey founded here a Priory of the order of St. Augustine, dedicated to the Virgin Mary and the Holy Cross: it was valued at 78*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.*; and after the Dissolution was granted in 1541 to William Lord Howard. The site of Reigate priory is now the modern seat of Earl Sommers. Upon an eminence on the north side of the town formerly stood the castle of the powerful Earls of Warren and Surrey, sometimes called Holmsdale Castle. Here, according to tradition, the barons met in council before their conference with King John at Runney Mead, and probably agreed upon the particulars to be demanded by Magna Charta: a curious excavation in the sand rock upon which the castle stood, is now called the Barons' Council-chamber: the castle has long been demolished. Holmsdale extends from the borders of Kent nearly to the town of Guildford, about thirty miles. The hills of Reigate command the extensive valley with all its profusion of corn-fields, pastures, and dark woods, varied and relieved by sheets of water. Below lies the ancient borough, the church tower rising above the trees; southward is the priory and park. Reigate Lodge is the seat of J. H. Slater, Esq. Colley, Howleigh, Lingfield-street, Santon, and Woodhatch, are tithings of Reigate, and called the Foreign division of the parish. Near Woodhatch is Hartwood, the seat of W. Clutton, Esq.; and Samuel House, the seat of — Marsden, Esq.

SECOND DIVISION.

BURSTOW, on the borders of Sussex, 8 miles S.E. from Reigate, contains 106 houses, and 715 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, is a rectory, value 15*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. In the east window of the church are the arms of Bysshe. Smalfield Place in this parish was built in the reign of James I., and was the birth-place and residence of Sir Edward Bysshe, Garter King of Arms to Cromwell, and M.P. for Reigate during the Commonwealth: he was the author of Notes on Upton, an early heraldic writer,—a most valuable work upon the subject on which it treats. The house has been very little altered since the period when it was built, and exhibits a certain peculiarity of architecture; it is now the residence of a farmer. Bysshe Court is a large brick mansion near it.

CHIPSTEAD, 4½ miles N.W. from Reigate, contains 53 houses, and 440 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, is a rectory, value 17*l.* 13*s.* 11*d.*

GATTON, 2½ miles N.E. from Reigate, contains 22 houses, and 135 inhabitants, and is a rectory, value 9*l.* 2*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. The town-hall, near the church, is surrounded by a clump of elms. It is an ancient borough by prescription, and sends two members to Parliament, a privilege conferred upon it in 1450, 29 Hen. VI., and vested in the freeholders and inhabitants paying scot and lot. A constable, appointed at the court-leet of the lord of the manor, is the returning officer. The present members are Viscount Pollington and the Honourable John Ashley. Gatton Park contains about 1200 acres, and commands extensive views over Sussex and Kent; the estate is said to comprise some of the most beautiful and picturesque scenery in the county. Lower Gatton House, the seat of Lord Monson, is a modern edifice with a front, including the wings, two hundred and fifty feet in extent: before it is a lake of about forty acres stocked with pike, carp, tench, perch, and eels; several remarkably large pike have been taken in this lake, of 30lbs. and upwards in weight. On the lake are two islands, the resort of wild ducks, widgeons, moor-fowls, &c., and at the extremity is an extensive water-mill, built by the late Sir Mark Wood, Bart. Exclusive of Lower Gatton House, the park contains four gentlemen's seats: Nutwood Grove Cottage, the residence of Colonel Sir James Carmichael Smyth, Bart.; the Tower, which seat is built on a hill wooded on all sides, and in the spring the view from Wingate Hill of this spot is most beautiful, the top of of the hill being laid out with shrubberies of roses, &c.; Upper Gatton House,—the view hence is particularly interesting, extending over the park as far as the South Downs of Sussex; the fourth seat within the park is Gatton Cottage. Colonel Sir Mark Wood, of Gatton, was created a baronet 3rd October, 1808; he died in 1829, æt. eighty-two: he was descended from the Woods of Largs near Perth, N.B., and purchased this estate with its valuable contingencies about 1801. Battle Bridge, in this parish, is said to be the site of a battle in which the Danes were defeated.

MERSTHAM, 3½ miles N.E. from Reigate, contains 140 houses, and 796 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Katherine, is a rectory, value 22*l.* 1*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. Merstham Place is the seat of Colonel Hylton Jolliffe, M.P., representative of the ancient baronial family of Hilton, of Hilton in the county of Durham. In this parish are some very valuable quarries of stone: a patent of Edward III. is yet extant, authorizing John and Philip Propheta to dig stone here for the use of Windsor Castle. The magnificent chapel of Henry VII. at Westminster was also built of this stone: the quality which principally occasions the demand for it, is its effectual resistance of fire, whence it is called fire-stone; it is very soft when first brought from the quarry, but hardens in the air. Pilgrim's Lane in this neighbourhood runs in the direction of the chalk hills, and is said to have been the line of progress from the west to visit the shrine of St. Thomas at Canterbury.

NUTFIELD, 3 miles W. from Godstone, contains 124 houses, and 707 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and Paul, is a rectory, value 14*l.* 14*s.* 7*d.*, in the patronage of Jesus College Oxford.

11. Tandridge Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Wallington hundred; on the east by Kent; on the south by Sussex; and on the west by Reigate hundred. It is in two divisions.

FIRST DIVISION.

BLECHINGLY, 2 miles W. from Godstone, contains 195 houses, and 1187 inhabitants. It is situated on a hill, on the borders of Holmsdale, which commands an extensive prospect including the South Downs of Sussex. Here are fairs on 22nd June and 2nd November for horses and bullocks; but no market is held in the town, which is a borough by prescription, and sends two members to Parliament, a privilege conferred in the reign of Edward I., and is vested in the burghage-holders only, who send the members to Parliament without any officer's return. The present members for the town are John G. B. Ponsonby and The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 19*l.* 19*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. Near the town are the remains of a castle, built, it is said, by Gilbert Earl of Clare: the view from this spot is extensive.

CROWHURST, 4 miles S.E. from Godstone, contains 159 houses, and 214 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. George, is a vicarage.

GODSTONE, 19 miles S. from London, contains 159 houses, and 1210 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a rectory. Rooksnest is the seat of — Turner, Esq.; Flower House, the seat of the Hon. G. Neville. About a mile southward of the village is Tilbuster Lodge, the seat of — Mc Leay, Esq.: more distant is the Iron Pear-tree well, efficacious in the cure of certain disorders.

HORNE, 5 miles S.W. from Godstone, and 7½ miles S.E. from Reigate, contains 89 houses, and 585 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 4*l.* 17*s.* 11*d.*

LIMPSFIELD, 4 miles E. from Godstone, contains 162 houses, and 918 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 20*l.* 0*s.* 5*d.*

LINGFIELD, 6 miles S. from Godstone, contains 275 houses, and 1684 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Earl of Effingham.

OXTED, 3 miles E. from Godstone, contains 129 houses, and 777 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 24*l.* 6*s.*, in the patronage of W. Hoskins, Esq.

TANDRIDGE, 2 miles E. from Godstone, contains 73 houses, and 421 inhabitants. It is a vicarage. Here was formerly a priory of Augustine canons, which was founded in the reign of Richard I.: it was dedicated to St. James; and at the Dissolution was valued at 86*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.* per annum: in 1537 it was granted to John Rede.

SECOND DIVISION.

CATERHAM, 3 miles N. from Godstone, contains 80 houses, and 435 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is a rectory, value 8*l.* 0*s.* 1*d.*

CHELSHAM, on the borders of Kent, 7 miles S.E. from Croydon, contains 35 houses, and 217 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Leonard, is a curacy.

FARLEY, 5 miles S.E. from Croydon, contains 15 houses, and 84 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 4*l.* 16*s.* 5*d.*, in the patronage of Merton College Oxford.

TATSFIELD, or Tatesfield, on the borders of Kent, 6 miles N.E. from Godstone, contains 24 houses, and 174 inhabitants. It is a rectory.

TITSEY, on the borders of Kent, 5 miles N.E. from Godstone, contains 27 houses, and 167 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 7*l.* 17*s.* 3*d.* Titsey Place is the seat of William Leveson Gower, Esq.; the house stands in a beautiful dell formed by a range of chalk hills, and was built on the site of an ancient manor-house by Sir John Gresham, Bart., the last of a distinguished family that possessed vast estates in the immediate neighbourhood. He likewise rebuilt the parish church, which now stands at the foot of the hill, and was consecrated by the Bishop of Winchester 19th July, 1776. Sir John Gresham, Bart. also procured an Act of Parliament for the road down Botley Hill, which is eight hundred feet above the level of the sea. The grounds are beautifully wooded, and contain a fine spring, one of the sources of the river Medway: near the house is an altar-tomb to the memory of some of the family of Staples. At the foot of the hill is the pilgrims' road to Canterbury.

WARLINGHAM, 5 miles S. from Croydon, contains 77 houses, and 421 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 11*l.* 12*s.* 11*d.*

WOLDINGHAM, 3 miles N.E. from Godstone, contains 4 houses, and 47 inhabitants. It is a curacy.

12. Wallington Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Brixton hundred; on the east by Kent; on the south by Tandridge and Reigate hundreds; and on the west by Kingston and Copthorne hundreds. It is in two divisions.

FIRST DIVISION.

ADDINGTON, on the borders of Kent, 3 miles S.E. from Croydon, contains 52 houses, and 354 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 4*l.* 16*s.* 5*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. In the church are several monuments of the Leigh family. Addington Place, a seat built by Alderman Trecothick in 1772, was purchased in 1807 for the residence of the Archbishops of Canterbury. The manor of Addington is held by the feudal service of finding a man to make a mess called Gerout in the King's kitchen at the coronation, and bringing it to the table in Westminster-hall in his own person. In the reign of William the Conqueror Addington appears to have been held by Tezelin the King's cook, which accounts for the origin of the culinary service required. The Archbishop of Canterbury is now the claimant of the above described service. Near the village is a curious cluster of tumuli, about twenty-five in number, of very inconsiderable height; one of them is nearly forty feet in diameter, two are about half that size, and the rest very small.

CHALDON, 5 miles N.E. from Reigate, contains 26 houses, and 166 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 7*l.* 10*s.* 7*d.*

COULSDON, 5 miles S. from Croydon, contains 71 houses, and 516 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Evangelist, is a rectory, value 21*l.* 16*s.* 5*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

CROYDON, 10 miles S. from London, contains 1667 houses, and 9254 inhabitants. It is a large, handsome town, pleasantly situated on the edge of Banstead Downs, consisting chiefly of one street, nearly a mile in length. The market is on Saturday, and the fairs are on July 5th for horses, cattle, and sheep, and October 2nd for horses and walnuts. The petty sessions and the assizes are held here occasionally. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a vicarage, value 21*l.* 18*s.* 9*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury; it stands at the bottom of the town, contiguous to the site of the ancient palace. The church consists of a spacious nave, north and south aisles, and chancel, extending in length 130 feet. The tower at the west end is very lofty, and exceedingly well proportioned; the enrichments are chaste and simple, and are more striking from the justness of their disposition than from their exuberance. This portion of the edifice, judging from the shields bearing the arms of Archbishop Chichele, which occupy the spandrels of the arch of entrance, was erected by that prelate. The tower, built of flint and stone, contains a fine peal of eight bells, and rises to the height of four stories; with the exception of the very fine mullioned window over the door, the lower divisions, which derive support from buttresses, are not much ornamented; the chief enrichment being reserved for the summit, where the buttresses terminate in octangular turrets, surmounted by crocketed pinnacles, bearing gilded vanes: at the south-east corner is the saint's bell, a position usually assigned to it in the tower. This very handsome tower underwent a thorough repair in 1807, when those parts of the sculptural ornament which had suffered from the devastation of time, were restored with Roman cement. Both on the north and south side is a porch of entrance; that on the north bears the arms of Archbishop Courtenay, who may be supposed to have erected a portion of the church in the reign of Richard II.

The chancel, properly so called, has been restored in good taste, which is denoted by the following inscription at the east end:—"This chancel end was repaired and beautified by Alexander Caldeugh, Esq., in the year 1808." St. Nicholas, or the Bishop's chapel, at the east end of the south aisle, was repaired in 1815; and St. Mary's, or Heron's chapel, at the east end of the north aisle, was repaired in 1817. In the chancel were formerly twelve ancient wooden stalls, of curious workmanship, which have been removed to afford space for the children of the School of Industry, who now have seats here. On the south side of the altar is the large and handsome monument of Edmund Grindall, Archbishop of Canterbury, born in 1519 at Hensingham, in Cumberland. Under the patronage of Cecil, he attained successively the sees of London, York, and Canterbury: in 1582 he retired to Croydon Palace, where he died July 6th 1583; upon the tomb are represented his arms, impaled with some of his ecclesiastical dignities.

The chantry, dedicated to St. Nicholas, now called the Bishop's chapel, at the east end of the south aisle, appears to have been founded about the year 1450, by Richard Weldon, Esq., and Elizabeth his wife; in whose family the presentation of the incumbent continued, until its Dissolution, in the first year of the reign of King Edward VI.; notwithstanding which, it is always said to have been founded for the repose of the soul of John Stafford Bishop of Bath and Wells, who after Chichele's death was translated to the see of Canterbury; and for William Oliver, vicar of this church, who probably gave some lands to the chantry for the support of the officiating priest, the total income of whom was 14*l.* 14*s.* Three very handsome monuments are upon the south side of the Bishop's chapel; the centre tomb is the most ancient; the inscriptions, as well as the portraiture, of brass inlaid, have been torn from it, leaving it in some degree uncertain for whom it was erected: but from the style, and from the armorial bearings with which it is adorned, may be presumed to commemorate Thomas Warham, Esq., the father of the Archbishop of Canterbury of that name, who died at Haling House, near this town, in 1478, and by will ordered his body to be buried in St. Nicholas chantry, before the image of our Lady of Pity, bequeathing legacies for masses, &c. with a distribution of torches to be used at his month's mind, at which time it was usual to have the funeral sermon preached. The tomb is inserted in the wall, and is adorned upon its base with three shields of arms, within quatrefoils; over it is raised an obtusely-pointed arch, flanked by small angular pillars, and surmounted by an enriched cornice, or moulding, the foliage upon which is finely sculptured. The soffit of the arch is divided into trefoil-headed panels, with small quatrefoils at regular distances: at the back of the recess are the indents of figures of a man and a woman, with labels issuing out of their mouths. Above the whole are three shields, one in the centre, and one on each pillar, corresponding in their heraldic bearings with those on the basement: over the centre shield is a helmet and mantling, but the crest is broken off.

The costly monument on the east side is that of John Whitgift Archbishop of Canterbury, who died at Lambeth Palace, Feb. 28th, 1604: it is remarkable as the exact counterpart of that of his immediate predecessor Archbishop Grindall, who lies entombed on the south side of the altar, and both of them very nearly resemble the sepulchral memorial of John Lord Russel, in St. Edmund's chapel, Westminster Abbey. The Archbishop is here represented upon a sarcophagus, in his clerical robes, with his hands raised as in prayer; the figure has been very coarsely repainted. The sarcophagus is placed within an arched recess, the spandrels of which are sculptured with female figures, bearing wreaths of laurel and branches of palm. At the ends of the tomb are Corinthian columns, supporting an enriched entablature, surmounted by three shields of arms. The soffit of the arch, under which the figure reposes, is panelled, with roses in the centre of each: at the back are two genii, one bearing a spade, the other a torch,—emblems of mortality, and holding a tablet with an inscription upon it.

The other tomb in the Bishop's chapel is to the memory of Archbishop Sheldon, who died in the palace here, November 9th, 1677, in the 80th year of his age, and was buried in this church by his own particular directions. The general appearance of this monument, which is excellent in its execution, exhibits a great want of taste in the violent contrast of black and white in the material of which it is composed, although undoubtedly adopted to increase the general effect, and display the superior workmanship, principally in white marble, to the best advantage. The black marble altar-tomb, which forms the base of this monument, is accordingly panelled with white marble, most beautifully sculptured with human skulls and bones; the osteology is indeed uncommonly fine: upon a large slab is a most exquisite statue of Sheldon himself, in his archiepiscopal vestments, reclining upon his left arm, with his mitre on his head, and his crozier in his right hand: there is much grace in the composition and character of this figure, and the execution has been remarked as most admirable.

The head of the Archbishop is really quite a masterpiece of sculpture. This fine monument was entirely the performance of Joseph Latham, the city mason, of whom no other works are known: it rises to a considerable height above the principal figure, and is surmounted by a funereal urn, flaming. Underneath are two genii, supporting the arms of the archbishopric of Canterbury, impaled with those of Sheldon: under it his motto, "FORTITER ET SUAVITER;" and at the back, within a guideron tablet of white marble, is a Latin inscription. At the end of this monument are marble slabs to the memory of several of the Sheldon family: there are also marble slabs in this chantry for Archbishops Wake, Potter, and Herring.

A black marble slab under Whitgift's tomb, records the memory of Lady Elizabeth Gresham, wife of Sir William Gresham, Knight, who died December 9th, 1632.

The other chantry chapel, at the east end of the north aisle, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, and generally known by the name of Heron's chapel, is so called from a large monument against the north wall, ascended by three steps, representing a man in armour kneeling at a desk, on which is a book opened; he is attended by his five sons: his wife in the same manner is attended by eight daughters; and the following is the inscription:—"Tumulus Nicholai Herone, equitis, sepulti, primo die septem, 1566." This chapel is said to have been founded by Sir Reginald de Cobham, Lord Cobham, of Starborough Castle, in this county, for the repose of his soul, that of his wife, those of his children, and of all Christian people. The font in this part of the church, of an octagon form, has been recently restored; it is probably coeval with the edifice.

Under a small raised tomb, in this aisle, was buried Elye Daveye, citizen and merchant of London, who died December 4th, 1445: he founded an alms-house in the town of Croydon.

The magnificent Palace of the Archbishops of Canterbury, Primate of all England, procured celebrity to this town in very early periods of history. They possessed this manor from the time of the Norman conquest; and Croydon was the place of their retirement when those prelates enjoyed their utmost plenitude of power; they had such enormous revenues as enabled them almost to equal royalty itself, in the splendour of their establishment, and in the profusion of their hospitality. The church, from the earliest time, was appropriated to the archbishopric, and to the munificence of successive prelates that building doubtless owes its present existence. After the death of Archbishop Hutton in 1758, the palace remained uninhabited for above twenty years; but in 1780 an Act of Parliament authorized the sale, and the premises were disposed of to Sir Abraham Pitches for 2,520*l*.

The mansion at Addington, in this county, was purchased in 1807 for the archiepiscopal residence; and the ancient palace of Croydon, no longer belonging to the Archbishops of Canterbury, is now in the occupation of Samuel Stacey, bleacher, &c., through whose kindness and attention access to the premises was readily granted to the Editor of this work.

In Church-street are two brick piers, with stone tablets inserted, bearing the date 1742; these, with the iron gates, now removed, formed the entrance from the town, and were erected by Archbishop Potter. A straight avenue led from this gate through the grounds to the gate-house opening to the great court-yard. A single rib of stone now marks the form of the arch of entrance: it is graceful, and appears to be of as early date as the reign of Edward III. At this gate, even to the time of Archbishop Herring, the dole was dealt out to thirty poor persons, three times a week, ten each time receiving two pounds of meat, a pitcher of broth, half-a-quartern loaf, and two pence in money. This gate-house, with buildings in continuation, now destroyed, formed the north side of the great court. The east side is occupied by a range of offices of comparatively modern erection. To the west is seen the fine church; adjoining the church-yard is the chapel of the palace; and on the south of the court, now converted to a neat garden, containing flowers and fruit-trees, was the great hall, presenting a most noble appearance, at the time this survey was made. A handsome porch at the east end of the north side formed the principal entrance, where erst the retainers of the Archbishop greeted his guests: it was repaired in 1738 by Archbishop Potter, that date being cut in a stone over the entrance. The date of its erection is not known; but from its architectural character it might be attributed to a period antecedent to the time of Archbishop Courtenay, who in the year 1381 is recorded to have received his pall, with great solemnity, in the hall of Croydon Palace: that it was subsequently repaired and beautified by Archbishop Stafford, is evident from the armorial decorations having direct allusion to that prelate and his family.

He was the second son of Humphrey Stafford, with the silver hand, a member of the Staffords of Bromshull, in Staffordshire, descended from the great baronial family of that name. John Stafford was born at Hooke in Dorsetshire, and educated at Oxford. He became, through the powerful interest of his family and his own great abilities, Bishop of Bath and Wells, from which see he was translated to the primacy in 1443, which he enjoyed till his death in 1452. This hall, where the various courses of the protracted feasts were wont to be served, to the sound of music and minstrelsy, is memorable for the sumptuous entertainment of Queen Elizabeth, during seven days, in the month of July 1573, by Archbishop Parker: the dimensions of the hall when perfect were from east to west 57 feet in length, its width 40 feet. The lofty roof of open framed work was constructed upon the same principle as those of the Royal halls at Eltham and Westminster, but upon a more simple plan than either. The main timbers, five in number, each supported by corresponding buttresses to the walls, on the exterior, and within, springing from slender pillars resting on brackets, or corbells, representing angels bearing shields of arms, sculptured, and blazoned in their proper colours; some of these, it should be observed, are of more modern date than the time of Archbishop Stafford, who undoubtedly repaired the hall. The shields on the north side were as follow: 1. The arms of the archbishopric of Canterbury impaling those of Archbishop Juxon: 2. France and England quarterly: 3. the arms of Humphrey Stafford Duke of Buckingham: 4. Quarterly, 1st, gules, a chief or; 2nd, chequy, azure and or, a chief of the last; 3rd as 2nd; 4th as 1st; over all a bend or: 5. the arms of Stafford of Bromshull. On the south side the hall, the arms on the corbells are, 1. Probably the ancient coat of the see of Bath and Wells; 2. The arms of Bishop Stafford impaling Bath and Wells; 3. The arms of the archbishopric impaling Stafford; 4. The arms of the archiepiscopal see of Canterbury, impaling those of Archbishop Herring,—this coat is painted only on a plain surface, the rest are boldly sculptured; 5. The arms of the archbishopric impaling the arms of Archbishop Laud.

The roof had been repaired by strong tie beams, or girders, from side to side. Upon that at the west end were the initials and date T, 1748. H, for Thomas Herring, who held this see from 1747 to 1757, during which time he made Croydon Palace his constant summer residence, and expended considerable sums in the repairs. On each side of the great hall are three obtusely pointed windows, divided into as many bays by mullions of stone. A very large window appears to have originally occupied the east end of the hall, as well as three door-ways, which are now filled up. Against the situation of the window are now placed the arms of King Henry VI. impaled with those of Edward the Confessor, supported by angels robed in scarlet lined with ermine, and with wings of gold: over the crown projected a canopy of drapery; the shield of arms rested on a cushion, beneath which a demi-angel held a label inscribed

Dñe Saluum Fac Regem.

This is the only instance known of King Henry the Sixth's achievement being so represented. Below this very large heraldic adornment, which appears not to have been originally intended for this situation, were the arms of Archbishop Stafford. A small frieze, continued at the east end, as well as the north and south sides of the hall, from shield to shield, and coloured blue, bore this motto, in white letters, IN DEO EST SPES MEA.

Very little of this remains. At the west end of the great hall were originally two doors, but that towards the south had been filled up. The north door was within an arch, the spandrels of which contained on the dexter side the arms of the archbishopric, and on the sinister, on a shield azure a mitre or. The guard chamber, situated westward of the great hall was part of a connected building with an open court in the centre. This room is stated to have been built by Archbishop Fitz Alan, or Arundel, who was Archbishop from 1396 to 1414. King James I. of Scotland was detained in custody of Archbishop Arundel at this palace.

The chapel is on the western side of the great court of the palace, whence the large east window received light. Three windows are also on the north side of the chapel now adjoining the church-yard. It is an ancient brick building, of about the period of Henry the Seventh's reign, and was most probably erected by Cardinal Morton, who is known to have resided at Croydon Palace. Cross keys, very large and long, are formed in vitrified bricks on the exterior of the west end of the chapel. The interior was principally the work of Abbot, Archbishop of Canterbury from 1611 to 1633. During the Civil War the palace was let to Sir William Brereton, Bart., who is reported to have made a kitchen of the chapel, which rendered its restoration necessary by Archbishop Juxon: it is now used for a school of industry belonging to the parish, previously to which it had been used as a dépôt for the arms and stores of the Local Militia for the county.

The great gallery of the Archiepiscopal Palace was eastward of the hall, and was rebuilt by Archbishop Wake in 1720, on the site of the old one, in which Sir Christopher Hatton received the great seal in 1587, upon his appointment to the office of Lord High Chancellor of England, at the entreaty of Archbishop Whitgift. The grounds adjoining the palace, in which the garden was laid out by Archbishop Herring, are low and intersected by numerous rapid streams of very clear water, which form the source of the river Wandle. Archbishop Whitgift's Hospital, in this town, is one of those institutions which arose upon the Dissolution of monasteries. The building was commenced in the year 1596, and wholly completed about 1602. Never having been rebuilt, it retains the architectural character of the period; in the centre, and at each end of the front are pointed gables. Over the entrance are the arms of the archbishopric, surmounted by the mitre, and accompanied by the following appropriate inscription: QUI DAT PAUPERI NON INDIGET. The buildings surround a quadrangular court, and consist of a hall, chapel, free-school, and apartments for the Poor Brethren, as the inhabitants are denominated. Crossing the centre of this court is an arched entrance, having over it this inscription, RESTORED 1817 FRANCIS WALTERS WARDEN: on the left hand of this arch is the hall, which is small and low, not more than 28 feet by 18. In the large fire-place at the upper end, are dogs for the convenience of burning wood, and in the small windows of the hall are various remains of the original glazing, bearing the royal arms, parts of Archbishop Whitgift's motto, the arms of Edward Aylworth, 1598, &c. In the hall are two strong oaken tables of contemporary workmanship, inscribed with the name of the donor, &c., on which dinner is still served three times in the year: and it is traditionally asserted, that a chief delight of the founder, during his residence at Croydon Palace, was in dining frequently at this hospital with his Poor Brethren, as he called them. Upon one of the tables is placed a large Bible, given to the society by Abraham Hartwell, secretary to the Archbishop in the year 1599.

The chapel of the hospital is entered from the south-eastern corner of the court, and like the hall is small in its dimensions. The east window, which is pointed and divided into bays by stone mullions, was erected at the expense of the Archbishop of York in 1597. In the centre of the window are the arms of Archbishop Whitgift. The west end of the chapel is occupied by a very curious portrait of the founder, who is represented standing at a table, on which rests an open Bible, which he holds in his hand. On the table stands another book clasped, also a bell, watch and seal, an inkstand, containing a knife, pens, &c; the whole of these utensils are curiously formed: behind are books carefully ranged on a shelf. The portrait is painted in the hard manner of Marc Garrard, and is doubtless a faithful resemblance of the worthy, humane, and pious prelate. Over the picture are his arms, as in the window, with his motto, VINCIT QVI PATIVR. On the frame is inscribed, in gold letters, the following expressive lines:—

“Feci quod potui; potui quod, Christe, dedisti;
Improba fac melius, si potes, invidia
Has triadi sanctæ primi qui struxerat ædes,
Illius en veram præsulis effigiem.”

This charitable foundation, like many others, has been very much abused by some to whom its protection was intrusted. “An Account of the Proceedings and Evidence on a Writ of Enquiry, to ascertain the Damages due from the Rev. John Rose, Doctor of Divinity, unto the Warden and Poor,” was published at Croydon in 1813. The Poor Brethren, whose apartments are of convenient size, appear now to possess much comfort: they are each allowed twelve shillings weekly, and twenty shillings every alternate year, in lieu of cloaks. But their allowance had been reduced so low as three shillings per week, previously to the inquiry, which terminated in 1817. Archbishop Secker, who died in 1768, left 500*l.* to this hospital, founded by his predecessor Whitgift.—Haling Park, the seat of C. Burnett, Esq., contains a fine grove, in which is a collection of exotics.—Norwood, or Northwood, is a hamlet, partly in the parish of Croydon, partly in that of Lambeth, and partly in Battersea. An establishment of gipseys here formerly excited so much curiosity, that the Prince and Princess of Wales, with their retinues, went to see them on 28th June 1750. These people, according to received opinion, were Egyptians, descendants of the votaries of Isis, who appeared to have exercised in ancient Rome much the same profession as that followed by the present gipseys, viz. fortune-telling, &c. But as it should seem from some striking proofs derived from their language, the gipseys came originally from Hindostan, where they are supposed to have been of the lowest class of Indians, namely, Parias, or, as they are called in Hindostan, Suders. Their first appearance in Europe was in the fifteenth century; but they must certainly have been in Egypt before they reached this country, otherwise it is incomprehensible how the report arose that they were Egyptians. St. Luke's church, at Norwood, was erected in 1825, from designs by Bedford, and has upon its principal front an hexastyle Corinthian portico. Shirley House, eastward of Croydon, is the seat of John Maberley, Esq.; and Selsdon House, the seat of George Smith, Esq.

SANDERSTEAD, 3 miles S.E. from Croydon, contains 31 houses, and 189 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 7*l.*: it contains many monuments of the Mellish family, formerly of Place House. Sanderstead Court is the seat of Attwood Wigsell, Esq.: the grounds admit very beautiful prospects of the fine open country over Banstead Downs, with Buckinghamshire and Berkshire on the opposite side. This manor was the property of the Abbot of Hyde, near Winchester; and at the Dissolution of that monastery was granted to Sir John Gresham, whose grandson Richard Gresham sold it in 1591 to John Ownsted of Addington, who was serjeant of the carriage to Queen Elizabeth for forty years. The duty of this officer in the department of the master of the horse was to provide carriages for Her Majesty and retinue, on her progresses or removal from one to another of her numerous palaces. Mr. Ownsted died at this seat in 1600, and there is a monument to his memory in the church. The present edifice was built by one of the Attwood family about the beginning of the last century. Place House was demolished, and the estate added to that of Sanderstead Court about 1760. Purley House, the seat of T. Leverton, Esq., gave title to Epea Pteroenta, or the Diversions of Purley, published by John Horne Tooke in 1786.

WOODMANSTERNE, or Woodmanstone, 4 miles E. from Epsom, and 5 miles S.E. from Croydon, contains 25 houses, and 171 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 11*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. The Oaks, a seat of the Earl of Derby, is on Banstead Downs, in this parish: the house was built for the meeting of the Hunters' Club, upon ground given to that Society by Mr. Lambert, whence its original name, Lambert's Oaks. General Burgoyne purchased the house of the Club, and afterwards sold it to the Earl of Derby, upon whose marriage to Lady Betty Hamilton, in 1774, the Oaks became the scene of a fête champêtre, long celebrated in the annals of fashion, and which gave rise to the musical entertainment, called the Maid of the Oaks, written by General Burgoyne.

SECOND DIVISION.

BEDDINGTON, on the river Wandle, 2 miles W. from Croydon, contains 76 houses, and 480 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 13*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.*: it is supposed to have been erected in the reign of Richard II. The font is of very early date. In the chancel are several slabs, inlaid with brass, to the memory of the Carew family, who formerly held the manor. Queen Elizabeth visited Sir Francis Carew at Beddington House, then lately rebuilt, in August 1599, and remained three days. Her Majesty was here again in the same month of the ensuing year. Part of the ancient structure remains, including the great hall, with its open framed timber roof. On the door of the hall is a richly wrought lock, upon which are the royal arms. Sir Francis Carew planted the first orange-trees seen in England: at this seat they were placed in the open ground, and protected by a moveable shed, but were destroyed in a hard frost 1740. Sir Nicholas Carew of Bed-dington was created baronet 11th January 1715: he was Member of Parliament for this county in the second Parliament of King George I. Beddington House, the seat of Mrs. Anne Paston Gee, was chiefly erected about 1709. The inequality of the ground here produces a singular variety of rural scenes. Wallington, a hamlet of this parish, gives name to the hundred: it is situated on the river Wandle, and contains 138 houses, and 847 inhabitants,—a greater population than the village itself.

CARSHALTON, or Caschorton, on the river Wandle, 3 miles W. from Croydon, contains 295 houses, and 1775 inhabitants. The Greyhound Inn here is celebrated in the sporting world; and the following packs of hounds are in the immediate vicinity of the town, viz. Lord Derby's stag-hounds, at the Oaks; the Surrey subscription fox-hounds; Colonel Joliffe's Fox-hounds, at Merstham; Mrs. Gee's Harriers, at Beddington Park; and the Banstead and Sanderstead harriers. A weekly market on Tuesday was granted to this town by King Henry III., and an annual fair for three days, St. Mary's, the Vigil, and the day following. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 11*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.* In the chancel is a monument of Nicholas Gaynesford. On the banks of the Wandle are several mills, for paper, for preparing leather and parchment, and for grinding logwood; also oil- and snuff-mills, as well as extensive bleaching-grounds. This neighbourhood is celebrated for trout and walnuts.

Carshalton Park is the seat of J. Taylor, Esq.; and Carshalton House, of W. Reynolds, Esq. Sir John Fellows of Carshalton was created baronet 20th Jan. 1719, but the title is extinct.

CHEAM, 5 miles W. from Croydon, and 3 miles N.E. from Epsom, contains 175 houses, and 792 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Dunstan, is a rectory, value 17*l.* 5*s.* 5*d.*, in the patronage of St. John's College Oxford. In the chancel is a monument of John Lord Lumley, ob. 11th April 1609; of his first wife Jane, daughter and heiress of Henry Fitz Alan Earl of Arundel; and another of his second wife Elizabeth, daughter of John Lord Darcy of Chiche. In the nave is a monument of Sir Joseph Yates, Justice of the Common Pleas, ob. 1770; and in the south aisle an inlaid brass of John Yerde, ob. 1453, and his wife Anne; and of Thomas Fromond, who it is said built the manor-house of East Cheam, about a mile and a half from the village. Lower Cheam is the seat of Sir Edmund Antrobus, Bart.

MITCHAM, 8 miles S.W. from London, contains 728 houses, and 4453 inhabitants. On the banks of the Wandle, (which winds through this parish, and is famous for its trout in the annals of angling,) are mills for grinding corn, tobacco, logwood, &c., and some printed calico manufactories. Nearly three hundred acres of land are occupied in the cultivation of lavender, wormwood, camomile, aniseed, rhubarb, liquorice, and many other medicinal plants. There are above 100 acres of peppermint alone. Here is an annual fair on 12th August. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a vicarage, value 10*l.* 0*s.* 10*d.*: it was rebuilt about 1820, in the Gothic style, a mode of construction which tolerates a departure from all ancient example, such as in any of the Greek orders would subject an architect to severe censure, from the very persons who cause edifices of this tasteless description to be erected in the nineteenth century. Some of the monuments from the old church are preserved, particularly that of Sir Ambrose Crawley, Alderman of London, ob. 1713, celebrated in the "Tatler," No. 73, as Alderman Greenfat. Mitcham Grove, the seat of Henry Hoare, Esq., is embellished by the windings of the Wandle through the plantations: this seat was presented by Lord Clive to Alex. Wedderburne, afterwards Lord Loughborough and Lord Chancellor, for his defence of His Lordship in the House of Commons in 1773. Upper Mitcham is the seat of Benjamin Potter, Esq.; Mitcham Hall is the seat of Sir Henry Oakes, Bart.: Sir Hildebrand Oakes, of the same place, was created baronet 2nd November 1813.

MORDON, or Morden, 9½ miles S.W. from London, contains 98 houses, and 638 inhabitants, including Lower Morden, half a mile westward on the banks of the Wandle. Here is a tobacco and snuff manufactory. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is a rectory, value 7*l.* 12*s.* 11*d.*: it was rebuilt about 1636. Morden Park, the seat of G. Ridge, Esq., is situated on an eminence commanding a prospect of great extent. The plantations are agreeably varied by two fine sheets of water.

SUTTON, 12 miles S.W. from London, and 4 miles N.E. from Epsom, contains 171 houses, and 911 inhabitants. The sheep grazed upon the extensive downs in this parish are remarkable for their small size and fine flavour. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a rectory, value 16*l.* 8*s.* 4*d.* In the church are monuments of William Earl Talbot, ob. 1782, and Isaac Littlebury, translator of Herodotus, ob. 1710. In the churchyard is a monument of Cecil, wife of Lord Chancellor Talbot, ob. 1720; and a large mausoleum, built in 1777 by James Gibson, of London, for the interment of his family. A large chalk-pit near the road produces a variety of extraneous fossils.

13. Woking Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Godley hundred and Elmbridge hundred; on the east by Copthorne hundred; on the south by Farnham, Godalming, and Blackheath hundreds; and on the west by Hampshire and Berkshire:—it is also in two divisions.

FIRST DIVISION.

ASH, on the borders of Hampshire, from which it is separated by the river Loddon, 4 miles N.E. from Farnham, contains 112 houses, and 583 inhabitants, including the tithing of Normandy. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 15*l.* 18*s.* 11*d.*, in the patronage of Winchester College. Frimley, 5 miles northward of the village, is a hamlet of Ash, and between them runs the Basingstoke canal. Frimley House is the seat of T. Knight, Esq.; and Hawley House, of M. Bacon, Esq.

BAGSHOT, on the borders of Hampshire, 8 miles S.W. from Egham, is a hamlet of the parish of Windlesham. Bagshot Heath is of great extent, and feeds a great number of sheep, which are generally small, and the wool fine and valuable. Bagshot Lodge is the seat of His Royal Highness the Duke of Gloucester.

PURBRIGHT, or Pirbright, on a branch of the river Wey, 6 miles N.W. from Guildford, contains 67 houses, and 472 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a curacy. Two miles southward of the village is Henley Park, the seat of Andrew Stirling, Esq.

STOKE, on the river Wey, one mile N. from Guildford, contains 193 houses, and 1120 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Evangelist, is a rectory, value 18*l.* 0*s.* 5*d.* Stoke Place is the seat of Mrs. Hillier; Stoke Hill, the seat of — Spicer, Esq.; and Stoke Hill House, of H. Budd, Esq.

WANBOROUGH, 3½ miles W. from Guildford, contains 21 houses, and 107 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, is a curacy.

WINDLESHAM, 1½ mile N.E. from Bagshot, contains 313 houses, and 1590 inhabitants, including Bagshot, which is a hamlet of the parish. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a rectory, value 10*l.* 9*s.* 7*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

WOKING, on the banks of the Wey, 2 miles W. from Ripley, contains 320 houses, and 1810 inhabitants, including the tithings of Godsworth, or Goddings, Heathside, Kingfield, or Kenville, Mayford, Shackleford, Hale End, Crastock, and Sutton. The market is on Tuesday, and there is an annual fair on Whit Tuesday. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a vicarage, value 11*l.* 0*s.* 5*d.*, in the patronage of the Earl of Onslow. Woking Manor formerly belonged to the Crown. King Henry VII. repaired and enlarged the manor-house for his mother, Margaret Countess of Richmond, who died here 30th July 1509: it was destroyed, and Sir Edward Zouch, Knight Marshal of the Household, is said to have built a seat with the materials. King James I. visited him here. Sutton Place was built by Sir R. Weston in 1529. Queen Elizabeth visited this seat 26th September, 1591. John Webbe Weston, Esq., a descendant of the founder, died 14th October 1823, æt. 70.

WORPLESDON, 3 miles N.W. from Guildford, contains 203 houses, and 1276 inhabitants, including the tithings of Burgham, Perry Hill, West End, and Wyke. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 24*l.* 13*s.* 9*d.*, in the patronage of Eton College. On Broad-street Common Mr. Sibthorpe discovered a tessellated pavement, 62 feet in length, on 30th July 1829. The tesserae have been removed to Clandon, the seat of the Earl of Onslow, for preservation.

SECOND DIVISION.

EAST CLANDON, 5 miles N.E. from Guildford, contains 38 houses, and 230 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 10*l.* 6*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of Lord King. Eastward of the village is Hatchlands, the seat of George Holme Sumner, Esq.

WEST CLANDON, one mile distant from the above, contains 53 houses, and 361 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 13*l.* 10*s.*, in the patronage of the Earl of Onslow. Clandon Park, the seat of the Earl of Onslow, is well wooded, and plentifully stocked with deer. The mansion was built for Thomas, second Lord Onslow, in 1731, from designs by Leoni. The principal front is towards the south-west, where it commands an extensive prospect. The hall, a cube of forty feet, contains two very fine chimney-pieces, by Rysbrack; one, representing a sacrifice to Bacchus, has been considered a masterpiece of the sculptor; the other, a bas relief, represents a sacrifice to Diana. The stables, built from a design by Brown, are surrounded by stately elms. A fine piece of water in the park is fed by a branch of the Wey, which rises within the domain. The Right Hon. Thomas, second Earl of Onslow, Viscount Cranley, and Lord Cranley of Ember Court, fifth Lord Onslow, of West Clandon, died at this seat 22nd February, 1827, æt. 73; his eldest son Arthur George is now the Earl of Onslow, &c.

GUILDFORD, on the river Wey, 29 miles S.W. from London, contains 542 houses, and 3161 inhabitants. This town is pleasantly situated on the side of a chalk hill, and principally consists of one long street, intersected by smaller ones at right angles. Its principal trade is in timber and corn, purchased in the neighbouring counties, and sent by means of the Wey to London, and by the Sussex and Surrey canal to the Arun and the sea. The market is on Saturday, and there are annual fairs on the 4th May, and 22nd November, for horses, cattle, and sheep. Here is a town-hall and county-hall. The petty sessions are held here, and the assizes in the summer circuits here and at Croydon alternately. The corporation consists of a mayor, recorder, high-steward, bailiffs, town-clerk, seven aldermen, and other officers. The arms of the town are, sable, on a mount vert a castle with two towers embattled, on each tower a spire. From the battlements between the towers, another tower triple towered, all argent and charged with a shield of France and England quarterly. Under the battlements of the castle two roses or. The port, proper charged with a key and portcullised or. On the mount before the port, a lion couchant guardant of the last, and on each side of the castle a wool-pack argent. Guildford returns two members to Parliament, a privilege granted in the reign of Edward I.; the right of election is vested in the freemen and freeholders paying scot and lot, resident in the town. The present members are James Mangles, Esq., and Charles Francis Norton, Esq. The parish churches are three in number: St. Mary's is a rectory, value 12*l.* 5*s.* 5*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown; St. Nicholas is a rectory, value 21*l.* 0*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean of Salisbury; and the other, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is a rectory, value 11*l.* 11*s.*, in the patronage of the Crown. In this church is the stately monument of George Abbot, Archbishop of Canterbury, who died at Croydon Palace the 5th August, 1633, æt. 71. He was the son of Maurice Abbot, a clothworker in this town, and was educated in the free-school, under Mr. Francis Taylor, whence he was sent to Baliol College Oxford. In 1611 he was preferred to the see of Canterbury, and was at this time in the highest favour both with the King and people; he appears to have taken an active part in all the great transactions in church and state. In the year 1619 he executed a design which he had long formed, of founding an hospital in this his native town, where, on the 5th April, he was present, when Sir Nicholas Kempe laid the first stone. The Archbishop endowed it with lands to the value of 300*l.* per annum, 100*l.* of which was to be employed in setting the poor to work, and the remainder for the maintenance of a master, twelve brothers, and eight sisters, who were to have blue clothes, and half-a-crown a week each. The 29th October, being the anniversary of the Archbishop's birth, is commemorated here, and the Archbishop of Canterbury for the time is visitor of the hospital. Besides this noble foundation he gave to the schools at Oxford 150*l.* He also bestowed a large sum of money on the library of Baliol College Oxford, and left other sums to charitable purposes. His elder brother Robert, also born at Guildford, became Bishop of Salisbury: the following parallel has been drawn between the two brothers; viz. that "George was the more plausible preacher, Robert the greatest scholar; George the abler statesman, Robert the deeper divine; gravity did frown in George, and smile in Robert."

Queen Eleanor, wife of Henry III., founded a house of Friars-preachers in this town: besides which, Speed says, that here was another house of Crouched-friars. Here are the remains of an ancient castle, in which King John is known to have occasionally resided: in dimensions the keep tower is 42 feet by 47.

Brabeuf House is the seat of John Wright, Esq.; and Loseley Place, 2 miles S.W. from Guildford, is the seat of J. More Molineux, Esq. This curious mansion was built about 1562 by Sir William More: it is a large edifice, the great hall 42 feet by 25; and on the first-floor is a gallery, 121 feet in length by 18 feet in width, in which are whole-length portraits of King James I. and his Queen. On a frieze in the great drawing-room is the device of a mulberry-tree, with this inscription, Morus tarde moriens.—Morum cito moriturum.

EAST HORSELEY, 4 miles S.E. from Ripley, contains 24 houses, and 192 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Martin, is a rectory, value 12*l.* 16*s.* 5*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. In the catalogue of religious houses, ascribed to Gervase of Canterbury, mention is made of a priory of Black nuns at Horseleye in Surrey, temp. Richard I. or King John. Horseley Park is the seat of William Currie, Esq. The neighbouring country is highly cultivated, amidst spacious airy downs, gentle hill and dale, chalk-pits, and well-wooded grounds, producing a rich scene of picturesque beauty.

WEST HORSELEY, one mile distant from the above, contains 115 houses, and 611 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 22*l.* 17*s.* 1*d.*

MERROW, or Merroe, 2 miles E. from Guildford, contains 44 houses, and 240 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Evangelist, is a rectory, value 9*l.* 0*s.* 2*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Winchester.

OCKHAM, one mile E. from Ripley, contains 114 houses, and 565 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 11*l.* 2*s.* 1*d.*, in the patronage of Lord King: it contains a handsome monument of Lord Chancellor King, who died 23rd July, 1734, æt. 65. Ockham Park is the seat of Lord King.

RIPLEY, 6 miles N.E. from Guildford, is a hamlet of the parish of Send, in the road from London to Portsmouth. Dunsborough House is the seat of the Rev. G. W. Onslow.

SEND, 3 miles S.W. from Ripley, contains 235 houses, and 1283 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Ripley. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 18*s.* 1*d.*, in the patronage of the Earl of Onslow.

WISLEY, on the river Wey, 2 miles N. from Ripley, contains 19 houses, and 141 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 40*l.* 19*s.*, in the patronage of the Earl of Onslow.

14. Motton Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Copthorne hundred; on the east by Reigate hundred; on the south by the county of Sussex; and on the west by Blackheath hundred. It is separated into two divisions.

FIRST DIVISION.

ABINGER, 4 miles S.W. from Dorking, contains 115 houses, and 742 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a rectory, value 12*l.* 8*s.* 1*d.*, in the patronage of Sir John Evelyn, Bart.

OCKLEY, 6 miles S. from Dorking, contains 83 houses, and 642 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, is a rectory, value 16*l.* 5*s.* 2*d.*, in the patronage of Clare Hall Cambridge. Ockley Court was the seat of the late Robert Calvert, Esq.; Jays, near Stone-street, of Leigh Steer, Esq.; and Broom Hall, of — Collins, Esq. Leith Hill, about a mile and half northward from Ockley, is the highest ground in this county, and rises 993 feet above the level of the sea. From the tower on the summit of this hill is a most extensive and pleasing view over a rich and highly cultivated country. Southward, through Beding Gap, an opening in the downs, the sea is distinctly visible at thirty miles distance: northward, over Box Hill, London is seen at twenty-six miles distance: eastward, the tower in Heathfield Park, Nettlebed, in Oxfordshire; parts of Hampshire, Berkshire, Buckinghamshire, Hertfordshire, Essex, and Kent, are to be discerned. Leith Hill tower was built in 1766 by R. Hull, Esq. of Leith Hill Place, and is of utility to mariners as a seamark.

WOTTON, 3 miles W. from Dorking, contains 100 houses, and 589 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Evangelist is a rectory, value 12*l.* 18*s.* 9*d.*: in the chancel is interred the celebrated John Evelyn, and many of his family. George Evelyn, Esq., the common ancestor of this once numerous family, acquired a fortune by the manufacture of gunpowder, and left at his death, in 1603, three sons, who became heads of families in this county: Thomas Evelyn, at Long Ditton; John Evelyn, at Godstone; and Richard Evelyn, at Wotton, who was the father of the author of “Sylva,” and ancestor of Sir John Evelyn, of Wotton, created baronet 6th August, 1713. Sir Frederick Evelyn, who died in 1812, was the third and last baronet, and it was to his widow the public are indebted for the publication of the Memoirs of John Evelyn, the author of “Sylva.” John Evelyn, Esq., of Wotton, who died 27th November, 1827, was son of Dr. William Evelyn, Dean of Emly in Ireland, and descended from John Evelyn of Godstone.

Oakwood, on the borders of Sussex, is a hamlet of this parish. The chapel is dedicated to St. John the Baptist.

SECOND DIVISION.

CAPEL, 6 miles S. from Dorking, and 7 miles from Horsham in Sussex, contains 112 houses, and 876 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a curacy.

DORKING, 23 miles S.W. from London, and 12 miles E. from Guildford, contains 697 houses, and 3812 inhabitants. The town is situated in the angle of two fine valleys, and surrounded by beautiful hills. It carries on a considerable trade in meal, manufactured in numerous mills from corn brought here from the productive neighbourhood, as well as from the Weald of Sussex; and in lime, for which it is deservedly noted; and also in poultry of various kinds, particularly fowls, and those of a peculiar bird with five claws. The market is on Thursday, and there is an annual fair on the day before Ascension-day, for horses, bullocks, sheep, &c. The petty sessions are held here. The parish contains the districts of Chipping borough, East borough, Holmwood borough, Milton borough, and Westcote borough; and here the custom of Borough English prevails, by which lands and tenements descend to the youngest son, or if the owner has no issue, to his youngest brother. The church, dedicated to St. Martin, is a vicarage, value 14*l.* 13*s.* 11*d.*: besides monuments of the Howards of Deep Dene, it contains a monument, with inlaid brass, to the memory of Jeremiah Mackland, M.A., of Milton Court, who died in 1776,—one of the most learned critics of the eighteenth century.

On the hill a mile northward of the town is Denbies the seat of William Jos. Dennison, Esq. M.P.

The Rookery, the seat of Richard Fuller, Esq., is in Westcote borough, about two miles from Dorking, on the road to Guildford: it stands in the vale of Mereden, on the banks of Pipbrook, a winding stream, a branch of the river Mole. In this valley is a farm belonging to the Hospital of the Holy Trinity at Guildford, founded by Archbishop Abbot; upon which farm is Meg's Well, a spring of some celebrity in the neighbourhood. The hamlet of Westcote is about a mile westward from Dorking. On Westcote Heath two fairs are annually held, on 15th April and 28th October; the grant for which was procured in 1726 by Sir John Evelyn, Bart. of Wotton. Bury Hill is the seat of Robert Barclay, Esq.; and Wonham House, near Buckland, is the seat of Lord Templetown. The Deep Dene was the seat of the late Thomas Hope, Esq., a name intimately connected with all that is estimable in ancient art and classical antiquity. In a devotion of his time and fortune to the improvement of British taste, he not only collected the rare specimens in ancient sculpture of the most flourishing periods of its existence, but distinguished himself by a zealous and liberal patronage of its contemporary professors. Canova produced a Venus to adorn his gallery, and Thorwaldson was indebted to him for opportunities of displaying his talents. As Vice-president of the Society for the Encouragement of Arts, Mr. Hope was well known to the artists of his native country. The house was originally built by Charles Duke of Norfolk, and enlarged by Mr. Hope, principally on the south front; he also added Chart Park to the grounds; and the property now consists of about 400 acres of pleasure-grounds, so judiciously disposed, that a walk, admitting a pleasing transition of view, of upwards of twelve miles may be undertaken without retracing a step. The surface of the estate partakes of the greatest irregularity; the ground, in general bold, sometimes hangs abruptly over the walks, and at others declines in gentle slopes to the level parts. A wooded hill rises with a steep acclivity behind the house, and descends on the southern side at Chart Park. A flower-garden in the valley beneath, the (identical deep dene which gives name to the whole,) is laid out with exquisite taste. On the other side of the hill is a very extensive view towards Reigate and the South Downs. Many walks intersect the wood, but the descent to the Deep Dene is most admired. The principal entrance to the grounds from the Reigate road is marked by a lodge of Italian design, in perfect harmony with the taste that pervades every object in this delightful domain. Hence is a view of the luxuriantly wooded knoll, on the side of which the house is built; its ornamental parapets and lofty turrets rise amidst the foliage: nearer is the long front of the stables, such as Vitruvius himself would have constructed. The drive, rising gently from the entrance, is cut deep through the hill, (over which is the road to Beechworth,) and is conducted under an arch, machicolated, and bearing shields with arms of Hope and Beresford. The eastern or carriage front of the mansion is in the Grecian taste, with a semicircular porticus. On the southern front is the studio, the theatre, the sculpture-room, and the conservatory, which opens to the sculpture gallery, containing a selection of antiques, collected in the course of extensive tours, and all of a superior class. The suite of rooms here commences with the new library, constructed in form of a parallelogram, the general arrangement of which manifests a perfect acquaintance with the chaste models of antiquity; round the upper part of this room is a very broad frieze with figures in bas-relief extremely elegant: the old library,—the boudoir,—and the drawing-room. The north-western or garden front has before it a large semicircular platform, adorned with vases on pedestals at intervals of the parapet; and upon the verdant lawn, which descends in an easy and natural slope from this front, is a lofty tower crowned with a cupola. The smooth surface of the lawn is embellished with flowering shrubs and odorous plants, and is bounded by a grove of the largest trees, through which, at openings, are views of the distant country towards Denbies, &c. Upon this lawn is a tulip tree, said to be one of the largest in the kingdom. The original entrance to the house upon the south-east front is now the middle hall, opening upon the principal staircase, leading to the lilac-room, (so called from the colour of its hangings); choice pictures and valuable enamels adorn the walls: the Egyptian room, and the bath. The whole number of bed-rooms is thirty-three. The Deep Dene, so beautifully formed by Nature, has been greatly improved by Art, which under the regulation of refined taste has very much increased its attractions. The pleasure-grounds are most happily placed in the very midst of England's richest scenery, and careful attention has preserved the extensive and varied prospects commanded by the eminence upon which the estate is situated. The acclivities, rendered easy of ascent, disclose a succession of views, including both the rural and romantic. “Hills and vales, the woodland, and the plain,” are most pleasingly blended, and the prominent features of the landscape boldly marked; the almost perpendicular sides of the neighbouring eminences are adorned with hanging woods, and beyond is an immense extent of highly cultivated country, even to the verge of the Sussex Downs.

THIS county is bounded on the north by Surrey; on the north-east by Kent; on the south by the English Channel; and on the west by Hampshire. It is about seventy-six miles in length, and twenty miles in breadth. The Romans gave the name of Regni to the inhabitants, and Chichester was the Roman station Regnum. Roman remains have been found at Eastbourne, Pevensey, and Rye. Under the Anglo-Saxon heptarchy it formed the kingdom of Southsex, whence evidently its present name originated. In the year 803, Egbert King of Wessex, or the West-Saxons, united it to his dominions, and a few years after was crowned King of England at Winchester. The castles of the early lords of Sussex were at Pevensey, Arundel, Amberley, Bramber, Hastings, Hurstmonceaux, Lewes, Winchilsea, and Bodiham. Mayfield was a palace of the Archbishops of Canterbury; and other noble mansions were at Halmaker, Petworth, Stanstead, Cowdry, Laughton, and Brede. There were formerly abbeys at Battle, Bayham, Duford, and Robertsbridge; and priories at Boxgrove, Eastbourne, Hastings, Lymister, Lewes, Michelham, Pynham, Rusper, Sele, Shelbred, Steyning, Tortington, Wilmington, and Winchilsea. This county is in the diocese of Chichester and province of Canterbury, contains one (city Chichester), eighteen market-towns, 342 parishes, 36,283 houses, and 233,019 inhabitants. It sends twenty-eight members to Parliament, viz. two for each of the following boroughs: Chichester, Midhurst, Arundel, Horsham, Steyning, Bramber, Shoreham, East Grinstead, Lewes, Seaford, Hastings, Winchilsea, and Rye, and two for the county; the present members are Lord J. G. Lennox, and H. Barrett Curteis, Esq. The surface of this county is varied by several considerable hills, commencing on the borders of Hampshire on the north-west, and extending to Beachey Head on the south-east. That part running from Lewes to the sea is distinguished by the name of the South Downs, and is noted for feeding sheep, celebrated for the fineness of their wool and the goodness of their mutton. The north-western part of this ridge is composed of gritstone and limestone, and abounds in iron ore, for the smelting of which this county was formerly famed. The northern and middle part of the county is woodland. Sussex is celebrated for the growth of its timber, principally oak; no other county can equal it in this respect, either in quantity or quality: it overspreads the Weald in every direction, where it flourishes with a great degree of luxuriance. The abundance of timber in this county, combined with the singular custom of planting shaws, has rendered it one of the most thickly inclosed parts of the kingdom; and if Sussex is viewed from the highlands, it appears an uninterrupted woodland. The shaws consist of tall screens of underwood and forest, around many of the fields, some of which are so wood-locked that it is surprising corn ever ripens. The rivers of Sussex are the Arun, the Adur, the Ouse, the Rother, the Lavant, the Cuckmere, the Ashbourn, the Brede, and the Asten, all of which are confined within the limits of the county. The Arun rises in St. Leonard's Forest, near Horsham, and flowing southward to Stopham, it penetrates a hollow of the South Downs to Arundel, and falls into the English Channel at Little Hampton. The Rother, a branch of the Arun, rises on the borders of Hampshire, passes Midhurst, Rotherbridge, and Stopham. In the Arun are caught quantities of mullets, which in the season come up from the sea as far as Arundel, and feed upon a particular weed, which gives them a fine flavour:—this river is likewise famous for trout and eels. The Adur rises also in St. Leonard's Forest, and descends southward by Steyning and Bramber to New Shoreham on the coast. The Ouse rises in two springs, the higher in St. Leonard's Forest, and the lower at Selsfield, on the borders of the forest of Worth; a confluence takes place a few miles north of Lindfield. Pursuing its course south-eastward, the Ouse nearly half encircles Sheffield Park; thence it passes Isfield, Barcombe, and Hamsey, and winding round the sloping headland opposite Landport, enters Lewes levels northward of the town: after separating the cliff from Lewes, it proceeds through the marshy levels southward, and receiving several tributary streams forms the harbour of New Haven. The Rother rises near Mayfield, in a very hilly, cultivated, and thickly-wooded country, fed also in its course by various streams, from valleys similar to that which it forms: it nowhere approaches the Downs, but following a south-easterly direction till it emerges from its hills, sinks into a sandy level, and turns southward, to make a great basin eastward of the port of Rye, at the extremity of the county. The Brede, from some pleasant valleys beyond Battle, joins the Rother below Winchilsea, which is now to its exit, surrounded by a fen from the high grounds of Sussex to Romney Marsh, in Kent. The Cuckmere, rising near the foot of Crowborough Hill, passes in its course Heathfield, Warbleton, Hellingly, Arlington, Michelham; and winding through the vale of Alfreton, empties itself into the ocean below Excett Bridge, eastward of Seaford. The manufactures of this county chiefly consist of iron, charcoal, gunpowder, and paper. The iron-stone generally pervades, but its manufacture is on the decay. Charcoal is an object of importance; large quantities are sent hence to London. Gunpowder is manufactured at Battle and paper at Iping, Duncton, and other places. Potash is made at Bucksill Hill.—Petworth House is the seat of the Earl of Egremont, Lord Lieutenant of the county.

1. Arundel Rape

Is bounded on the north by Surrey; on the east by Bramber rape; on the south by the sea; and on the west by Chichester rape. It is divided into six hundreds.

ARUNDEL HUNDRED.

ARUNDEL, on the river Arun, 59 miles S. from London, and 11 miles E. from Chichester, contains 460 houses, and 2511 inhabitants. The town is situated on the declivity of a hill, commanding a beautiful view of rich meadows, terminated by the sea at an agreeable distance. The chief business here is ship-building, the timber being supplied from the neighbouring forests. The town also possesses some foreign commerce, and a considerable coasting trade. There is also a manufacture of hop bagging. The market days are Wednesday and Saturday, and the fairs are held 14th May, 21st August, 25th September, 17th December, and the second Tuesday in every month, for cattle. The river Arun is navigable up to this town for vessels of 100 tons burden; and the Arundel canal forms a navigable communication between the river Rother, at Stopham Meadow, and the Arun; and hence to Hastingsbourne Bridge, near Petworth. This town is a borough by prescription, and is governed by a mayor, a steward, twelve burgesses, and other officers. The mayor, who is chosen annually, is judge at the court leet of the lord of the manor, which is held every three weeks. He appoints the collectors of the package and stallage, &c., and no writ can be executed within the borough without his permission. He has also the authority of a justice of the peace. The arms of the town are Argent a swallow volant, in bend sinister sable. The petty sessions are held here. Arundel sends two members to Parliament; the mayor is the returning officer: this privilege was conferred in the reign of Edward I., and is vested in the inhabitants paying scot and lot. The present members are Lord D. Coultts Stewart, and Alderman John Atkins. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 10*s.* The collegiate church of Arundel was founded by Richard Fitz Alan Earl of Arundel, in the third year of the reign of Richard II., 1380; and the choir of the church probably built at that time, became afterwards the burial-place of the Earls of Arundel, who previously to that period had been interred in the priory of Lewes, of which they were the patrons, as heirs to the Warrens, Earls of Surrey. The chancel is the sole property of the Duke of Norfolk, who of course is bound to make all repairs which may be necessary. The monument of Thomas Fitz Alan Earl of Arundel, K.G. Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports, and Lord Treasurer of England, who died in 1415, is in the middle of the choir. On the tomb lie the effigies of the Earl and Countess, the Earl's feet resting on a horse, and his robes ornamented with a border of oak leaves and acorns: the workmanship is very delicate, and the sculpture has suffered from mutilation. In the middle of the chapel of Our Lady, on the north side of the choir, is the tomb of Eleanor Countess of Arundel, who died in 1418. A monument under an arch, between the choir and the altar, is erected in memory of John Earl of Arundel, who died in 1434: his figure is represented in armour, and on his tabard are the arms of Fitz Alan and Maltravers. A large and magnificent monument against the south wall of the chancel, in memory of William Earl of Arundel, K.G., who died in 1487, represents the figures of this Earl and his Countess, in robes of state, with coronets, &c.; the Earl's feet rest on a white horse, those of the Countess on a golden griffin. A large tomb against the north wall of the chancel is in memory of Thomas Earl of Arundel, who died in 1534, and his Countess: it is meagre in design, and the figures are clumsily executed. On the south side of the chancel is a mural monument of Henry Earl of Arundel, who died in 1579. Under the high altar of the church is a vault, in which are interred most of the family of Howard, Dukes of Norfolk and Earls of Arundel from the reign of Elizabeth to the present time.

Arundel Castle, the seat of the Duke of Norfolk, is on an eminence embosomed in a luxuriant grove: the views hence are extremely fine towards the sea, commanding the Isle of Wight, &c.

AVISFORD HUNDRED.

BARNHAM, 5 miles S.W. from Arundel, contains 21 houses, and 173 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 15*s.*

BINSTED, 2 miles W. from Arundel, contains 14 houses, and 98 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 17*s.* 8*d.*

CLIMPING, on the river Arun, 3 miles S. from Arundel, contains 32 houses, and 258 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 11*s.*, in the patronage of Eton College.

EASTERGATE, 5 miles W. from Arundel, contains 28 houses, and 166 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. George, is a rectory, value 7*l.* 19*s.* 9*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Chichester Cathedral. Westergate Cottage is the seat of the Rev. J. Tripp.

FELPHAM, 7 miles S.W. from Arundel, contains 86 houses, and 581 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 19*l.* 15*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Chichester. Felpham was the residence of William Hayley the poet, author of the Life of Cowper, who died here 12th November 1820. Bognor, a fashionable sea bathing-place, is in this parish. Bognor Lodge is the seat of Sir J. Harrington, Bart.; and Arran Lodge, of the Earl of Arran.

FORD, on the river Arun, 3 miles S. from Arundel, contains 8 houses, and 83 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 9*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Chichester.

MADEHURST, or Maidhurst, 3 miles N.W. from Arundel, contains 23 houses, and 169 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 8*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Chichester. Dale Park is the seat of Sir William Lewis George Thomas, Bart.

MIDDLETON, on the sea-coast, 6 miles S.W. from Arundel, contains 6 houses, and 44 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 5*l.* 10*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

SOUTH STOKE, on the river Arun, 2½ miles N. from Arundel, contains 20 houses, and 115 inhabitants, including the tithing of Offham. It is a rectory, value 11*l.* 15*s.* 10*d.*

TORTINGTON, 3 miles S.W. from Arundel, contains 13 houses, and 88 inhabitants. It is a vicarage. A priory of the order of St. Austin, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen, was founded here by Lady Hawin Corbet, before the reign of John: it was valued at 101*l.* 4*s.* 1*d.*; and after the Dissolution the site was granted in 1537 to Henry Lord Maltravers, and in 1599 to Sir John Spencer. Part of the church of the priory was lately used as a barn.

WALBERTON, 3 miles W. from Arundel, contains 77 houses, and 687 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 10*l.* 19*s.* 2*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Chichester. Walberton Place is the seat of R. Prime, Esq. Near Avisford Hill is Avisford House, the seat of Sir W. Houston.

YAPTON, 4 miles S.W. from Arundel, contains 79 houses, and 579 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 10*s.* 11*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Chichester. In the chancel are several mural monuments of the family of Thomas. Sir George Thomas of Yapton was created baronet 6th September 1766. Dale Park is the principal seat of the present Baronet. At Yapton is the seat of Captain Whyte.

BURY HUNDRED.

BIGNOR, 5 miles S. from Petworth, and the same distance N. from Arundel, contains 20 houses, and 138 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 8*l.* 3*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. A most interesting discovery of remains of buildings here, by the late Samuel Lysons, proves the fact of the Romans having lived in Britain in some degree of splendour. From the extent of the apartments contained in this villa,—exceeding in number what have been commonly found,—but by comparison only part of a Roman residence, no doubt can be entertained that it belonged to some person of consequence. The general style and arrangement of the ornaments which prevail in the pavements differ from any yet discovered in this kingdom, and have the appearance of much greater antiquity. Many of the enrichments of the Mosaic work bear a strong resemblance to those of the pavements found at Pompeii; and there is ground for supposing this villa may be referred to so early a period as the reign of TITUS. Openings were made at this spot from the year 1811, at several periods, till 1815. A pavement, 32 feet by 30, was first discovered about a quarter of a mile eastward of the church, in a field called Oldbury, near the Roman track-way, which here goes by the name of Stone-street, and is mentioned in the 15th Itin. of Richard of Cirencester. The design of the Mosaic used in this pavement is adorned with various figures, better executed and of better materials than any which had been before discovered in this country. This was the floor of a Triclinium, and the couches are supposed to have been arranged on red brick tesserae between the more ornamented part of the pavement and the walls. The last had been painted on stucco, of which many fragments were found. The Crypto Porticus appears to have been of much larger dimensions than any one hitherto discovered in this island: it extended 150 feet on the north, and 100 feet on the west, and is 10 feet wide, making an ambulation of 227 feet. In a room on the west side appeared an open fire-place, and one also in another room, but of smaller dimensions, but no part of any chimney by which the smoke might have been conveyed away remained. No open fire-place of this kind has been elsewhere discovered in the remains of a Roman building. The ruins of this villa extend to the town field. The site is picturesque, under the South Downs; its southern aspect forming an amphitheatre, through which the Roman road is carried. Eastward it commands an extensive view over the river Arun to Parham, through the levels under the Downs. On the north are the Surrey and Hampshire hills; and westward the prospect is bounded by the hill of Bignor, which at the Roman period was rendered inaccessible. Bignor Park is the seat of — Hawkins, Esq.

BURY, on the banks of the Arun, 4 miles N. from Arundel, contains 73 houses, and 504 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 5*s.* 5*d.*, in the patronage of the Prebendary of Bury. Westburton is a hamlet of this parish.

COATES, 3 miles S. from Petworth, contains 6 houses, and 41 inhabitants. It is a curacy.

COLDWALTHAM, 5 miles S.E. from Petworth, contains 44 houses, and 357 inhabitants. It is a curacy.

FITTLEWORTH, 3 miles S.E. from Petworth, contains 93 houses, and 631 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Chichester.

HARDHAM, or Hermingham, on the river Arun, 6 miles S.E. from Petworth, contains 12 houses, and 114 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Botolph, is a rectory, value 5*l.* 5*s.* 10*d.* Here was formerly an Augustine priory of Black canons, dedicated to the Holy Cross, of which Sir William D'Autrey, in the reign of Henry II., was founder; some remains of which still exist. The Goring family, as heirs of the founder, held the lands after the Dissolution.

HOUGHTON, on the Arun, 3 miles N. from Arundel, contains 25 houses, and 162 inhabitants. It is a curacy. From the top of Houghton Hill, in the road from Petworth to Arundel, is a fine view of the sea and the intervening country, with the windings of the river Arun towards Arundel.

WISBOROUGH GREEN, 6 miles N.E. from Petworth, a detached portion of this hundred, contains 226 houses, and 1679 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 18*s.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Chichester. Loxwood is a chapelry of this parish. Drunswick Place was a seat of the earlier Bishops of Chichester; much of a very ancient house remains.

POLING HUNDRED.

ANGMERING, 5 miles S.E. from Arundel, contains 131 houses, and 897 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 15*l.* 9*s.* 2*d.* West Angmering is a hamlet of this parish. Angmering Park, on the south slope of the Downs, the ancient seat of the family of Palmer, afterwards belonged to Sir John Shelley, Bart.

BURPHAM, on the Arun, 2 miles N.E. from Arundel, contains 35 houses, and 223 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Chichester.

FERRING, on the sea-coast, 4 miles W. from Worthing, contains 44 houses, and 286 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 8*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Prebendary of Ferring. It contains monuments of the Westbrook and Minshull families. Here was formerly a seat of the Bishops of Chichester, who still hold the manorial rights.

GORING, on the coast, 2½ miles W. from Worthing, contains 67 houses, and 476 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 10*s.* Highdown Hill, on the north, commands a beautiful prospect; and is celebrated for Oliver the Miller's tomb. Goring Lodge is at its foot.

KINGSTON, on the sea-coast, 6 miles S.E. from Arundel, contains 9 houses, and 43 inhabitants. It is a curacy.

LIMISTER, or Leominster, 2 miles S. from Arundel, contains 99 houses, and 562 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen, is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 1*s.* 3*d.*, in the patronage of Eton College. Here was an alien priory founded by Roger Montgomery Earl of Arundel in the reign of William the Conqueror. Warning Camp is a tithing of this parish. Pynham Priory was founded here by Adeliza Queen of Henry I., and dedicated to St. Bartholomew. It was suppressed by Cardinal Wolsey.

LITTLE HAMPTON, at the mouth of the Arun, 5 miles S. from Arundel, contains 205 houses, and 1166 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a curacy. This village, situated upon the English Channel, is well frequented for the benefit of sea-bathing.

NORTH STOKE, on the Arun, 3 miles N. from Arundel, contains 9 houses, and 63 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 14*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

POLING, or Pooling, 3 miles S.E. from Arundel, contains 34 houses, and 191 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 10*l.*, in the patronage of Eton College. Here was formerly a Preceptory of the Knights of St. John of Jerusalem, which was granted to the College of Arundel in 1541.

EAST PRESTON, on the sea-coast, 2 miles E. from Little Hampton, contains 30 houses, and 259 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 20*l.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

RUSTINGTON, or Russing, on the coast, one mile E. from Little Hampton, contains 51 houses, and 327 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 6*l.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Chichester.

ROTHERBRIDGE HUNDRED.

BARLAVINGTON, 4 miles S. from Petworth, contains 10 houses, and 94 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 5*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*

DUNCTON, 4 miles S. from Petworth, contains 37 houses, and 246 inhabitants. It is a rectory, in the patronage of the Earl of Egremont. A Roman hypocaust and other remains were discovered here in 1812, north-eastward of the church. The situation is fine, commanding an extensive view. On the common near West Lands is a large circular barrow; another is near Fitz Lee, and three more are between Coates and Bignor Park. Stone-street, a Roman road, passes about two miles south-eastward from these remains. Burton Park, the seat of — Biddulph, Esq. is extremely diversified in its scenery, and is intersected by a succession of lakes. The bold headlands, on the borders of the country, rise majestically in the view. Duncton Hill and Lavington Down, on the east, are broken into knolls richly wooded. The mansion, having a frontage of 173 feet, was built from designs by Leoni, about 1723. Burton is a parish, containing one house, and 14 inhabitants; it is a rectory, value 7*l.* 3*s.* 11*d.* On the north is Rotherbridge, over the river, which gives name to the hundred.

EGDEAN, 2 miles S.E. from Petworth, contains 11 houses, and 66 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, is a rectory, value 1*l.* 9*s.* 2*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

KIRDFORD, on a branch of the Arun, 4 miles N.E. from Petworth, contains 204 houses, and 1602 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 11*l.* Plaistow, on the borders of Surrey, three miles north from the village, is a chapelry of Kirdford: near it are Plaistow Place and Ash Park. More westward is Shillinglee Park, the seat of the Earl of Wintertoun.

LURGASALL, or Lurgershall, 4 miles N.W. from Petworth, contains 90 houses, and 664 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 8*l*.

NORTH CHAPEL, 5 miles N.W. from Petworth, contains 105 houses, and 749 inhabitants, including the tithing of Diddlesford. It is a rectory, in the patronage of the Earl of Egremont.

PETWORTH, 15 miles N.E. from Chichester, and 48 from London, contains 457 houses, and 2781 inhabitants. The market is on Wednesday; and there are annual fairs on Holy Thursday for horned cattle, 29th July for wool, and 20th November for sheep and hogs. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 41*l*. 10*s*. 5*d*., in the patronage of the Earl of Egremont, the richest rectory in the county. Many of the Percys Earls of Northumberland, and of the family of Peachy, lie buried in the church, but there are no monuments of peculiar interest. Petworth House, the seat of the Earl of Egremont (Lord Lieutenant of the county), is very near the town: it was built by Charles Duke of Somerset, who married Elizabeth, sole heiress of Josceline Percy, last Earl of Northumberland of that family, and is raised upon a splendid plan, correspondent in every respect with the usual magnificence and princely fortune of that nobleman. The apartments are profusely embellished with a choice collection of pictures by the most eminent masters, both ancient and modern. The Earl of Egremont stands high in public estimation, as a munificent patron of British art. Here is also a gallery of antique statues and busts; some of bold Greek sculpture were procured from the Barbarini Palace, and several of the marbles were obtained at the sales of the most celebrated collections, by Brettingham, his Lordship's agent at Rome. A very extensive museum also claims the attention of naturalists. In the armoury are several pieces of great antiquity; amongst which is shown the sword said to have been used by Hotspur at the battle of Shrewsbury. In front of the mansion the lawn extends a considerable way into the park, and slopes gradually to a fine expanse of water. The park, at least twelve miles in circumference, commands delightful views of the Downs of Surrey and Sussex. The honour of Petworth, at an early period of history, was settled on the house of Percy, and devolved in 1682 upon the Duke of Somerset, whose descendant is the present noble proprietor. Sir Henry Peachy of Petworth was created baronet 21st March 1735.

STOPHAM, on the river Arun, 4 miles S.E. from Petworth, contains 18 houses, and 139 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 5*l*. 12*s*. 8*d*.

SUTTON, 5 miles S. from Petworth, contains 46 houses, and 353 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John, is a rectory, value 15*l*. 0*s*. 10*d*., in the patronage of the Earl of Egremont.

TILLINGTON, 1½ mile W. from Petworth, contains 133 houses, and 681 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 13*l*. 10*s*., in the patronage of the Earl of Egremont. Pitt's Hill is in this parish.

WOOLAVINGTON, 4 miles S.W. from Petworth, contains 36 houses, and 272 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 9*l*. Woolavington House, the seat of C. Dixon, Esq., is situated at the foot of Duncton Hill, which at a short distance becoming precipitous, and being closely matted with low wood, or alternately bare and open, combined with a richly cultivated valley beneath the hill, forms a pleasing scene.

WEST EASWRITH HUNDRED.

AMBERLEY, on the banks of the Arun, 4 miles N. from Arundel, contains 76 houses, and 548 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Rackham. It is a vicarage, value 7*l*. 5*s*. 7*d*., in the patronage of the Bishop of Chichester. Amberley Castle was built by William Rede Bishop of Chichester, in 1369: he was one of the most able architects of his time, and was employed ten years in constructing this castle, which is built on a plan differing in many respects from the military architecture of that period. The gate-house, now remaining, is part of his work. The Bishop died in 1385. The site of the castle occupies about 260 feet by 160 in extent. The northern and western sides present bold and massive features. Several chambers of state, with large mullioned windows, were erected by Bishop Sherborne, the last who resided here: he died in 1536. His buildings constitute the upper court, which, with additions, formed the dwelling-house of Thomas Rhoades. In it was a room with a paneled ceiling, painted by Theodore Bernardi, about the year 1519, with representations of female figures holding shields of arms.

BILLINGSHURST, 8 miles N.W. from Petworth, contains 238 houses, and 1369 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 9*l*. 6*s*.

CHILTINGTON, 9 miles S.E. from Petworth, contains 93 houses, and 638 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 12*l*. 16*s*. 10*d*., in the patronage of the Earl of Abergavenny.

GREATHAM, on the river Arun, 6 miles S.E. from Petworth, contains 7 houses, and 71 inhabitants. It is a rectory.

PARHAM, 9 miles S.E. from Petworth, and 7 miles N.E. from Arundel, contains 10 houses, and 77 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 10*l*., in the patronage of Lord de la Zouche. A chapel on the south side is the burial-place of the Bishopp family. Parham Park is the seat of Lord de la Zouche. The mansion, although modernized, is ancient, and still retains some of its original architectural character: it was founded by Thomas Palmer of Angmering, in the reign of Edward VI., and completed by his son Sir Thomas Palmer. There are two principal fronts to the mansion. The great hall, about 51 feet by 26 in dimension, with an oriel window at the upper end, has a flat ceiling of plaster, bearing the arms of Queen Elizabeth, and royal badges of roses and fleurs de lis. The dining-room and library are fine, and there is also a curious gallery in the upper story, 158 feet by 19, with a coved ceiling, and containing family portraits. The estate was purchased by Sir Thomas Bishopp in 1597. He had been knighted by Queen Elizabeth, and was Member of Parliament for Steyning in her reign. King James created him baronet 24th July 1620. The house was altered, without being improved, by Sir Cecil Bishopp, the third baronet, about the year 1710. Sir Cecil Bishopp was summoned by writ to Parliament as Lord de la Zouche of Harryngworth in Northamptonshire, in the year 1815.

PULBOROUGH, on the river Arun, 6 miles S.E. from Petworth, contains 331 houses, and 1901 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 19*l*. 0*s*. 7*d*.

RUDGWICK, on the borders of Surrey, 6 miles N.W. from Horsham, contains 140 houses, and 974 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is a vicarage, value 7*l*. 10*s*., in the patronage of the Bishop of Chichester.

SLINFOLD, 4 miles W. from Horsham, contains 84 houses, and 644 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a vicarage, value 7*l*. 7*s*. 6*d*.

STORRINGTON, 11 miles S.E. from Petworth, and 7 miles N.W. from Arundel, contains 161 houses, and 901 inhabitants. Here is a market on Wednesday, and annual fairs 12th May and 11th November for cattle. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 18*l*.

WIGGENHOLT, 8 miles S.E. from Petworth, contains 5 houses, and 47 inhabitants. It is a rectory.

2. Rape of Bramber

Is bounded on the north by Surrey; on the east by the rape of Lewes; on the south by the English Channel; and on the west by Arundel rape. It is subdivided into eleven hundreds.

BRIGHTFORD HUNDRED.

BROADWATER, 5 miles S. from Steyning, contains 623 houses, and 3725 inhabitants, including the town of Worthing, which is in this parish. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 36*l*. In the chancel, on the north side of the altar, is a very fine monument of Thomas Lord de la Warr, K.G., who died in 1524. Thomas Lord de la Warr, his son, also K.G., who died in 1554, is buried near his father. This family resided at Offington, in the parish, now the seat of — Margeson, Esq. Broadwater was the head of the barony of the Lords Camois. Worthing, on the sea-coast, about a mile southward from Broadwater, is a much frequented bathing-place. It is surrounded by the uninterrupted chain of the South Downs, which, forming nearly an amphitheatre, exclude, even in the winter months, the north and east winds: to this is united a facility of bathing in stormy weather, and an extent of sand as level as a carpet, of at least seven miles westward, and three towards the east.

CLAPHAM, 5 miles E. from Arundel, contains 32 houses, and 245 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 14*l.*, in the patronage of Sir John Shelley, Bart.

DURRINGTON, one mile S. from the above, contains 38 houses, and 194 inhabitants.

FINDON, 4 miles S.W. from Steyning, contains 85 houses, and 477 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a vicarage, value 13*l.* 3*s.* 9*d.*, in the patronage of Magdalen College Oxford. Michelgrove is the seat of Richard Watt Walker, Esq. Sir John Shelley of Michelgrove was created baronet 22nd May 1611.

HEENE, on the sea-coast, one mile W. from Worthing, contains 36 houses, and 178 inhabitants. It is a curacy. The manor lies within the parish of West Tarring.

LANCING, 2 miles N.E. from Worthing, contains 116 houses, and 590 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Lincoln. In the year 1828 a Roman pavement and other remains of building, coins, &c. &c. were discovered beneath a large tumulus on Lancing Down. Lancing House is the seat of J. M. Lloyd, Esq.

SOMPTING, 2 miles N. from Worthing, contains 92 houses, and 472 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 7*s.* Sompting Abbots is the seat of J. Crofts, Esq. Cokeham is a chapelry of this parish.

BURBEACH HUNDRED.

BEEDING, on the river Adur, one mile E. from Steyning, contains 105 houses, and 904 inhabitants, including Lower Beeding. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a vicarage, value 8*l.*, in the patronage of Magdalen College Oxford. A Benedictine priory was founded here by William de Braose in 1075, which was subordinate to the abbey of St. Florence at Salmur; it was valued at 26*l.* 9*s.* 9*d.* per annum: the site was granted in 1543 to Richard Andrews and Nicholas Temple.

EDBURTON, 4 miles E. from Steyning, contains 18 houses, and 92 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a rectory, value 16*l.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. Fulking is a hamlet of this parish.

IFIELD, in a detached portion of this hundred, on the borders of Surrey, 2 miles W. from Crawley, contains 111 houses, and 758 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 8*s.* 4*d.*: it contains monuments of the Holles family. Denzil Holles was created Lord Holles of Ifield in 1661. Tirhurst Place is a moated house of the time of Queen Elizabeth.

EAST EASWRITH HUNDRED.

HORSHAM, 36 miles from London, contains 791 houses, and 4575 inhabitants. It has a weekly market on Saturday, at which great quantities of corn and poultry are sold; and there is another on the last Tuesday in every month for cattle, sheep, &c. The fairs are Monday before Whitsunday for sheep and lambs, and 27th November for cattle. This town, one of the largest in the county, is a borough by prescription, and is governed by two bailiffs, chosen annually at the court-leet of the Duke of Norfolk, lord of the manor, a steward, and two constables. The arms of Horsham are, Azure, a lion rampant argent, in base the letter H. The petty sessions are held here, and also the assizes in the summer circuit, alternately with Lewes. Here is the county gaol. The town sends two members to Parliament, a privilege conferred upon it in the reign of Edward I. The right of election is vested in all such persons as have an estate of inheritance, or for life, in burgage houses, or lands lying within the borough. The bailiffs are the returning officers. The present members are the Earl of Surrey, and N. W. Ridley Colborne, Esq. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 25*l.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury: it is an ancient structure. In the chancel is the monument of William Lord Braose of Gower, who died in 1361: his family had extensive possessions in this county, and occupied Bramber Castle. Here is also another very handsome monument, with a canopy, said to be that of a Lord Hoo; and an altar-tomb, in memory of Elizabeth, wife of Thomas Delves, son and heir of Sir Henry Delves, Bart., who died in 1654. In the vicinity of this town is a quarry of good flat stone, either for roofs or paving.

Vol. I.

ITCHINGFIELD, 3½ miles S.W. from Horsham, contains 45 houses, and 349 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a rectory, value 8*l.* Den Park is the seat of Mrs. Eversfield.

SULLINGTON, 6 miles N.W. from Steyning, contains 42 houses, and 287 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 12*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.*

THAKEHAM, 9 miles S.E. from Petworth, contains 100 houses, and 603 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 14*l.* 9*s.* 9*d.*

WARMINGHURST, 5½ miles N.W. from Steyning, contains 14 houses, and 116 inhabitants.

FISHERGATE HUNDRED.

KINGSTON BY SEA, 2 miles E. from Shoreham, contains 7 houses, and 56 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 12*l.* 19*s.* 2*d.*

SHOREHAM, on the sea-coast, 7 miles W. from Brighton, and 55 from London, contains 203 houses, and 1047 inhabitants. This town is situated about a mile westward from the mouth of the harbour, on the river Adur, over which is a long wooden bridge. The river is navigable for barges, as high as Steyning, whence large quantities of timber are brought down for the dock-yards,—ship-building forming the principal business of the port. It has a coasting-trade, with a mackerel and herring fishery. The market is on Saturday, and here is an annual fair on 25th July. Shoreham is a borough by prescription, and is governed by two constables: it sends two members to Parliament, a privilege conferred upon the town in the reign of Edward I. The constables are the returning officers, and the right of election is vested in all the freeholders of 40*s.* per annum in the rape of Bramber, who amount to about 1500. The present members are Sir Charles Merrick Burrell, Bart., and Henry Howard, Esq. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 1*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of Magdalen College Oxford. This church is the remains of a very grand and beautiful structure. The choir, transept, and tower are curious architectural specimens of the date of 1220 and the introduction of the pointed style. A small part only of the nave has been preserved. In the choir the pointed arch prevails, but a series of semicircular headed windows, with the arcade beneath, is combined with it, and is apparently of coeval erection. The font is square, supported by a massive centre column, and having four smaller ones at its angles. A Carmelite priory was founded here by Sir John Mowbray in 1348.

OLD SHOREHAM, one mile northward from the above, contains 38 houses, and 235 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 18*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of Magdalen College Oxford. This church, although not so large as that of New Shoreham, is more ancient. The remains of the north transept are very curious, and the edifice is every way deserving of attention.

SOUTHWICK, on the coast, 2 miles E. from Shoreham, contains 57 houses, and 374 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 9*l.* 13*s.* 9*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. Southwick Place is the seat of William Gorringe, Esq.

PATCHING HUNDRED.

PATCHING, 5 miles E. from Arundel, and 7 miles S.W. from Steyning, contains 30 houses, and 222 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 11*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

N

SINGLE CROSS HUNDRED.

NUTHURST, 4 miles S.E. from Horsham, contains 114 houses, and 628 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a rectory, value 10*l.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Chichester. Nuthurst Lodge is the seat of J. Nelthorpe, Esq.; New Lodge, of — Aldridge, Esq.; St. Leonard's Lodge, of R. H. Gordon, Esq.; and Coolhurst, of the Dowager Marchioness of Northampton: the last was rebuilt in 1831, from designs by P. F. Robinson, in excellent taste, and in what is usually called the Tudor style of architecture, as used in the domestic edifices of this kingdom during the 15th and 16th centuries; a style peculiarly worthy of attention.

RUSPER, on the borders of Surrey, 5 miles N. from Horsham, contains 69 houses, and 487 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 9*l.* 10*s.* 10*d.* A priory, formerly here, and valued at 39*l.* 13*s.* 7*d.* per annum, was granted after the Dissolution in 1534 to Robert Southwell.

WARNHAM, 3 miles N. from Horsham, contains 148 houses, and 914 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 10*l.* 1*s.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury.

STEYNING HUNDRED.

BRAMBER, one mile S.E. from Steyning, contains 20 houses, and 98 inhabitants. It is governed by a constable, annually chosen by a jury at the court-leet of the lord of the manor, the Duke of Norfolk, and returns two members to Parliament, a privilege enjoyed ever since the reign of Edward I. The right of election is vested in the inhabitants of houses built on ancient foundations, and paying scot and lot. The constable is the returning officer. The present members are John Irving, Esq., and Dugdale Stratford Dugdale, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a rectory, value 10*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of Magdalen College Oxford. Bramber Castle was held in the reign of Henry III. by John De Braose, who was a tenant in chief of the Crown. His grandson William was summoned to Parliament as Lord Braose of Gower in 1296. This lord is characterized by the historian Walsingham as a person of large patrimony, but a great spendthrift.

BUTTOLPHS, or Botolphs, 2 miles S.E. from Steyning, contains 10 houses, and 62 inhabitants. It is a rectory.

COOMBS, or Combes on the Mount, 3 miles N.W. from Shoreham, contains 6 houses, and 70 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 10*l.* 0*s.* 2*d.*, in the patronage of Sir J. Shelley, Bart.

STEYNING, 22 miles E. from Chichester, and 50 miles from London, contains 232 houses, and 1324 inhabitants. It has an alternate weekly market on Wednesday, and on the second Wednesday in every month for cattle. The fairs are held on 9th June, 19th September, and 10th October, for cattle, &c. The town is governed by a constable, chosen at the court-leet of the manor, and returns two members to Parliament, a privilege conferred in the reign of Edward II. The right of election is vested in the inhabitants being householders in the borough paying scot and lot, and not receiving alms. The present members are George Richard Phillips, Esq., and Edward Blount, Esq. The petty sessions are held here. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a vicarage, value 15*l.*: it is a large edifice, and presents some genuine Anglo-Norman architecture, with a great variety of excellent and very elaborate details. Steyning was a place of some note in the Anglo-Saxon period of history; St. Cudman, or Cuthman, and King Ethelwolf, father of Alfred, were buried here. King Edward the Confessor granted lands here to the abbey of the Holy Trinity at Fécamp, which grant was confirmed by William the Conqueror. An alien priory was shortly afterwards established here, which upon its Dissolution was granted to Sion monastery. The vicarage-house was part of the ancient priory.

WASHINGTON, 3 miles W. from Steyning, contains 124 houses, and 704 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 10*s.*, in the patronage of Magdalen College Oxford.

WISTON, 2 miles N.W. from Steyning, contains 32 houses, and 293 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 12*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. Wiston Park is the seat of C. Goring, Esq. The mansion here was erected in the reign of Elizabeth, at which time the estate belonged to the Shirleys, a family of considerable eminence. Ralph Shirley, constable of Peak Castle in Derbyshire, died in 1466, leaving by his wife Elizabeth, daughter of Sir John Blount, Sir Ralph Shirley of Wiston. Sir Anthony Shirley, a celebrated traveller, was born here in 1565: he and his two brothers, Sir Thomas and Sir Robert, rendered themselves so famous by their travels and gallant exploits, that they were made the subject of a comedy, called "The Travels of the Three Brothers Shirleys," by John Day, 4to, 1607. From this family the estate went to the Faggs, and descended to the Goring family by intermarriage.

TARRING HUNDRED.

WEST TARRING, or Terring, 1½ mile N.W. from Worthing, contains 120 houses, and 650 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. John Selden, one of the most learned men of the seventeenth century, was born at the Lacies, in Salvington, a hamlet of this parish, 16th December 1584. On the lintel of the door of the house in which he was born is this inscription:—

GRATVS · HONESTE · MIHI · NON · CLAVDAR · INITO · SEDEQ ·

which has been thus paraphrased by the late Mr. Hamper,— Thou 'rt welcome, honest friend, walk in, make free;

Thief, get thee gone; my doors are closed to thee.

TIPNOAK HUNDRED.

ALBOURN, 6 miles N.E. from Steyning, contains 44 houses, and 360 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, is a rectory, value 7*l.* 14*s.* 2*d.*, in the patronage of Charles Goring, Esq. of Wiston.

HENFIELD, 4 miles N.E. from Steyning, contains 243 houses, and 1404 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a vicarage, value 16*l.* 10*s.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Chichester.

WOODMANCOTE, 5 miles N.E. from Steyning, contains 37 houses, and 294 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 13*l.* 1*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

WEST GRINSTEAD HUNDRED.

ASHINGTON, 11 miles S.E. from Petworth, and 4½ miles N.W. from Steyning, contains 41 houses, and 229 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a rectory, value 8*l.* 5*s.* Buncton is a chapelry of this parish.

ASHURST, 3 miles N. from Steyning, contains 56 houses, and 394 inhabitants. It is a rectory, in the patronage of the Earl of Thanet.

SHIPLEY, 7 miles S.W. from Horsham, contains 148 houses, and 1159 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a curacy.

WEST GRINSTEAD, 7 miles S. from Horsham, contains 143 houses, and 1229 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. George, is a rectory, value 25*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.* West Grinstead Park is the seat of W. Burrell, Esq.; and Knap Castle, of Sir Charles Merrick Burrell, Bart.

WINDHAM AND EWHURST HUNDRED.

COWFOLD, 7 miles S.E. from Horsham, contains 110 houses, and 822 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 10*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Chichester.

SHERMANBURY, on the river Adur, 6½ miles N.E. from Steyning, contains 42 houses, and 320 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Giles, is a rectory, value 4*l.* 19*s.* 4*d.*

3. Rape of Chichester

Is bounded on the north and west by Hampshire; on the east by Arundel rape; and on the south by the English Channel. It is subdivided into seven hundreds.

ALDWICK HUNDRED.

BERSTED, 5 miles S.E. from Chichester, contains 303 houses, and 1851 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 18*s.* 9*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. North Bersted is a hamlet of this parish.

EAST LAVANT, 2½ miles N. from Chichester, contains 65 houses, and 364 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 20*l.* 18*s.* 1*d.* Goodwood is the seat of the Duke of Richmond. The park is spacious, and commands an extensive prospect: it has been enlarged by the addition of Hálnaker Park, and the whole is enclosed within a stone wall.

PAGHAM, on the sea-coast, at the mouth of a creek, 5 miles S. from Chichester, contains 193 houses, and 1009 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Thomas à Becket, is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 18*s.* 9*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Chichester. Here was anciently a manorial residence of the Archbishops of Canterbury; it was granted to that see by King Cedwall A.D. 680. Archbishop Anselm was consecrated in the palace here in 1108, and Archbishop Becket was frequently established at this seat with a large retinue. The Archbishops afterwards removed to Slindon, and the manor was alienated by Archbishop Cranmer in the reign of Henry VIII. Aldwick and South Mundham are hamlets of this parish.

SLINDON, in a detached portion of this hundred, 3 miles W. from Arundel, contains 70 houses, and 471 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 14*l.* 13*s.* 1*d.* Slindon House, the seat of the Earl of Newburgh, stands on an eminence, in a woody park, commanding a very fine view of the sea towards the south, and of Chichester and its cathedral towards the east, including many other interesting objects. Slindon was formerly one of the residences of the Archbishops of Canterbury. Cardinal Archbishop Langton died here in 1228, and Archbishop Winchelsea held an ordination in the chapel here in 1298. Archbishops Courtenay and Arundel also resided at Slindon. The present mansion was erected in the reign of Elizabeth, about which period it came into the possession of the family of Kempe. Barbara, daughter and heiress of Anthony Kempe, married James Bartholomew Radclyffe Earl of Newburgh, who died in 1786, and is buried in the chancel of the church. Anthony James, the fourth Earl of Newburgh, of the Radcliffe family, who died in 1814, was the last heir male; the title and estates then devolved to Francis Eyre, now fifth Earl of Newburgh. In the library of Slindon House are several family portraits of the Kempes; that of Lord Derwentwater, beheaded in 1716; of King Charles II., in his robes; and of His Majesty's daughter Lady Mary Tudor.

TANGMERE, 3 miles N.E. from Chichester, contains 28 houses, and 174 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a rectory, value 13*l.* 5*s.*, in the patronage of the Duke of Richmond.

BOSHAM HUNDRED.

BOSHAM, or Boseham, on a creek, 3 miles W. from Chichester, contains 208 houses, and 1049 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 11*s.* 3*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Chichester. A monastery, with a collegiate chapel, founded here in the Anglo-Saxon period, was granted by Henry I. to William Warelwast Bishop of Exeter, who is said to have built the church, and to his successors in that see. A collegiate chapel remained here till the general Dissolution of monasteries; the site of it was granted by Queen Elizabeth to the Dean and Chapter of Chichester in 1564, and the church made parochial.

CHIDHAM, on a creek or arm of the sea, 5 miles W. from Chichester, contains 38 houses, and 293 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 10*l.* 19*s.* 2*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

FUNTINGTON, or Foundington, 4 miles N.W. from Chichester, contains 110 houses, and 847 inhabitants. It is a curacy.

WEST STOKE, 3 miles N.W. from Chichester, contains 16 houses, and 92 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 9*l.* 11*s.*, in the patronage of the Crown. Stoke Park is the seat of C. S. Dickens, Esq.; near it is Oakwood, the seat of Sir George Barlow, Bart.

THORNEY, on an island, 8 miles S.W. from Chichester, and about 2½ miles S. from Emsworth, in Hampshire, contains 12 houses, and 114 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 10*l.* 8*s.* 4*d.* The island of Thorney is situated between two arms of the sea, on the south-western shore, and is remarkable for a rich and fertile soil, producing abundance of fine wheat. The prospect on the north side of the island is extensive: it is bounded by Portsdown Hill on the west. Chichester cathedral is upon the east. At low water there is a causeway from Emsworth into the island. Pilsey island is on the south-east, but is very small.

BOX AND STOCKBRIDGE HUNDRED.

ALDINGBOURN, 4 miles E. from Chichester, contains 110 houses, and 855 inhabitants, including the hamlets of Lidsey and Westergate. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 10*l.* 5*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean of Chichester. The manor-house of Aldingbourn, to which was attached a large park, was a summer residence of the Bishops of Chichester. Bishop Stratford, who was Lord Chancellor of England in the reign of Edward III., enlarged the mansion, and died here in 1361. Bishop Sherbourn had nearly completed a tower here at his death in 1536, and bequeathed a sum for that purpose to his successor in the see, Bishop Sampson. Bishop Bickley resided at this seat, and died here in 1596. In the reign of Charles I. Bishop Montague made considerable repairs, but the whole was demolished by Waller's soldiers in 1642. Aldingbourn House is the seat of H. Howard, Esq.; and Westergate Cottage, of the Rev. J. Tripp.

APPLEDRAM, on Fishbourn Creek, 2 miles S.W. from Chichester, contains 17 houses, and 133 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 14*l.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Chichester. The manor-house is a curious and ancient edifice.

BOXGROVE, 3 miles N.E. from Chichester, contains 152 houses, and 868 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary and St. Blase, is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 5*s.* 5*d.*, in the patronage of the Duke of Richmond. A Benedictine priory was founded here by Robert de la Haye, lord of the honour of Hálnaker, in the reign of Henry I., and granted to the abbey de l'Essay, in Normandy. It was made denizen in the time of Edward III.: it was valued at 185*l.* 19*s.* 8*d.*, and after the Dissolution the site was granted to Henry Earl of Arundel in 1560.

Hálnaker House, of which there are still some remains, is one of the most curious specimens of ancient domestic architecture in the kingdom: it was built by Thomas Lord de la Warr, in 1531, with a gate-house on the south front, and buildings surrounding a quadrangular court. The house stands on a gentle decline of the downs, commanding a view of the sea, with Highdown Hill on the east, and the Isle of Wight on the west. The park has been added to that of Goodwood. King Henry VIII. obliged Lord de la Warr to exchange this estate for lands belonging to the dissolved convent of Wherwell, in Hampshire; and the manor remained in the hands of the Crown till Queen Elizabeth granted it to Henry Earl of Arundel, for his life, and afterwards to Lord and Lady Lumley and their heirs. In 1581 it was alienated by Lady Lumley to the Morleys. In 1752 it was bequeathed by Lady Derby, the daughter and heiress of Sir William Morley, to Sir Thomas Acklam, of whom it was purchased by the Duke of Richmond.

THE CITY OF CHICHESTER, 60 miles from London, contains 1245 houses, and 7362 inhabitants. It is situated almost at the western extremity of the county, in a pleasant valley, on the river Lavant, which nearly encompasses the city. On the north it is sheltered by part of a range of hills extending from the Arun into Hampshire. The immediate site, originally walled round, is a gentle elevation, with the ancient cross nearly in the centre, whence proceed the four principal streets at right angles. The weekly markets are on Wednesday and Saturday, which are plentifully supplied with all provisions, especially fish of various kinds: the Saturday's market has always been noted for corn; and every Wednesday fortnight here is the largest market for black cattle, sheep, &c., of any in this or the neighbouring counties. There are annual fairs on St. George's day, Whit Monday, St. James's day, Michaelmas day, and Sloe fair, which is ten clear days after it. The corporation of Chichester consists of a mayor, recorder, high-steward, common councilmen without limitation, and four justices of the peace, who are chosen out of the aldermen. The mayor is elected annually from amongst the aldermen and common council, in which, however, considerable deference is paid to the recommendation of the high steward, the Duke of Richmond. The mayor holds a court of requests for the recovery of debts, and in his public capacity is attended by four serjeants-at-mace, a crier, &c. The arms of the city are, Argent, guttée de poir, on a chief indented gules, a lion passant guardant or. The common seal represents a castle triple towered, the portcullis down; on the front of the castle a shield charged with the city arms as above described. Chichester sends two members to Parliament, elected by the inhabitants who pay church and poor rates, besides several honorary freemen of the borough. The present members are Lord Arthur Lennox, and John Abel Smith, Esq. There are within the walls of the city six parishes: viz. St. Peter the Great, or the subdeanery, a vicarage, value 6*l.* 8*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean; St. Peter the Less, a rectory, value 1*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown; St. Olave's, the Dean's peculiar, value 4*l.* 18*s.* 9*d.*; St. Martin's, the Dean's peculiar, value 1*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*; St. Andrew's, a rectory, value 2*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean; and All Saints', otherwise The Pallant, value 5*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. There is also St. Mary's, a rectory, value 2*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter. Without East-gate is St. Pancras, a rectory, value 8*l.* 10*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean; and without West-gate is St. Bartholomew's, a rectory, the church of which, demolished in 1642, was rebuilt in 1830, from designs by Draper, an architect of this city.

The see of Chichester was originally founded at Selsey. Wilfrid, the third Archbishop of York, having been obliged to fly his country by Egfrid King of Northumberland, came hither, when Edilwach King of the South Saxons gave him the Isle of Selsey, which Cedwal afterwards erected into a bishopric. By virtue of a constitution made at the synod of London in 1075, Bishop Stigand, twenty-third Bishop of Selsey, translated the see to Chichester, which city was originally built by Cissa King of the South Saxons, and called Cissan Cester. The cathedral church, anciently dedicated to St. Peter, was rebuilt by Bishop Ralph, and dedicated to the Holy Trinity. This diocese contains the county of Sussex, excepting twenty-two parishes, peculiars of the Archbishop of Canterbury: it has two Archdeaconries, Chichester and Lewes. The bishopric is valued in the King's books at 677*l.* 1*s.* 3*d.*, but computed to be worth 2600*l.* per annum. The arms of the Bishop are Azure, a Presbyter John, hooded and seated on a throne; in the sinister hand a book open, the dexter hand extended, all or; in his mouth a sword fessways, the point to the sinister argent. This cathedral, from the earliest records, has a foundation for a dean and canons, the establishment of which, and its statutes, were confirmed by King Henry VIII. The component members of the choir, as in other cathedrals endowed by Anglo-Saxon monarchs, are a dean, precentor, chancellor, and treasurer, to whom alone the title of dignitary is correctly applicable; thirty canons or prebendaries, four of whom, including the dean, are now styled canons residentiary, and form the chapter; the minor canons or vicarial clergy, originally officiating as substitutes for the prebendaries, with whom they corresponded in number; and the novices, or children educated for the choral service, who have varied in number according to the patronage of the Chapter.

The Anglo-Norman style of the cathedral, built by Bishop Ralph in 1091, has been in several instances accommodated to the style of the thirteenth century. The nave is part of the original structure, to which King Henry I. is said to have contributed. The transepts and tower are supposed to have been the work of Bishop Poore, afterwards Bishop of Salisbury; and the very fine spire, 270 feet high, is said to have been added to the central tower by Bishop Berksted, in 1270: there is a great resemblance between this spire and that of Salisbury, as well as a coincidence of date. The choir was the work of Bishop Riman, in 1217, as was also the Lady chapel, the cloisters, and the bell tower. A south aisle was added by Bishop Langton in 1332. In the south transept are very curious historical paintings, said to be the work of Theodore Bernardi, in the time of Bishop Sherbourn: the subjects are allusive to the foundation of the cathedral, and consist of the interview between St. Wilfrid and Cedwal King of Sussex; the interview between Henry VIII. and Bishop Sherbourn; the portraits of all the kings of England from the time of William the Conqueror; and the portraits of all the Bishops of Chichester from St. Wilfrid. The north transept is the parochial church of St. Peter. There are ancient monuments attributed to Bishop Ralph, Bishop Seffrid, and Bishop Hillary; also that of Bishop de la Wich, or St. Richard, who died in 1253; Bishop Arundel, who died in 1478, was also buried in the cathedral; and Bishop Story, who died in 1502, was buried behind the high altar. The poet Collins, a native of this city, who died in 1756, has a monument to his memory in the north aisle. The chapter-house was built by Bishop Sherbourn. The houses which formerly concealed the view of the cathedral from the street, with the gate-houses of the close, were removed in 1830, and the cathedral yard is now enclosed with iron palisades. The Bishop's Palace is supposed to have been erected on the site of a Roman building, from the circumstance of a tessellated pavement having been discovered on its site: many of the ancient parts of this palace are still in perfect repair. The chapel is of the time of Henry III. The hall was probably rebuilt by Bishop Sherbourn, when it was divided into an upper and lower apartment. In the great dining-room is a fine specimen of a timber framed ceiling, painted in compartments with the arms of nobility and gentry. The arms of Bishop Sherbourn are surmounted by the red hat, as assumed by prelates under the degree of a cardinal. Where this ceiling has been repainted the blazoning of the arms is not to be depended upon. The large kitchen is of the ancient conventual form and construction, having a double arched door, and the oak beams of the roof supported by trusses at the four angles. The palace was repaired in the year 1727, and again in 1800.

The cross in the centre of the city was erected by Bishop Story in 1495; he left an estate at Amberley for the purpose of keeping it in repair, which has been effected: it was restored in the reign of Charles II. and George II.

Four Barrow Hill commands a view eastward to Beachey Head; southward are the sea and the Isles of Hayling, Thorney, and the Isle of Wight; northward are the Hampshire hills; the Barrows on its summit are each of them surrounded by a trench.

DONNINGTON, 2 miles S. from Chichester, contains 25 houses, and 267 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 10*s.* 5*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Chichester.

EARTHAM, 6 miles N.E. from Chichester, contains 19 houses, and 105 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 5*s.* 2*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Chichester. Eartham Place, the seat of Mrs. Huskisson, was formerly the residence of William Hayley the poet. The grounds, which are extensive, afford a singular diversity of pleasing objects. Several points command very beautiful and enlarged prospects, where woods sweep over the acclivities of the downs; and in an opposite direction a rich tract of country is bounded by the sea and the Isle of Wight.

FISHBOURN, on a creek, 2 miles W. from Chichester, contains 64 houses, and 288 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 5*l.* 10*s.*, in the patronage of the Crown. Old Fishbourn, half-a-mile westward, is a hamlet of this parish.

HUNSTON, 2½ miles S. from Chichester, contains 32 houses, and 166 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Leodegar, is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 4*s.* 7*d.*

MERSTON, 3 miles S.E. from Chichester, contains 18 houses, and 107 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 7*l.* 4*s.* 7*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

NORTH MUNDHAM, 2 miles S.E. from Chichester, contains 51 houses, and 422 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 0*s.* 10*d.* Laythorne House, in this parish, was anciently a seat of the Bishops of Chichester. South Mundham, a mile distant, is a hamlet of Pagham parish.

OVING, 3 miles E. from Chichester, contains 144 houses, and 637 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 10*l.* 11*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the Precentor of Chichester.

RUMBALD'S WYKE, one mile S.E. from Chichester, contains 56 houses, and 303 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Rumbald, is a vicarage, value 4*l.*, in the patronage of the Dean of Chichester.

UPWALTHAM, 6 miles S.W. from Petworth, contains 10 houses, and 99 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 6*l.* 2*s.* 11*d.* The east end of the church is semicircular in plan: it stands in a valley amidst extensive downs, which command a beautiful and distant prospect.

WEST HAMPNET, 2 miles N.E. from Chichester, contains 68 houses, and 401 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 4*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

DUMPFORD HUNDRED.

CHITHURST, 3½ miles N.W. from Midhurst, contains 23 houses, and 146 inhabitants. It is a curacy.

DIDLING, 4 miles S.W. from Midhurst, contains 13 houses, and 81 inhabitants. It is a rectory, united with Trayford, the adjoining parish.

ELSTED, 5 miles S.W. from Midhurst, contains 27 houses, and 190 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 11*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*

HARTING, on the borders of Hampshire, 4 miles S.E. from Petersfield, and 7 miles S.W. from Midhurst, contains 190 houses, and 1072 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 26*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of Sir Harry Fetherstonhaugh, Bart. Harting was anciently the seat of the baronial family of Hoesse. Henry Hoesse, the founder of Duford Abbey, built here an hospital, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, in the reign of Henry II.: his descendant Henry Hoesse, in 1294, the 23rd year of Edward the First's reign, had summons to Parliament amongst the barons of the realm. Up Park, southward of the village, is now the seat of Sir Harry Fetherstonhaugh, Bart. The estate came to the Fords, when Katherine daughter of Sir Edward Ford of Harting married Ralph Lord Grey of Werk; and their son Ford Lord Grey, created Earl of Tankerville in 1695, rebuilt the mansion, which with the park and the manors of South and East Harting were purchased in 1746 by the direct ancestor of the present possessor. The park extends in length, from north to south, nearly two miles; it abounds in fine oaks. Fair Oak Lodge is the seat of the Hon. Sir Charles Paget.

ROGATE, on the borders of Hampshire, 4½ miles E. from Petersfield, and 6 miles W. from Midhurst, contains 106 houses, and 724 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, is a vicarage, value 10*l.* 5*s.*, in the patronage of the Crown. Rogate Lodge is the seat of W. A. Buckle, Esq. At Duford, Henry Hoesse of Harting founded a Premonstratensian abbey about 1169; it was dedicated to the Blessed Virgin Mary and St. John the Baptist, and was valued at 108*l.* 13*s.* 9*d.* per annum. In 1537 it was granted to Sir William Fitz-William.

TURWICK, on the river Rother, 5 miles W. from Midhurst, contains 11 houses, and 112 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 5*l.* 0*s.* 5*d.*

TRAYFORD, or Treyford, on a branch of the Rother, 5 miles S.W. from Midhurst, contains 19 houses, and 137 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 7*l.* 12*s.* 1*d.*

TROTTON, on the Rother, 3 miles W. from Midhurst, contains 56 houses, and 390 inhabitants, including the chapelry of Milland, or Turleigh, on the borders of Hampshire. The church, dedicated to St. George, is a rectory, value 9*l.*; it contains two monuments of the ancient baronial family of Camois.

EASEBOURN HUNDRED.

BEPTON, 3 miles S.W. from Midhurst, contains 26 houses, and 140 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 8*l.*

COCKING, 2 miles S. from Midhurst, contains 51 houses, and 340 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 13*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Chichester.

EASEBOURN, one mile N. from Midhurst, contains 143 houses, and 777 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* A Benedictine priory was founded here in the latter end of the reign of Henry III. by Sir John Bohun of Midhurst: its possessions were valued at the Dissolution at 47*l.* 3*s.* per annum. The site was granted in 1536 to Sir William Fitz-William. Lodsworth is a chapelry of this parish.

FARNHURST, on the borders of Surrey, 3 miles S. from Haslemere, and 4 miles N. from Midhurst, contains 86 houses, and 593 inhabitants. It is a curacy.

GRAFFHAM, 5 miles S.W. from Petworth, contains 52 houses, and 343 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Giles, is a rectory, value 9*l.* 10*s.* 5*d.*

HEYSHOT, 3 miles S.E. from Midhurst, contains 56 houses, and 309 inhabitants. It is a rectory, united with Stedham.

IPING, 3 miles N.W. from Midhurst, contains 45 houses, and 305 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 7*l.*

LINCH, on the borders of Surrey and Hampshire, 3 miles S.W. from Haslemere, and 5 miles N. from Midhurst, contains 14 houses, and 77 inhabitants. Shelbred or Shulbred priory, of the order of St. Austin, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, was founded here by Sir Ralph Arden, to which the family of Percy were benefactors. At the Suppression it was valued at 79*l.* 15*s.* 6*d.* In 1538 the site was granted to Sir William Fitz-William, and in 1545 to Sir Anthony Brown; the remains form part of a farm residence. It stands in a fertile valley, surrounded by woody heights.

LINCHMERE, on the borders of Hampshire, 2½ miles S.W. from Haslemere, contains 42 houses, and 282 inhabitants. It is a curacy.

MIDHURST, on the Rother, 11 miles N.W. from Chichester, and 50 miles from London, contains 234 houses, and 1335 inhabitants. It is an ancient borough by prescription, and is governed by a bailiff, who is chosen annually at the court-leet of the lord of the manor. This town sends two members to Parliament; a privilege conferred in the reign of Edward II.: the right of election is vested in 120 burghage holds; the bailiff is the returning officer. The present members are George Robert Smith, Esq., and Martin Tucker Smith, Esq. Here are a market on Thursday, and annual fairs on 5th April, 29th October, and Whit-Tuesday, for cattle, sheep, &c. The church, dedicated to St. Denis, is a curacy. In a chapel at the east end of the south aisle is the monument of Anthony Browne Viscount Montague, K.G., who died in 1592, and his two wives; and of the Earl of Southampton, K.G., ob. 1543. Cowdray Park, eastward of the town, is situated in a beautiful valley between wooded hills, and is of considerable extent. The noble mansion built by William Fitz-William Earl of Southampton, K.G., was destroyed by fire in 1793. Sir Joseph Ayloffe published a description of the very curious paintings at this seat, of which some were engraved for the Society of Antiquaries. The remains of this mansion are peculiarly interesting as a specimen of the magnificent architecture of the reign of Henry VIII. Sir Anthony Browne, who succeeded the Earl of Fitz-William in this estate, was master of the horse to that monarch, and his son Anthony was created Viscount Montague in 1554. Upon the death of George Samuel, the eighth Viscount, in 1793, in attempting to pass one of the falls of the Rhine, the estate descended to William Stephen Poyntz, Esq., of Midgham, in Berkshire.

SELHAM, 3 miles S.W. from Petworth, contains 13 houses, and 80 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a rectory, value 4*l.* 15*s.* 11*d.*, in the patronage of Brazenose College Oxford.

STEDHAM, 2 miles W. from Midhurst, contains 56 houses, and 453 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a rectory, value 17*l.* 18*s.* 6*d.*

WOOLBEDING, 2 miles N. from Midhurst, contains 41 houses, and 261 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 7*l.* 0*s.* 10*d.* Woolbeding House is the seat of Lord Robert Spencer. This estate was the residence of the family of Mill. Sir John Mill, Bart. married Margaret daughter and heiress of Thomas Grey of Woolbeding. After Lord Robert Spencer purchased the house it was modernized, when the terraces and pine avenues were destroyed. Here is a conservatory of singularly large dimensions for exotic plants; near it is the fountain that originally stood in the centre of the great court of Cowdray House: it is surmounted by a bronze figure of Neptune, said to be copied from the celebrated statue by Giovanni di Bologna.

MANHOOD, or Manhope HUNDRED.

BIRDHAM, 4 miles S.W. from Chichester, contains 69 houses, and 532 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 10*l.* 0*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Chichester.

EARNLEY, on the sea coast, 6½ miles S. from Chichester, contains 21 houses, and 148 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Almodington. It is a rectory, value 7*l.* 6*s.*

WEST ITCHENOR, on an arm of the sea, 5½ miles W. from Chichester, contains 34 houses, and 181 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a rectory, value 6*l.* 14*s.* 2*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

SELSEY, or Selescy, 7 miles S. from Chichester, contains 107 houses, and 766 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 11*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Chichester. This was the see of a Bishop, till removed to Chichester by Bishop Stigand in 1075. No traces of their residence remains. Selsey Bill is a promontory projecting far into the British Channel.

SIDLESHAM, 4 miles S. from Chichester, contains 195 houses, and 1029 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 10*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the Prebendary of Sidlesham.

EAST WITTERING, on the sea-coast, here called Braklesham Bay, 6 miles S. from Chichester, contains 40 houses, and 216 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 6*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Chichester.

WEST WITTERING, on the sea-coast, 2 miles westward from the above, contains 100 houses, and 504 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 10*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Prebendary of West Wittering. The view of the Isle of Wight and Spithead from the beach is very pleasing. Cakeham, or Cockham, in this parish, was an occasional residence of the Bishops of Chichester, from the 13th to the middle of the 16th century: it was a spacious mansion, with a hall, chapel, and other large apartments. Bishop Sherbourn, in the reign of Henry VIII., erected here an hexagonal tower, which is still standing, and commands a fine sea view.

WESTBOURN AND SINGLETON HUNDRED.

BINDERTON, 4 miles N.W. from Chichester, contains 13 houses, and 67 inhabitants. Binderton House was rebuilt about 1680 by Thomas Smyth, Esq., who removed the chapel which adjoined to the old house, and erected another without the consent of the ordinary. Bishop Lake refused to consecrate it, and it is now in decay. The house has been modernized since the period of its erection.

COMPTON, on the borders of Hampshire, 9 miles S.W. from Midhurst, contains 50 houses, and 233 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 13*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*

EAST DEAN, 6 miles S. from Midhurst, contains 65 houses, and 397 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 4*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Chichester.

WEST DEAN, 2 miles distant from the above, contains 107 houses, and 622 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 14*l.* 15*s.* 5*d.* This parish is within the liberty of the Duchy of Lancaster. West Dean Park is the seat of Lord Selsey: it occupies the western declivity of a hill, watered by a small stream that winds at its base, and abounds with fine timber. The house, rebuilt by Lord Selsey about 1810, commands a picturesque view over the vale, and of the opposite hills, in which the mixture of corn and woodland are pleasingly blended. The estate came into possession of this family by the marriage of Bulstrode Peachey, Esq., with the relict of William Woodward Knight, Esq. of West Dean: he died in 1736, and left it to Sir John Peachey, Bart., from whom it descended to Sir James Peachey, the fourth baronet, who was created Lord Selsey 13th August 1794.

EAST MARDEN, 7 miles S.W. from Midhurst, contains 11 houses, and 85 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 4*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Prebendary of East Marden.

NORTH MARDEN, 6 miles S.W. from Midhurst, contains 3 houses, and 20 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 6*l.* 17*s.* 8*d.*

MID LAVANT, 3 miles N. from Chichester, contains 50 houses, and 243 inhabitants. It is a curacy. Near the village is St. Roche's, or Rooks hill, on the top of which is a circular encampment, said to be Danish.

RACTON, on the borders of Hampshire, 6 miles N.W. from Chichester, contains 17 houses, and 100 inhabitants. It is a rectory, united with Lordington, value 5*l.* 19*s.* 2*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Chichester. Racton Place, the ancient seat of the Gounters, is a very singular building, but now a farm-house. John Gounter of Racton died in 1557, and the estate at length descended to Sir Charles Gounter, who assumed the name of Nichol: he was K.B., and died in 1733. By intermarriage, Racton afterwards became the property of the Earl of Dartmouth. Northward from the village is Standstead House, the seat of the Rev. Lewis Way. The park contains 650 acres, besides the forest. The mansion commands an extensive sea prospect, including a view of Portsmouth, the Isle of Wight, and the shipping at Spithead.

SINGLETON, 5½ miles S. from Midhurst, contains 45 houses, and 285 inhabitants. It is a rectory, united with East Dean, value 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Chichester. Charlton is a tithing of this parish.

STOUGHTON, 6 miles N.W. from Chichester, contains 84 houses, and 519 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 10*s.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Chichester.

UP MARDEN, 8 miles S.W. from Midhurst, contains 42 houses, and 306 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a curacy.

WESTBOURN, on the borders of Hampshire, 1½ mile N. from Emsworth, and 7 miles W. from Chichester, contains 333 houses, and 1852 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a vicarage, value 10*l.* 10*s.* 5*d.*

4. Rape of Hastings

Is bounded on the north-east by the county of Kent; on the south-east by the English Channel; and on the west by the rape of Pevensey. It is subdivided into thirteen hundreds.

BALDSLOW HUNDRED.

CROWHURST, 2 miles S. from Battle, contains 43 houses, and 340 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. George, is a rectory, value 10*l.* Crowhurst Park is the seat of Henry Cresset Pelham, Esq.

HOLLINGTON, 3 miles N.W. from Hastings, contains 40 houses, and 272 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Leonard, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 0*s.* 2*d.*

HASTINGS, one of the Cinque Ports, 64 miles from London, contains 945 houses, and 5085 inhabitants. Here are markets on Wednesday and Saturday, and annual fairs on Whit Tuesday, 26th June, and 23rd November. The corporation consists of a mayor, recorder, and twelve jurats. It is exempted from toll, and has the power to hold courts of judicature in capital cases. The arms of Hastings are Per pale gules and azure on the dexter, three demi-lions passant guardant, conjoined to as many demi-hulks of ships, on the sinister, argent. The corporation seal is very ancient, and represents a ship bearing two banners; on one the arms of the town, on the other the arms of England. On the reverse of the seal is the figure of St. Michael slaying the dragon. Hastings sends two barons to Parliament, a privilege conferred upon the port in the reign of Edward III. The right of election is vested in the mayor, jurats, and freemen resident, and not receiving alms. The mayor is the returning officer. The present members are Frederick North, Esq., and John Ashley Warre, Esq. The town contains the following parishes: All Saints, a rectory, value 19*l.* 12*s.* 9*d.*, in the patronage of Lord Holland; St. Clement's, a rectory, value 23*l.* 6*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of Lord Holland; St. Mary Bulverhith; St. Mary, in the Castle; St. Mary Magdalen; and the priory, which last is an extra-parochial district: it was founded by Sir Walter Bricet about the reign of Richard I., and was dedicated to the Holy Trinity.

Hastings, the chief town of the Cinque Ports, is connected with several interesting and important events, particularly with the decisive battle which subjected the kingdom to William Duke of Normandy, thence called The Conqueror. Although universally denominated the Battle of Hastings, the victory was actually obtained on a spot seven miles westward of the town, consecrated afterwards by the foundation and endowment of Battle Abbey. This town was in ancient times the general passage to Normandy; and Matthew de Hastings held a manor by the service of finding an oar whenever the King passed over sea from this port. King William Rufus assembled almost the whole of the nobles and Bishops of England at Hastings Castle, where he received their homage previously to his invasion of Normandy in 1090. The ruins of this once strong and extensive castle, situated on a lofty rock, quite inaccessible on the side towards the sea, present a majestic and awful appearance. The principal gate-house on the north side is now entirely demolished, but there are still remains of a sally port on the west. The walls of the castle, nowhere entire, are composed of flint and stone, and are in some parts eight feet thick. The modern improvements and increase of buildings made at Hastings have been principally on the western side of the town, where the Priory-bridge leads to York-buildings and Castle-street, immediately under the cliffs of the castle. Beyond is Pelham-crescent and Wellington-place on the western side of the Castle-hill. White Rock-place, near the beautiful white rocks, and many other buildings at this extremity of the town, have been erected within these very few years. Pelham-crescent, named after the Earl of Chichester, upon whose estate it is built, was erected in 1824 from designs by Kay. In the centre is a chapel, with an Ionic portico or colonnade. The Castle-hill, an immense chalk cliff, towers above the buildings, and in the distance beyond the town and harbour of Hastings is the high land of Fairlight and Goldbury point, stretching into the sea towards the east. St. Leonard's adjoins the parishes of Hollington, Bexhill, Battle, and St. Clement, in Hastings.

ORE, 2 miles N.W. from Hastings, contains 107 houses, and 546 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Helen, is a rectory, value 3*l.* 0*s.* 2*d.* Ore Place is the seat of Sir Launcelot Shadwell, Vice Chancellor.

WESTFIELD, 4½ miles E. from Battle, contains 117 houses, and 897 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a vicarage, value 11*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Chichester.

BATTLE HUNDRED.

BATTLE, 56 miles from London, contains 460 houses, and 2852 inhabitants. This town derives its names from the memorable combat in 1066 between William Duke of Normandy and Harold King of England, and is built upon the actual spot where the battle was fought. The trade here consists chiefly in the manufacture of gunpowder. The market is on Thursday, and there are fairs annually on Whit Monday and 22nd November, both of which are much frequented. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 24*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of Sir Godfrey V. Webster, Bart. In the chancel is the monument of Sir Anthony Browne, K.G., master of the horse to King Henry VIII., who died in 1548, and his lady Alice daughter of Sir John Gage, K.G.

A Benedictine abbey, dedicated to St. Martin, was founded here by William the Conqueror, in commemoration of his success, who endowed it with exemptions and privileges of a very extraordinary nature, and is also said to have offered up his sword and royal robe which he wore on the day of his coronation, at the altar. In this convent also was formerly preserved the celebrated "Battle Abbey Roll," a list of those eminent persons who accompanied the conqueror in the expedition into England, with other lords and men of account. The historians Hollinshed and Stowe have both printed copies from it, but so different from each other, that the former consists of nearly two hundred names more than the last. Camden says, "Whosoever considereth this roll well, shall find it always to be forged, and those names to be inserted which the time in every age favored, and were never mentioned in the notable record of Domesday." Under all circumstances attending this scroll, it must be confessed the degree of credit due to its authenticity is very suspicious.

Previously to the Dissolution, the estates of Battle Abbey were valued at 987*l.* 0*s.* 10*d.* At the surrender, the state sword of the abbey, fabricated for Abbot Lodelow, in the reign of Henry VI., was delivered to Sir John Gage, K.G., one of the commissioners; and it remained in the possession of his family at Firle Place until the present Viscount Gage added it to the collection of armour belonging to Sir Samuel Rush Meyrick at Goodrich Court in Herefordshire. The site of the abbey was granted in 1538 to Sir Anthony Browne. Some of the remains of the ancient monastery are preserved in the mansion of Sir Godfrey Webster, Bart. which is situated on a gentle rise, bounded by woody hills, having in front a valley winding towards the sea at Hastings. The gate-house, or entrance from the town, is ancient; also the great hall, with its curious open timber roof.

Beauport, 2½ miles south-eastward from the town, is the seat of Mrs. Lambert; it stands on an eminence, commanding a fine sea view.

WHATLINGTON, 2 miles N. from Battle, contains 38 houses, and 285 inhabitants: it is a rectory, value 7*l.* 4*s.* 6*d.*

BEXHILL HUNDRED.

BEXHILL, 5 miles S. from Battle, and the same distance W. from Hastings, contains 295 houses, and 1907 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a vicarage, value 24*l.* 10*s.* 2*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Chichester. Bexhill is an eminence that commands a very extensive view on every side. The manor is paramount to Barnhorn and Buckholt; and the hundred is a franchise, like Battle and Rotherbridge.

FOXEARLE HUNDRED.

ASHBURNHAM, 5 miles W. from Battle, contains 94 houses, and 768 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury. In the chancel are monuments of several members of the ancient family of Ashburnham. Ashburnham Place, the seat of the Earl of Ashburnham, stands in an extensive park, which without being much elevated commands a fine view of Pevensey Bay and Beachey Head: it is richly wooded, and well stocked with deer. The mansion, built from designs by Dance, contains several family pictures by Vandyk, Lely, and other celebrated masters; there are also portraits of the late Earl of Ashburnham, K.G., and his countess, by Hoppner. The late Earl printed in 1830 "A Narrative, by John Ashburnham, of his attendance upon King Charles the First, from Oxford to the Scotch army, and from Hampton Court to the Isle of Wight." The shirt of the King and his watch are still preserved in the church.

HURSTMONCEUX, 7 miles S.E. from Battle, contains 196 houses, and 1318 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 20*l.* Hurstmonceux Castle was built by Sir Roger Fiennes, treasurer of the household to King Henry VI. in 1423: it is of brick, with window and door cases, copings, and water-tables of stone. Over the arch of the principal entrance, within a compartment, is the alant or wolf dog sejant, holding the banner of Fiennes. Thomas Lennard Earl of Sussex lived much here, but a few years before his death sold it, and about 1777 all excepting the shell of the mansion was destroyed.

WARTLING, 3½ miles E. from Haylsam, contains 132 houses, and 990 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen, is a vicarage, value 16*l.* 0*s.* 2*d.*

GOLDSBUR HUNDRED.

BECKLEY, on the borders of Kent, 6 miles N.W. from Rye, contains 156 houses, and 1371 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 11*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*

EAST GULDEFORD, on the borders of Kent, 2 miles E. from Rye, contains 21 houses, and 124 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 8*l.* 4*s.* 7*d.*

IDEN, on the borders of Kent, 2½ miles N. from Rye, contains 94 houses, and 542 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 18*l.* 18*s.* 6*d.*

PEASMARSH, 3 miles N.W. from Rye, contains 175 houses, and 913 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 9*s.* 2*d.*, in the patronage of Sydney College Cambridge.

PLAYDEN, or Saltcote, on the Rother, one mile N. from Rye, contains 63 houses, and 317 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 12*l.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Chichester.

RYE, on the river Rother, 62 miles from London, contains 601 houses, and 3599 inhabitants. It is one of the Cinque Ports, and is governed by a mayor, and twelve jurats. The trade consists chiefly in hops (which are much cultivated in the neighbourhood), wool, timber and fish. The harbour is only accessible for small vessels, although hopes are entertained of deepening it. The markets are held on Wednesday and Saturday, and there are annual fairs on Whit Monday and 10th August. Rye sends two members to Parliament, a privilege conferred upon the town in the reign of Edward III.: the right of election is vested in the mayor, jurats, and freemen paying scot and lot; the mayor is the returning officer: the present members are Colonel De Lacy Evans, and Thomas Pemberton, Esq.

The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 42*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*: it is one of the largest parochial churches in the kingdom. In the reign of Edward III. Rye was inclosed with walls; some of the gate-houses are yet remaining. The north or land-gate is the most perfect. The tower also, founded by William de Ipres Earl of Kent, remains.

GOSTROW HUNDRED.

BREDE, 5 miles N.E. from Battle, contains 122 houses, and 902 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. George, is a rectory, value 12*l.* 10*s.* 5*d.* The lands here, although six miles distant from Kent, descend according to the custom of gavelkind used in that county. Brede Place is a very fine old mansion, of the period of Henry VIII., constructed with brick.

UDIMORE, 3 miles W. from Rye, contains 49 houses, and 428 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 5*s.* 2*d.*

GUESTLING HUNDRED.

FAIRLIGHT, or Fairleigh, 2½ miles N.E. from Hastings, contains 67 houses, and 477 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 9*s.* 2*d.*, in the patronage of the Earl of Romney. Fairlight Place is the seat of Dr. Robert Batty. From Fairlight Down, 599 feet above the level of the sea, is an extensive view, embracing the English Channel, from Beachey Head to the South Foreland, the hills of the French coast from Calais to Boulogne, with Napoleon's tower, &c. It is off Fairleigh Head, says Pennant, that the northern tide, flowing from the German Sea through the Straits of Dover meets with a great rippling of the tide from the vast Atlantic, which is sensibly felt between this place and Boulogne.

GUESTLING, 3 miles N.E. from Hastings, contains 120 houses, and 697 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is a rectory, value 12*l.* 0*s.* 7*d.*, in the patronage of Sir William Ashburnham, Bart.: it contains some monuments of the Ashburnham family, which has long been seated at Bromham Place, northward from the village. Sir Denny Ashburnham of Bromham was created baronet by King Charles II. 15th May 1661. His grandson the Right Rev. Sir William Ashburnham, Bart. D.D. became Bishop of Chichester in 1754: he died in 1797, and was buried in the church.

ICKLESHAM, 2 miles W. from Winchelsea, contains 60 houses, and 585 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a vicarage, value 13*l.* 1*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Chichester.

PETT, on the sea coast, 4 miles N.E. from Hastings, and about the same distance S.W. from Winchelsea, contains 33 houses, and 300 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary and St. Peter, is a rectory, value 4*l.* 15*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Chichester.

WINCHILSEA, one of the Cinque Ports, 2 miles S. from Rye, contains 153 houses, and 817 inhabitants. A market is held weekly on Saturday, but is not much frequented, and a fair on 14th May.

The town is governed by a mayor and twelve jurats, and the corporation seal is ancient and curious: it represents a ship charged with the arms of England, and inscribed "Sigillum Baronum Domini Regis Anglia de Winchilsea;" on the reverse, a monastery or church. Winchelsea sends two members to Parliament, a privilege conferred in the reign of Edward III.; and the right of election is vested in the mayor, jurats, and freemen. The mayor is the returning officer. The present members are John Williams, Esq. K.C., and Dr. S. Lushington. The church, dedicated to St. Thomas the Apostle, is a rectory, value 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Chichester: it contains several ancient monuments; one is supposed to commemorate a member of the Oxenbridge family of Brede; another very beautiful monument is that of Gervase Alard, admiral of the Cinque Ports in the reign of Edward I. A house of Black friars was founded here by King Edward II.; another of Grey friars by William de Buckingham, which after the Suppression was granted to William Clifford and Michael Wildbore: of the last there are considerable remains of the church. There are three of the ancient town gate-houses yet standing; the land-gate towards Rye, the strand-gate on the south side of the town, and new-gate towards Hastings.

HAWKESBOROUGH HUNDRED

BURWASH, or Burghersh, 4 miles W. from Robertsbridge, and 8 miles S. from Lamberhurst, contains 318 houses, and 1937 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, is a rectory, value 8*l.* 10*s.*, in the patronage of the Duke of Newcastle. The petty sessions are held here. Robert de Burghersh, in the reign of Edward I., was warden of the Cinque Ports, and governor of Dover Castle; and Bartholomew de Burghersh, his descendant, was created knight of the garter at the institution of the order.

HEATHFIELD, 8 miles E. from Uckfield, contains 278 houses, and 1613 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 10*l.*, in the patronage of the Prebendary of Heathfield, in the cathedral of Chichester. Heathfield Park is the seat of Sir Charles Blunt, Bart. General Sir George Augustus Eliott, for his gallant defence of Gibraltar, was elevated to the peerage by the title of Lord Heathfield Baron Gibraltar, 14th June 1787: he died in 1790, and is buried in the church. His successor erected in 1793 a tower upon one of the most elevated spots in the park, the view from which is very extensive and beautiful: it is also a striking object to the surrounding country, and is inscribed to the memory of Lord Heathfield, bearing the words "Calpe defensori," formed of the metal of the guns from the Spanish floating batteries taken at the memorable siege. The site of the tower happening to be upon part of the copyhold of the manor of Laughton, the Earl of Chichester, then Lord Pelham, enfranchised the ground in compliment to the undertaking.

WARBLETON, 9 miles S.E. from Uckfield, contains 168 houses, and 1167 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 13*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*

HENHURST HUNDRED.

ETCHINGHAM, on the river Rother, 7 miles S. from Lamberhurst, contains 79 houses, and 625 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 11*l*. A family of the same name, seated at Etchingham, were anciently stewards of the rape of Hastings. William de Etchingham had summons to Parliament amongst the barons of the realm in the reign of Edward II.

SALEHURST, on the borders of Kent, 8 miles S. from Lamberhurst, contains 274 houses, and 2121 inhabitants, including Robertsbridge. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 14*l*. Robertsbridge, or Rotherbridge, is so called, from a bridge over the Rother, which is here divided into three channels. Alfred de St. Martin founded here in 1176 a Cistercian abbey, dedicated to the Virgin Mary: it was endowed at the time of its suppression with 272*l*. 9*s*. 8*d*. per annum, and was granted in 1541 to Sir William Sidney. It afterwards belonged to the Earl of Leicester, who converted the remains of the conventual buildings into a farm-house. Hawkhurst is partly in this hundred, but chiefly in the county of Kent.

NETHERFIELD HUNDRED.

BRIGHTLING, 4 miles S.W. from Robertsbridge, contains 75 houses, and 641 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Thomas à Becket, is a rectory, value 11*l*., in the patronage of John Fuller, Esq. From Brightling Down, which is 646 feet above the level of the sea, is a most extensive and beautiful panoramic view. The cliffs at Boulogne are said to be clearly discernible. Rose Hill Park is the seat of John Fuller, Esq.: whose mansion is also built on a commanding situation.

DALLINGTON, 6 miles S.W. from Robertsbridge, contains 100 houses, and 548 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, is a vicarage, value 8*l*., in the patronage of the Earl of Ashburnham.

MOUNTFIELD, 1½ mile S. from Robertsbridge, contains 97 houses, and 683 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 5*l*. 13*s*. 4*d*.

PENHURST, 3 miles W. from Battle, contains 13 houses, and 106 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 3*l*. 18*s*. 4*d*., in the patronage of the Earl of Ashburnham.

NINFIELD HUNDRED.

CATSFIELD, 4 miles S.W. from Battle, contains 99 houses, and 575 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is a rectory, value 7*l*. 9*s*. 4*d*., in the patronage of the Earl of Ashburnham. Park Gate is the seat of Captain Bedingfield; and Catsfield Place the seat of J. Eversfield, Esq.

HOOE, 8 miles S.W. from Battle, contains 64 houses, and 600 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a vicarage, value 7*l*. 2*s*. 6*d*., in the patronage of Lord Holland. An alien priory of Benedictine monks, founded here about 1096, was given by Henry VI. to Eton College.

NINFIELD, 6 miles S.W. from Battle, contains 77 houses, and 618 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 8*l*., in the patronage of the Earl of Ashburnham.

SHOYSWELL HUNDRED.

TICEHURST, on the borders of Kent, 4 miles S. from Lamberhurst, contains 254 houses, and 1966 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 18*l*. 7*s*. 6*d*., in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury. The scenery in this part of the country, like that of the New Forest in Hampshire, is full of fine timber.

STAPLE HUNDRED.

BODIAM, or Bodyham, 3½ miles N.E. from Robertsbridge, contains 39 houses and 314 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Giles, is a vicarage, value 6*l*. 18*s*. 6*d*., in the patronage of Sir Godfrey Webster, Bart.

VOL. I.

Bodiam Castle, a remarkably fine specimen of castellated architecture, was probably built by Sir John Dalyngrigge, M.P. for this county, in the reign of Henry IV. His sister and heiress Margaret conveyed it to the Sackville family, together with the manors of Dalyngrigge, Bolebrooke, &c. It was afterwards the property of the Lewknor family; and the remains of this noble edifice now belong to Sir Godfrey Webster, Bart. The gate-house upon the principal front is towards the north. The moat by which the castle is surrounded is considerably broader before the entrance, and the bridge was formerly defended by a gate and towers about midway in its length. Towards the south it is supposed there was also a drawbridge. The moat is still filled with water, and contributes to the beauty, though no longer to the security, of the roofless and dilapidated towers.

EWHURST, on the borders of Kent, 4 miles E. from Robertsbridge, contains 219 houses, and 1225 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a rectory, value 12*l*. 2*s*. 6*d*.

NORTHAM, on the borders of Kent, 7 miles N.W. from Rye, and 12 miles S.E. from Lamberhurst, contains 190 houses, and 1358 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 15*l*. 10*s*. 2*d*.

SEDLSCOMB, or Sadlescombe, 3 miles N.E. from Battle, contains 78 houses, and 667 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 9*l*. 4*s*. 2*d*. in the patronage of the Crown. A preceptory of the order of Knights Templars was founded here in the reign of Henry III. by Geoffry de Say.

5. Rape of Lewes

Is bounded on the north by Surrey; on the east by Pevensey rape; on the south by the sea; and on the west by the rape of Bramber. It is subdivided into twelve hundreds.

BARCOMB HUNDRED.

BARCOMB, on the river Ouse, 3 miles N. from Lewes, contains 121 houses, and 753 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 18*l*. 10*s*. 10*d*., in the patronage of the Crown.

HAMSEY, on the Ouse, 2 miles N. from Lewes, contains 42 houses, and 537 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 16*l*. 12*s*. 8*d*.

NEWICK, on the banks of the Ouse, 5 miles W. from Uckfield, and 7 miles N. from Lewes, contains 78 houses, and 540 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 7*l*. 17*s*. 8*d*. Newick Park is the seat of J. Slater, Esq.

BUTTING HILL, or Botingelle, HUNDRED.

ARDINGLEY, 6½ miles S.W. from East Grinstead, and 4½ miles N.W. from Cuckfield, contains 70 houses, and 579 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 19*l*. 5*s*. 10*d*. About a mile northward is Wakehurst Place, a noble specimen of ancient domestic architecture, occupying three sides of a court. Sir William Culpeper of Wakehurst was created baronet 20th September, 1628.

BALCOMB, 4 miles N. from Cuckfield, contains 101 houses, and 606 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 15*l*. 18*s*. 6*d*.

BOLNEY, 3 miles S.W. from Cuckfield, contains 97 houses, and 560 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen, is a vicarage, value 5*l*. 5*s*. 2*d*., in the patronage of the Prebendary of Hooe. Bolney Place is an ancient edifice.

CLAYTON, 6 miles N. from Brighton, contains 73 houses, and 453 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a rectory, value 21*l*. 0*s*. 10*d*., in the patronage of Brazenose College, Oxford.

CRAWLEY, on the borders of Surrey, $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles N. from Cuckfield, contains 51 houses, and 334 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a rectory, value 6*l.* 15*s.* On Tilgate Forest, southward from Crawley, is Tilgate House, the seat of W. Lamb, Esq.; and Tilgate Forest Lodge, of Sir E. B. Sugden. On St. Leonard's Forest is Broadfield Lodge, the seat of W. Palmer, Esq.; and Broadfield Place, the seat of J. C. Disney, Esq. About a mile northward from Crawley is the county oak, at the boundary of Surrey, on Lowfield Heath; near it are the seats of R. Cuddington, Esq., and W. Middleton, Esq.

CUCKFIELD, situated on a hill, nearly in the centre of the county, 13 miles N.W. from Lewes, and 40 miles from London, contains 324 houses, and 2385 inhabitants. It has a market on Friday, and annual fairs on 25th May, Whit-Thursdays, 16th September, and 29th November, for cattle and sheep. A free grammar-school was founded here in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, by the munificence of some individuals, for the instruction of youth in Latin: a house was afterwards built for the master by Lady Dorothy Shirley. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is a vicarage, value 20*l.* 14*s.* 2*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Chichester. It contains several ancient monuments; amongst others is one of Henry Bowyer, Esq., of Cuckfield Place, and his wife Elizabeth, daughter and heiress of Thomas Vaux, comptroller to King Henry VIII. From the churchyard is a very fine view towards the South Downs. Sir Walter Hendley, of Cuckfield Place, was created baronet 8th April, 1661. Cuckfield Place is the seat of the Rev. — Sergison: this mansion was erected in the middle of the sixteenth century, and is approached by an avenue leading to the gate-house upon the eastern front, the turrets of which are crowned with open worked cupolas, similar to those of the ancient palace at Richmond in Surrey. Ford Hutchings, in the vicinity of Cuckfield, is the estate of Sir Francis Freeling, created baronet by King George IV., 18th February, 1828. It is not only under the direction of Sir Francis Freeling that all the improvements in the post-offices of the kingdom have been made, since the establishment of mail-coaches, but the foreign intercourse has been materially benefited by his exertions.

WEST HOATHLEY, 5 miles S.W. from East Grinstead, contains 119 houses, and 943 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 16*s.*, in the patronage of the Crown. Sidlesfield Common, in this parish, commands extensive views of the South Downs, and Weald of Sussex: near its centre is a tumulus, supposed to have been made for a beacon.

HURST PERPOINT, 9 miles N. from Brighton, and 6 miles S. from Cuckfield, contains 213 houses, and 1321 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is a rectory, value 15*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.* The font is of simple form, and is very ancient. In the chancel is an ancient monument of a crusader, without inscription; and in the south aisle, or Danny chapel, are many monuments of the Courthope and Campion families. The celebrated naturalist John Ray dedicated his "Collection of English Words" to Peter Courthope, Esq., of Danny, who died in 1724; at whose suggestion the work was undertaken. The annual fair on the festival of the patron saint of the church, 10th August, has been changed to May-day, on account of its interference with the harvest. The manor of Hurst, or Herst, which extends into the adjacent parishes of Ashcombe, Cuckfield, and Bolney, belonged to the Warren family during many successions, but at length came into possession of the family of Pierrepont, whence the affix to the name which it still bears. In 1635 it belonged to George Goring of Danny, and afterwards to the family of Shaw of Eltham, of which last it was purchased by William John Campion, Esq. of Danny, which mansion is about a mile southward from the village: it was erected in 1595, and occupies three sides of a large court. This ancient edifice stands at the foot of Wolstanbury, one of the most prominent hills of that majestic range called the South Downs, and may perhaps have received its appellation from dene, a valley. An encampment on the summit of Wolstanbury is supposed to have been originally formed by the Britons, although subsequently occupied by the Romans, Danes, and Saxons. From its elevated position it overlooks a considerable portion of the Weald, and forms a very important link in the extensive chain of encampments on the South Downs. That the Romans occupied it is ascertained from the frequent discovery of coins within the circumvallation.

KEYMER, or Kymere, 8 miles N. from Brighton, contains 112 houses, and 679 inhabitants, including the northern and southern divisions of the parish. It is a curacy. On St. John's common northward from the village, the remains of a Roman road was discovered, which is supposed to have led direct to Aldrington, near Portslade, called by some antiquaries Portus Adurni, the mouth of the river Adur, when occupied by the Romans.

SLAUGHAM, 4 miles N.W. from Cuckfield, contains 123 houses, and 933 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 10*l.* 19*s.* 2*d.* Slaugham Place, the manor-house, an ancient seat of the Covert family, built in the reign of Elizabeth, was pulled down about 1740, when the very handsome carved oak staircase was removed to the Star Inn at Lewes. Sir John Covert of Slaugham was created baronet 2nd July, 1660.

TWINEHAM, on a branch of the Adur, 4 miles S.W. from Cuckfield, contains 38 houses, and 275 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 10*l.* 15*s.* 5*d.*

WORTH, or Worde, 6 miles S.W. from East Grinstead, and 8 miles N. from Cuckfield, contains 264 houses, and 1725 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 13*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.* Northward of the village is Rowfont, the seat of the Rev. Dr. Bethune, built in the reign of Elizabeth; and near Pound Hill is Crabbet, the seat of Francis Scawen Blunt, Esq.

DEAN HUNDRED.

PATCHAM, or Pecham, 3 miles N. from Brighton, contains 70 houses, and 403 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 1*s.* 5*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. Patcham Place is the seat of — Payne, Esq.

FISHERGATE HUNDRED.

HANGLETON, 4 miles N.W. from Brighton, contains 8 houses, and 52 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Helen, is a rectory, value 11*l.* 14*s.* 2*d.* Hangleton Place is a curious ancient mansion. Benfields, also in the parish, was erected in 1611.

PORTSLADE, 5 miles N.W. from Brighton, contains 41 houses, and 421 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 18*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. Near the village is the site of Aldrington, or Atherington, supposed to be the Portus Adurni of the Romans, at the mouth of the Adur, where, when the Saxons infested our seas, a band of explorators had their station. The port is now choked up with sand, and the course of the Adur directed to Shoreham. The village of Aldrington, if ever considerable, is now almost overwhelmed by the ocean. Here was formerly a cell to the abbey of Sees in Normandy; and the living of Aldrington is still a rectory, in the patronage of the Bishop of Chichester.

HOLMSTROW HUNDRED.

NEWHAVEN, or Meeching, situated on the English Channel, at the mouth of the river Ouse, 7 miles S. from Lewes, and 9 miles E. from Brighton, contains 158 houses, and 927 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 8*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown: the edifice is remarkable for having the tower placed at the east end. Newhaven is the best tide harbour in the channel; between the Downs and the Isle of Wight it is the nearest sea-port to London, and the nearest English port to Paris. The piers of the harbour are 120 feet distant from each other, and there is a depth of 14 feet at high water. Near the churchyard is an obelisk, erected in commemoration of the fate of the crew of His Majesty's ship Brazen, Capt. James Hanson, wrecked off this coast 26th January, 1800. Meeching, or Myching, the old name of the town, is said to be derived from a battle fought at this spot, which was the key to Lewes and the adjacent country.

PIDDINGHOE, or Plumpton Piddinghoe, on the river Ouse, 2 miles N. from Newhaven, contains 29 houses, and 251 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 14*s.* 2*d.* The western division of the South Downs, lying between the Adur and the Ouse, terminates here.

RODMELL, or Radmill, on the river Ouse, 3 miles S. from Lewes, contains 39 houses, and 336 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 15*l.* 6*s.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Chichester.

SOUTHEASE, on the river Ouse, one mile S. from the above, contains 15 houses, and 112 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 16*l.* 0*s.* 10*d.*

TELSCOMB, or Telescombe, on the South Downs, 5½ miles S. from Lewes, contains 17 houses, and 113 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 13*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* Court Farm, in this parish, was devised by Henry Smith to trustees, to dispose of the rent, about 40*l.* per annum, amongst the poor of seven parishes in the North of England.

LEWES HUNDRED.

LEWES, on the river Ouse, 50 miles S. from London, and 6 miles from the English Channel, contains 1116 houses, and 7083 inhabitants. The town is situated on the acclivity of a hill, and surrounded on every side, excepting the west, with still higher hills, which form part of the South Downs. It is disposed into three principal streets. The market is on Saturday, for corn, &c.; and there are annual fairs on 6th May, and Whitsun Tuesday, for cattle and horses; on 26th July, for wool; and on 2nd October, for South Down sheep, which is numerously attended by all breeders; from 50,000 to 80,000 sheep are usually collected here. The cattle-show of the Sussex Agricultural Society is generally held in the beginning of August. The principal manufactures here are those of paper and iron. By the river Ouse, which is navigable above the town, trade is carried on in corn of all kinds, and malt. The town is governed by two constables, chosen annually at the court-leet of the lord of the manor. The petty sessions are held here, and the assizes in the summer circuit here and at Horsham alternately. The town-hall, erected in 1761, is built on a design more than usually chaste in its proportion. The arms of the town are Chequy argent and azure, on a sinister canton of the first, a lion rampant of the second, within an orle of cross crosslets sable. The borough of Lewes returns two members to Parliament; this privilege was granted 23rd Edward I., and the right of election vested in the inhabitant householders paying scot and lot. The present members are Thomas Read Kemp, Esq., and Sir Charles Richard Blunt. Lewes contains four parishes, besides St. John the Baptist, Southover, and St. Thomas in the Cliff, which are not within the jurisdiction of the borough, but form part of the town. The extra-parochial precinct of the castle consists of only five houses. All Saints is a rectory, value 7*l.*, in the patronage of the Crown; St. Michael's is a rectory, united with St. Andrew's, value 8*l.* 15*s.*, in the patronage of the Crown; St. John's, under the castle, is a rectory, value 3*l.* 11*s.* 3*d.*; St. Peter and St. Mary West-out is a rectory, value 7*l.* 6*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown; St. Thomas in the Cliff is a rectory, value 5*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury; and St. John the Baptist, at Southover, is a rectory, value 6*l.* 12*s.*, in the patronage of the Crown. The priory of St. Pancras, the chief house of the Cluniac order in England, was founded by William de Warren, first Earl of Surrey, and Gundred his wife, daughter of William the Conqueror, in 1078. This priory was the burial-place of the Warren family, as the Castle of Lewes was their favourite residence; although at Castle Acre, Conisburgh, and Sandal, they had also noble castles. At the Dissolution the revenues of the priory were computed to be worth 1091*l.* 9*s.* 6*d.* per annum; after which, the site, containing upwards of thirty-two acres within its walls, was granted in 1537 to Thomas Lord Cromwell, and in 1559 to Richard Baker and Richard Sackville. The seal of the priory, inscribed "Sigillum commune Prioris et Conventus Monasterii Sancti Pancrasii de Lewes," bore upon one side the arms of Earl Warren, and on the reverse the arms of the town of Lewes. In the church of Southover, adjoining the gate-house of the priory, which is in better preservation than any other part, is the very curious tomb of Gundred the founder, removed from the chapter-house of the priory, and placed here at the expense of William Burrell, Esq., in 1775. At Lewes was also a priory of Grey friars and hospitals, dedicated to St. James and St. Nicholas. A short distance south-eastward of West-Gate is the ancient residence of the Goring family, which being considerably elevated, presents a noble appearance from the south side of the town. George Goring, M.P. for Lewes in 1563, died in 1601; and his son George was created Earl of Norwich in 1628. In 1687 the mansion was converted to its present use, viz. the West-Gate meeting-house. Lewes Castle is of very early origin; its site agrees with others on which Anglo-Saxon castles were raised, in almost every respect, and is exactly like those of Malden and Witham, which are engraved in Strutt's "Herda Angel Cynna." Lewes is also distinguished from every other castle in the kingdom by an artificial mound of earth, raised at each extremity of the base court. These double tumuli, or braymounts, are not accordant with any known Anglo-Saxon specimen of castellated architecture. The gate-house towards the town is supposed to have been built by John Earl of Warren and Surrey, who also bore the title of Earl of Sussex, in the reign of Edward III. About a mile distant from the town is the race-course, admired for the excellence of its turf, which is situated on a hill, remarkable as the scene of the memorable battle of Lewes, fought on 14th May, 1264, between King Henry III. and Simon de Montfort Earl of Leicester, at the head of the barons of England; when the royal army was defeated, the King himself taken prisoner, together with his son Prince Edward, his brother Richard, King of the Romans, and others attached to the interest of the King: soon after this battle the form of Parliament, as it now stands, is said to have been established. The chain of chalk hills lying between Beachy Head and Shoreham is twenty-six miles in length and seven in breadth. The eastern, rising near Eastbourne, is separated from the middle division by the Cuckmere, which forms Seaford Haven. The Fittle range of Downs, immediately eastward of Lewes, and the cliff hills above the town, form the middle group. This part abounds with that delicate bird the wheatear, which is taken by the shepherds, whose flocks roam over the hills. Combe Place is the seat of Sir George Shiffner, Bart., so created 3rd October, 1818.

POYNINGS HUNDRED.

NEW TIMBER, 6 miles N.W. from Brighton, contains 26 houses, and 161 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Evangelist, is a rectory, value 8*l.* 8*s.* 4*d.* New Timber Place is the seat of — Wigney, Esq.

POYNINGS, 6 miles N.W. from Brighton, contains 38 houses, and 232 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is a rectory, value 10*l.* It appears that Michael de Poyning, by his will, dated 1368, in the reign of Edward III., bequeathed 200 marks towards the building of a new church, which is probably the present edifice. It is cruciform in plan, the tower rising from the centre on four pointed arches above the eastern window, and on the porch are shields sculptured with the arms of the baronial family of Poynings. In this porch the court-leet for the hundred has been immemorially held. In the church are several slabs robbed of their brasses; one has evidently been a figure in armour: near the church are the ruins of the mansion of the family of Poynings. In the road hence to Brighton is a singular chasm in the Downs, called the Devil's Dyke, a precipitous valley formed by nature. From the summit of the hill above the dyke is a view of the whole Weald of Sussex, and the adjoining counties of Surrey, Kent and Hampshire.

PIECOMB, or Pyecombe, 5 miles N. from Brighton, contains 20 houses, and 218 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 15*l.* 8*s.* 9*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

PRESTON HUNDRED.

HOVE, or Hooe, one mile W. from Brighton, contains 45 houses, and 312 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a vicarage, united with Preston, in the patronage of the Prebendary of Hove, in Chichester Cathedral. The church is much reduced from its original dimensions. Brunswick Town, part of Brighton, extends into this parish.

PRESTON, 1½ mile N. from Brighton, contains 53 houses, and 319 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a vicarage, united with Hove, value 20*l.* 2*s.* 11*d.*, in the patronage of the Prebendary: it contains the monuments of Sir Anthony Shirley and of Francis Cheynell, Esq. the antagonist of Chillingworth. Preston Place is the seat of Nathaniel Kemp, Esq. Eastward of the village is Hollingbury Hill, upon which are vestiges of an encampment.

STREET HUNDRED.

CHAILEY, or Chayley, 6½ miles N. from Lewes, contains 169 houses, and 946 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 9*l.* 4*s.* 2*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

DITCHELLING, or Ditchling, 7 miles N.W. from Lewes, and the same distance N. from Brighton, contains 122 houses, and 844 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, is a vicarage, value 11*l.*, in the patronage of the chancellor to the see of Chichester. The western division of the South Downs, lying between the Adur and the Ouse, terminates at Newhaven. Ditchelling beacon, in the centre of the line, is 864 feet above the level of the sea. Eastward from the beacon is Plumpton Plain; and westward is Chankbury Hill, on which is a clump of trees.

PLUMPTON, 4½ miles N.W. from Lewes, contains 47 houses, and 272 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 10*l.* Plumpton Boscase is that part of the manor which comprehended the woodland. From Plumpton Plain the prospect is said to be equal to any to be met with in the finest parts of Europe, extending thirty miles towards the sea, and forty miles inland to Banstead Downs, in Surrey. Plumpton Place was the seat of Leonard Mascall, Esq., in the reign of Henry VIII., who is believed to have introduced carp from the Danube; the ponds still supply the Earl of Chichester.

STREET, 6 miles N.W. from Lewes, contains 21 houses, and 152 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 6*l.* 19*s.* 7*d.* Street Place, formerly the seat of the Dobells, is a curious mansion, erected in 1595.

WESTMESTON, 5½ miles N.W. from Lewes, contains 35 houses, and 251 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Martin, is a rectory, value 22*l.* 4*s.* 2*d.* In the chancel are monuments of the family of Marten of Stantons, the representative of which is John Marten Cripps, Esq., the fellow traveller of Dr. Clarke. Stantons was originally built in 1570. East Chiltington is a chapelry of this parish. Westmeston House is the seat of H. T. Lane, Esq.: it was erected in 1827.

WIVELSFIELD, 5 miles S.E. from Cuckfield, contains 91 houses, and 537 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a perpetual curacy, value 20*l.*

SWANBOROUGH HUNDRED.

IFORD, on the banks of the Ouse, 2 miles S. from Lewes, contains 30 houses, and 157 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a vicarage, value 10*l.* 10*s.* 2*d.* The hundred is supposed to have derived its name from an ancient fort called Swaneberg, on the side of the road leading from Lewes to Newhaven.

KINGSTON, 2 miles S.W. from Lewes, contains 28 houses, and 172 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 13*s.* 9*d.*

WHALESBONE HUNDRED.

BRIGHTON, or Brighthelmstone, on the English Channel, 8 miles S.W. from Lewes, 30 miles E. from Chichester, and 52 from London, contains 3947 houses, and 24,429 inhabitants. This town stands first amongst fashionable sea-bathing places, its proximity to the metropolis rendering it desirable as an occasional residence. The market, formerly held on Thursday, is open every day, excepting Sunday. A corn-market is held opposite the Grand Parade, and a wholesale fish-market on the beach. The mackerel season is of great interest on this coast. Herrings also are plentiful. The annual fairs, on Holy Thursday and 4th September, are held on Ireland's Cricket Ground, which is attached to the Public Gardens, at the northern extremity of the town, between the London and Lewes roads. The custom-house is in West-street, and the town-hall opposite the market-house. The Steyne, a spacious lawn, formerly used by the fishermen of the town for drying their nets, and afterwards a fashionable promenade, is now adorned by a bronze statue of His Majesty George IV., executed by Chantrey; it was placed upon an elevated pedestal of granite, in the northern enclosure of the Old Steyne, in the year 1827. The residence of His Majesty, on the western side of the Steyne, was originally built from designs by Holland, in 1784, for the Prince of Wales, when it was called the Pavilion. An enlargement of the plan of the edifice, by the addition of two spacious wings, was made about the year 1802;

but the present building, presenting the appearance of an Oriental palace, was commenced upon the designs, and under the superintendence, of Nash, in 1818. The dimensions were at this time considerably extended, several houses having been removed for that purpose. The design is in some degree founded upon that of the Kremlin at Moscow; its numerous cupolas, spires and minarets, admired for their tasteful structure, are unique in this country, and are proofs of the diversity of talent possessed by the architect. On the southern extremity of the front towards the Steyne is a magnificent banqueting-room, 60 feet by 42 in dimension, and on the north is a superb music-room of the same size: between them, in the centre of this front, is a rotunda, 55 feet in diameter, connected with the music and banqueting rooms by galleries 20 feet in width. The grand entrance by the vestibule and hall is upon the western front, and leads to the Chinese Gallery, 162 feet in length, divided into five compartments. The walls of this room contain illustrations, by groups of figures, of the manners and customs of the Chinese people, being domestic episodes in the most brilliant colours. The stables belonging to the royal residence are a series of buildings in the Moorish style of architecture, and include an extensive riding-house. Brighton has been considerably improved within these few years; one remarkable addition is an esplanade extending from the south-eastern angle of the Steyne, which forms the entrance to a very elegant chain-pier, projected by Captain Brown, R.N., and completed in 1823, —an object of great utility and ornament. The platform of the Pier, 1134 feet long and 13 feet in width, is rendered perfectly secure, and able to withstand the violence of the sea. The greatest part of the coast between Brighton and Rottingdean presents a perpendicular cliff, about 200 feet in height, the base of which is washed by the sea; adequate advantage of the beauty of such a situation has been taken in the erection of Kemp Town, near Blackrock, at the eastern extremity of Brighton. This new town, named after its founder, was commenced in 1821, and is built on the estate of Thomas Read Kemp, Esq., M.P., from designs by Messrs. Wild and Busby. The principal feature in the plan is an extensive crescent, containing suitable residences for the most distinguished visitors of this fashionable place. The opening between the wings of this crescent is 840 feet, being 200 feet greater than the space of the Royal Crescent at Bath, which with wings, each 350 feet in extent, constitute a frontage towards the sea of not less than 1540 feet. The glacis, descending 15 feet, is terminated by an esplanade, commanding a beautiful and sheltered prospect of the ocean. Beneath this, a walk at the base of the cliff is carried to the west end of the Marine Parade, and is united with the gardens and lawn in the centre of the crescent by a tunnel. The buildings connected with the esplanade, &c. were designed by H. E. Kendall, jun. On the beach, near this spot, are found semi-translucent pebbles of agate, and chalcedony of a bluish gray colour, known by the name of Rottingdean pebbles, which when cut and polished are used for bracelets and other ornamental purposes. Brunswick Town, consisting of a noble range of buildings at the western extremity of Brighton, is another extensive improvement of this rapidly increasing town. The situation of the terrace is eminently beautiful, and evinces what may be produced by a unity of design in separate dwellings: it presents a continued elevation of the Corinthian order, rivalling, not in dimension only, the principal palaces of Europe; the whole is 2800 feet in extent, and was erected under the direction of Messrs. Wild and Busby, in the year 1826. Brunswick Square and Brunswick Place are parts of the plan. The south or principal front of the terrace is open to the sea, a prospect, of which the eye is seldom weary; while the esplanade immediately in front of the houses is the constant promenade of all the beauty and fashion amongst the visitors of Brighton, attracted by the mildness and salubrity of the sea-breezes, for which this town has been justly celebrated above all the maritime parts of the kingdom. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a vicarage, value 20*l.* 2*s.* 1*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. The font is ancient; it is circular, and divided into compartments with legendary subjects, in relief. From the churchyard is a fine sea-view. St. Peter's church, at the entrance of the town from the London road, was erected in 1825 from designs by Barry, a gentleman of great ability in his profession, in the pointed style of architecture; and when compared with other structures of recent erection, may be commended for its superiority of general effect; but the style is not even yet sufficiently understood to command perfection of resemblance to the much admired ancient ecclesiastical edifices.

The communion-plate belonging to this church was the gift of the Earl of Egremont. The Chapel-royal, founded by the Prince of Wales in 1793, is in Prince's-place; St. James's chapel, erected in 1810, is in St. James's-street; and St. Margaret's chapel, built in 1825, from designs by Clark, is in St. Margaret's-place; Trinity chapel, built in 1817, is in Ship-street; St. George's chapel is at the east end of the Royal Crescent; and St. Mary's chapel, built from designs by H. Wilds, in the Grecian style of architecture, is near the Earl of Egremont's house in St. James's-street. Near the last is the Sussex County Hospital, founded and endowed chiefly by the Earl of Egremont and Thomas Read Kemp, Esq. M.P. The race-ground, upon the Downs, northward of the town, commands a most extensive prospect, including the Weald of Sussex, the towns of Brighton, Worthing, and Shoreham, the Isle of Wight, and the coast towards Newhaven and Beachy Head.

WEST BLATCHINGTON, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles N.W. from Brighton, contains 10 houses, and 54 inhabitants. It is a rectory, annexed to the vicarage of Brighton; the church is destroyed. Some interesting Roman remains have been discovered on the estate of the Earl of Abergavenny.

YOUNSMERE HUNDRED.

FALMER, 4 miles S.W. from Lewes, contains 75 houses, and 437 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 10*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the Earl of Chichester. The church stands on the summit of a hill. Stanmer Park, the seat of the Earl of Chichester, comprehends the whole parish and village of Stanmer, including the church, which is a rectory, value 16*l.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. The park occupies a beautiful valley, formed by one of those bold ranges of hills which adorn the coast of this county; and its undulatory surface, varied by thick masses of foliage of extensive plantations, forms a rich contrast to the open Downs by which it is environed. The mansion, erected in 1724, is uniform, but without architectural enrichment.

OVINGDEAN, on the sea coast, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile E. from Brighton, contains 15 houses, and 79 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 9*l.* 5*s.* 6*d.*

ROTTINGDEAN, on the coast, 3 miles E. from Brighton, contains 148 houses, and 772 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 10*s.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Chichester. From Rottingdean the cliffs gradually rise to Beachy Head: those called the Three Churls are the highest upon the Sussex coast, and are about 500 feet above the level of the sea.

6. The Rape of Pevensey

Is bounded on the north by Surrey and Kent; on the east by the rape of Hastings; on the south by the English Channel; and on the west by Lewes rape. It is subdivided into nineteen hundreds.

ALCISTON HUNDRED.

ALCISTON, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles S.E. from Lewes, contains 28 houses, and 247 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 6*l.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Chichester. The manor is within the liberty of the Duchy of Lancaster.

ALFRISTON, 8 miles S.E. from Lewes, and $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles N.E. from Seaford, contains 107 houses, and 648 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a vicarage, value 11*l.* 16*s.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

LULLINGTON, 9 miles S.E. from Lewes, contains 4 houses, and 39 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 12*s.* 11*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Chichester, and is within the liberty of the Duchy of Lancaster.

BISHOPSTONE HUNDRED.

BISHOPSTONE, 8 miles S. from Lewes, and 2 miles N.W. from Seaford, contains 26 houses, and 277 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Chichester, and is within the liberty of the Duchy of Lancaster.

DENTON, 6 miles S. from Lewes, and 2 miles N.E. from Newhaven, contains 22 houses, and 133 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Leonard, is a rectory, value 14*l.* 19*s.* 8*d.* The font in this church is exceedingly curious; it is large and circular, sculptured with fretwork. The manor is within the liberty of the Duchy of Lancaster.

BURLEY ARCHES HUNDRED.

LINDFIELD, on the river Ouse, 4 miles E. from Cuckfield, contains 238 houses, and 1410 inhabitants. It is a curacy, in the presentation of the Archbishop of Canterbury, and consists of Lindfield D'Arches and Lindfield Bardolph. Fairs are held here 12th May for cattle and horses, 5th August for cattle and sheep; the sale of lambs at this fair is said to exceed that of any other place in the county: and on the 28th October for pedlery.

DANE HILL HORSTED HUNDRED.

HORSTED KEYNES, 6 miles N.E. from Cuckfield, contains 116 houses, and 713 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Giles, is a rectory, value 13*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* Paxhill, southward of the village, is a mansion, erected in 1606; and near Dane Hill, about two miles northward, is Danehurst, the seat of Colonel Davies, erected in 1828 from designs by the late T. F. Hunt, in the Tudor style of architecture; on the staircase is an armorial window by Willement.

SELMESTON, in a detached portion of this hundred, 6 miles S.W. from Lewes, contains 30 houses, and 208 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 5*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Prebendary of Heathfield.

TARRING NEVILE, or East Terring, in a detached portion of the hundred, on the banks of the Ouse, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles S. from Lewes, contains 16 houses, and 81 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 7*l.*: it is within the liberty of the Duchy of Lancaster.

DILL HUNDRED.

HAILSHAM, or Haylsham, 11 miles S.E. from Uckfield, and the same distance S.W. from Battle, contains 163 houses, and 1278 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 16*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* Here is a market on Wednesday, and fairs on 5th April and 14th June. The parish extends into the liberty of the corporation of Pevensey.

HELLINGLY, on the Glynde bourne, 10 miles S.E. from Uckfield, contains 178 houses, and 1313 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Earl of Chichester. The manor is held of the Honor of Pevensey, and is within the liberty of the Duchy of Lancaster.

EASTBOURNE HUNDRED.

EASTBOURNE, on the sea coast, 16 miles S.E. from Lewes, and 61 miles from London, contains 465 houses, and 2607 inhabitants. This town is situated in a valley at the extremity of the South Downs, almost surrounded by hills, which command a very extensive prospect of the Weald. Here is an annual fair on the 10th October for cattle, &c. At the eastern and western extremities of the parish are Sea Houses and Meades. The bathing here is remarkably good; and about a mile westward of Sea Houses is Holywell, a chalybeate spring, recommended in the same cases as the Bristol waters. Southbourne is a hamlet adjoining Eastbourne, and has a fair on the 12th March. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 26*l.* 1*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the treasurer of Chichester Cathedral. Compton Place, the seat of the Earl of Burlington, was formerly the seat of Spencer Compton Earl of Wilmington. South-westward of Eastbourne is Beachy Head, the highest cliff on the southern coast, 564 feet above the level of the sea at low water. This remarkable headland is known to seamen by the seven white cliffs to the westward of it.

EAST GRINSTEAD HUNDRED.

EAST GRINSTEAD, on the borders of Surrey, 21 miles N. from Lewes, and 29 miles from London, contains 439 houses, and 3153 inhabitants. The town is situated on a hill, commanding very beautiful prospects. It has a weekly market on Thursday, chiefly for corn; and annual fairs 21st April, 13th July, and 11th December, for cattle, &c. East Grinstead returns two members to Parliament, and the bailiff of the borough is the returning officer. This privilege was conferred in the reign of Edward II., and the right of election vested in the burgage holders only. The present members are Viscount Holmesdale, and F. Richard West, Esq. At the eastern end of the town is Sackville College, founded by Robert, second Earl of Dorset, who died in 1609; he endowed it with an income of 330*l.* per annum, towards the relief of thirty-one single and unmarried persons, whereof twenty-one to be men, and the other ten to be women,—there to live, to pray, serve, honour, and praise Almighty God. According to the laws of incorporation, one of the said thirty-one persons is to be warden of the college, and two of the honest and better sort of the inhabitants of the town to be assistants to the warden. In this college the Duke of Dorset has a suite of rooms, in which the Judges of the circuit are lodged during the assizes in Lent, which are held in the town-hall here. It is one of the largest parishes in the county. The church, dedicated to St. Swithin, is a vicarage, value 20*l.*, in the patronage of the Duke of Dorset. The spire of the old church was destroyed by lightning in 1685, and rebuilt; the last fell down in 1785, destroying in its fall the body of the church, which occasioned the erection of the present edifice. Felbridge Park is the seat of Isaac Dupuy, Esq., and Saint Hill of —Berthouen, Esq. Near Forest Row are the ruins of Brambletye House, the scene of a popular novel. Kidbrook, the seat of Lord Colchester, formerly belonged to the Earls of Abergavenny: the house, of large dimensions, was built by Mylne, the architect of Blackfriars-bridge; and the grounds were planted under the direction of Repton. Charles, first Lord Colchester, died 8th May, 1829. Ashdown Forest was part of the possession of John of Ghent Duke of Lancaster, and was called Lancaster Great Park; about 13,000 acres of land had been enclosed with a fence for the security of the deer and the preservation of the woods: but about the year 1642 the park was totally destroyed, and the whole forest laid open. It was afterwards divided amongst the proprietors and owners of the forest. Pippingford Lodge has an extensive park attached, commanding rich and romantic scenery. Twyford Lodge is the seat of William Luther Sewell.

FLEXBOROUGH HUNDRED.

EAST BLATCHINGTON, or Bletchington, 9 miles S. from Lewes, and 1½ mile from Seaford, contains 21 houses, and 187 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 14*l.* It is within the liberty of the Duchy of Lancaster.

HEIGHTON, on the banks of the Ouse, 6 miles S. from Lewes, contains 15 houses, and 71 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Martin, is a rectory, value 11*l.* 8*s.* 6*d.*

SEAFORD, a Cinque Port, 10 miles S. from Lewes, and 60 miles from London, contains 198 houses, and 1047 inhabitants. This town was incorporated by King Henry VIII., by the style of the bailiffs, jurats, and commonalty of the town, parish and borough of Seaford. The bailiff is chosen on the 29th September, and holds a court every fortnight. The market is held on Saturday, and there are annual fairs 13th March and 25th July. This town, a member of the port of Hastings, returns two barons to Parliament, a privilege conferred in the reign of Edward III., and confirmed in the reign of Charles I., the right of election being vested in the housekeepers of the borough paying scot and lot. The present members are John Fitzgerald, Esq., and William Lyon, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Leonard, is a vicarage, with Sutton, value 11*l.* 15*s.*, in the patronage of the Prebendary of Seaford. Cuckmere Haven is a small bay at the mouth of the river Cuckmere, between Seaford and Beachy Head, about four miles westward from the last.

HURTFIELD HUNDRED.

HARTFIELD, 6 miles S.E. from East Grinstead, contains 191 houses, and 1440 inhabitants, including North Hartfield. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 10*l.*, in the patronage of the Duke of Dorset.

WITHYHAM, 7 miles S.E. from East Grinstead, contains 253 houses, and 1393 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 25*l.* 5*s.* 5*d.*, in the patronage of the Earl of De La Warr, it contains many monuments of the Sackville family. Buckhurst, in this parish, the ancient seat of the noble family of Sackville, was built by Sir Richard Sackville, Treasurer of the Exchequer to Queen Elizabeth: his son Thomas was created Lord Buckhurst 8th June, 1567, and Earl of Dorset 13th March, 1604. It was deserted by the family, after Knole was made their principal seat: the gate-house, of brick, still remains. Stoneland Park is the seat of the Duke of Dorset.

LONGBRIDGE HUNDRED.

ARLINGTON, on the river Cuckmere, 8 miles S.E. from Lewes, and 3 miles S.W. from Hailsham, contains 74 houses, and 614 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 10*l.* 6*s.* 11*d.*, in the patronage of the Prebendary of Woodhorn in Chichester Cathedral.

BERWICK, on the Cuckmere, 8 miles E. from Lewes, contains 32 houses, and 172 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 13*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, and is within the liberty of the Duchy of Lancaster.

FOLKINGTON, 3½ miles S.W. from Hailsham, contains 32 houses, and 186 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 12*l.*

LITTLINGTON, on the river Cuckmere, 3 miles N.E. from Seaford, contains 22 houses, and 133 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 12*l.* 13*s.* 6*d.*, and is within the liberty of the Duchy of Lancaster.

WILMINGTON, on the Cuckmere, 5 miles S.W. from Hailsham, contains 42 houses, and 321 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* Robert Earl of Cornwall, in the reign of William II., founded here a Benedictine priory, subordinate to the abbey of Grestein in Normandy. The Dean and Chapter of Chichester purchased the priory and manor, with the consent of King Henry IV., for the purpose of founding a chantry in the cathedral; but the estate being surrendered by the Dean and Chapter at the Dissolution of monasteries, it was granted in 1564 to Sir Richard Sackville of Buckhurst. On the side of one of the neighbouring hills is a representation of a man, marked by a difference in the grass; the figure is 250 feet in length.

LOXFIELD DORSET HUNDRED.

BUXTED, 2 miles N. from Uckfield, contains 160 houses, and 1509 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, is a rectory, value 37*l.* 5*s.* 2*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. Buxted Place is the seat of the Earl of Liverpool.

FRAMFIELD, or Frantfield, 2 miles S. from Uckfield, contains 231 houses, and 1437 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Thomas à Becket, is a vicarage, value 13*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Earl of Thanet.

ISFIELD, on the river Ouse, 3 miles S.W. from Uckfield, contains 66 houses, and 569 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, is a rectory, value 9*l.* 12*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. In the chancel are monuments of John Shurley, chief clerk of the kitchen to King Henry VII., and cofferer to King Henry VIII., who died 3rd August 1527; and Edward Shurley his son, cofferer to King Henry VIII., who died 16th March 1558. Isfield Place is an ancient and curious edifice; the centre division of the western front only remains: it is divided into two stories by Doric columns, the entablature of which is surmounted by a pediment, having at its apex a pinnacle and vane. On the pedestals of the upper columns are the words SVSTINETE and ABSTINETE. Beneath the pediment the frieze is thus inscribed: NON · MINOR · EST · VIRTVS · QVAM · QVERERE · PARTA · TVERI, which has been freely translated, "Catch is a good dog, but Holdfast is a better." The Shurleys or Shirleys of Isfield were a branch of the family at Wiston.

UCKFIELD, on a branch of the Ouse, 8½ miles N.E. from Lewes, and 41½ from London, contains 177 houses, and 1099 inhabitants. The petty sessions are held here occasionally; and there are annual fairs on 14th May and 29th August for cattle, &c. The town has some trade in corn, and a considerable quantity of timber is forwarded to Lewes by the river Ouse, which is not more than two miles westward from the town. The church, dedicated to the Holy Cross, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Rector of Buxted. The Rocks, near Uckfield, is the seat of J. Jackson, Esq.

LOXFIELD PELHAM HUNDRED.

LAMBERHURST, on the borders of Kent, in which county it is partly situated, 26 miles N.E. from Lewes, and 40 miles from London, contains 162 houses, and 1325 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 12*l.* 10*s.* 5*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Rochester Cathedral. Court Lodge, the seat of W. A. Morland, Esq., is situated on an eminence, at the foot of which flows a branch of the river Medway. About two miles from Lamberhurst is Gloucester Furnace, for a great length of time the principal iron-furnace in England, supplied with iron-stone dug in the neighbourhood: here was cast the superb iron balustrade that environs St. Paul's Cathedral, which cost 11,202*l.*, at the rate of 6*d.* per pound, exclusive of some incidental expense.

MAYFIELD, or Maghfield, 8 miles N.E. from Uckfield, and the same distance S. from Tunbridge Wells, contains 400 houses, and 2698 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Dunstan, is a vicarage, value 17*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*: the font, of ancient form, is dated 1666. Mayfield Place, situated on an eminence, commanding a fine prospect of the South Downs, between Eastbourne and Brighton, was anciently a seat of the Archbishops of Canterbury, where they held two provincial councils in the years 1322 and 1362. The great hall, 68 feet by 38, contains part of the Archbishop's throne, the back part of which is curiously enriched with small ornamental pateras. The groined porch of the hall, and an ante-room, containing the arms of Archbishop Warham, are amongst the remains of this magnificent edifice: it was afterwards the seat of the Greshams. Queen Elizabeth, in the course of a progress towards the coast in 1573, visited Sir Thomas Gresham at Mayfield. A room, called Queen Elizabeth's chamber, still remains. Sir Thomas May purchased the Archiepiscopal Palace of Henry Nevile, Esq. of Billingbear in 1597: he was knighted at Greenwich 3rd July 1603: his son, Thomas May, a gentleman of great literary attainments, who translated Lucan's Pharsalia, and distinguished himself as a dramatic writer in the reign of Charles I., sold Mayfield Place in 1617 to John Baker, Esq., whose descendants now enjoy it. Stockbury, an ancient encampment, is on a hill northward of the village.

WADHURST, 4 miles S.W. from Lamberhurst, contains 363 houses, and 2136 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a vicarage, value 15*l.* 1*s.*, in the patronage of Wadham College Oxford. Whiligh and Fair Crouch, both in the vicinity of Wadhurst, are curious mansions of the reign of Elizabeth.

LOWEY OF PEVENSEY.

PEVENSEY, 5 miles S.E. from Hailsham, and 10 miles S.W. from Battle, contains 52 houses, and 292 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a vicarage, value 18*l.* 7*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the chancellor of Chichester Cathedral: it is a member of the port of Hastings, and was in ancient times noted for its magnificent castle, situated on the eastern side of the town, which was then nearly surrounded by the sea, although now upwards of two miles from it. The external walls of the castle are still entire, to the height of about 20 feet, and enclose an area of seven acres. It was at this place William of Normandy landed with his invading army; and when established on the English throne, gave the town and castle of Pevensey to his half-brother Robert, whom he created Earl of Cornwall. Henry I. afterwards granted the Honor of Pevensey to Gilbert de Aquila, whence it was termed the Honor of the Eagle. King Henry IV. granted Pevensey Castle to John de Pelham, in whose family it long remained. Sir Spencer Compton obtained it of the Duke of Newcastle, and was afterwards created Earl of Wilmington and Lord Pevensey. On the death of the late Earl of Northampton it devolved to his daughter Elizabeth, married to the present Earl of Burlington. Viscount Pevensey is now the second title of the Earl of Sheffield.

WEST HAM, on the sea-coast, one mile from Pevensey, contains 96 houses, and 583 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 21*l.* 10*s.* 10*d.* The manor is within the liberty of the Duchy of Lancaster.

RINGMER HUNDRED.

GLYND, situated on a branch of the Ouse, called Glyndbourn, 3 miles S.E. from Lewes, contains 26 houses, and 250 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 1*s.* 3*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Canons of Windsor. The church was erected in 1765 in the Grecian style of architecture, under the direction of Dr. Trevor, Bishop of Durham. Glynd Park is an ancient mansion of the Morley family, and afterwards of the Trevors: it commands a fine view of the rich and picturesque vale in which it stands. At Glyndbourn is the seat of — Tetty, Esq.: it was formerly the residence of William Hay, M.P. for Seaford, and a pleasing writer, who, in a poem entitled Mount Caburn, celebrated the beauty of his native place and the virtues of his friends: it was dedicated to the Duchess of Newcastle in 1730.

RINGMER, 2 miles N.E. from Lewes, contains 162 houses, and 1271 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 13*l.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. Broyle Place, in this parish, is a mansion, which bears a mark of antiquity anterior to the reign of Elizabeth. It is not improbable that it was built by one of the Archbishops of Canterbury, who were lords of the manor of South Malling, which then comprehended the site on which it stands; it was originally surrounded by a park, of at least one thousand six hundred acres in extent, producing abundance of fine timber, and amply stocked with deer: it was exchanged with Queen Elizabeth for a manor and lands near the Archiepiscopal Palace at Croydon.

SOUTH MALLING, one mile N.E. from Lewes, contains 103 houses, and 620 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is said to have been founded by Cedwall, King of the West Saxons, who died in 688: it was collegiate, and the Archbishops of Canterbury were accounted the modern founders, and the Dean and Prebendaries were in their collation, and under their immediate jurisdiction, till the surrender in 1545, when the college and deanery were granted to Sir Thomas Palmer. In 1534 the Deanery was valued at 45*l.* 12*s.* 5*d.*; Framfield Prebend, at 17*l.* 0*s.* 7*d.*; Ringmer Prebend, at 22*l.* 10*s.*; and Southeram Prebend, at 19*l.* 14*s.* 11*d.*

Stanner, which is locally situated in the rape of Lewes, and there described, is in this hundred.

ROTHERFIELD HUNDRED.

FRANT, or Fant, on the borders of Kent, 3 miles S. from Tunbridge Wells, which last is partly in this parish, contains 280 houses, and 1727 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 5*s.* 5*d.* The church, an ancient edifice, was rebuilt about 1820, under the direction of Montier, who has paid due attention to its original architectural character: it stands on a lofty hill, commanding a fine prospect towards the coast, as well as inland; the last probably the most extensive. Eridge Castle, the seat of the Earl of Abergavenny, stands on a bold eminence, in a park, including above two thousand acres, with a demesne attached of about seven thousand acres, which abounds with wood, and is well watered, exhibiting on the heights extensive remains of earth-works, ascribed to the Saxons and Danes, the chief of which is Saxonbury Hill. Upwards of seventy miles of carriage roads are said to be within the domain. In the year 1573 Queen Elizabeth remained at the castle for six days on a visit. On the staircase is a very fine window, by Willement, representing an equestrian figure of one of the Nevile's, an ancestor of the noble proprietor; and in the old gallery are several curious family portraits. At Bayham, or Beigham, in this parish, Robert de Turneham, founded a priory of Premonstratensian canons in the year 1200, which was dedicated to the Blessed Virgin: it was one of the smaller monasteries, which Cardinal Wolsey obtained in 1525 for the endowment of his colleges, although its revenue amounted to 152*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.* in the whole. The remains of Bayham priory, which are situated on a branch of the Medway, are carefully preserved by the Marquis Camden, who has a seat near the ruin.

ROTHERFIELD, 9 miles N.E. from Uckfield, and 7 miles S. from Tunbridge Wells, contains 444 houses, and 2770 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Denis, is a rectory, value 27*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.*, in the patronage of the Earl of Abergavenny. Berthwald, Duke of the South Saxons, about the year 800, founded here a priory, which was a cell to the abbey of St. Denis in France. Crowborough is in this parish. From Crowborough Hill is a fine view over the Weald: here are a chapel and school-house, erected by Sir Henry Fermor of Sevenoaks, who died in 1734. A fair is held at Crowborough on 25th April for horses and cattle.

RUSHMONDEN HUNDRED.

FLETCHING, 4 miles N.W. from Uckfield, contains 250 houses, and 1690 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew and the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 13*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*: it contains a monumental chapel of the Holroyd family, in which are deposited the remains of Edward Gibbon, the historian of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, who died in 1794, with an inscription to his memory from the classical pen of Dr. Parr. The petty sessions are held at Fletching occasionally; and there is an annual fair on the Monday before Whitsunday. The manor is within the liberty of the Duchy of Lancaster. Sheffield Place is the seat of the Earl of Sheffield: the house was nearly rebuilt by the late Earl, and contains a library formed by his Lordship, whose literary talents were highly appreciated. Amongst other works, he published The Memoirs of Gibbon, his early and intimate friend. A room is painted by C. Catton, R.A.; and amongst the pictures are portraits of Caroline Princess of Wales, Queen of George IV., the late Earl of Chichester, Lord Glenbervie, and Edward Gibbon,—the last by Reynolds. The park is the most extensive in this part of the county, comprising about six hundred acres, and contains many fine old oaks, the soil being remarkably favourable to the growth of timber.

LITTLE HORSTED, 2 miles S. from Uckfield, contains 45 houses, and 286 inhabitants. It is locally situated in the hundred of Loxfield Dorset, and is a rectory, value 7*l.*: the manor is within the liberty of the Duchy of Lancaster. Plashet Park is the seat of Viscount Gage.

MARESFIELD, 2 miles N. from Uckfield, contains 215 houses, and 1439 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, is a rectory, value 12*l.* The petty sessions are occasionally held here; and there is an annual fair on 4th September for cattle, &c. The manor, which is within the liberty of the Duchy of Lancaster, is held of the Honor of the Eagle, or Pevensy, and extends over great part of Ashdown Forest, into Nutley, Buxted, Withyam, Hartfield, Grinstead, West Hoathly, and Fletching. Maresfield Park is the seat of Sir John Shelley, Bart., descended from the ancient family originally seated at Michel Grove, near Findon. The late Right Honourable Sir John Shelley, Bart. married Wilhelmina, daughter of John Newnham, Esq., of Maresfield.

SHIPLAKE HUNDRED.

CHALVINGTON, 8 miles E. from Lewes, contains 20 houses, and 181 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, is a rectory, value 8*l.* The manor is held of the Honor of the Eagle, and is within the liberty of the Duchy of Lancaster: it is very extensive.

CHIDDINGLY, or Chittingleigh, 7 miles S.E. from Uckfield, contains 109 houses, and 870 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 8*l.*, in the patronage of the Duke of Dorset. The manor is within the liberty of the Duchy of Lancaster, and extends into the parishes of Waldron, Willingdon, and Hartfield. Chiddingly Place, an ancient mansion, was the seat of, and was probably rebuilt by, Sir John Jefferay, Chief Baron of the Exchequer, in the reign of Elizabeth: his daughter and heiress Elizabeth married Edward Lord Montagu, of Boughton, in the reign of James I. Within memory, the building was much more extensive than at present, and some of the rooms exhibited remains of considerable magnificence. Adjoining the house, which is now occupied by a farmer, is Chapel Barn, said to have been the domestic chapel.

EAST HOATHLY, 5 miles S.E. from Uckfield, contains 67 houses, and 510 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 7*l.* 6*s.* 3*d.*, in the patronage of the Earl of Abergavenny. Halland Park was an ancient seat of the Pelham family: the mansion was built about the time of Elizabeth, and is so situated, that the boundary line between this parish and that of Laughton passes through the front entrance. Thomas Lord Pelham, of Laughton, died at Halland Park 3rd February 1712: his son, the Duke of Newcastle, made it his principal residence; but it has been disparked, having been abandoned for Staumer Park, and part of the mansion is now converted to a farm-house. Evelyn calls it "a sweet and delectable country-seat."

LAUGHTON, 6 miles E. from Lewes, contains 96 houses, and 731 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 11*s.* 3*d.*, in the patronage of the Earl of Chichester. In the church are some monuments of the Pelham family. Sir Thomas Pelham, M.P. for Lewes, was created Lord Pelham, of Laughton, 2nd December 1706.

RIPE, or Eckington, 8 miles W. from Lewes, contains 40 houses, and 364 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 11*l.* 10*s.*

WALDRON, 5 miles S.E. from Uckfield, contains 143 houses, and 965 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 13*l.* 4*s.* 7*d.* Tanners, in this parish, is an ancient mansion. An extensive common has been enclosed.

TOTNORE HUNDRED.

BEDDINGHAM, on the river Ouse, 3 miles S. from Lewes, contains 28 houses, and 255 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 10*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Chichester. Here, says Tanner, was a monastery in the beginning of the ninth century.

WEST FIRLE, 4½ miles S.E. from Lewes, contains 108 houses, and 644 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a vicarage, value 13*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Chichester. In the chancel are many monuments of the Gage family; amongst which is that of Sir John Gage, K.G., Lord Chamberlain to Queen Mary. Firle Place is the seat of Viscount Gage, Lord Gage of Firle, &c.

WILLINGDON HUNDRED.

EAST DEAN, 2 miles W. from Eastbourne, contains 51 houses, and 296 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 8*l.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Chichester. The manor is within the liberty of the Duchy of Lancaster.

WEST DEAN, 5 miles W. from Eastbourne, contains 13 houses, and 163 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 14*l.* 15*s.* 5*d.*

FRISTON, 3 miles W. from Eastbourne, contains 10 houses, and 62 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 7*l.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Chichester.

JEVINGTON, 3 miles N.W. from Eastbourne, contains 51 houses, and 300 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 20*l.*, in the patronage of the Earl of Burlington. This manor is very extensive, and is within the liberty of the Duchy of Lancaster.

WILLINGDON, 2 miles N. from Eastbourne, contains 92 houses, and 520 inhabitants. It is a vicarage, value 12*l.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Chichester. At Langley Point, in this parish, are two forts erected on the beach, which command Pevensy Bay; and about a mile behind them, on Anthony Hill, is a battery of heavy guns. Hence, eastward, the coast is defended by Martello towers. Ratton Park is the seat of Inigo Thomas.

BEDFORDSHIRE.—Norfolk Circuit.

THIS county, one of the smallest in England, is bounded on the north by Northamptonshire and Huntingdonshire; on the east by Cambridgeshire; on the south by Hertfordshire; and on the west by Buckinghamshire. It is about thirty-four miles in length, twenty in breadth, and about a hundred and forty-five miles in circuit. The British inhabitants of this county were called the Cassii, or Catteuchlani, by the Romans, under whom it formed part of Britannia Prima, and was included in the district of Flavia Cæsariensis. It is crossed by the Ikeneld-street, and the Watling-street, both of which are supposed to have been originally British roads: a third ancient road is the Roman military way which came from Hertfordshire to the station near Sandy, and thence passed to the Hermen-street, at Godmanchester, or Durolipons. The Roman stations in Bedfordshire are Durocibrivæ, Dunstable, and Salenæ, Sandy; but the Roman antiquities which have been discovered are not numerous. Totternhoe Castle, and Maiden Bower, are remarkable British earth-works. During the Anglo-Saxon Heptarchy, this county became part of the kingdom of Mercia, and was afterwards comprised within Denelege, or the Danish jurisdiction. The castles of the early lords of Bedfordshire were at Bedford, Odell, or Wahul, Bletshoe Cainhoe, Eaton Socon, Risinghoe and Segenhoe. Eaton Bray, Luton Hoo, Willington, Cockayne Hatley, and Houghton Conquest, were noble mansions of early date. There were formerly abbeys at Warden and Woburn, and priories at Bissemede, Caldwell, Chicksand, Dunstable, Elstow, Harold, Market-street, and Newnham. There were ancient hospitals at Bedford, Dunstable, Farleigh, Hockliffe, and Toddington; and a preceptory of knights hospitallers at Melchbourn. This county is in the diocese of Lincoln, and province of Canterbury. Bedford is the county-town; besides which there are nine market-towns, 121 parishes, 15,412 houses, and 83,716 inhabitants. It sends four members to Parliament; two for the borough of Bedford, and two for the county, who at present are the Marquess of Tavistock, and Sir Peter Payne, Bart. The surface of this county is broken into small hills and valleys: towards the south, a range of chalk eminences rises to a considerable height, sometimes projecting into the lower grounds in a bold and abrupt manner. Some very rich meadow-lands, terminated on the north by sandy hills, extend in a line from the middle of the county to its south-eastern extremity: the western side is flat and well cultivated, producing great quantities of beans. The vale of Bedford is an extensive corn district, its natural fertility being much increased by the overflowing of the Ouse. The north-eastern part of the county is noted for its abundant produce of barley. Fine woods are interspersed throughout the whole of the county, the timber of which is occasionally felled, and sent to the sea coast by the Ouse. The rivers of Bedfordshire are the Ouse, Ivel, Lea and Ouzel. The Ouse enters this county in its course from Buckinghamshire at Turvey, whence it passes between Carlton and Harold, and near Sharnbrook, in a very winding direction, to the town of Bedford, where it becomes navigable. Thence it flows to Barford and Tempsford, where it unites with the Ivel, and pursues its direction to Huntingdonshire, quitting the county below Eaton Socon, near St. Neots. The Ivel rises near Baldock, in Hertfordshire, and enters Bedfordshire near Stotfold. At Arlsey it is augmented by the Hiz, from Hitchin, and at Langford by another stream from Shefford. At Biggleswade the Ivel becomes navigable, and passes Girtford near Sandy, and Blunham, to Tempsford, where it falls into the Ouse. The river Lea, whose course is principally through Hertfordshire, rises near Houghton Regis, in this county, and runs through the whole extent of Luton parish. The river Ouzel rises near Whipsnade, and leaving Eaton Bray on the east, separates this county from Buckinghamshire, in its course to Leighton Busard. No navigable canal passes through Bedfordshire, but the Grand Junction canal comes up to Leighton Busard. The principal manufacture of this county is thread-lace, which is made in every part of the county, excepting in a few villages, where it has been superseded by the straw manufacture, which prevails in the neighbourhood of Dunstable and borders of Hertfordshire. Lord Grantham is the Lord Lieutenant of the county.

1. Bedford Liberty

Is bounded on the north and north-east by Barford hundred; on the east by Wixamtree hundred; on the south by Redborne Stoke hundred; and on the west by Willey hundred.

BEDFORD, situated on the river Ouse, 50 miles from London, contains 1074 houses, and 5466 inhabitants. It stands in the very midst of the vale of Bedford, with a bridge over the Ouse, connecting the north and south parts of the town. The principal street is about a mile in length, with smaller ones intersecting it at right angles. By its situation on the Ouse, which is navigable hence to Lynn, in Norfolk, where it falls into the sea, a considerable trade is carried on, particularly in corn, sent down to, and in coals, brought up from, Lynn and Yarmouth. The principal market is held on Saturday, on the north side of the river, for corn, &c. Monday's market, on the south side of the river, is chiefly for pigs. There are six annual fairs, viz. the first Tuesday in Lent, 21st April, Old Midsummer-day, 21st August, 12th October, and 19th December. Besides these, an annual fair is held at St. Leonard's Farm, on 17th November. Bedford is esteemed a borough and corporation by prescription: the corporation consists of a mayor, recorder, an indefinite number of aldermen, two chamberlains, and thirteen common-councilmen. The number of aldermen is necessarily uncertain, the office of mayor being always filled by a burgess, who has previously served the offices of bailiff and chamberlain, and who, immediately after the expiration of his mayoralty, becomes an alderman. The bailiffs for the time being are sheriffs of the borough and lords of the manor. The seal of the corporation bears an eagle displayed and ducally crowned, charged on the breast with a castle triple towered. The town-hall, or sessions-house, in which the assizes for the county are held, was built in 1753; it is situated in the area before St. Paul's church. Bedford sent two members to Parliament as early as the year 1295; the right of election was determined in 1690 to be in the burgesses, freemen, and inhabitant householders not receiving alms; the number of voters is increased by the addition of honorary freemen. The mayor and bailiffs are the returning officers. The present members for the borough are William Henry Whitbread, Esq., of Southill, and Frederick Polhill, Esq., of Howberry Park. There are in Bedford five parish churches. St. Paul's, a vicarage, value 10*l.*, in the patronage of Lord Carteret, is a very handsome edifice. In the chancel, which is appropriated for the archdeacon's court, is the monument of Sir William Harper, Lord Mayor of London, who died in 1574, and was a great benefactor to this his native town. The pulpit is of stone, enriched with tracery; and on the south wall of the nave is painted a recumbent figure of King Charles I., under an open canopy, and an inscription alluding to his trial and execution.

The church of St. Peter's Martin is a rectory, value 11*l.* 13*s.* 1*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. St. Cuthbert's is a rectory, value 5*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. St. Mary's is a rectory, value 11*l.* 4*s.* 9*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Lincoln. St. John the Baptist, annexed to the hospital of that name, is considered as a rectory, of which the corporation have the patronage. St. Peter's Dunstable is now annexed to St. Mary's parish. At the old Independent meeting-house in Mill Lane, originally established in 1650, the celebrated John Bunyan was co-pastor, in which situation he continued till his death in 1688. His memory is much revered, and his chair is preserved as a relic, in the vestry: the present meeting-house was built in 1707. The free-school, founded by Sir William Harper in 1566, has been rebuilt within the last two years. A General Infirmary for the county, in St. Mary's parish, was erected in 1803, to which the late Samuel Whitbread, Esq., bequeathed 4000*l.*

King William Rufus granted the barony of Bedford to Payne de Beauchamp, who built a strong castle adjoining the town. After a siege of two months, it was destroyed in the reign of Henry III. Camden speaks of its ruins overhanging the river on the eastern side of the town; vestiges of its site are still to be seen at the back of the Swan Inn, where a bowling-green was formed in the Keep tower. Caldwell priory, on the banks of the Ouse, on the western side of the town, was founded in the time of King John, by Simon Barescote, Alderman of Bedford, for monks of the order of the Holy Sepulchre, and was dedicated to the Virgin Mary. At the time of its suppression, it was stated to be a priory of Austin canons, and was then dedicated to St. John the Baptist and St. John the Evangelist; its clear yearly income was 109*l.* 8*s.* 5*d.*: the site was granted in 1563 to Thomas Leigh. Traces of the conventual buildings may be seen in a field adjoining the farm-house, built on part of the domain. A house of Grey Friars, or Franciscans, was founded by Mabel Patshull of Bletsoe before 1311: the revenues of this house, when suppressed, were estimated only at 3*l.* 15*s.* 2*d.* per annum. Its site was granted by Henry VIII. to John Gostwick, then master of the horse to the King. The remains which exist of the conventual buildings are part of the cloisters, and a barn, said to have been the refectory; St. Leonard's hospital, now a farm, and St. John Baptist's hospital.

2. Barford Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Stodden hundred and Huntingdonshire; on the east by Biggleswade hundred; on the south by Wixamtree hundred; and on the west by Willey hundred, and a detached portion of Stodden hundred.

GREAT BARFORD, on the river Ouse, 6 miles E. from Bedford, contains 118 houses, and 635 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 9*l.*, in the patronage of Trinity College Cambridge. In the chancel is a monument of one of the Fitz Jeffreys family, which was long seated at Creakers in this parish: a very small part of the old mansion now remains. Birchfield, about a mile northward from the village, is the property of J. Polhill, Esq.

COLMWORTH, 5 miles W. from St. Neots, and 8 miles N.E. from Bedford, contains 84 houses, and 450 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Denis, is a rectory, value 18*l.*: it is a handsome structure, with a lofty spire, which is a conspicuous object for several miles round; and contains monuments of Eleanor Lady Braybrooke, daughter and heiress of Aylmer Lord St. Amand, of Sir Ludowic Dyer, and of Sir William Dyer,—the last erected in 1641.

EATON SOCON, on the banks of the Ouse and borders of Huntingdonshire, 2 miles S.W. from St. Neots, contains 447 houses, and 2039 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Wyboston. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 20*l.* 13*s.* 9*d.*, in the patronage of the Duke of Bedford: in the windows of the north aisle are considerable remains of painted glass, with which the church was formerly enriched, representing subjects from the legends of St. Nicholas and St. Etheldreda. Eaton Socon Castle was the seat of the baronial family of Beauchamp. Oliver Beauchamp and his son Hugh founded the priory of Bushmead, or Bismede, in the reign of Henry II., for Austin canons, which was dedicated to the Virgin Mary: its revenue at the Dissolution was estimated at 71*l.* 13*s.* 9*d.* per annum. The site was granted in 1537 to Sir William Gascoyne, comptroller of the household to Cardinal Wolsey. Of the conventual buildings, the refectory only remains. Bushmead is now the seat of the Rev. Hugh Wade Geary, in whose possession is an ancient cartulary of the priory.

GOLDINGTON, on a branch of the Ouse, 2 miles N.E. from Bedford, contains 76 houses, and 426 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Duke of Bedford: in the chancel are monuments of the ancient family of Hazelden. The priory of Newenham, on the banks of the Ouse, was founded by Simon de Beauchamp, in the reign of Henry II., for Black canons, and was dedicated to St. Paul: its revenue at the Dissolution was 343*l.* 15*s.* 5*d.* per annum; after which, the manor was made part of the Honor of Ampthill, as it still continues. The site of the priory was the residence of Sir Robert Catlin, Chief Justice of the King's Bench, who died in 1574; and afterwards of William Lord Cobham. There are no remains either of the priory or mansion, excepting the walls of the domain, enclosing about eighty acres. Risinghoe Castle, a seat of the Beauchamps or Especs, was also in this parish. The Castle Mill is now the Duke of Bedford's; and there are considerable remains of the keep of the castle, adjoining which are large earth-works.

RAVENS DEN, 4 miles N.E. from Bedford, contains 47 houses, and 263 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 7*l.*, in the patronage of the Duke of Bedford. Ravensden Grange belonged to Newenham priory.

RENHOLD, or Ronhale, 3½ miles N.E. from Bedford, contains 59 houses, and 340 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of J. Polhill, Esq. Howberry Park is the seat of J. Polhill, Esq.

ROXTON, on the borders of Cambridgeshire and banks of the Ouse, 8 miles N.E. from Bedford, and 4½ S.W. from St. Neots, contains 104 houses, and 537 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 10*l.*, in the patronage of Trinity College Cambridge: in the chancel is a monument of Roger Hunt of Chalveston, one of the Barons of the Exchequer in 1439. Chalveston, or Chawston, about a mile northward from the village, is a hamlet of this parish.

WILDEN, on a branch of the river Ouse, 5 miles N.E. from Bedford, contains 57 houses, and 447 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a rectory, value 18*l.* 7*s.* 1*d.*, in the patronage of the Duke of Bedford.

3. Biggleswade Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Huntingdonshire and Cambridgeshire; on the east by Cambridgeshire; on the south by Clifton hundred; and on the west by Wixamtree hundred.

ASTWICK, or Estwick, on the river Rhee, and borders of Hertfordshire, 3 miles N. from Baldock, contains 11 houses, and 99 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Guthlac, is a rectory, value 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*: in the chancel are monuments of the family of Cockayne.

LITTLE BARFORD, or Berkford, on the river Ouse and borders of Huntingdonshire, 3 miles S. from St. Neots, contains 25 houses, and 123 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 13*l.* 16*s.* 3*d.* Nicholas Rowe, the dramatic poet, was born here in 1661.

BIGGLESWADE, on the Ivel, 11 miles S.E. from Bedford, and 45 miles from London, contains 448 houses, and 2778 inhabitants, including the hamlets of Holme and Stratton. In 1785 this town sustained great damage by a fire; most of the houses are consequently modern. The market, held on Wednesday, is said to be one of the greatest in England for barley, pease, beans, and horse-corn. There are five annual fairs, on 13th February, Saturday in Easter week, Trinity Monday, 2nd August, and 8th November, for cattle of all sorts. The petty sessions for the hundreds of Biggleswade, Clifton, and Wixamtree are held here. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a vicarage, value 10*l.*, in the patronage of the Prebendary of Biggleswade, in Lincoln Cathedral: it was built about 1230. In the chancel is a monument of John Ruding, Archdeacon of Bedford, who died in 1481, by whom this part of the church was rebuilt about 1467. His arms are upon the seats of some ancient stalls in the north aisle. The church is said to have been formerly collegiate. Eastward of the town is Stratton Park, the seat of Charles Barnet, Esq. At Holme is a school, founded by Edward Peake of Southill, in 1557. Shortmead House, northward of the town, is the seat of John Brieheno, Esq.

DUNTON, on the borders of Cambridgeshire and Hertfordshire, 3 miles E. from Biggleswade, contains 68 houses, and 332 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 10*l.*, in the patronage of Earl Spencer. Millo, or Milnhoe, is a hamlet of this parish.

EDWORTH, on the borders of Hertfordshire, 3 miles S.E. from Biggleswade, contains 20 houses, and 87 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. George, is a rectory, value 15*l.* 16*s.* 3*d.*, in the patronage of William Hale, Esq., of Kings Walden, in Hertfordshire. Bleak Hall is an eminence westward of the village.

EVERTON, on the borders of Cambridgeshire, but adjoining a detached part of Huntingdonshire, 4½ miles N.W. of Biggleswade, contains 25 houses, and 154 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 13*s.* 9*d.*, in the patronage of Clare Hall, in Cambridge. Everton House is the seat of William Astell, Esq.

EYWORTH, on the borders of Cambridgeshire, 4 miles E. from Biggleswade, contains 13 houses, and 111 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of Lord Yarborough: in the chancel are several monuments of the Anderson family. Sir Edmund Anderson, Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, a man of considerable eminence, and one of the Judges on the trial of Mary Queen of Scots, was seated at Eyworth. His great-grandson, Sir Stephen Anderson of Eyworth, was created baronet in 1664: the title is now extinct. In the chancel is also the tomb of Alice Viscountess Verulam, widow of the great Lord Chancellor, who died in 1656. Edmund Chishull, a learned divine and antiquary, was born at Eyworth: he was chaplain in ordinary to Queen Anne in 1711.

HATLEY COCKAYNE, or Hatley Port, on the borders of Cambridgeshire, 6 miles N.E. from Biggleswade, contains 21 houses, and 117 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a rectory, value 8*l.* The edifice has been recently restored in most excellent taste, under the direction of the present rector, the Hon. and Rev. W. Cust. The pulpit and stalls in the chancel are singularly curious: they are richly carved in the Flemish style, of about the date of 1684. In the church are several monuments of the Cockayne family, from the year 1527 to 1739: in the north aisle is the tomb of Sir Patrick Home, who died in 1627. The manor-house is also the rectory-house, and stands near the east end of the church.

LANGFORD, on the river Rhee, 2 miles S. from Biggleswade, contains 103 houses, and 631 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a vicarage, value 8*l.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

POTTON, on the borders of Cambridgeshire, 4 miles N.E. from Biggleswade, contains 298 houses, and 1498 inhabitants. The town is situated at the foot of a gentle eminence, and is watered by a branch of the river Ivel, the road to Wisbeach running through the principal street. The market, held on Saturday, is well supplied with all sorts of grain, particularly wheat and barley. There are four annual fairs, viz. a large horse fair on 2nd of February, and on Old Lady-day, Old Midsummer-day, and 26th October for cattle. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 13*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

SANDY, 3 miles N. from Biggleswade, contains 150 houses, and 1178 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Swithin, is a rectory, value 32*l.* 2*s.* 11*d.*: in the chancel are monuments of the Kingsley and Pyne families. Sandy Place is the seat of the Honourable Samuel Ongley. Girtford on the Ivel is a hamlet of this parish; near it is Hasels, the seat of Francis Pym, Esq. Beeston, a hamlet on the opposite side of the river, is partly in this parish. At Chesterfield, near Sandy, many Roman coins, a small mirror of metal, a fibula, and some urns of beautiful red pottery, supposed to be the ancient Samian ware, have been found. On this hill is an encampment, of large dimensions, overlooking the site of a Roman station; whence the name Chesterfield has been derived.

SUTTON, on a branch of the Ivel, one mile S. from Potton, and 3 miles N.E. from Biggleswade, contains 63 houses, and 369 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 20*l.*, in the patronage of St. John's College Oxford: in the chancel are some handsome monuments of the Burgoyne family. Sutton Park is the seat of Sir John Montagu Burgoyne, whose ancestor was created baronet 15th July 1641. A moated site in this park is called John of Gaunt's Castle; but there is no positive evidence that it was ever possessed by the Duke of Lancaster.

TEMPSFORD, at the confluence of the Ouse and Ivel, on the borders of Cambridgeshire, 6 miles N. from Biggleswade, contains 100 houses, and 577 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 24*l.*, in the patronage of the Crown. In the chancel are monuments of the families of Chetwode and Payne. Tempsford Hall is the seat of Sir Charles Payne, Bart.

WRESTLINGWORTH, on the borders of Cambridgeshire, 5 miles N.E. from Biggleswade, contains 81 houses, and 400 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 7*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown.

4. Clifton Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Wixamtree and Biggleswade hundreds; on the south and east by Hertfordshire; and on the west by Flitt hundred.

ARLSEY, or Alderichsey, on the Hiz, near its confluence with the Ivel, 5 miles S. from Biggleswade, and 4 miles N.W. from Baldock, contains 103 houses, and 562 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a vicarage, value 8*l.*: in it are several monuments of the families of Vigerous and Edwards, and of Sir Samuel Brown, barrister, who died in 1665. The font is sculptured with figures of Adam and Eve, the Crucifixion, &c., in compartments. Arlsey House is the seat of — Edwards, Esq. Etonbury, an ancient in-trenchment, is near the road to Baldock.

CAMPTON, or Camelton, 7 miles S.W. from Biggleswade, and one mile from Shefford, contains 69 houses, and 410 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, valued 11*l.* 9*s.* 7*d.*, in the patronage of Sir George Osborn, Bart. In the south aisle are monuments of Sir John and Sir Peter Osborn, successively Lord Treasurers Remembrancers, put up in 1653. In the manor-house, formerly the seat of the Ventris family, the escape from assassination of one of its members is recorded in the following inscription upon a panel, which having received the contents of a musket has never been repaired: "In the year 1645, Sir Charles Ventris, Knight Banneret, created by King Charles for his bravery in the civil wars, was by Oliver's party shot at as he was walking in this room, but happily missed him." Shefford, on the Ivel, is a populous hamlet of this parish, and has four fairs, viz. 23rd January, Easter Monday, 19th May, and 10th October; the two first are considerable marts for sheep and cows.

CHICKSANDS, on the banks of the Ivel, about a mile W. from Shefford, is the site of a priory, founded about the year 1150 by Payne de Beauchamp and Roese his wife, and dedicated to the Blessed Virgin Mary, for nuns and canons of the order of St. Gilbert of Sempringham. The priory was dissolved in 1538, when its revenue was estimated at 21*l.* 3*s.* 5*d.* per annum: the site was granted in 1539 to R. Snow, of whose family the estate was purchased about 1600 by Sir John Osborn, whose grandson was created baronet 11th February, 1661.

Chicksands is extra-parochial, and contains 10 houses, and 56 inhabitants. The seat of Sir John Osborn, Bart. exhibits considerable remains of the conventual buildings; two sides of the cloisters are nearly entire; the quadrangle within is 64 feet by 51 feet 6 inches. A part of the building, now used as a chapel, and some adjoining offices, have groined stone roofs. The south and east fronts of the mansion were erected under the superintendence of Ware, an architect of celebrity in the last century, upon which, improvements were made in a restoration by James Wyatt in 1814. In one of the rooms is the bed on which the Pretender was born; it bears the initials I. A. crowned, and appears to have belonged to King James I. Here are also some curious portraits, including many of the Osborn family; a whole-length of King Edward VI. by Holbein; Oliver Cromwell by Lely; Peter Osborn, Privy Purse to King Edward VI. &c.

CLIFTON, on the river Ivel, 4½ miles S. from Biggleswade, contains 96 houses, and 483 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 20*l.* 2*s.* 11*d.*: in the north aisle is a curious monument of Sir Michael Fisher, lord of the manor, who died in 1549; the sides of it are enriched with tabernacle work; near it is the tomb of his son, who died in his father's life-time.

HENLOW, on the banks of the Rhee, 4 miles S. from Biggleswade, contains 120 houses, and 688 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown: it contains several monuments of the Edwards family, lords of the manor for several generations.

HOLWELL, on the borders of Hertfordshire, 3 miles N. from Hitchin, contains 26 houses, and 179 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 7*l.* 9*s.* 7*d.*

MEPPERSHALL, 2 miles S. from Shefford, and 6½ N.W. from Hitchin, contains 80 houses, and 397 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 22*l.*, in the patronage of St. John's College Cambridge: it contains ancient monuments of the Meppershall, or Meptyshall, and Boteler families, formerly lords of the manor. A part of this parish, including the chapel of St. Thomas, about a mile eastward from the village, is situated in an insulated portion of Hertfordshire: a beam in the dining parlour of the old parsonage-house had carved upon it these lines, alluding to the circumstance of its standing in two counties, which is the case with the present:—

IF YOV • WISH • TO • GO • INTO • HERTFORDSHIRE, HITCH • A • LITTLE • NEARER • THE • FIRE.

Woodhull Grange, northward of the village of Meppershall, formerly belonged to Warden Abbey, and Polehanger to Chicksands priory.

SHITLINGTON, or Sethlingdone, on the borders of Hertfordshire, 4 miles S. from Shefford, and 5 miles N.W. from Hitchin, contains 172 houses, and 964 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 18*l.*, in the patronage of Trinity College Cambridge: it is a large and handsome structure, and contains monuments of the families of Longueville and Briscoe, and an inlaid brass to the memory of Matthew de Asshton, canon of Lincoln, and rector of this parish, who died in 1400. The tower of the church was rebuilt in 1750. Holywell and Lower Stondon are hamlets of the parish, which is partly in Flitt hundred. Aspleybury belongs to Joseph Musgrave, Esq.

STONDON, on the borders of Hertfordshire, 3 miles S. from Shefford, contains 4 houses, and 33 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 6*l.* 6*s.* 10*d.*

STOTFOLD, on the borders of Hertfordshire, 2 miles N.W. from Baldock, contains 123 houses, and 693 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 17*s.* 1*d.*, in the patronage of Trinity College Cambridge.

5. Flitt Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Redborne Stoke and Wixamtree hundreds; on the east by Clifton hundred and Hertfordshire; on the south by Hertfordshire; and on the west by Manshead hundred.

BARTON IN THE CLAY, so called from its situation at the commencement of a clayey soil under Barton Hill, is on the borders of Hertfordshire, 7 miles S.E. from Ampthill, and 6 miles N. from Luton. It contains 122 houses, and 668 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a rectory, value 26*l.* 9*s.* 7*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. The manor formerly belonged to the abbots of Ramsey.

CADDINGTON, 2 miles S.W. from Luton, is chiefly in Hertfordshire, and has been noticed, ante, page 28. The church is in this county; it is dedicated to All Saints, and is a vicarage, value 10*l.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's Cathedral. Markyate Street, a considerable hamlet of this parish, is partly in that of Studham; it is situated about 5 miles from Dunstable, in the road to London. A chapel, founded here by John Coppin of Markyate Cell, by Act of Parliament in 1741, was made a perpetual cure and benefice. Humbershoe is a manor, situated partly in Hertfordshire.

CLOPHILL, 4 miles E. from Ampthill, contains 172 houses, and 838 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 12*l.*, in the patronage of the Countess de Grey: the edifice stands on a hill at a considerable distance northward from the village. The manor belonged to the Barons de Albini, whose castle was situated at Cainhoe, about a mile distant on the southern side of the village. The keep, which is still called the Castle hill, appears to have been a place of considerable strength: it is lofty, and overgrown with coppice-wood. Beadlow is a hamlet on the eastern side of the village.

FLITTON, or Flictham, 3 miles S.E. from Ampthill, contains 95 houses, and 501 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a vicarage, value 11*l.* 7*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Canons of Christ Church Oxford. The edifice was probably built by Reginald Lord Grey, Admiral of England, subsequent to the year 1410, as the arms of Hastings are quartered with his own in the porch. This church has been the burial-place of the noble family of Grey since the reign of Henry VIII.: an aisle adjoining the nave was built by Henry Earl of Kent, in 1605; it contains several fine monuments, besides slabs on the floor. The Duke of Kent also built three additional rooms, in which are monuments of him and his descendants; and in the chancel is a slab, inlaid with brass, in memory of Thomas Hill, receiver-general to three Earls of Kent, who died in 1628, æt. 101. Wrest House has long been the seat of the ancient family of Grey, who have been possessed of the manor from the time of Roger de Grey, who died owner of it in 1353. Henry, last Duke of Kent of this family, dying in 1740, without male issue, the estates descended to his grand-daughter Jemima Marchioness de Grey; and at her decease in 1797, she was succeeded by her eldest daughter Amabella Hume Campbell, Baroness Lucas of Crudwell, a title granted in 1663 to the heirs of John Lord Lucas, whose daughter Mary married Anthony de Grey, eleventh Earl of Kent. Lady Lucas was created Countess de Grey 11th September, 1816. The house is of white stone, with an extensive front; it was much altered by the Marchioness de Grey. The old dining-room, said to have been furnished for the reception of Queen Anne of Denmark, consort of James I., is very curious; the principal suite of rooms contain a number of ancient portraits, including nearly a complete series of the Grey family, and the following, which are of great historical interest: Mary Queen of Scots, 1580, copied from one at Hampton Court; Margaret, daughter of King Henry VII. Queen of James IV. of Scotland; King James I., his Queen, and Henry Prince of Wales, a very fine picture; Lord Chancellor Somers; the Cornaro family, a copy from Titian; Philip Lord Wharton, æt. 26, 1639, Vandyck; Lady Rich, Vandyck; Lord Chancellor Hardwicke, Hoare; Philip Yorke his son, Gainsborough; Sir William Temple, a copy from Lely; Lady Jane Grey; Sir Charles Lucas, Dobson; Thomas Lord Crewe, Lely; Sir Anthony Ben and his Lady, &c. Wrest Park abounds with wood, and is stocked with deer; the gardens and pleasure-grounds, laid out by Broune, are environed by a serpentine lake: from the Hill House, on a steep ascent, is an extensive view; and in another part of the park is an obelisk, which from its elevated situation is conspicuous through a circuit of several miles distance.

Silsoe, or Silvishoe, a populous hamlet of the parish of Flitton, situated in the road from Luton to Bedford, has a fair on the festival of St. Philip and St. James, and another on the 21st December. The petty sessions for the hundred of Flitt are held here occasionally, but chiefly at Luton. The chapel, dedicated to St. James, contains an altar-piece, representing the Adoration of the Shepherds, painted by Mary Lloyd, and presented by her to the chapel.

GRAVENHURST, 5 miles S.E. from Ampthill, and 3 miles S.W. from Shefford, contains 38 houses, and 291 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Giles, is a curacy, in the presentation of the parishioners. John Sabine, Esq., of Ion House, in this parish, was created baronet 22nd March, 1671; the title is now extinct, and the house is the residence of a farmer.

LOWER GRAVENHURST, about a mile S. from the above, contains 10 houses, and 63 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 7l. 12s. 11d., in the patronage of the Crown. In the chancel is the monument of the founder, with this inscription:—

Robert de Bithemore Chivalier, qe fist faire ceste eglise de novele, gist icy. Dieu de saime ait mercy. Amen.

Here are also monuments of the Pigots; that of Benjamin Pigot, who died in 1606, contains a genealogical account of the family.

HAWNES, or Haynes, 4 miles N.E. from Ampthill, contains 147 houses, and 775 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 8l., in the patronage of Sir John Osborn: in the chancel is a monument of Anthony Newdigate, one of the commissioners for the sale of abbey lands, who died in 1568. Queen Anne, consort of James I., was entertained by Sir Robert Newdigate at Hawnes House in July, 1605; the King being then at Houghton Conquest: on the 30th July the whole Court attended divine service in the church.

Hawnes House, the seat of Lord Carteret, has been almost entirely rebuilt, and modernized: it was purchased in 1667 by Sir George Carteret, who was created Lord Carteret of Hawnes in 1681, which title is now extinct; the estates descending to Henry Frederick Thynne, who was created Lord Carteret 29th January, 1784.

HIGHAM GOBION, on the borders of Hertfordshire, 6 miles S.E. from Ampthill, contains 16 houses, and 86 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 8l. 9s. 7d. In the parish church is a monument to the memory of Dr. Edmund Castell, author of Lexicon Heptaglotton, &c., who died in 1685. This village derived its additional name from the family of Gobion, to whom the manor belonged from an early period to the year 1301, when it passed by marriage to the Botelers. The old manor-house is now the residence of a farmer. Sir William Langley, of Higham Gobion, was created baronet 29th May, 1641.

LUTON, on the banks of the river Lea, 31 miles from London, contains 558 houses, and 2986 inhabitants. The market, which is mentioned in Domesday Boke, is on Monday, and is noted for its abundant supply of corn. There are two annual fairs, on 18th April and 18th October, for cattle of all sorts. The petty sessions for the hundred are generally held here, but sometimes at Silsoe. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 35l. 12s. 1d., in the patronage of the Marquis of Bute: it is a very handsome edifice, with a tower, composed of flints and other stones, disposed in chequer work. The chancel was built by John Wheat-hampstead, Abbot of St. Albans, in the 15th century: on the south side of the chancel are four stone stalls, enriched with sculpture; and above the canopies are eight shields of arms, viz. Edward the Confessor, the Kingdom of Mercia, the Abbey of St. Albans, King Offa, Abbot Wheathampstead, &c., with the abbot's motto:—Daffes atundatunt. A chapel on the north side of the chancel is separated from it by two lofty pointed arches, over which are shields of arms of John Lord Wenlock, K.G., Chief Butler of England, who was slain at the battle of Tewkesbury in 1472: it contains the monument of William Wenlock, Prebendary of Brownswood, in St. Paul's Cathedral, and Master of the Hospital at Farleigh, who died in 1392. In the Wenlock chapel are also tombs of the Rotheram and Someries families, but deprived of the brasses. The font, now removed to the south aisle, is environed by a magnificent baptistery of stone, forming a lofty canopy, which is octagonal in plan, with enrichments, in the pointed style of the fourteenth century, and with a groined roof; the design is eminently beautiful, but the workmanship is coarse, and contains variations, particularly in the height of the pinnacles, not easily to be accounted for.

The manor of Luton Hoo was the inheritance of the family of Hoo, said to have been settled there before the Norman Conquest. Sir Robert de Hoo was M.P. for this county in the reign of Edward I. Sir Thomas Hoo, K.G., who was created Lord Hoo of Hoo and Lord Hastings in 1447, died in 1454, without male issue. Anne his daughter brought this manor in marriage to Sir Geffery Boleyn, Lord Mayor of London in 1460; and it is traditionally reported that his great-grand-daughter, Anne Boleyn Queen of Henry VIII., was born here: it was afterwards a seat of the Napiers. Sir Robert Napier of Luton Hoo was created baronet 24th September, 1611: of his family the estate and mansion was purchased by John Earl of Bute, K.G., in 1762.

Luton Park, the chief seat of the Marquis of Bute, stands in an elevated situation at the edge of the Downs, about two miles from the town, in the midst of a well-wooded park. The river Lea, which flows through it, has been enlarged: at the foot of the eminence on which the house is seated, the width of the stream, its islands, and the plantations on its banks, present a most agreeable view, combined as it is with breaks through the distant woods, hollow dales, and groups of fine beech-trees on every side. The park contains about 1500 acres. The mansion, chiefly built from designs by Adam, is large, but deficient in architectural character: the principal rooms, particularly the library, 146 feet in length, the drawing-room and the saloon, are on a magnificent scale. The collection of pictures is very large and valuable, chiefly of the Italian and Flemish schools. Amongst the family portraits is one of John Earl of Bute, when Prime Minister, represented as receiving a despatch from his secretary Charles Jenkinson, afterwards Earl of Liverpool; this is one of Sir Joshua Reynolds's early pictures, and is curious from the character displayed in both the portraits: another of the Princess Dowager of Wales, whole-length, by A. Ramsay, presented by Her Royal Highness to the Earl of Bute. Dr. Johnson, after visiting Luton Park, said to Boswell, "This is one of the places I do not regret having come to see; it is a very stately place indeed. In the house, magnificence is not sacrificed to convenience, nor convenience to magnificence. The library is very splendid; the dignity of the rooms is very great; and the quantity of pictures beyond expectation, beyond hope."

In the chapel, which has been rebuilt by Smirke, is a profusion of very rich oak carving, brought from Tyttenhanger, in Hertfordshire; the whole of this, including very curious details, has been drawn and engraved, as an example to modern architects, by Shaw.

In the parish of Luton are the several hamlets of East and West Hyde, Leagrave, or Lightgrave, Limbury, Biscott, and Stopsley. Great and Little Bramingham, Nether Crawley, Dallowe, Farley, Langley, and Someries, are also in this parish. At Farley, or Farleigh, two miles from Luton, was an ancient hospital, given by King Henry II. to the hospital of Santingfield in Picardy. The estate was afterwards granted by King Henry VI. to King's College Cambridge. King James I., on his progress in 1605, spent a night at Sir John Rotherams, at Farley, near Luton. At Someries is a gatehouse, part of a mansion, said to have been erected by John Lord Wenlock. East Hyde is the seat of R. Hibbert, Esq.; and Stockwood, one mile from Luton, is the seat of John Crawley, Esq.

PULLOX HILL, on an eminence 4 miles S.E. from Ampthill, contains 59 houses, and 475 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 10*s.*, in the patronage of the Countess de Grey. Ubury, or Obury, eastward of the village, is supposed to have belonged to the Abbot of Woburn.

STREATLEY, or Stretly, 5 miles N. from Luton, contains 58 houses, and 309 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Sharpenhoe. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 15*s.* 2*d.*, in the patronage of J. R. Cuthbert, Esq. Edmund Wingate, the celebrated arithmetician, was, it is said, born at Sharpenhoe in 1593; and at this hamlet is a school, founded in 1686 by Richard Norton.

SUNDON, or Soningdon, 4½ miles N.W. from Luton, contains 41 houses, and 387 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of J. R. Cuthbert, Esq.: in the chancel are monuments of the Cheynes family. William Clayton of Sundon was created an Irish Peer by the title of Lord Sundon in 1735. Upper Sundon, northward of the village, is a hamlet of this parish.

6. MANSHEAD HUNDRED

Is bounded on the north by Redborne Stoke hundred; on the east by Flitt hundred; on the south by Hertfordshire and Buckinghamshire; and on the west entirely by Buckinghamshire.

ASPLEY GUISE, 2 miles N. from Woburn, contains 158 houses, and 848 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Botolph, is a rectory, value 15*l.* 16*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the Duke of Bedford: in the chancel is an ancient altar-tomb, with the effigies of a knight in chain armour, and an inlaid brass of one of the Guise families. Sir Edwin Sadlier of Aspley, and of Castle Dinsley in Hertfordshire, was created baronet 5th December 1661. In the church is the monument of Sir Edwin Sadlier, the last baronet of that name, who died in 1719. The addition to the name of the village was derived from its having been the property and chief seat of the Gyses, or Guises, ancestors of the Gloucestershire family of that name. John de Guise was member of Parliament for this county in 1328. Aspley Wood, part of the domain of the Duke of Bedford, is one of the most beautiful and romantic woods in the kingdom.

BATTLEDEN, 3 miles S.E. from Woburn, contains 21 houses, and 151 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 12*l.* 9*s.* 7*d.*, in the patronage of Sir G. O. P. Turner, Bart. Battlesden Park was the seat of Allen Bathurst, Esq., a distinguished character in the reigns of Anne and George I.: he was created Lord Bathurst of Battlesden in 1711; and this seat was the resort of the celebrated constellation of wits, of whom he was the patron and friend. Sir Gregory Page, Bart. purchased it in 1724. Battlesden Park is now the seat of his descendant Sir Gregory Osborne Page Turner, Bart.

CHALGRAVE, 3½ miles N. from Dunstable, contains 145 houses, and 710 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 12*l.*, in the patronage of Richard Gilpin, Esq., of Wingfield. Two ancient altar-tombs, one on each side of the nave, with effigies of knights in armour, have been supposed to belong to the families of Loring, who held the manor in the twelfth century. Sir Nigel Loring, who attended King Edward III. in his glorious campaign in France, and was one of the knights of the garter at the original institution of the order, had the requisite licence to enclose a park at Chalgrave in 1365. He was also founder of a chantry in the church. Wingfield and Tebworth are hamlets of this parish.

DUNSTABLE, or Dunstable, on the borders of Hertfordshire, 20 miles S. from Bedford, and 33 miles from London, contains 329 houses, and 1831 inhabitants. This town, the Durocobrivæ of the Romans, is situated at the junction of the Ikenild and Watling-streets, and consists of four principal streets, intersecting each other at right angles, running nearly in the direction of the cardinal points. It was called Dunstable from its market for wool, or staple on the Downs, near the Chiltern range of hills, an extensive sheep-walk. The town is governed by four constables, and has a weekly market on Wednesday, and annual fairs on Ash Wednesday and 22nd May for horses, and 12th August and 12th November for cattle. Kingsbury, a royal residence, was built here by King Henry I., who kept his Christmas at Dunstable in the year 1123, and here received an embassy from the Earl of Anjou. Houghton Regis, the adjoining parish, is supposed to have been part of the royal demesne. King John is said to have given Kingsbury to the prior and convent of Dunstable in 1204. Henry I., towards the latter end of his reign, built and endowed a priory of Black canons, in honour of St. Peter, whose possessions were valued a little before the Dissolution at 402*l.* 14*s.* 7*d.* per annum. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a rectory, value 70*l.*, in the patronage of the Crown. The present edifice, which contains only the nave of the conventual church, exhibits various styles of architecture; but the interior is chiefly Anglo-Norman, and undoubtedly part of the original structure. The western front is enriched with niches in the early pointed style, and the great western entrance is by a very fine semicircular arched doorway, highly ornamented with sculptured foliage, grotesque heads, &c., but much mutilated. It is said that King Henry VIII. intended to establish a cathedral at Dunstable, and that when the design was relinquished, great part of the conventual church was pulled down. The commissioners for the divorce of Henry VIII. and his queen, Katherine of Arragon, sat at the priory, and the sentence was pronounced by Archbishop Cranmer in the chapel of Our Lady here on the 23rd May, 1533. In the church are several monuments of the families of Dickenson, Aynscombe, Marsh, and Chew, great benefactors to the town. Over the altar is a picture of the Lord's Supper by Sir James Thornhill. The first attempt at theatrical representation in this kingdom is supposed to have been at Dunstable, where the play of the Miracles of St. Katherine was performed under the direction of Geoffroy, a secular priest, afterwards Abbot of St. Albans. About a mile from Dunstable is a circular earth-work, about 2500 feet in circumference, commonly called Maiden Bower, and consisting of a single vallum and ditch.

EATON BRAY, on the banks of the Ouzel, and borders of Buckinghamshire, 4 miles W. from Dunstable, contains 157 houses, and 816 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 12*l.* 16*s.* 3*d.*, in the patronage of Trinity College Cambridge. Sir Edmund Bray, lord of this manor, was summoned to Parliament, as Lord Bray of Eaton Bray, in 1530; the title became extinct by the death of his son John Lord Bray, without issue, in 1557. In the chancel of the church is a monument of Jane, wife of Edmund Lord Bray, who died in 1558; and in the south aisle are the royal arms, and devices of Sir Reginald Bray. In the earlier periods of history the manor of Eaton was possessed by the Cantelupes, Barons of Bergavenny, who built a castle here in 1221, which the chronicle of Dunstable represents as very injurious to that town: there are at present no remains of this castle, or of the mansion of the Lords Bray.

EVERSHOLT, 3 miles E. from Woburn, contains 168 houses, and 870 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a rectory, value 16*l.* 11*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Marchioness of Downshire.

HARLINGTON, 5½ miles S. from Ampthill, contains 78 houses, and 398 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 11*l.*, in the patronage of Henry Vernon, Esq. Woodend is the seat of Francis Penystone, Esq. Sir James Astrey, of Woodend, was a learned lawyer, and published an edition of Spelman's Glossary. Harlington was a seat of the Wingates, and afterwards of John Wingate Jennings, Esq.

HOCKLIFFE, or Hockley in the Hole, 4 miles N.W. from Dunstable, contains 73 houses, and 393 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a rectory, value 16*l.* 9*s.* 7*d.*, in the patronage of R. Gilpin, Esq. The edifice stands on a hill at some distance from the road, and contains monuments of the family of Gilpin.

HOLCUTT, or Hulcote, on the borders of Buckinghamshire, 4 miles N. from Woburn, contains 10 houses, and 62 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a rectory, value 7*l.* 15*s.*: it was rebuilt by Richard Charnock, Esq., three times sheriff for the county, in the reign of Elizabeth, as appears by the inscription on his monument. There are several other monuments of the Charnock family in the church. Sir John Charnock, of Holcut, was created baronet in 1661.

HOUGHTON REGIS, 1½ mile N. from Dunstable, contains 240 houses, and 1283 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 11*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Duke of Bedford: in the chancel is an ancient monument, with the effigies of a knight in armour; it bears the arms of Sewell: there are also several monuments of the Brandreth family. Houghton House is the seat of Henry Brandreth, Esq. The manor-house of Sewell is now the residence of a farmer.

HUSBORN CRAWLEY, 2 miles N. from Woburn, contains 102 houses, and 572 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen, is a vicarage, value 9*l.*, in the patronage of the Duke of Bedford. In the chancel is a monument with the effigies of a knight in armour, under a canopy supported by Doric columns; it has no inscription, but is said to be in memory of one of the Thompson family, who were lords of the manor in the 17th century. In the chronicle of Dunstable, Husborn, or Husebourn, and Crawley, seem to be spoken of as two places, although one parish, the church being at Husborn. Crawley Brook, as it is now termed, might give name to Ousebourn, one of the branches of the Ouse.

LEIGHTON BUSARD, or Bosard, on the river Ouzel and borders of Buckinghamshire, 41 miles from London, and 7 miles N.W. from Dunstable, contains 532 houses, and 2749 inhabitants. The market, one of the most ancient in the county, is held on Tuesday; and besides cattle, corn, and the usual commodities,—lace and straw plat are sold. There are annual fairs on 5th February, Whit-Tuesday, 26th July, and 24th October, for cattle. A show of cattle of all sorts, as well as horses, is held on the second Tuesday in April. In the market-place is an ancient cross, pentagonal in plan, and bearing figures of kings, &c. King Henry II. granted lands here to the Abbess of Fontevrard in Normandy, who established a cell of Cistercian monks at Grovebury, the prior of which was procurator-general for the abbey of Fontevrard in England. The manor was sold, by licence from the Crown, in 1411. Besides the Alien priory, there seems to have been a house of Cistercian monks, which was a cell to Woburn Abbey. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 15*l.*, in the patronage of the Prebendary of Leighton Busard, in Lincoln Cathedral: it is a handsome edifice, and contains monuments of the family of Leigh; amongst which are those of the Hon. Charles Leigh, who died in 1704, and his daughter Lady Altham, who died in 1684: there are monuments also for the families of Wingate, Welles and Wilkes. In the nave is a tablet in memory of John Pulford, A.M., "who made an augmentation to the poor vicarage of Leighton, with a liberality not unworthy the greatest prelate;" he died in 1710. There was a fraternity or guild in the church, part of whose hall is still standing in Broad-street, not far from the cross.

The family of Bosard, from whom the town seems to have derived its additional name, were of consequence in this county, and were knights of the shire in the reigns of Edward II. and Edward III.

Billington, Eggington, Heath and Reach, and Stanbridge, are chapelries of this parish. Clipson is a hamlet. The Grand Junction canal passes on the western side of the town.

MILTON BRYANT, or Bryen, 2½ miles S.E. from Woburn, contains 73 houses, and 346 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a rectory, value 11*l.* 16*s.* 3*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. Robert Fitz-Bryan granted the advowson of the rectory to Merton Abbey in the reign of Henry II. Sir Hugh Inglis of Milton Bryant was created baronet 6th June, 1801. It is now the seat of Sir Robert Harry Inglis, Bart., LL.D. and F.R.S.

POTSGROVE, 2½ miles S. from Woburn, contains 41 houses, and 183 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 10*l.* 19*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of Sir G. O. P. Turner, Bart.: in the chancel are monuments of the Saunders family, formerly of Battlesden. It was one of this family, Sir Saunders Duncombe, a gentleman-pensioner at the court of Charles I., who introduced the sedans or close chairs to this country in the year 1634, for which he obtained a patent, vesting in him and his heirs the sole right of carrying persons up and down in them for a certain term.

SALFORD, on Crawley Brook, or Ousebourn, and on the borders of Buckinghamshire, 4 miles N. from Woburn, contains 64 houses, and 312 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 16*s.* 3*d.*: in the chancel are some ancient monuments; one of them bears the effigies of a cross-legged knight, under an enriched arch.

TILSWORTH, 3½ miles N.W. from Dunstable, contains 50 houses, and 246 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 8*l.*, in the patronage of C. Chester, Esq.: in the chancel are monuments of Sir Henry Chester, K.B., ob. 1666, and of the Fowler family. Sir Anthony Chester, of Tilsworth, was created baronet in 1619. An old mansion, formerly a seat of the Fowlers, and afterwards of the Chesters, is dilapidated; the gate-house remains.

TINGRITH, or Tyngrave, 4 miles E. from Woburn, contains 24 houses, and 155 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a rectory, value 9*l.*: in the chancel is the monument of Robert Hodgson, lord of the manor, who died in 1611. Tingrith House is the seat of Charles Dymoke Willaume, Esq.

TODDINGTON, or Tuddington, 5 miles N. from Dunstable, contains 329 houses, and 1665 inhabitants. It was formerly a market-town. The fairs are five in number: 25th April, the first Monday in June, 4th September, 2nd November, and 16th December, for cattle, &c. The church, dedicated to St. George, is a rectory, value 29*l.* 2*s.* 11*d.*: it is a large and very handsome edifice; a string course, on the exterior, is sculptured with various grotesque figures of animals, &c. In the chancel is a monument of Giles, eldest son of Sir John Bruce, of Winham, Suffolk, who died in 1595. The north and south transepts belong to the lord of the manor. In the south transepts are some ancient monuments of the Peyvre family; one of them is that of a crusader: in the same transept are monuments of Anne, wife of Sir Thomas Cheney, K.G., ob. 1561; Henry Lord Cheney, ob. 1587, and his widow Jane Lady Cheney, ob. 1614. The north transept was the burial-place of the Wentworth family, and contains monuments of Henrietta Lady Wentworth, the Duke of Monmouth's mistress, who died in 1686, and of Lady Maria Wentworth, who died in 1632, aged 18. In the reign of Henry III., Sir Paulinus Peyvre, steward of the royal household, held the manor of Toddington: the house which he had built here is represented to have been like a palace, with a chapel, chambers, and other buildings, covered with lead, which raised the admiration of the beholders: the site of this house is not precisely known. Near the parish church is a mount, called Conger Hill, which seems to have been the keep of a castellated mansion, and there are considerable earth-works near it; this might have been the site. Sir Paulinus Peyvre died in 1251. Mary, daughter and heiress of Thomas, the sixth in descent from Sir Paulinus, married Sir John Broughton, whose daughter and heiress Anne brought the estate in marriage to Sir Thomas Cheney, K.G., Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports. His son Sir Henry was created Lord Cheney of Toddington in 1572; dying in 1587, without issue, his estates devolved to his wife, who was daughter of Thomas Lord Wentworth of Nettlested. In July 1608, King James I. visited Toddington House, which was built by Lord Cheney. The greatest part of this edifice was pulled down by the Earl of Strafford about 1745: it originally occupied four sides of a quadrangle, at each corner of which was a turret; the north and south fronts were 210 feet in length.

TOTTERNHOE, 2 miles W. from Dunstable, contains 89 houses, and 450 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Giles, is a vicarage, value 10*l*. Here are very excellent quarries of freestone, of which most of the principal houses in this and the adjacent counties have been erected for many centuries. The most remarkable earth-work in this county is called Totternhoe Castle; it is situated on the brow of a hill, and consists of a lofty circular mount, with a slight vallum round its base, and a larger one of an irregular form at some distance from it. On the south-east side is an encampment, in the form of a parallelogram, about 500 feet by 250, three sides of which are secured by a vallum and ditch. The view from the mount is very extensive, commanding a long range of the Chiltern hills, the vale of Aylesbury, and the central part of this county.

WESTONING, or Weston Inge, 4 miles S. from Ampthill, contains 125 houses, and 634 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen, is a vicarage, value 9*l*. 17*s*.: it derived its name from William Inge, Chief Justice of the King's Bench, and lord of the manor, in 1377. Worthend is a hamlet of this parish.

WHIPSNAD, on the borders of Hertfordshire, 4 miles S.W. from Dunstable, contains 37 houses, and 199 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen, is a rectory, value 7*l*. 13*s*. 4*d*., in the patronage of the Crown. Shortgrave is a hamlet of this parish.

WOBURN, 15 miles S.W. from Bedford, 9 miles N.W. from Dunstable, and 42 miles from London, contains 310 houses, and 1656 inhabitants. The town consists of one principal street, about one-third of a mile long, having nearly in the centre the Market-hill, at which point Leighton-street and Park-street form a cross. The market is held on Friday; and there are four fairs, 1st January, 23rd March, 13th July, and 6th October. The market-house, rebuilt in 1830, from designs by Blore, is a remarkably appropriate and pleasing edifice. The petty sessions for the hundred are held in this town; and here is a school, originally endowed by Francis Earl of Bedford in 1582. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Duke of Bedford: this edifice, built by Robert Hobbs, the last Abbot of Woburn, has also been restored under the direction of Blore. The tower is peculiarly elegant; on its summit is an octangular lantern, surmounted by a large vane; other small vanes are placed on the pinnacles of the towers. In the chancel is the monument of Sir Francis Staunton, sheriff of this county, who died in 1635; and in the south aisle is the tomb of John, son of John Morton of Lovelsbury, who died in 1394; and a tablet in memory of the wife of Henry Seymour, Esq. Sergeant of Arms. Hugh de Bolebec, in 1145, founded an abbey of Cistercian monks, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, near the town of Woburn, the revenue of which was 430*l*. 13*s*. 11*d*., at the Dissolution. Its site, with great part of the lands with which it was endowed, was granted in 1547 to John Lord Russell. There are now no remains of the conventual buildings; but it has been ever since the principal seat of the noble family of Russell.

The present mansion was built from designs by Flitcroft about the year 1745, and altered by Holland about 1797 for Francis Duke of Bedford. The principal front is of the Ionic order, with rustic basement; the offices, also by Holland, form two buildings at a small distance from the house. In the hall is a mosaic pavement composed of fragments of a much larger one, which was discovered on the site of an ancient Roman villa, at the distance of a mile from Rome, and near the Porta Portese, in the year 1823. Lord G. W. Russell, then resident at that city, purchased the greater part of these remains, and brought them to Woburn Abbey. This noble pile is celebrated for its extensive collection of pictures; and amongst those which have been recently added, are the trial of Lord William Russell, by Hayter; Chevy Chase, by Landseer; the death of the Regent Murray, by Allen; a Landscape composition, by Linton; a view near Hastings, by Collins; and Trees in Woburn Park, by Strutt. One room contains an unusually fine series of twenty-four views in Venice, by Canaletti: they are mostly of a small size; but on the east and west sides are two larger than the rest, which represent the Gran Canale at the time of an aquatic procession; the others contain different views of the piazza, church, and tower of St. Mark, the Rialto, the palaces, halls, and all the principal features of the "Queen of the Adriatic." From these pictures, by Canaletti, the room is called the Venetian drawing-room. The sculpture-gallery contains the Woburn Abbey marbles, an account of which has been printed for private distribution by the present Duke of Bedford. The gallery is internally 138 feet long, 25 feet broad, 22 feet 7 inches high in the wings, and about 30 in the centre: the latter is surmounted by a flat dome, and separated from the sides by eight antique marble columns, each shaft consisting of one piece, about 13 feet 6 inches high, and crowned with a white marble capital of the Composite order, very richly foliated; the shafts and capitals were all found in excavations made at Rome: of the columns, two are of breccia Africana, two of a variegated kind of alabaster, two of Cipollino marble, and two of Bigio; the entablatures are also enriched; the whole presenting two of the finest screens in the kingdom. On the south side is the Apollo Belvidere, and opposite to it a semicircular recess with a reticulated ceiling, containing the Lanti vase. This large and magnificent vase, of Parian marble, and of the finest Greek sculpture, was found in excavations made in the ruins of Hadrian's villa, at Tivoli, and was brought to England by Lord Cawdor: it is of the lotus form, and is one of the most noble specimens of antique decoration of the kind yet discovered. The diameter of this vase is 6 feet 3 inches; and its height, exclusive of the plinth on which it stands, 6 feet. The circle beneath the bowl has a bold Ionic moulding, as has also the rim. Eight grotesque masks decorate the bowl, in extremely bold relief, each connected with the festivals of Bacchus; and the vase has two magnificent handles, channelled throughout, and ornamented with fennel, a plant dedicated to Bacchus.

The western wing, or Temple of the Graces, was erected by the present Duke in the year 1818, to receive the splendid group by Canova. On the architrave of the portal is an inscription, by Samuel Rogers, Esq., paraphrased from the 14th Olympic of Pindar:

Approach with reverence; there are those within Whose dwelling-place is Heaven, daughters of Jove;
From them flow all the decencies of life;
Without them nothing pleases. Virtue's self Admired, not loved. And those on whom they smile,
Great though they be, and beautiful, and wise,
Shine forth with double lustre.

The cella of the temple is circular, and measures 15 feet in diameter; the walls are incrustated with yellow scagliola, and the floor is paved in mosaic, with variegated Devonshire marbles, in circular ornaments; in the centre is placed the group of the Graces, Aglaia, Thalia, and Euphrosyne, on an antique circular altar. The eastern end of the gallery, or Temple of Liberty, contains a select collection of Greek statuary; and amongst the works of modern art is the celebrated statue of Psyche, by Westmacott.

Woburn park is surrounded by a wall eight feet high: it is large and finely diversified, abounding with wood; it affords many delightful prospects of forest scenery; and the detached pieces of water are united so as to form a sufficient expanse, bounded by flourishing plantations. On the south side of the mansion, a covered walk leads to the green-house, containing a great variety of valuable plants: it has a frontage of 85 feet, and was designed by Sir Jeffery Wyatville.

In the garden is a fine bust of the late Charles James Fox, on a pedestal, with an inscription by the late Duchess of Devonshire. The extensive domain is peculiarly characterized by the commodious farms which surround it.

7. Redborne Stoke Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Willey hundred and Bedford liberty; on the east by Wixamtree hundred and Flitt hundred; on the south by Manshead hundred; and on the west by Buckinghamshire.

AMPTHILL, 8 miles S. from Bedford, and 45 from London, contains 295 houses, and 1527 inhabitants. This town, nearly in the centre of the county, is pleasantly situated between two hills, and consists of two principal streets crossing each other at right angles; in the centre of this point is an obelisk, erected in 1785 by the Earl of Upper Ossory. The market is on Thursday, which is considerable for corn; and the fairs now kept are on the 4th May and on St. Andrew's-day. The petty sessions for the hundred are held here; but there is no town-hall, and the court of the Honor of Ampthill is held in the moot-house, which is small. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a rectory, value 10*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of Lord Holland. The edifice contains little that is remarkable; the painted glass, containing the effigies of Lord Fanhope and the Duchess of Exeter, said to have been in the eastern window of the aisle, is removed. There is a monument of Robert Nicolls of Ampthill Park, who, being in attendance on the Duke of York, was killed on board his ship in Southwold Bay, in 1672. A cannon-ball, said to have occasioned his death, is inlaid in the marble of the pediment with this inscription, "Instrumentum mortis et immortalitatis." About a mile from the town is a hospital, founded by John Cross in 1690, of which the Bishop of Oxford and the Vice Chancellor of the university are visitors.

Ampthill Park is the seat of Lord Holland. In the early periods of English history, this rich and fertile domain, in the very centre of the county of Bedford, was held by the baronial family of Poinz. Nicholas Poinz, and Joan his wife, in the third year of the reign of Henry III., obtained the King's licence for a market every Tuesday, at their manor of Ampthill. Sir John Cornwall Lord Fanhope, K.G., who married Elizabeth of Lancaster, Duchess of Exeter, sister to King Henry IV., held the several manors of Ampthill, Millbrooke, Houghton, Tingrith, Flitwick, and Pelling, all by the King's gift. He built a large house on this estate, which reverting to the Crown was granted by Edward IV. to Edmund Lord Grey of Ruthin, afterwards created Earl of Kent; his grandson Richard, third Earl of Kent, having much wasted his estate, this mansion was made over to King Henry VIII., whose palace it then became. In the twenty-third year of his reign he erected the manor into "The Honor of Ampthill;" and in Leland's description, it is denominated the "Castelle" of Ampthill, in which castle Queen Katherine of Arragon resided during the time her divorce was in agitation before commissioners at Dunstable. The Queen removed hence to Kimbolton, where she died in 1536. There exists a plan of this castle, which Queen Katherine inhabited, taken about the year 1619, a short time before it was pulled down. King Charles II. in 1661 granted the whole to John Ashburnham, Esq., who was created Lord Ashburnham in 1698: he built the present mansion, which has all the stately characteristics of that magnificent period; every part is lofty and imposing: it consists of two stories, surmounted by a high roof, and has wings containing the offices. The house and estate were sold about 1726 to Richard Viscount Fitzwilliam, of whom it was purchased in 1736 by Anne Lady Gowran, the grandmother of the late Earl of Upper Ossory. The mansion, after it came into the possession of the Earl of Upper Ossory, underwent alterations, which were adopted with classical taste: the building, of red brick, is now cased with a composition resembling stone, having treillage on the basement story. In the tympanum of the pediment, on the principal front, are the arms of Fitz Patrick, surmounted by an Earl's coronet. The entrance is by an ascent of two flights of steps, and over the door is a bust. On a pedestal in front of the house is a large figure of the celebrated dog of Alcibiades. The various apartments contain many fine pictures and ancient marbles, besides a library and cabinet of natural history. The gardens, beautifully diversified, command views of many of the remarkable scenes in the grounds, from which they are separated by a ha-ha fence. In 1819 a poem, descriptive of the scenery, was published under the title of "Ampthill Park," by Henry Luttrell, Esq.

On an eminence, the site of the ancient castle, there now stands a cross, erected at the instigation of the Earl of Orford. The cross was designed by Essex; it is octagonal, and upon three steps, bearing at the intersection the arms of France and England quarterly, impaling Castile and Leon quarterly. On the south side of the base is inscribed "Johannes Fitz Patrick, Comes de Upper Ossory, posuit 1773;" and on the north side,—

"In days of old here Ampthill's towers were seen,
The mournful refuge of an injured Queen;
Here flowed her pure, but unavailing tears,
Here blinded zeal sustained her sinking years;

Yet freedom hence her radiant banners waved,
And love aveng'd a realm by priests enslav'd:
From Katherine's wrongs a nation's bliss was spread,
And Luther's light from Henry's lawless bed."—H. W.

The grounds abound with fine old standard trees, and large plantations, and were enlarged by the addition of the demesne of Houghton, by exchange with the Duke of Bedford, for Liddington, which is about three miles distant.

CRANFIELD, on the borders of Buckinghamshire, 6 miles N.W. from Ampthill, contains 166 houses, and 1153 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a rectory, value 33*l.* 2*s.* 1*d.* The manor was granted in 1621 to Sir Lionel Cranfield, who was the same year created Lord Cranfield, taking his title from this place.

ELSTOW, or Helenstow, on a branch of the Ouse, 2 miles S. from Bedford, contains 102 houses, and 548 inhabitants. Here are annual fairs on the 15th and 16th May, and 5th and 6th December. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary and St. Helen, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 9*s.*, in the patronage of W. H. Whitbread, Esq. This edifice is almost all that remains of the abbey, and retains considerable traces of the original structure; the northern doorway is of Anglo-Norman architecture, and some of the pillars are square and very massive; most of the arches are semicircular. At the south-western angle is a small building, with a groined roof, supported in the centre by an octagonal pillar. In the south aisle of the chancel is the tomb, with an effigy, in brass, of Elizabeth Hervey, the last abbess; and in the church are monuments of the families of Crompton, Lovett, and Hillersdon.

Judith Countess of Huntingdon, in the reign of William the Conqueror, founded an abbey here for Benedictine nuns, which was dedicated to the Holy Trinity, the Virgin Mary, and St. Helen; its revenues when dissolved were estimated at 234*l.* 12*s.* 11*d.* per annum. The site was granted in 1553 to Sir Humphrey Radcliffe, who resided in the abbey, and died in 1566, as appears by his monument in the chancel of the church. In the reign of Charles I. the estate belonged to the family of Hillersdon, who built a large mansion near the church, great part of which has been pulled down, and the estate sold to S. Whitbread, Esq., in 1792. John Bunyan, author of the Pilgrim's Progress, was born at Elstow in 1628.

FLITWICK, on the banks of the river Ivel, 3 miles S. from Ampthill, contains 92 houses, and 489 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 17*s.*, in the patronage of Lord Holland. At Rokesac, or Ruxor, in this parish, was a priory, which appears to have been a cell to that of Dunstable. It is probable that the monks were removed long before the Reformation: the site is moated, but there are no remains of ancient buildings. Prestley, a manor in this parish, was kept by Francis Duke of Bedford for the purpose of his agricultural experiments.

HOUGHTON CONQUEST, 2 miles N. from Ampthill, contains 142 houses, and 651 inhabitants. A free-school and an alms-house were founded here by Sir Francis Clarke, a great benefactor to Sidney Sussex College in Cambridge, who had a seat in this parish, where he died in 1632. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 15*l.* 19*s.* 2*d.*, in the patronage of St. John's College Cambridge: it contains some monuments of the Conquest family, who possessed the manor before the year 1298, and whence the additional name of the village is derived. In the chancel is the monument of the Rev. Thomas Archer, rector, who died in 1631; he is represented in canonicals, in his pulpit, with a book on a cushion before him: also the monument of Dr. Zachary Grey, rector, and editor of Hudibras, who died in 1766. Houghton Bury, the seat of the Conquests, is of brick and timber, with grotesque figures carved in wood ornamenting the eaves: it is now a farm-house.

Houghton Park house forms a fine picturesque ruin: it was built by Mary, the celebrated Countess of Pembroke, daughter of Sir Henry Sidney, K.G., and wife of the second Earl of Pembroke, who held the park under the Crown during her widowhood. In 1630 Houghton Park was granted to Robert Lord Bruce, created Viscount Bruce of Ampthill, and Earl of Aylesbury in 1664: he was also made steward of the Honor of Ampthill. In 1794 the house was unroofed and reduced to a shell, when most of the materials were used in rebuilding the Swan Inn at Bedford. The ruins of the house stand on an elevated spot, at the end of a grove, which reaches into the vale of Bedford. On the frieze are still various monograms and devices of the families of Sidney and Dudley.

KEMPSTON, 3 miles S.W. from Bedford, contains 273 houses, and 1419 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 12*l*. Kempston Bury is the seat of William Long, Esq. Hardwick is a hamlet of this parish.

LIDLINGTON, or Litlington, 3 miles W. from Ampthill, contains 137 houses, and 739 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 11*l*., in the patronage of Lord Holland. In the chancel is a slab, inlaid with brass, in memory of one of the Goldington family. Lidlington Park belonged to the family of Chester, and is now the property of the Duke of Bedford.

MARSTON MORTEYNE, 4 miles N.W. from Ampthill, contains 172 houses, and 899 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 33*l*. 17*s*. 3*d*., in the patronage of St. John's College Cambridge; it is a handsome building: the tower, which is massive, is detached from the body. In the chancel is an altar-tomb in memory of Thomas Reynes, lord of the manor, who died in 1451, and his wife Alice. The Mortheyne family held this manor previously for many years under the Barons Cainhoe, whence the present addition to the name of the village. There are also several monuments of the family of Snagg, in the church. Nether Shelton and Wroxill are hamlets of this parish.

MAULDEN, 2 miles E. from Ampthill, contains 195 houses, and 1017 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 15*l*. 9*s*. 7*d*., in the patronage of the Earl of Aylesbury. In the chancel are some monuments of the family of Faldo, who were settled here before the reign of Edward III. Adjoining the church is an octagonal mausoleum, erected in 1656, by Thomas Earl of Elgin, in memory of his Countess Diana, daughter of Lord Burghley; the mausoleum is surrounded by niches, one only of which is occupied by the statue of the Earl, who died in 1663: here is also a bust of Edward, eldest son of Robert Lord Bruce. Beneath the whole is a columbarium or burial-place of the Earl of Aylesbury's family. Pomfret, the poet, was rector of this parish: he died in 1703.

MILLBROOK, a mile W. from Ampthill, contains 76 houses, and 405 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 9*l*. 16*s*. 3*d*., in the patronage of Lord Holland: it stands on a hill, which overhangs the village; and from the churchyard is an extensive prospect over the vale of Bedford. In the church window are the arms of Sir John Cornwall Lord Fanhope, K. G., who in 1442 was created Lord Millbrook. Here was formerly a cell of Benedictine monks, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen, belonging to the abbey of St. Alban's, which was removed about 1119 to Moddry, or Beaulieu, in Hertfordshire.

RIDGMONT, or Rugemont, 3 miles N.E. from Woburn, contains 161 houses, and 810 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 9*l*., in the patronage of the Duke of Bedford. —Rugemont, or the Red Hill, is a name very appropriate to the situation and the colour of the soil here. At Segenhoe was anciently a castle, which existed in 1276, and is supposed to have been a seat of the Barons of Wahull or Odell. Ridgmont House is the seat of Potter Macqueen, Esq. Brogborough Park and Bickerings Park are in this parish.

STEPPINGLEY, 3 miles S.W. from Ampthill, contains 56 houses, and 323 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is a rectory, value 6*l*. 16*s*. 3*d*., in the patronage of the Duke of Bedford, Steppingley Park is the seat of John Parker, Esq.

WILSHAMSTEAD, or Williamsted, 4 miles S. from Bedford, contains 90 houses, and 749 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 9*l*. 9*s*. 7*d*., in the patronage of Lord Carteret.

WOOTTON, on the borders of Buckinghamshire, 5 miles S.W. from Bedford, contains 178 houses, and 244 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 13*l*. 6*s*. 8*d*. In the chancel are several tombs of the Monnoux family; amongst which are those of all the baronets, and of Lieutenant Monnoux, who was killed in the action with the Duke of Monmouth's army, in 1685: his body was buried at Chard, in Somersetshire, but afterwards was removed here. Early in the 17th century the manor became the property of this family; and Sir Humphrey Monnoux, of Wootton, was created baronet 4th December, 1660.

8. Stodden Hundred,

In the northern part of the county, is bounded on the north-west by Northamptonshire; on the north-east by Huntingdonshire; and on the south by Willey hundred and Barford hundred.

BOLNHURST, 8 miles N.E. from Bedford, contains 38 houses, and 264 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Dunstan, is a rectory, value 9*l*. In the chancel are the monument of Sir John Franklin, of Maverns, one of the Masters in Chancery, who died in 1707, and several other memorials of this family.

CLAPHAM, in a detached portion of this hundred, on the banks of the Ouse, 2 miles N.W. from Bedford, contains 33 houses, and 204 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Thomas à Becket, is a vicarage, value 5*l*. 13*s*. 4*d*., in the patronage of the Earl of Ashburnham, who is lord of the manor; but the manor-house, once the residence of Sir Philip Warwick, is now a farm-house.

DEAN, 4 miles W. from Kimbolton, contains 99 houses, and 479 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Dean and Chapter of Worcester Cathedral. Over or Upper Dean is a hamlet of this parish.

KEYSOE, 4 miles S.W. from Kimbolton, contains 118 houses, and 649 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 8*l*., in the patronage of Trinity College Cambridge: on the outside of the church is a tablet, commemorating the providential escape of a man who fell from the top of a spire.

KNOTTING, on the borders of Northamptonshire, 11 miles N. from Bedford, contains 27 houses, and 135 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, is a rectory, value 10*l*. 6*s*. 8*d*., in the patronage of the Duke of Bedford.

MELCHBOURN, on the borders of Northamptonshire, and 5 miles W. from Kimbolton, in Huntingdonshire, contains 52 houses, and 244 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 5*l*., in the patronage of Lord St. John. Here was a preceptory of Knights Hospitallers, of the order of St. John of Jerusalem, founded by Alice Countess of Pembroke in the reign of Henry I.: it was valued at 241*l*. 9*s*. 10*d*. per annum; and upon its suppression was granted by Queen Elizabeth to the first Earl of Bedford. Melchbourn Park is the seat of Lord St. John of Bletshoe. The house contains a few family pictures, amongst which is that of Oliver, first Lord St. John of Bletshoe, by A. R. Bronckorst, 1578. In the gardens are several hot-houses and conservatories for the culture of exotics.

MILTON ERNEST, in a detached portion of this hundred, 5 miles N.W. from Bedford, contains 72 houses and 364 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 7*l*. 6*s*. 8*d*. In the chancel are monuments of the families of Turnor and Rolt, of Bassets. Sir Edmund Turnor founded an alms-house here in 1695. The name of the village is derived from the family of Erneys, or Ernest, who possessed the manor from the year 1316 to 1542, when it passed to that of Turnor, by marriage with the heiress of Sir Walter Ernest.

OAKLEY, or Ockley Reynes, on the banks of the Ouse, in a detached portion of this hundred, 4 miles N.W. from Bedford, contains 99 houses, and 486 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 8*l*. 14*s*. 9*d*., in the patronage of Eton College. It appears to have been built by one of the family of Reynes, lords of the manor, under Lord Roos, in the fourteenth century. The tomb of the founder is under an arch on the south side of the chancel. Oakley House, the seat of the Marquis of Tavistock, is pleasantly situated on the northern bank of the river: the garden, laid out in the French taste, is kept with such order as to present a character of elegance and beauty; the lawn is diversified with beds or baskets of roses, which are also placed amidst rock-work, and the paths are conducted round various spots, gay with profusion of rare plants. In other parts the garden is more regular in its plan; and on a pedestal is a gilded sphere, forming the centre of a circular treillage, covered with woodbines, jessamines, and several kinds of creeping plants. Westward of the house are fine ash, chestnut and other trees, feathering down to the turf.

PERTENHALL, on the borders of Huntingdonshire, 2 miles S.W. from Kimbolton, contains 67 houses, and 324 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a rectory, value 18*l*. In the church is the monument of a crusader, with his effigies in stone. An estate in the parish, called the Knights Templars, is the site of a moated mansion.

RISLEY, or Riseley, 10½ miles N. from Bedford, and 5½ S.W. from Kimbolton, contains 165 houses, and 790 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 8*l*. 7*s*. 6*d*., in the patronage of Lord St. John.

SHELTON, on the borders of Northamptonshire, 4½ miles W. from Kimbolton, contains 23 houses, and 129 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 13*l*.

LITTLE STAUGHTON, or Stoughton, on the borders of Huntingdonshire, 3 miles S. from Kimbolton, contains 77 houses, and 406 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 13*l*. 8*s*. 4*d*., in the patronage of Christ Church Oxford: in the chancel are monuments of the family of Gery, of Bushmead. Great Staughton, the adjoining parish, is in Huntingdonshire.

TILBROOK, on a branch of the Ouse and on the borders of Huntingdonshire, 2 miles N.W. from Kimbolton, contains 56 houses, and 297 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 13*l*. 10*s*., in the patronage of Lord St. John.

YILDEN, or Yelden, anciently Ivelden, on the borders of Northamptonshire, 3½ miles S.E. from Higham Ferrers, contains 40 houses, and 279 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 13*l*. 13*s*. 4*d*. Yilden Castle was the seat of the Barons Traili, who held it till 1360 or later. The site is called the Castle-field.

9. Willey Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Stodden hundred and Northamptonshire; on the east by Barford hundred, a detached portion of Stodden hundred, and by Bedford liberty; on the south it is bounded by Redborne Stoke hundred; and on the west by Northamptonshire and Buckinghamshire.

BIDDENHAM, on the river Ouse, 2 miles W. from Bedford, contains 55 houses, and 393 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a vicarage, value 8*l*.: in the chancel are several monuments of the family of Boteler, who were settled at Biddenham for ten generations.

BLETSHOE, 6 miles N.W. from Bedford, contains 63 houses, and 383 inhabitants. The petty sessions for the hundreds of Barford, Stodden, and Willey are held here occasionally, but chiefly at Harold. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 17*l*., in the patronage of Lord St. John of Bletshoe; the north aisle is the burial-place of that noble family, and contains a monument of Sir John St. John, father of Oliver the first lord: he was brought up by Margaret Countess of Richmond, with her grandson King Henry VIII., who made him guardian of his daughters, the Princesses Mary and Elizabeth; he died in the office of Chamberlain to Queen Elizabeth. In the same aisle is a monument of Frances Countess of Bolingbroke, daughter of William Duke of Newcastle. Part of the ancient mansion of the Lords St. John of Bletshoe still remains, and is the residence of a farmer. Vestiges sufficient to denote the site of a castle are plainly discernible near the house: this probably was the seat of Sir Roger de Beauchamp, Chamberlain to Edward III., who married the daughter of John de Patshull, who is supposed to have erected it in 1327. Sir Roger was summoned to Parliament in 1373, as Lord Beauchamp of Bletshoe.

BROMHAM, on the river Ouse, 4 miles N.W. from Bedford, contains 57 houses, and 298 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Owen, is a vicarage, value 8*l*., in the patronage of Eton College: in the chancel is a monument of the first Lord Trevor, Lord Privy Seal and President of the Council, who died in 1730; and another of John, third Lord Trevor, who died in 1764, designed by Hoare: on the pavement are brasses of Sir John Dyve; his mother, who was daughter and heiress of Thomas Wylde, lord of the manor of Bromham; and his wife Isabel, daughter and heiress of Sir Ralph Hastings. In the north aisle is also a monument of John Dyve, Esq. Bromham Hall, the seat of Viscountess Hampden, stands in a small park, beautifully situated.

CARLTON, 8 miles N.W. from Bedford, contains 88 houses, and 429 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 15*l*. 6*s*. 8*d*.

CHELLINGTON, 8 miles N.W. from Bedford, contains 32 houses, and 121 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a rectory, value 10*l*. It is situated at a distance from the village, on a hill which commands a fine view towards Odell Castle, Harrold, and the river Ouse.

FARNDISH, on the borders of Northamptonshire, 4½ miles S.W. from Higham Ferrers, contains 14 houses, and 73 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 10*l*.

FELMERSHAM, on the river Ouse, 7 miles N.E. from Bedford, contains 43 houses, and 222 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a vicarage, value 13*l*. 13*s*. 4*d*., in the patronage of Trinity College Cambridge. The west end of the edifice affords a curious specimen of the earliest pointed architecture; and between the nave and the chancel is a richly carved screen. Radwell is a hamlet of this parish. The manor-house is very ancient; in the windows of the hall are the arms of the family of Radwell.

HARROLD, or Harold, anciently Harwood, on the river Ouse, and borders of Northamptonshire, 8 miles N.W. from Bedford, contains 194 houses, and 939 inhabitants. The town has a market on Thursday; and annual fairs on Tuesday before the 12th May; Tuesday before the 5th July; and Tuesday before the 10th October. The petty sessions for the hundreds of Barford, Stodden, and Willey are chiefly held here, but sometimes at Bletshoe. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 8*l*., in the patronage of the Countess De Grey: in the chancel are monuments of the families of Boteler and Aston. Sampson Le Fort, in the year 1150, founded a priory here, dedicated to St. Peter, which was latterly of the order of St. Austin; its revenues were estimated at 40*l*. 18*s*. 2*d*. per annum: the site was granted in 1544 to William Lord Parr, and in 1555 to John Cheney and William Duncombe. The only part of the conventual building which remains is the refectory, known by the name of the Hall Barn. Over the river Ouse here is a bridge with a long causeway.

ODELL, on the river Ouse, one mile below Harrold, and 9 miles N.W. from Bedford, contains 65 houses, and 439 inhabitants. A fair is held annually here on the Thursday and Friday in Whitsun-week. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 19*l*., in the patronage of T. Alston, Esq.: in the chancel are several monuments of the family of the patron. Odell Castle, the seat of T. Alston, Esq., stands on an eminence, and commands a beautiful view of the river Ouse, and the adjacent country: it is chiefly modern. Odell, Wahul, or Wodhull, was the seat of the ancient Barons De Wahul. Sir Thomas Alston, of Odell, was created baronet in 1642.

PAVENHAM, or Pabenham, 6 miles N.W. from Bedford, contains 92 houses, and 455 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a vicarage, united to Felmersham, in the patronage of Trinity College Cambridge. Stafford-bridge, over the Ouse, with a causeway of thirty-five arches, in the road to Oakley, is in this parish.

PUDDINGTON, or Podington, 12 miles N.W. from Bedford, and 4½ miles S.W. from Higham Ferrers, in Northamptonshire, contains 85 houses, and 581 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 7*l*. 6*s*. 8*d*.: in the chancel are monuments of the families of Payne, Child, and Orlebar. The site of the ancient manor-house, which appears to have been a castellated mansion, is now a farmer's residence. Hinwick House, built in 1710, is the seat of Richard Orlebar, Esq.; and Hinwick Hall, of—Wagstaff, Esq.

SHARNBROOK, on a branch of the Ouse, 9 miles N.W. from Bedford, contains 132 houses, and 691 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a vicarage, value 8*l.*, in the patronage of the Crown: in the chancel are monuments of the families of Boteler and Antonie. Colworth House, one of the most elegant in the county, the seat of Dr. Fiott Lee, was built by John Antonie, chief clerk of the Court of King's Bench. His descendant William Lee Antonie, Esq., M.P., died at Colworth House, in 1815.

SOULDROP, or Southdrop, on the borders of Northamptonshire, 10½ miles N.W. from Bedford, and 5 miles S. from Higham Ferrers, contains 37 houses, and 223 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 10*l.*, in the patronage of the Duke of Bedford. It was rebuilt about 20 years ago, excepting the tower and spire, which being situated on high ground, is a conspicuous object for several miles round.

STAGSDEN, on the borders of Buckinghamshire, 5 miles W. from Bedford, contains 85 houses, and 542 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Leonard, is a vicarage, value 8*l.*, in the patronage of Viscountess Hampden.

STEVINGTON, or Steventon, 6 miles N.W. from Bedford, contains 103 houses, and 485 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 12*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Duke of Bedford. In the centre of the village is the shaft of an ancient cross, placed on an ascent of steps; but of Steventon Castle, formerly a seat of the Wake family, there are no remains.

THURLEIGH, or Thurley, 6 miles N. from Bedford, contains 87 houses, and 477 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a vicarage, value 9*l.* Near the churchyard is a circular mount, with an entrenchment, called Bury Hill, supposed to be the site of an ancient mansion of John De Hervey, ancestor of the Marquis of Bristol.

TURVEY, on the borders of Buckinghamshire, 8 miles W. from Bedford, contains 182 houses, and 882 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 16*l.*: in the chancel are the monuments of Sir John Mordaunt, Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, who died in 1504, and of the three first Lords Mordaunt, of Turvey. Charles Earl of Peterborough was also buried here, but without any memorial. Turvey Hall is now a farmer's residence. Turvey Abbey is another seat in the parish.

WYMINGTON, or Wimington, on the borders of Northamptonshire, 3 miles S. from Higham Ferrers, contains 51 houses, and 262 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is a rectory, value 10*l.* The edifice was built by John Curteys, Mayor of the Staple at Calais, and lord of the manor, who died in 1391, and is buried in the church. In the chancel is the tomb of Sir Thomas Bromflete, Cup-bearer to King Henry V., who died in 1430.

10. Wixhamtree Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Barford hundred; on the east by Biggleswade hundred; and on the south by Flitt and Clifton hundreds; and on the west by Redbourn Stoke hundred.

BLUNHAM, on the river Ivel, 8 miles E. from Bedford, contains 96 houses, and 540 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Edmund, is a rectory, value 46*l.* 2*s.* 11*d.*, in the patronage of the Countess de Grey: in the chancel is the monument of Lady Susan Longueville, daughter and heiress of Charles Earl of Kent, who carried the barony of Grey of Ruthin into the family of Longueville, afterwards Earls of Sussex. There are also monuments of the Longuevilles, and of the family of Bromsall, one of whom served the office of sheriff of the county in 1650, and was instrumental in preserving the Cottonian Library, deposited at Stratton, during the civil war. Mogerhanger is a hamlet of this parish. Mogerhanger House is the seat of Stephen Thornton, Esq.

CARDINGTON, 2½ miles S.E. from Bedford, contains 99 houses, and 606 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 17*s.*, in the patronage of Trinity College Cambridge. In it is a tablet in memory of John Howard the philanthropist, who died at Cherson in Tartary in 1794; and a monument by Bacon to Samuel Whitbread, Esq.: there are also other monuments of the Whitbread family, and of the Blundells. On the south side of the chancel is a monument of Sir William Gascoigne; and on the north side is one of Sir Gerard Hervey, who died in 1638. East Cotts is a chapelry of this parish, and includes Cotton End, Harrowden, and Fenlake.

COPLE, 3½ miles E. from Bedford, contains 94 houses, and 524 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 17*s.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Canonry of Christ Church Oxford: in the chancel are two altar-tombs, with inlaid brass figures, in memory of Sir Walter Luke, Justice of the Common Pleas, who died in 1544; and Nicholas Luke, Baron of the Exchequer, who died in 1563. Sir Walter's lady was Anne Lancelyn, nurse to King Henry VIII. Sir Oliver Luke of Wood End and his son Sir Samuel were both in the service of the Parliament during the civil war: the last has attained celebrity as the supposed original of Butler's Hudibras. He died in 1670, and is buried here. Wood End is now a farm-house.

NORTHILL, anciently North Yevel, 3 miles W. from Biggleswade, contains 77 houses, and 391 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Ickwell. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, in the patronage of the Grocers' Company, London: it is a large and handsome structure, built in the beginning of Henry IVth's reign, and was made collegiate by Sir Gerard Braybroke, one of Sir John Traill's executors. The lands belonging to this college, valued at 61*l.* 5*s.* 3*d.* per annum, were granted in 1548 to Sir William Fitz William. In the chancel are monuments of the Harveys of Ickwellbury: the eastern window contains the royal arms, those of the Grocers' Company, and of several of their masters and wardens, &c. by J. Oliver. Thorncote, Hatch, Brook End, Budnor, and part of Beeston, are hamlets; also Upper and Lower Caldicotts. Ickwellbury is the seat of John Harvey, Esq.

OLD WARDEN, 4 miles W. from Biggleswade, contains 100 houses, and 670 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Leonard, is a vicarage, value 25*l.* 1*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of W. H. Whitbread, Esq.: in one of the windows of the church is a figure of an abbot of Warden; and in the chancel is the monument of Sir Samuel Angley, who died in 1726. The abbey of Warden or De Sartis was founded in 1135 by Walter D'Espece, and dedicated to the Virgin Mary, for Cistercian monks. The revenues at the time of its suppression were estimated at 389*l.* 16*s.* 6*d.* per annum. The remains of the conventual buildings are of brick, and of no great antiquity: the site is nearly two miles from the parish church. Warden Hall is the seat of Lord Ongley.

SOUTHILL, anciently South Yevel, 3½ miles S.W. from Biggleswade, contains 108 houses, and 682 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 11*l.* 15*s., in the patronage of W. H. Whitbread, Esq. The columbarium of the Byng family bears the following inscription:—"To the perpetual disgrace of public justice the Honourable John Byng, Vice Admiral of the Blue, fell a martyr to political persecution, on March 14th, in the year 1757, when bravery and loyalty were insufficient securities for the life and honour of a naval officer." In the church is a monument for Dilly the bookseller, who died in 1779; and several memorials of the family of Nodes. Broom, and Stanford are hamlets of this parish. Southill House, the seat of William Henry Whitbread, Esq., M.P. for Bedford, was built about 1795 by Holland. Over the doors of some of the principal rooms are animals in basso relievo by Garrard, and paintings of live game by Gilpin. In the library are portraits of the clerks in the late Mr. Whitbread's brewery, and a portrait of Mr. Whitbread himself, inscribed "Nobis hæc otia fecit."

WILLINGTON, 5 miles E. from Bedford, contains 46 houses, and 286 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 17*s.*, in the patronage of the Duke of Bedford: in the chancel is the monument of Sir J. Gostwick, master of the horse to Henry VIII. &c.

BUCKINGHAMSHIRE.—Home Circuit.

THIS county is bounded on the north by Northamptonshire; on the north-east by Bedfordshire and Hertfordshire; on the east by Middlesex; on the south and south-west by Berkshire and the river Thames; and on the west by Oxfordshire. Its greatest length is about forty-five miles, its breadth eighteen miles, and it is about one hundred and thirty-eight miles in circumference. The British inhabitants were the Cassii and Dobuni; and under the Romans the county formed a part of Britannia Superior, and was subsequently included in the Roman district of Flavia Cæsariensis. The only station ascertained is Magiovinium, Fenny Stratford. The Watling-street entered the county near Brickhill, and proceeded perfectly straight through Fenny Stratford to Stoney Stratford, where it crossed the Ouse into Northamptonshire. All traces of the Roman causeway are obliterated by the present turnpike road; but no doubt is entertained of its line, whatever difference of opinion there may be in determining the site of the stations upon it. The Ikenild-street entered the eastern side of the county near Edlesborough, and preserving its course on the edge of the Downs left Tring on its left, and crossing the road from Aylesbury to London left Halton on the right, and proceeded to Wendover, Ascot and Calverton, and entered Oxfordshire near Chinnor. A mosaic pavement and Roman coins have been discovered at High Wycombe, an amphora was found on Wavendon heath, and a small glass vessel, and some spear heads have been dug up near Dinton. During the Anglo-Saxon Heptarchy this county was under the government of the Kings of Mercia, and was afterwards comprised in Denelege, or the Danish district. On the summit of the hill at West Wycombe are the remains of a circular encampment. At Danesfield, on the banks of the Thames, is an entrenchment nearly circular, with a double vallum, known by the name of Danes Ditch. There are also encampments near High Wycombe, Cholebury, Hedgerley Dean, Medmenham; and at Ellesborough are earthworks on the side of the Chiltern Hills, near which is a high circular mount called Kimble Castle. A considerable mound of earth, under the name of Grimsdyke, runs nearly east and west through part of this county. At Brill was a palace, which is said to have belonged to the Mercian Kings, and was the occasional residence of our monarchs of the Norman line so late as the reign of Henry III. Cheynies, or Isenhampsted, was a royal palace in the reign of Edward I.; and at Princes Risborough is an entrenchment supposed to be the site of the Black Prince's palace. The seats of the early Lords of Buckinghamshire were at Bolebec and Winslow, but there are no remains of the buildings of any ancient castles in this county; some earthworks point out the site of those which formerly existed at Lavendon and Whitchurch, and that at Castlethorpe or Hanslope Castle, the seat of the Manduits. There are no earthworks remaining to mark the site of Newport Pagnell Castle, unless that near the river called Hill Close be assigned to it. The gatehouse of a castellated mansion at Barstall still remains. Lipscombe-house and Thornton-house have both been modernized; but Gayhurst, built in the reign of Elizabeth, has undergone little alteration. There were formerly abbeys at Bittlesden, Lavendon, Medmenham, Missenden and Nutley; and priories at Ankerwyke, Bradwell, Burnham, Chetwood, Little Marlow, St. Margaret's, Newington Longueville, Ravenstone, Snellsall, Tickford and Wing. The college of the Bonhommes at Ashridge after its dissolution was for some time a royal palace, and was occasionally inhabited by Queen Elizabeth; and the royal college of Eton is still flourishing. Buckinghamshire is in the province of Canterbury and diocese of Lincoln, excepting six parishes in the diocese of Canterbury, and four in that of London. Aylesbury and Buckingham are assize-towns, besides which there are twelve market-towns. The county contains 201 parishes, 24,876 houses, and 134,086 inhabitants. It sends fourteen members to Parliament, two for Amersham, two for Aylesbury, two for Buckingham, two for Great Marlow, two for High Wycombe, two for Wendover, and two for the county, who at present are the Marquess of Chandos and John Smith, Esq.

The face of the county is much varied; the southern parts are occupied by the Chiltern Hills, which are chiefly composed of chalk, as their name is supposed to imply; and although very inferior to the northern districts in respect to richness of soil, have been rendered extremely productive by the mode of cultivation adopted. In that part of the county which borders on Bedfordshire, about Broughton and the Brickhills, the soil is a deep sand. The fertility of the Vale of Aylesbury is quite proverbial, as well as the saying, in reference to the produce of corn and cattle, "Buckinghamshire Bread and Beef." Camden speaks of the numerous flocks of sheep in the Vale of Aylesbury loaded with wool, and Fuller says the biggest bodied sheep in England were bred in this Vale; but at present sheep-farming is on the decline, although great numbers of oxen are fed in the Vale of Aylesbury for the London markets. The dairies in the Vale furnish large quantities of butter by contract to the London dealers; and in the neighbourhood of Aylesbury ducks are reared early in the spring and sent to the metropolis. The southern division of the county produces large quantities of fine beech; nearly a sixth part of the land in this part is supposed to be covered with that wood. Camden, indeed, derives the name of the county from Bucken, beech-trees, in the Anglo-Saxon language: but whatever be its etymology, it is evident that the county was named from the town of Buckingham; and although beech-woods abound in some parts, these are remote from the county town, where the soil in the neighbourhood is not favourable to their growth. The rivers of this county are the Ouse, Colne, Thame, Ouzel, Wick, Loddon, and the Thames, which last is the boundary and chief ornament of the southern part; it divides Buckinghamshire from Berkshire, and passes Medmenham, Marlow, Hedsor, Taplow, Boveney, Eton and Datchet. The Colne separates this county from Middlesex, and passes near Denham and Iver to Colnbrook, whence it proceeds to Horton and Wyrardesbury, and falls into the Thames between Ankerwyke and Staines. The Thame rises near the borders of the county in Hertfordshire, and flowing through the Vale of Aylesbury, and receiving the waters of several small streams, enters Oxfordshire near the town of Thame, where it unites with the Isis. The course of the Ouse through Buckinghamshire, or as a boundary to it, is very circuitous. It first becomes a boundary to this county near Turveston, separating it from Northamptonshire, and having passed Westbury divides Buckinghamshire and Oxfordshire, and enters this county at Water Stratford; whence it passes to Buckingham and Thornton, and becomes a boundary between Buckinghamshire and Northamptonshire, and beyond Stoney Stratford enters the county a second time, and passes near Wolverton, Haversham, Stanton Barry, Linford and Lathbury, to Newport Pagnell; thence between Gayhurst and Tyringham to Olney, Clifton Reynes and Newton Blossomville, and passing between Brayfield and Turvey forms for a short distance a boundary between Bedfordshire and this county, which it quits near Snelson in the parish of Lavendon. The Ouzel is a boundary between Bedfordshire and Buckinghamshire, from Eaton Bray to Linchlade, whence it flows near Stoke Hammond and Water Eaton to Fenny Stratford, Simpson, Walton, Woolston, and Willien to Newport Pagnell, where it falls into the Ouse. The river Wick rises at West Wycombe, thence passing High Wycombe it flows by Woburn and falls into the Thames near Hedsor. The Grand Junction canal enters Buckinghamshire near Wolverton, passes Linford by Woolston, Woughton, and Simpson to Fenny Stratford; thence it follows the course of the Ouse to Grove, and near Marsworth quits the county.

The principal site of the lace manufacture in this county is Hanslope and its immediate vicinity; but it prevails for fifteen or twenty miles round in every direction; it is carried on to a great extent in and about Olney, where veils and lace of the finer sort are made. The manufacture of paper is carried on in the neighbourhood of Wycombe, and there are several mills on the Wick employed for that purpose. Stowe-House is the seat of His Grace the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos, K.G., Lord Lieutenant of the County.

1. Ashenden Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Buckingham hundred; on the east by Cottesloe hundred; on the south-east by Aylesbury hundred; and on the west and south-west by Oxfordshire.

ASHENDEN, 9 miles W. from Aylesbury, and 7 miles N. from Thame in Oxfordshire, contains 50 houses, and 339 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Pollecot. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Dean and Canons of Christchurch Oxford. In the church is an ancient tomb, with the figure of a crusader under an arch, which seems by the chevron on the shield to have been one of the Stafford family, who were anciently lords of the manor of Pollecot.

ASTON SANDFORD, on the river Thame, 5 miles S.W. from Aylesbury, contains 14 houses, and 84 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 12*l.* 16*s.*

BOARSTALL, or Borstall, on the borders of Oxfordshire, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles N.W. from Thame, contains 44 houses, and 231 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a curacy, in the presentation of Sir John Aubrey, Bart. It was nearly demolished in the civil war, and was repaired by Lady Dynham: near it is a large field, called Poor Folks' Pasture, given by King William in 1699 to the parishes of Brill and Oakley. Boarstall is the seat of Sir John Aubrey, to whom it has descended through several heirs-general from Nigel, who held it at the time of the Conquest by grand sergeanty of cornage as keeper of the Forest of Bernwood. The horn bearing the arms of Lisures is still preserved; it is two feet four inches in length; each end is tipped with silver gilt, and it has a baudrick of leather, by which it is hung about the neck. John de Handlo had license to embattle his mansion at Boarstall in the year 1312. It was a garrison for the King in 1645, and was taken by Fairfax on 10th June 1646. A large gate-house, with turrets at the angles, is all that remains of the mansion, and is used occasionally as a residence by Sir John Aubrey, whose principal seat is at Dorton. Arren Grove is a hamlet of this parish.

BRILL, on the borders of Oxfordshire, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles N.W. from Thame, contains 234 houses, and 1060 inhabitants. A fair, which was granted to Sir John Molins in 1346, is still held on the Wednesday after old Michaelmas Day. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a curacy, in the presentation of Sir John Aubrey, Bart. It is said that the Anglo-Saxon Kings had a palace here, which was a favourite residence of King Edward the Confessor; it is certain that here was a palace for some time after the Conquest. King Henry II. kept his court here in 1160, attended by Thomas à Becket as his Chancellor: the King and court were here again in 1162. King John in 1203 appointed his chaplain Walter Bostard, keeper of the royal palace of Brill. King Henry III. kept his court here in 1224. In 1233 it appears to have belonged to Richard Earl of Cornwall. In 1346 the manor was granted to Sir John Molins.

CHEARSLEY, or Chersley, on the river Thame, 3 miles N. from the town of Thame in Oxfordshire, contains 57 houses, and 263 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a curacy, in the presentation of Sir Clement Cottrell Dormer, Bart.

CHILTON, 4 miles N. from Thame in Oxfordshire, contains 68 houses, and 379 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Easington. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a curacy, in the presentation of Sir John Aubrey, Bart. In the chancel are some monuments of the Croke or Blount family. At the west end is a large monument of one of the Carter family. Chilton House was the seat of the Carters.

EAST CLAYDON, 3 miles S.W. from Winslow, contains 69 houses, and 339 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Bottle Claydon. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 17*s.* It was demolished during the civil war, and was rebuilt after the Restoration.

MIDDLE CLAYDON, 4 miles S.W. from Winslow, contains 17 houses, and 160 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 15*l.*: in the chancel, built in 1519, is a slab to Roger Gifford, ob. 1542; and in the church are several monuments of the Verney family, particularly a fine one of Sir Edmund Verney of Middle Claydon, who was Knight Marshal of the Household to Prince Charles when he mounted the throne. He was M.P. for Aylesbury, and fell at the battle of Edgehill 23d October 1642, where he was standard-bearer to the King. Sir Ralph Verney, his son, was created baronet 16th March 1661, and was afterwards M.P. for Buckingham. Sir John Verney of Middle Claydon was created Lord Verney and Viscount of Fermanagh 16th June, 1703: he died in 1717, and his son Ralph was created Earl Verney 7th February 1742, which titles became extinct in 1791. Middle Claydon House was originally built by Sir Ralph Verney, sheriff of the county, in the thirty-second year of the reign of Henry VIII., who was descended from Ralph Verney, Lord Mayor of London in 1466. This mansion has ever since been the chief seat of the family, but has undergone so many alterations that it retains no vestige of its ancient architectural character. It was repaired, at a great expense, by the Earl Verney, and contains a few family portraits, &c.; amongst them is that of Sir Edmund Verney by Vandyck. At the death of Earl Verney in 1791 he was succeeded by his niece Mary, who was created Lady Fermanagh in 1792, and died 15th Nov. 1810, æt. 73, leaving this estate to her relative Katherine, daughter of Richard Calvert of Hall Place, Bexley, and wife of the Rev. Robert Wright, rector of this parish, who has taken the name of Verney.

CRENDON, or Long Crendon, on the borders of Oxfordshire, 2 miles N. from Thame, contains 280 houses, and 1212 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Duke of Buckingham: in the chancel is a monument of Sir John Dormer, lord of the manor, who died in 1626.

Nutley, or Notley Abbey, was founded in this parish by Walter Giffard Earl of Buckingham, and Ermengard his lady, in 1162, for regular canons of the order of St. Austin, and was dedicated to the Virgin Mary and St. John the Baptist. The revenues of this abbey were valued at the Dissolution at 495*l.* 18*s.* 5*d.* per annum; and the site was granted by King Edward VI. to Sir William Paget in 1547: it is now the property of Mr. Reynolds, who resides in the Abbey House. The ancient hall is now used as a barn, but the fine timber-framed roof has been removed to Chesterton in Oxfordshire. Round an old room in the Abbey House is a frieze ornamented with the Stafford knot, and this inscription en. lvi. p̄faisance several times repeated; there are also some remains of the cloisters.

DORTON, or Dourton, 5½ miles N. from Thame, contains 23 houses, and 133 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a curacy, in the presentation of Christchurch Oxford. Dorton House is the seat of Sir John Aubrey, Bart.

GRANDBOROUGH, or Granborough, 2 miles S. from Winslow, contains 44 houses, and 286 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a vicarage, value 8*l.*, in the patronage of the Crown: it was pulled down during the civil war, but was rebuilt after the Restoration.

GRENDON UNDER WOOD, 10 miles N.W. from Aylesbury, near the road to Bicester, contains 64 houses, and 312 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Leonard, is a rectory, value 15*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*: in the chancel are monuments of the Pigott family and of Richard Viscount Say and Sele, who died in 1781. The manor was anciently held by the baronial family of St. Amand, who had a seat here and continued in possession of the estate for several generations.

HOGSHAW, 5 miles S.W. from Winslow, contains 6 houses, and 68 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Fulbrook. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is now desecrated. The Knights templars and afterwards the Knights hospitaliers had a preceptory here, which after the general dissolution of monasteries was granted by Henry VIII. to Matilda Lane.

ICKFORD, on the river Thame and borders of Oxfordshire, in which county it is partly situated, 4 miles W. from Thame, contains 70 houses, and 324 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a rectory, value 9*l.* 9*s.* 7*d.*

ILLMIRE, or Ilmer, 5 miles E. from Thame, contains 12 houses, and 68 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 10*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Earl of Chesterfield. The manor was anciently in the possession of the families of Molins and Hastings; afterwards of the Dormers, who held it by the service of being Marshal of the King's Falcons. Lord Dormer, in the reign of King James I., was styled Master Falconer to the King within the manor of Elmer, with a fee of 27*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.* per annum.

KINGSEY, on the borders of Oxfordshire, 3 miles E. from Thame, contains 36 houses, and 204 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 10*s.* 5*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Rochester. Kingsey or Tythorp House is the seat of Mrs. Herbert.

LUDGERSHALL, on the borders of Oxfordshire, 7 miles N. from Thame, contains 64 houses, and 520 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 17*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* There was formerly an alien hospital or priory at this place subordinate to the priory of Santingfield in Picardy. Upon the confiscation of the property of alien priories, this hospital with its estates was granted by King Henry VI. to Trinity College Cambridge. Kingswood and Tetchwick, or Tetchworth, are hamlets of this parish.

FLEET MARSTON, 2½ miles N.W. from Aylesbury, contains 6 houses, and 43 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 8*l.* 2*s.* 8*d.*

NORTH MARSTON, 4 miles S. from Winslow, contains 112 houses, and 558 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Dean and Canons of Windsor. There is a tradition that the chancel was rebuilt with the produce of the offerings at the shrine of Sir John Schorne, rector of this parish, about the year 1290; and it is also said that the village became very populous in consequence of the great resort of persons to a well which he had blessed. His memory is kept up by many traditional stories.

OAKLEY, on the borders of Oxfordshire, 6 miles N.W. from Thame, contains 73 houses, and 382 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 17*s.* 1*d.*, in the patronage of Sir John Aubrey, Bart. Amongst the monuments of the Tyrrells in this church are those of Sir Timothy Tyrrell, governor of Cardiff Castle, ob. 1701; Captain John Tyrrell of the navy, ob. 1692; and James Tyrrell, Esq., author of the General History of England, who died in 1745. In the church is also the monument of Baron Schutz of Shotover, ob. 1757; and others of that family. Studley, the seat of Sir Alexander Croke, is in Oxfordshire; but the hamlet is in this parish. Addingrave is also a hamlet of Oakley.

OVING, or Uving, 6 miles N. from Aylesbury, contains 75 houses, and 372 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 7*l.* 17*s.* 11*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. Oving House, the seat of General Hopkins, is situated on the brow of a hill, and forms a conspicuous object in the Vale of Aylesbury.

PITCHCOTT, on the summit of a lofty eminence, 5½ miles N. from Aylesbury, contains 9 houses, and 44 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Giles, is a rectory, value 10*l.* Near the church is a remarkably fine and extensive prospect over the Vale of Aylesbury, towards Ashridge on the east, and the Chiltern Hills on the south-east.

QUAINTON, 6½ miles N.W. from Aylesbury, contains 96 houses, and 911 inhabitants, including the hamlets of Doddershall and Denham. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 30*l.* 12*s.* 1*d.*: in it are several monuments of the Dormer and Pigott families; also a monument of Richard Brett, a learned Orientalist, one of the translators of the Bible, who died in 1637. In a chapel on the north side of the church, is a monument of Richard, son of Sir Ralph Winwood, who died in 1688, and was the founder of eight alms-houses in the village. Doddershall is the seat of William Pigott, Esq. Shipton Lee, or Lee Grange, is also a hamlet of this parish.

QUARRENDON, 2½ miles N.W. from Aylesbury, contains 13 houses, and 68 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is out of repair and disused: it was founded by John Farnham about 1392, and was rebuilt in the reign of Elizabeth by Sir Henry Lee, lord of the manor. The ancient seat of this family was pulled down in the early part of the last century. The costly monuments of the Lees in the church are now in a dilapidated state: the most remarkable are those of Sir Anthony Lee, M.P. for the county, who died about 1550, and that of his son Sir Henry Lee, who died in 1611. In 1512 this manor was granted to Robert Lee, whose family had been seated at Quarrendon as early as the year 1460. Edward Henry Lee was created Viscount Quarrendon and Earl of Litchfield in 1674: the title became extinct in 1776 by the death of the Earl of Litchfield, the last heir male of the Lees of Quarrendon. The manor was sold by Lord Dillon in 1802 to James Dupré, Esq. of Wilton Park. Quarrendon is situated in the most fertile part of the Vale of Aylesbury; and Fuller, in his account of the Worthies of Buckinghamshire, says, that one entire pasture called Beryfield in this manor was let yearly at 800*l.*,—and the tenant not complaining of his bargain.

SHABBINGTON, or Shobbington, 3 miles W. from Thame, contains 47 houses, and 241 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen, is a vicarage, value 10*l.* 9*s.* 7*d.*: in the chancel are monuments of the family of Clerke, formerly lords of the manor. Sir John Clerke of Shabbington was created baronet in 1660.

TOWERSEY, on the borders of Oxfordshire, 2 miles E. from Thame, contains 74 houses, and 367 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Katharine, is a vicarage, value 25*l.* 10*s.*

WADDES DON, 5½ miles N.W. from Aylesbury, contains 281 houses, and 1327 inhabitants. The petty sessions for the hundred of Ashenden are held here. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, in three portions, each valued at 15*l.*, in the patronage of the Duke of Marlborough. In the church is the monument of Guy Carleton who died in 1608. Ethorp House, in this parish, the seat of the Dormer family, was pulled down in the year 1810. Westcote and Woodham are hamlets of this parish.

UPPER WINCHENDEN, or Winchington, 5 miles W. from Aylesbury, contains 43 houses, and 216 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen, is a vicarage, value 7*l.* 17*s.*, in the patronage of the Duke of Marlborough. Winchenden House was the residence of Thomas Lord Wharton, who was created Viscount Winchenden in 1706, and afterwards Marquess of Wharton. His son Philip was created Duke of Wharton in 1718. Colley Cibber riding with the Duke in his coach near this seat, when the roads were very deep and heavy thus addressed himself to his noble companion: "Report says that Your Grace is running out of your estates, but I am sure that 'tis impossible for you to run out of this." The Duke was afterwards attainted, and his estates confiscated. The house was pulled down about 1760.

NETHER WINCHENDEN, 7 miles W. from Aylesbury, contains 39 houses, and 284 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a curacy, in the presentation of Scrope Bernard, Esq.

WOTTON, or Wootton under Wood, 7 miles N. from Thame, and 9 miles W. from Aylesbury, contains 61 houses, and 344 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Duke of Buckingham. The Grenville chapel or south aisle contains some ancient monuments of the Grenville family; and the windows contain the arms of the matches of the Grenville, Temple, and Chandos families, by Eginton. Wotton House, the seat of the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos, K.G., having been destroyed by an accidental fire, in October 1820, has been rebuilt, under the direction of Sir John Soane, R.A. In the hall are twenty large emblazoned shields, a description of which was compiled and printed by Sir Scrope Bernard Morland, Bart. M.P. in 1823. The village derives its name from its situation, with respect to Bernwood Forest, which was disforested by King James I.

WORMINGHALL, or Wormenhall, on the borders of Oxfordshire, 5 miles N.W. from Thame, contains 62 houses, and 314 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 18*s.* 10*d.*: in the chancel are some monuments of the family of King. John King, Bishop of London, and Henry King, Bishop of Chichester, were both natives of this parish. John King, Esq., son of the Bishop of Chichester, founded an alms-house here in 1675. Thumley, a hamlet of this parish, is situated in Oxfordshire.

2. Aylesbury Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Collesloe and Ashenden hundreds; on the east by Burnham hundred; on the south by Desborough hundred; and on the west by Oxfordshire.

AYLESBURY, situated nearly in the centre of the county, on an eminence, on the banks of a branch of the river Thame, 40 miles from London, and 16 miles S.E. from Buckingham, contains 865 houses, and 4400 inhabitants. The principal streets, leading to Buckingham on the N., to Tring on the S.E., to Wendover on the S., to Thame on the S.W., and Bicester on the N.W., meet in the market-place. The market, on Saturday, is well supplied with corn, calves, and poultry, and is held under a charter of Queen Elizabeth, bearing date 1579. There are six annual fairs, 20th January, 24th March, 8th May, 14th June, 25th September, and 12th October, principally for cattle and sheep. There is no manufacture carried on in the town, excepting that of lacc. The town is governed by constables, chosen at the court-leet of the lord of the manor; and the Lent assizes are held here, and the summer assizes at Buckingham. The town-hall was rebuilt in 1737. The borough returns two members to Parliament, a privilege conferred in the reign of Mary. The right of election is now vested in the freeholders of the hundred of Aylesbury, jointly with such persons as had previously to June 1804 a right to vote by the custom of the borough. The constables of the town are the returning officers. The present members are Lord Nugent and William Rickford, Esq. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 24*l.* 18*s.* 1*d.*, in the patronage of the Prebendary of Aylesbury in the Cathedral of Lincoln. It is a large and handsome structure, which from its elevated situation, compared with the surrounding valley, may be seen for many miles every way. In the chancel is a tablet in memory of Sir Francis Bernard, Bart., who died in 1779; and in the church are a monument of Sir Henry Lee's lady, who died in 1584, and an ancient effigy in white marble; the arms on the surcoat are a fess between three leopards' faces. The celebrated John Wilkes represented this borough in Parliament, and resided in the rectory-house, near the church, which he partly rebuilt. At the southern end of the town was a monastery of Grey friars, founded by James Earl of Ormond in 1387, the site of which was granted by King Henry VIII. to Sir John Baldwin. It was afterwards a seat of the Pakington family till the civil war, when the town was an important garrison of the Parliament, during which it was nearly destroyed by the army, and has not been inhabited by the family since.

ASTON CLINTON, 3 miles W. from Tring in Hertfordshire, and 4 miles E. from Aylesbury, contains 138 houses, and 723 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 23*l.* 6*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of Jesus College Oxford. St. Leonard's is a hamlet of this parish, four miles distant from the village. In the chapel here, which is supposed to have been a chantry of the abbey of Missenden, is a monument of General Cornelius Wood, who died in 1712.

BIERTON, or Burton, 2 miles N.E. from Aylesbury, contains 113 houses, and 620 inhabitants, including the large hamlet of Broughton. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a vicarage, value 20*l.* 10*s.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Lincoln.

BLEDLOW, on the borders of Oxfordshire, 5 miles S.E. from Thame, contains 197 houses, and 1050 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Bledlow Ridge. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is a vicarage, value 16*l.* 9*s.* 7*d.*, in the patronage of Lord Carrington: it is of the earliest pointed architecture, and contains monuments of the family of Crosse, who formerly had a seat in the parish. The church stands near the edge of a rock, under which in a deep glen, overgrown with trees, and exhibiting picturesque scenery, issue some transparent springs, which form there a pond called the Lyde. The springs are said to wear away the rock, which has occasioned the following local prophetic stanza:—

They who live, and do abide,
Shall see the church fall into the Lyde.

BUCKLAND, 3 miles N.W. from Tring, in Hertfordshire, and 4½ miles E. from Aylesbury, contains 84 houses, and 496 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a curacy.

CUDDINGTON, 6 miles W. from Aylesbury, contains 76 houses, and 547 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a curacy. A spring, which is the source of Dad brook, a branch of the river Thame, was formerly in repute for its medicinal virtues.

DINTON, 4 miles S.W. from Aylesbury, contains 98 houses, and 794 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a vicarage, value 17*l.* 9*s.* 7*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. The southern entrance of the church has a very curious Anglo-Norman arch; the pillars have spiral shafts, and within the arch are sculptured two subjects in basso relievo, and between them is the following inscription:—

PREMIA · PRO · MERITIS · SI · QS · DESPET · HABENDA ·
AVDIAT · HIC · PRCEPTA · SIBI · QVE · SIT · RETINENDA ·

In the church are monuments of the families of Sergeant, Mayne, and Vanhattem. There is an engraved portrait of John Bigg, an eccentric character, who was a native and inhabitant of this parish, and called the Dinton Hermit; he lived in a cavern, and died in 1696. Dinton House, an ancient mansion, is the seat of the Rev. William Goodhall. Aston Mollins and Moreton are hamlets of this parish: also Upton, Westlington, and Ford.

ELLESBOROUGH, situated under the Chiltern Hills, 2½ miles

W. from Wendover, contains 106 houses, and 581 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a rectory, value 11*l.* 9*s.* 7*d.*: it stands on a small insulated eminence, and contains some monuments of the Croke family. Checkers, or Chequers, the seat of Robert Greenhill, Esq., is situated in a very romantic spot, amidst hills covered with beech and other trees: it was built by one of the Hawtrey family, formerly lords of the manor, and whose arms are in the hall windows. Amongst the portraits preserved here, is one of Oliver Cromwell; Lady Claypole, and other persons connected with the family of Russel. Sir George Russel, the last heir-male of the Russels of Chippenham, in Cambridgeshire, died on the 25th April, 1804, from whom the estate devolved to its present proprietor.

HADDENHAM, on the borders of Oxfordshire, 3 miles N.E. from Thame, contains 238 houses, and 1294 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 15*l.* 17*s.* 1*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Rochester: it is a large ancient structure.

HALTON, 2 miles N. from Wendover, contains 34 houses, and 195 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 13*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of Sir John Dashwood King, Bart.: in it is the monument, with an inlaid brass plate, of Henry Bradshaw, Chief Baron of the Exchequer, who died in 1553. Halton House, the seat of Sir John Dashwood King, Bart., is pleasantly situated under the Chiltern Hills. The Grand Junction canal passes the village.

GREAT HAMPDEN, 5 miles S.W. from Wendover, and 3 miles E. from Princes Risborough, contains 53 houses, and 281 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen, is a rectory, value 9*l.* 9*s.* 7*d.*, in the patronage of Viscountess Hampden. In the church are several monuments of the Hampden family. The oldest date, on a brass in the floor, is 1496. The body of John Hampden, commonly called the Patriot, was disinterred, at the desire of Lord Nugent, in July 1828: he died about three weeks after the battle of Chalgrove field, 24th June, 1643. Hampden House was for many generations the seat of the ancient family of Hampden, which became extinct in 1754. Queen Elizabeth was entertained at Hampden House, during one of her progresses, by Griffith Hampden, Esq., who, for Her Majesty's more commodious access, is said to have cut an avenue through his wood, still called the Queen's Gap. Amongst the portraits is one of the aged Marquis of Winchester, in his robes; and a whole-length of Oliver Cromwell, with a page tying his sash.

LITTLE HAMPDEN, 3 miles S. from Wendover, contains 16 houses, and 88 inhabitants. It is a curacy, annexed to the church of Harswell, and is situated in a finely wooded country.

HARTWELL, 2 miles S.W. from Aylesbury, contains 27 houses, and 133 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 14*l.* 5*s.* 5*d.*: it was rebuilt by Sir William Lee, Bart., who succeeded to the estate in 1749. In it is a tablet in memory of Sir Alexander Hampden, father of John Hampden the patriot. The manor was in the possession of Barnabas de Hartwell in the 13th century, and afterwards descended to the families of Luton, Stokes, Singleton, and Hampden. Eleanor daughter and heiress of Michael Hampden, in 1570, married Sir Thomas Lee, of East Claydon, descended from the Leghs of Lyme, in Cheshire. Sir Thomas Lee, of Hartwell, was created baronet 16th August, 1660; the title became extinct on the death of the Rev. Sir George Lee, the sixth baronet, 27th September, 1827; he was rector of the parish. Hartwell House, a spacious old mansion, was the residence of Louis XVIII. King of France, and his court, previously to his restoration to the throne in 1814: in it is a fine whole-length portrait of Sir John Suckling, supposed to be by Cornelius Jansen, and a few family portraits.

HORSENDEN, 1½ mile W. from Princes Risborough, contains 5 houses, and 50 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 6*l.* 17*s.*: in it are several monuments of the family of Grubb. Horsenden House is the seat of John Grubb, Esq.

HULCOTT, on the river Thame, 3 miles N.E. from Aylesbury, Vol. I. contains 25 houses, and 139 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 10*l.*

GREAT KIMBLE, 3 miles S.W. from Wendover, contains 60 houses, and 360 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 10*s.* 5*d.*, in the patronage of Viscountess Hampden. Marsh and Kimble Wick are hamlets of this parish. Kimble Castle, on the side of the Chiltern Hills, is conjectured to have been Cynbeline's Palace; the ancient names were Kynebel, or Cunobel, and in Domesday Boke it is written Chenebella.

LITTLE KIMBLE, 3 miles W. from Wendover, contains 34 houses, and 165 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 6*l.* 2*s.* 11*d.* Little Kimble House, the seat of Sir Scrope Bernard Morland, Bart., was erected about 1811; the grounds having been previously laid out.

LEE, 3 miles S.E. from Wendover, contains 33 houses, and 198 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a curacy: in it are some monuments of the family of Plaistowe.

GREAT MISSENDEN, 5 miles N.W. from Amersham, contains 332 houses, and 1735 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a vicarage, value 41*l.* 3*s.* 6*d.*: it is a very handsome edifice, in the pointed style of architecture. On the north side of the chancel, about seven feet from the ground, is a series of arches, with small pillars detached from the wall. There are several monuments of the family of Boys, one of which exhibits a bust of the deceased, under a circular arch composed of books. At this place was an abbey of Black canons, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, supposed to have been founded by Sir William De Missenden in 1293; but the history of the foundation is involved in some uncertainty, and there is good reason for supposing that the abbey existed at an earlier period: an old register dates its foundation in 1133. The revenues of Missenden Abbey were estimated in 1534 at 285*l.* 15*s.* 9*d.* per annum. The site, with the manor, was granted in 1553 to John Duke of Northumberland, and in 1573, having reverted to the Crown by the Duke's attainder, to Robert Earl of Leicester. Not long afterwards the estate was purchased by Sir William Fleetwood, Recorder of London, an antiquary and historian, who made the abbey his residence: the house has subsequently been modernized, and nearly rebuilt. Some arches, which appear to have been part of the chapter-house, have been used in forming a recess at each end of a greenhouse; they have groined roofs, with sculptured bosses, and the capitals of the pillars are ornamented. Missenden Abbey is the seat of J. Oldham Oldham, Esq. Peterley House, the seat of Lord Dormer, has not been inhabited by the family for many years; it was lately a school. Little Abbey is the seat of T. S. Badcock, Esq.; and the Great Abbey, of J. Carrington, Esq.

LITTLE MISSENDEN, 3 miles N.W. from Amersham, contains 156 houses, and 814 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a vicarage, value 13*l.* 3*s.* 9*d.*, in the patronage of Lord Curzon: in the chancel are some monuments of the family of Style, of Holmer. Brand's Fee, or Thorn Fee, is a liberty of this parish. The Earl of Stirling had a seat at Little Missenden, in the early part of the last century. Hyde Lodge is the seat of the Rev. J. Hubbard.

MONKS RISBOROUGH, 5 miles S.W. from Wendover, contains 187 houses, and 934 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Dunstan, is a rectory, value 30*l.*, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. The manor was granted by Æschwyn, Bishop of Dorchester, to the monks of Christ-church, Canterbury, whence the prefix to the name of the village. White-leaf Cross, on the south-west side of the Chiltern Hills, is in this parish: it has been supposed that this great cross cut in the chalk, which is a distinct object in the adjoining county of Oxford, is a memorial of some victory of the Anglo-Saxons over the Danes; and that the name of the neighbouring village of Bledlow is derived from the bloody hill.

PRINCES RISBOROUGH, 6 miles S.W. from Wendover, and 7½ miles E. from Thame, in Oxfordshire, contains 367 houses, and 1958 inhabitants. Here is a market on Saturday, and an annual fair on the 6th May. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a curacy, in the presentation of John Grubb, Esq. The present lord of the manor, by the bequest of some former possessor, said to have been a maiden lady, provides annually a fat bull to be killed, and a boar to be made into brawn, four bushels of wheat and four bushels of malt to be made into bread and beer, and to be distributed amongst the parishioners at Christmas. The manor having become vested in the Crown, it was granted to Richard Earl of Cornwall, King of the Romans, and is said to have been afterwards the property of Edward the Black Prince, whose palace is supposed to have stood within the site of a spacious moat, now dry, situated in a field adjoining the churchyard. It was also part of the dower of Katherine Queen of Henry V., and in the reign of Elizabeth was the residence of the Penton family; for it appears that the Queen after she had left Hampden, in her Buckinghamshire progress, visited Mr. Penton at Risborough. King Charles I. sold it to certain citizens of London.

STOKE MANDEVILLE, on a branch of the river Thame, 3 miles S. from Aylesbury, contains 84 houses, and 402 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a curacy. Prestwood lies in an insulated part of this parish, amongst the woods, between Hampden and Missenden. Southward of the avenue leading to Hampden House, is the identical spot of ground for which 20 shillings ship-money was assessed on John Hampden, whose resistance to this assessment occasioned the celebrated trial on the subject. He was subsequently one of the first who opened the war, by an action at Brill, a garrison of the King's, on the edge of the county.

STONE, 3 miles S.W. from Aylesbury, contains 131 houses, and 716 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a vicarage, value 9*l.*: it was consecrated in 1273, and retains some vestiges of the architecture of that period.

WENDOVER, situated in a valley amidst the Chiltern Hills, 5½ miles S.E. from Aylesbury, and 35 miles from London, contains 281 houses, and 1602 inhabitants. Lace-making is the principal manufacture, but a branch of the Grand Junction canal coming up to the town occasions some traffic. The market is held on Tuesday; and there are annual fairs on the 13th May and 2nd October. The borough of Wendover sent two members to Parliament as early as the year 1300; a privilege, which after a discontinuance of above 300 years, was restored in 1623. The right of election is vested in all the housekeepers residing within the limits of the borough, and not receiving alms. John Hampden, the patriot, represented Wendover in five Parliaments. The present members are Samuel Smith, Esq., and Abel Smith, Esq. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 12*l.* 16*s.* 1*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown: it stands a quarter of a mile from the town. Wyvelsgate has been many years in the possession of the family of Colet or Collett. Sir Henry Colet, Lord Mayor of London, and father of the Dean, founder of St. Paul's school, was of this family, and born here. Roger De Wendover, Historiographer to King Henry III., is also said to have been a native of this parish. Near the town is a large reservoir, covering about seventy acres, which was made for the supply of the Grand Junction canal. Bottendown Hill is in the parish.

WESTON TURVILLE, 2 miles N. from Wendover, contains 97 houses, and 611 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 22*l.* 0*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of All Souls' College Oxford. The village derives its distinguishing name from a family who possessed the manor in the reign of King John. The King is now lord paramount of the manor as part of the Duchy of Lancaster. Bedgrove is a hamlet of the parish.

3. Buckingham Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Northamptonshire; on the east by Cottesloe hundred; on the south by Ashenden hundred; and on the west by Oxfordshire.

ADDINGTON, 2 miles W. from Winslow, contains 10 houses, and 89 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 9*l.* 9*s.* 7*d.*: in the chancel are several monuments of the family of Busby.

ADSTOCK, 3 miles N.W. from Winslow, contains 68 houses, and 393 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Cecilia, is a rectory, value 13*l.* 16*s.* 3*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Lincoln.

AKELY, or Oakly, 3 miles N. from Buckingham, contains 60 houses, and 295 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. James the Apostle, is a rectory, value 6*l.* 2*s.* 11*d.*, in the patronage of New College Oxford. Stockholt is a hamlet of this parish.

BARTON HARTSHORN, on the borders of Oxfordshire, 4 miles S.W. from Buckingham, contains 22 houses, and 113 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a curacy.

BEACHAMPTON, or Bechampton, on the river Ouse, and borders of Northamptonshire, contains 43 houses, and 251 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 14*l.* 16*s.* 5*d.*, in the patronage of the Marquis of Salisbury: in the chancel are some monuments of the Bennet family, amongst which is that of Sir Simon Bennet, erected at the expense of University College. Here is a free grammar-school, founded by William Elmer in 1648. The remains of the manor-house, the seat of the Bennet family, is now a farm-house; the great hall is standing.

BIDDLESDON, or Bittlesden, on the borders of Northamptonshire, 6 miles N.W. from Buckingham, contains 33 houses, and 175 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, is a curacy. Ernald De Bosco, steward to the Earl of Leicester, in 1147, founded here a Cistercian abbey, dedicated to the Virgin Mary and St. Nicholas. The revenues of this monastery were valued in the reign of Henry VIII. at 142*l.* 1*s.* 3*d.*; and after the Reformation the site was granted to Thomas Lord Wriothesley. All traces of the abbey are entirely destroyed. Biddlesdon House is the seat of George Morgan, Esq. Eversaw is a hamlet of this parish.

BUCKINGHAM, on the river Ouse, 57 miles from London, contains 675 houses, and 3465 inhabitants, including the several hamlets annexed. Here is a large market on Saturday; and ten annual fairs, 12th and 30th January, 6th March, 6th May, Thursday in Whitsun-week, 10th July, 4th September, 2nd October, Saturday after Old Michaelmas-day, a statute, and 8th November, for horses, cattle, sheep, and cheese. The corporation of the town consists of a bailiff, recorder, town-clerk, high-steward, and twelve burgesses. The town-hall was built about 1685, at the expense of Sir Ralph Verney. The summer assizes are held here, and also the petty sessions for the hundred. The arms of the town are, per pale gules and sable, a swan with wings expanded argent, ducally gorged and chained or. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a vicarage, value 22*l.*: it was rebuilt in 1780, on an elevated spot, the site of the ancient castle, the seat of the Giffards, Earls of Buckingham: it bears on its principal front the motto, "Templa quam Dilecta;" the spire, 150 feet in height from the ground, is a conspicuous object to the surrounding country; over the altar is a copy of the Transfiguration, by Raphael. A house in the town, called Lambards, was the seat of the Fowler family, in the reign of Henry VIII. Katherine of Arragon here received the news of the defeat of the Scots army at Flodden Field. In 1644 it was for a few days the residence of King Charles I.; and the room in which His Majesty slept is called the King's chamber. In Browne Willis's time the Judges always lodged in this house on the circuit. Gawcot is a chapelry, and Prebend End is a precinct of this parish. Bourton and Lenborough are hamlets. Lenborough House, formerly the seat of the Ingoldsby family, has been partly pulled down; the remainder is fitted up as a farm-house. A branch of the Grand Junction canal, 9¼ miles in length, was formed in 1801 hence to Stony Stratford.

CAVERSFIELD, in a detached portion of this county, wholly surrounded by Oxfordshire, 2 miles N. from Bicester, contains 20 houses, and 108 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is a vicarage, value 6*l.*: the doorway is of Anglo-Norman architecture. In the church are monuments of the families of Langston, Moyle, and Bard. Caversfield House is the seat of Joseph Bullock, Esq. Part of Stratton Audley, two miles westward, is in this county, but chiefly in Oxfordshire. See vol. ii. p. 80.

CHETWODE, or Chetwood, on the borders of Oxfordshire, 5 miles S.W. from Buckingham, contains 25 houses, and 131 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary and St. Nicholas, is a curacy, and is the conventual church of the ancient priory of Chetwode, which was made parochial in 1480. From the style of the architecture of this edifice, it is supposed to be coeval with the original foundation in the reign of Henry III. In the chancel are lancet-shaped windows, with slender pillars, the capitals of several of which are highly enriched with figures of animals and foliage: in the east window are some very fine specimens of ancient stained glass, which from the peculiar style of the ornaments introduced, from the costume of the figures, and the form of the letters in the inscription, "Amicus Dei Nicholaus," under the representation of St. Nicholas, to whom the church is dedicated, and from the heraldry which remains, there can be no doubt of the glass being of the same age with the building. The first and fourth lights of the window are nearly entire; in the former are three figures in oval compartments, two representing saints, and the third a king, probably intended for Henry III.: in the other light are figures of two bishops and St. Edmund; other parts of the window are filled with tracery, foliage, &c., executed on plain glass, and in very elegant forms. In the church are some monuments of the family of Risley. Sir Ralph De Norwich founded a priory at Chetwood in 1244 for Augustine monks, which was dissolved in 1460; and the estates belonging to it, annexed to the abbey at Nutley. The priory manor, after the dissolution of that abbey, was granted in 1541 to the family of Risley, who continued in possession until 1755. The old parish church of St. Martin was pulled down in the time of Queen Elizabeth. The principal manor, containing about 1000 acres, within the limits of the ancient forest of Rockwood, is the property of Sir John Chetwode, Bart., a lineal descendant of Robert de Thain, who held it under the Bishop of Baieux, at the time of the compilation of Domesday Boke; since when it has never been alienated. It passed indeed for a time, by the heiress of an elder branch of this family, to the baronial family of Woodhull or Wahun, and reverted by marriage to the younger branch of the Chetwodes, from whom Sir John Chetwode, created baronet April 6th 1700, and ancestor of the present possessor, is descended. The principal seat of this family is at Oakley in Staffordshire.

EDGE COTT, 8 miles E. from Bicester in Oxfordshire, contains 30 houses, and 160 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 11*l.* 12*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of Joseph Bullock, Esq., of Caversfield.

FOX COTT, or Foscott, 2 miles N.E. from Buckingham, contains 11 houses, and 119 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Leonard, is a rectory, value 9*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Duke of Buckingham. The manor-house, which was nearly rebuilt in 1640 by Edward Grenville, Esq., is now the residence of a farmer.

HILLERSDON, or Hillesden, 4 miles S. from Buckingham, contains 46 houses, and 247 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Dean and Canons of Christ Church Oxford. This church, which was rebuilt in 1493, is a very fine example of the pointed style. The interior is highly enriched, especially the chancel, the walls of which are covered with tracery: the east window of the north aisle is nearly filled with small compartments of very rich stained glass, containing scriptural subjects, with inscriptions under each. In the church are several monuments of the Denton family, and the tomb of Godfrey Boate, one of the Justices of the King's Bench in Ireland, who died in 1722. He was the subject of Dean Swift's quibbling elegy. Sir Edmund Denton of Hillesden was created baronet in 1699.

LECKHAMSTEAD, or Lekhamsted, on a branch of the river Ouse, and borders of Northamptonshire, 3½ miles N.E. from Buckingham, contains 92 houses, and 519 inhabitants, including Lymes End and Nast End. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 15*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* In the church is a tablet in memory of Sir Anthony Greenway, who died in 1619. Sir Edmund Pye of Leckhamstead was created baronet in 1641.

LILLINGSTONE DAYRELL, on the borders of Northamptonshire, 5 miles N. from Buckingham, contains 17 houses, and 127 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a rectory, value 7*l.* 9*s.* 7*d.*, in the patronage of Paul Dayrell, Esq. The Dayrell family settled here as early as the year 1200, and soon afterwards became lords of the manor, which has ever since continued in possession of the family, by lineal descent in the male line, being now the property of Paul Dayrell, Esq. In the church is the monument of Dorothy Haddon, mother of Dr. Walter Haddon, one of the Masters of Requests in the reign of Queen Elizabeth; and several memorials of the Dayrells, the most ancient of which is the tomb of Paul Dayrell, who died in 1491; and the latest that of Richard Dayrell, the thirty-first male heir of the family, who died in 1801.

MAIDS MORTON, or Moreton, which implies the town on the moors, 1½ mile N. from Buckingham, contains 92 houses, and 407 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Edmund, is a rectory, value 18*l.* 2*s.* 11*d.*: it is a handsome structure, and was built about the year 1450. The tradition is, that it was erected by two maiden sisters, heiresses of the Peyvre family, whence the village was called Maids Morton. The porch and western entrance have groined roofs; and in the chancel are three stone stalls, with enriched canopies. In the church are some monuments of the family of Bate. Dr. George Bate, chief physician to King Charles I., Oliver Cromwell, and King Charles II., was born here in 1607. The parish register records the circumstance of the cross having been cut from the top of the steeple in 1642 by soldiers quartered in Buckingham. Maids Morton is the seat of Lord Francis Godolphin Osborne.

MARSH GIBBON, or Gibwen, on the borders of Oxfordshire, 4½ miles E. from Bicester, contains 127 houses, and 738 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 21*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown: it receives its additional name from the ancient family of Gibwen, who were of considerable consequence in the county in the thirteenth century, and had estates in this parish. Near the manor-house, which belongs to the Regius Professorship of Physic in the University of Oxford, are traces of entrenchments, supposed to have been thrown up by the Parliamentary army when they marched to this place in the month of June 1645. Bury, or Westbury, in this parish, belonged to the abbey of Grestein in Normandy; and having fallen to the Crown as the property of an alien monastery, was granted by King Edward IV. to the company of cooks in London, who sold it in 1530 to Robert Dornor.

PADBURY, or Pathbury, 2½ miles S.E. from Buckingham, contains 103 houses, and 618 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. A bridge, in this parish, over a branch of the river Ouse was built by Act of Parliament in 1742, and made a county bridge.

PRESTON BISSET, 4 miles S.W. from Buckingham, contains 49 houses, and 396 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Cowley. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a rectory, value 11*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.*: in the chancel are monuments of the family of Major. The Bissets, from whom the village derived its additional name, sold the manor in 1290.

RADCLIVE, or Ratcliffe, on the banks of the Ouse, 1½ mile W. from Buckingham, contains 55 houses, and 296 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Chackmore. The church, dedicated to St. John the Evangelist, is a rectory, value 8*l.* 1*s.* 3*d.*, in the patronage of New College Oxford. The manor-house, formerly belonging to the Denton family, was afterwards a seat of Sir William Smith, Bart., M.P. for Buckingham, who made a park here: it is now the property of Henry Smith, Esq., of Charwelton in Northamptonshire.

SHALSTONE, or Shalleston, 4 miles N.W. from Buckingham, contains 35 houses, and 201 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Edward, is a rectory, value 8*l.* 0*s.* 5*d.*: it is a modern structure, and contains some monuments of the Purefoy family, which, after possessing this manor more than 350 years, became extinct in 1762 by the death of Henry Purefoy, Esq.

STEEPLE CLAYDON, 4½ miles W. from Winslow, contains 90 houses, and 804 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a vicarage, value 13*l.* 3*s.* 9*d.* The manor-house, formerly the seat of the Chaloner family, has been demolished; its site is now a farm. Thomas Chaloner, the regicide, founded and endowed a school here in 1656, which still remains. On the south-eastern side of the village, not far from the church, are vestiges of an encampment.

STOWE, 3 miles N.W. from Buckingham, contains 77 houses, and 478 inhabitants, including the hamlets of Dodford and Langport. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 11*l.* 14*s.* 7*d.*, in the patronage of the Duke of Buckingham: it contains a monument of Hester Lady Peniston, daughter of Sir Thomas Temple, who died in 1619. A large yew-tree, with a remarkable extent of spreading branches, formerly in the churchyard, has been paled off as an ornament to the grounds at Stowe.

The approach to Stowe House, the principal seat of the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos, K.G., is very noble, the road passing under a Corinthian arch, whence there is a fine view of the mansion and its highly embellished scenery. Stowe House was built by Sir Richard Temple, K.B., who died in 1697; his son Lord Cobham rebuilt the front and added the wings. It was further enlarged by Earl Temple, who died in 1779, and by the late Marquess of Buckingham, under whose direction most of the state-rooms were completed. The central part of the edifice extends 454 feet, and the whole front, including the wings, 916 feet. On the garden front is a hexastyle Corinthian portico, ascended by a grand flight of steps. The hall, designed and painted by Kent, has its ceiling adorned with the seven planets, that of Mars representing King William presenting a sword to Field Marshal Viscount Cobham. In the hall and corridors adjoining is a collection of portraits; a stair-case winding round a statue of Paris leads to the Egyptian Hall, which forms the entrance from the park by the northern portico. This hall is embellished with subjects derived from Denon's drawings of remains in the interior of one of the small temples of Tentyra. The saloon is of an oval form, sixty feet by forty-three, having in the frieze round the room a Roman triumph in alto relievo, by Valdré. The billiard-room contains a collection of portraits of the Temple and Grenville families. The library, seventy-five feet by twenty-six, contains upwards of twenty thousand volumes of printed books, collected principally by the late Marquess of Buckingham. The manuscript library, in the Tudor style of architecture, contains above two thousand manuscripts; amongst which is a collection of charters in succession from the year 690 to the union of the Houses of York and Lancaster, in the reign of Henry VII., as well as numerous historical and heraldic manuscripts of great curiosity. The drawing-room contains a collection of pictures by old masters. The gardens at Stowe occupy four hundred acres, and were originally designed by Lord Cobham, assisted by Kent, and are ornamented with temples, pavilions, statues, vases, and a variety of buildings; amongst which is Lord Cobham's pillar, one hundred and fifteen feet high, surmounted by a statue. The beauties of the grounds at Stowe have been extolled in poetry by Pope and West, who spent many festive hours with their noble owner, Lord Cobham, and some of the most celebrated of their literary contemporaries. At Luffield, on the borders of Northamptonshire, just beyond the limits of the park, Robert Bossu Earl of Leicester, about the year 1124, founded a Benedictine priory, in honour of the Virgin Mary, which was dissolved by King Henry VII., and granted in 1500 to Westminster Abbey. The site was granted by King Edward VI. to Sir Nicholas Throckmorton. There are no remains of conventual buildings; but the farm-house on its site is extra-parochial, and stands in the parish of Lillingston Dayrel.

THORNBOROUGH, 3 miles E. from Buckingham, contains 92 houses, and 572 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 17*s.*, in the patronage of the Duke of Buckingham: in the chancel are monuments of the Woodnoth family.

THORNTON, on the river Ouse and borders of Northamptonshire, 4 miles N.E. from Buckingham, contains 15 houses, and 78 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 11*l.* 16*s.* 3*d.*: in the chancel is an inlaid brass in memory of Robert Ingleton of Thornton, Chancellor of the Exchequer to Edward IV., who died in 1472, and his three wives; and another of Jane daughter and heiress of George Ingleton of Thornton, who died in 1503; a tomb with effigies of John Barton, founder of a chantry here, who died in 1443, and another of his wife Isabella, occupy each side of the western entrance of the church. There is also a tablet in memory of Sir Thomas Tyrrell, Bart., who died in 1755. Sir Edward Tyrrell of Thornton Hall was created baronet in 1627, but the title is now extinct. Thornton Hall is the seat of Sir Thomas Cotton Sheppard, created baronet 29th Sept. 1809, who is descended from the ancient family of Tyrrell.

TINGEWICK, on the borders of Oxfordshire, 3 miles W. from Buckingham, contains 157 houses, and 832 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen, is a rectory, value 12*l.* 16*s.* 3*d.*, in the patronage of New College Oxford: against the eastern wall of the chancel is a curious half-length portrait of Erasmus Williams, rector of this parish, who died in 1608, engraved on a brass plate by R. Haydocke, who had translated Lomatius on Painting and Engraving in 1598, and executed his own portrait and other plates for that curious work. In this village and its vicinity lace-making forms the chief employment of the females.

TURWESTON, on the borders of Northamptonshire, one mile N.E. from Brackley and 6½ miles W. from Buckingham, contains 80 houses, and 314 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 12*l.* 16*s.* 3*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Westminster.

TWYFORD, on a branch of the river Ouse and borders of Oxfordshire, 7 miles S.W. from Buckingham, contains 69 houses, and 367 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, annexed to the rectorship of Lincoln College Oxford: the southern doorway of this church has a fine Anglo-Norman arch; and in the chancel is one monument of the Giffard family, and others of the Wenmans, to whom the manor descended in 1550. The manor-house was long a principal seat of the Wenman family, but having gone to decay they afterwards resided at the lodge, which is now a farm-house. Charndon and Poundon are hamlets of this parish, and are both situated southward of the village.

WATER STRATFORD, on the river Ouse and borders of Oxfordshire, 3 miles W. from Buckingham and 4 miles E. from Brackley in Northamptonshire, contains 35 houses, and 167 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Giles, is a rectory, value 7*l.* 0*s.* 5*d.*, in the patronage of the Duke of Buckingham. The doorway of this church is a fine specimen of the Anglo-Norman style of enrichment, and contains a basso relievo of the Deity within an oval compartment supported by angels. In the church are some memorials of the family of Frankys. John Mason, rector of the parish in 1674, was an enthusiast, and persuaded multitudes that he was the Elias appointed to proclaim the second advent of Christ, and foretold his own resurrection after three days. His followers filled all the houses and barns in the neighbourhood, and continued for several years to assemble at a place they called Holy Ground, and afterwards at a house in the village; notwithstanding the attempts of his successor to convince his parishioners of the falsity of his predecessor's prophecies, and the wildness of his tenets. Three pamphlets on this subject were published in 1694, the year after Mr. Mason's death.

WESTBURY, on the river Ouse, and borders of Oxfordshire, 2½ miles E. from Brackley, in Northamptonshire, and 5 miles W. from Buckingham, contains 69 houses, and 345 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Augustine, is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 17*s.* 1*d.* The manor-house, now pulled down, was the seat of the Lyttleton family, and in 1643 was plundered by the Parliamentary army. Roger Price, Esq. purchased it in 1650, and is said to have rebuilt it.

4. Burnham Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Hertfordshire; on the east by the same county and Stoke hundred; on the south by the river Thames and Berkshire; and on the west by Aylesbury hundred and Desborough hundred.

AMERSHAM, or Agmondesham, on the Misbourn, a branch of the river Coln, 26 miles from London, contains 478 houses, and 2612 inhabitants. The town is situated in a valley between wooded hills, and chiefly consists of a long street on the road from Uxbridge to Wendover, divided about the middle by a cross street, in the road from Chesham to High Wycombe. The manufactures are lace, sacking, and all kinds of white cotton, wrought by machinery. The market is held on Tuesdays in the market-house or town-hall, built by Sir William Drake about 1680, said to be the handsomest in the county. The annual fairs are on Whit Monday for cattle, and 19th September for cattle and statute. Amersham is a Parliamentary borough, by prescription; its right of sending two members to Parliament, which had been disused, was recognised in 1623. The right of election is in the lord of the manor's tenants, paying scot and lot; and the constables of the court-leet are the returning officers. The present members are Thomas Tyrwhitt Drake, Esq., and William Tyrwhitt Drake, Esq. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 48*l.* 16*s.* 1*d.*, in the patronage of Thomas Tyrwhitt Drake, Esq.: it was extensively repaired in 1778. In the chancel are monuments of the family of Bent, of Leicestershire, who had a seat in the parish; and a monument of Henry, son of Sir Patrick Curwen, Bart., who died in 1638: there are also several monuments of the Drake family in the chancel, and an adjoining mausoleum; amongst these are those of Montagu Gerrard Drake, by Scheemaker, and the lady of the late Mr. Drake, by Sir Henry Cheere. Shardeloes Park, the seat of Thomas Tyrwhitt Drake, Esq., is about a mile northward from the town. The estate formerly belonged to the Brudenells, which family terminated in a peeress, who brought Shardeloes to the Cheynes. It was afterwards the seat of William Totehill, Esq., who here entertained Queen Elizabeth in one of her progresses. Francis Drake, Esq., of East Sheen, in Surrey, one of the gentlemen of the bedchamber to King James I., married Jane daughter and heiress of William Totehill, Esq. The mansion was erected from designs by Adam, and is beautifully situated on the brow of a hill, overlooking a fine sheet of water, covering thirty-five acres, and commands very rich prospects, particularly towards the east, wherethe town of Amersham and the surrounding eminences, covered with wood, have a very picturesque appearance. Amongst the pictures is a portrait of Queen Elizabeth, with the storm dispersing the Spanish Armada; in the back-ground, another of Sir Christopher Hatton, Lord Chancellor, by Cornelius Jansen. The gardens, formerly much commended for their beauty, were originally formed by Sir William Drake, Bart. about 1666, but were modernized by Richardmond, for the late proprietor.

BEACONSFIELD, 23 miles from London, and 6 miles S.E. from High Wycombe, contains 328 houses, and 1736 inhabitants. Here is a weekly market on Wednesday, and annual fairs on Old Candlemas day and Holy Thursday. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 26*l.* 2*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of Magdalen College Oxford. In a chapel on the south side of the chancel is an ancient tomb for one of the Bulstrode family: and in the church are several monuments of the Wallers of Gregories; of Edmund Burke, who died in 1797; of his only son Richard, and of his brother Richard Burke, Recorder of Bristol, who both died in 1794. Edmund Waller, the poet, who resided at Hall Barns, was buried in the churchyard, where is a monument to his memory: he died 21st Oct. 1687. Hall Barns, the seat of the Rev. Harry Waller, contains amongst other family pictures a portrait of his ancestor Edmund Waller, the poet, æt. 23; another at a more advanced age; and a portrait of a lady, said to be that of Sachaussa, the favourite subject of his muse. Gregories, in this parish, which belonged also to the Wallers, acquired celebrity as the seat of Edmund Burke, when it was the resort of the principal literary and political characters, his contemporaries. Wilton Park is the seat of James Dupré, Esq.

BURNHAM, 2½ miles N.E. from Maidenhead, in Berkshire, and 5 miles S. from Beaconsfield, contains 312 houses, and 1716 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a vicarage, value 16*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of Eton College. In the church are monuments of the families of Eyre, Evelyn, Hawtrej, and Sumner; a monument of Justice Willes, in which he is represented in his robes, and a tablet for his son, Edward Willes, Esq. There are three annual fairs 23rd February, 1st May, and 2nd October. Richard King of the Romans, in the year 1265, founded a Benedictine abbey at Burnham, which was dedicated to the Blessed Virgin Mary: when dissolved, in the reign of Henry VIII., its revenues were valued at 91*l.* 5*s.* 11*d.* per annum. The whole was then granted to William Tyldesley. The site of the abbey, of which there are some remains, is about a mile from the village, southward of the Bath road. The arms of the abbey were, Or, on a chief argent, three lozenges gules.

Brightwell, Cippenham, Boveney, Wood, and East Burnham are hamlets of this parish. Huntercombe House is the seat of Henry Sayer, Esq. Cippenham is said to have been a palace of the Mercurian kings; and it is certain that King Henry III. occasionally resided here; the foundation charter of Burnham abbey is dated hence: a moated site near the hamlet is supposed to have been the spot where the royal palace stood. Brightwell or Britwell Court is the seat of the Hon. George Irby; and Burnham Grove, of Sir William Johnson, Bart.

CHALFONT ST. GILES, 4 miles S.E. from Amersham, and 4 miles N. from Gerrard's Cross, the post-town, contains 216 houses, and 1104 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 19*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Lincoln. In the parish church are monuments of the families of Fleetwood and Clayton, and that of Admiral Sir Hugh Palliser, who died in 1796. The Vache, the principal manor in this parish, is the seat of George Palliser, Esq. A house in which Milton resided, and finished his poem of Paradise Lost, is now occupied by a farmer; the arms of Fleetwood are over the entrance.

CHALFONT ST. PETER, 6 miles S.E. from Amersham, and 1½ N. from Gerrard's Cross, contains 254 houses, and 1351 inhabitants. The petty sessions for the hundred of Burnham are held here. It is a vicarage, value 15*l.* 17*s.* 1*d.*, in the patronage of St. John's College Oxford. In the church are monuments for the family of Whitechurch. Chalfont House is the seat of Thomas Hibbert, Esq.; and Newlands, of Sir Henry Thomas Gott. Gerrard's Cross, in the road from London to High Wycombe, is in this parish.

CHENEYS, or Isenhampstead Cheneis, on the borders of Hertfordshire, 4 miles W. from Rickmansworth, and 5 miles E. from Amersham, contains 102 houses, and 595 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a rectory, value 12*l.* 16*s.*, in the patronage of the Duke of Bedford: in the chancel and chapel adjoining are some monuments of the Cheney family, anciently lords of the manor. Thomas Cheney, the first of the family who settled in this county, was shield-bearer to King Edward III. In a chapel built in 1562, by Anne Countess of Bedford, the heiress of the Sapcotes, is a monument for herself and her husband, John, the first Earl of Bedford: there are also monuments of Francis Earl of Bedford, who died in 1585, and his Countess; Anne Countess of Warwick, their daughter, and Lady Frances Bouchier, their grand-daughter; Francis Earl of Bedford, who died in 1641, and his Countess; that of the first Duke of Bedford, with whole-length figure of the Duke and Duchess, and a medallion of the unfortunate William Lord Russell, beheaded on Tower Hill, and buried here 2nd August, 1683; and that of Wriothesley Duke of Bedford and his Duchess, designed by Sir William Chambers; also a tablet, in memory of Georgina Elizabeth, wife of Lord John Russell, now Duke of Bedford, who died in 1801. Anne Countess of Warwick founded an alms-house here in 1605 for ten persons, six of whom are to be of Cheneys, two of Northall, and two of Wotton-under-edge in Gloucestershire.

Isenhampstead was a royal palace, at which King Edward I., and King Edward III. in the early part of his reign, occasionally resided. From the Cheneys the manor passed to the Sapcote family, pursuant to the will of Agnes Lady Cheney, in 1494: it is now the property of the Duke of Bedford, whose ancestor Sir John Russell, afterwards Earl of Bedford, married Anne heiress of Sir Grey Sapcote. Sir John Russell, who was comptroller of the household to King Henry VIII., was created Lord Russell of Cheneys 9th March 1538; he rebuilt the manor-house, and made it his principal seat. Queen Elizabeth proposed to visit Francis Earl of Bedford here in 1570. A considerable part of the house, with the original entrance porch, is still standing; the style of architecture, particularly the clustered chimneys, with ornamented shafts, is highly curious and interesting; few such excellent specimens of enrichment in brickwork now remain in the kingdom. It has long been deserted by the family for Woburn Abbey, and is the residence of the Duke's principal tenant on this estate. The house is described by Leland as "newly set up, and made of bricks and timber."

CHESHAM, on the borders of Hertfordshire, 3 miles N. from Amersham, contains 1000 houses, and 5032 inhabitants, including the hamlets of Ashley Green, Billington, Chartridge, Hundridge, Ashridge, Latimers, Waterside, and Botley, and is one of the most populous parishes in the county. A manufacture of lace and wooden ware is carried on in the town to a considerable extent. Shoes are also made here for the London warehouses. The market is held on Wednesday; and there are annual fairs on 21st April, 22nd July, and 28th September, for cattle. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, in two medieties, called Chesham Leicester, and Chesham Woburn, consolidated in 1767, and each valued at 13*l.* 1*s.* 5*d.*, in the patronage of the Duke of Bedford. It is a spacious edifice, in the pointed style of architecture: in the chancel are several monuments of the family of Skottowe; one for Nicholas Skottowe, Esq., who died in 1798, is designed by Bacon; in the south aisle is the monument of Sir John Cavendish, K.B., who died in 1618, and that of Mary, wife of Sir Francis Whichcote, Bart. Latimers is the seat of Lord G. A. H. Cavendish.

CHESHAM BOIS, 2 miles N. from Amersham, contains 33 houses, and 160 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Leonard, is a curacy, value 5*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, in the presentation of the Duke of Bedford. In the church are monuments of the family of Cheney, formerly lords of the manor, and their alliances; amongst which is an altar-tomb without inscription, bearing the insignia of the order of the Garter.

DORNEY, on the banks of the Thames, 3 miles W. from Eton, and the same distance S.E. from Maidenhead, in Berkshire. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 10*s.* 5*d.*, in the patronage of Sir Charles Harcourt Palmer, Bart., of Dorney Court. This estate formed part of the possessions of Burnham Abbey, and afterwards became vested in the family of Gerrard, the heiress of which married Sir James Palmer, one of the gentlemen of the privy chamber to King Charles I. Sir Philip Palmer, his son, was cup-bearer to King Charles II. Amongst the family portraits preserved at Dorney Court are those of the Earl and Countess of Castlemain; that of the lady is represented holding a castle in her hand, as a rebus on her title.

FARNHAM ROYAL, 3 miles N. from Eton, contains 126 houses, and 686 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 12*l.* 16*s.*, in the patronage of Eton College. In the church is a brass plate in memory of Eustace Mascall, clerk of the works to Cardinal Wolsey, and chief clerk of accounts for all buildings of King Henry VIII. within twenty miles of London; he died in 1567. David Salter, in 1664, left an annual donation of loaves and white herrings for the poor, and a pair of white kid gloves for the rector on the first Sunday in Lent, as long as the world shall last. The manor of Farnham Royal was held by grand serjeanty, or the service of finding a glove for the King's right hand on the day of his coronation, and supporting his right arm that day whilst he held the sceptre. At the time of Doniesday Boke it was held by the family of Verdon, afterward Barons Furnival, and passed from them by heiresses to the Talbots. In 1542 Francis Earl of Shrewsbury gave the manor to King Henry VIII., in exchange for other lands, reserving to himself and his descendants the honourable office, which was transferred to Worksop manor. The parish of Farnham Royal includes part of Salt Hill, which is chiefly in the parish of Upton. Sear Green and Hedgerley Dean are also hamlets. There are some large and deep entrenchments at Hedgerley Dean, whence a ditch runs westward to Burnham; the tradition of the neighbourhood is, that a battle was fought here between the Danes and Saxons.

HITCHAM, 3 miles N.E. from Maidenhead in Berkshire, contains 37 houses, and 172 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 11*l.* 5*s.* 7*d.*, in the patronage of Eton College: in the windows of the chancel are considerable remains of ancient stained glass, in each of which there is the figure of an angel standing on a wheel; the whole seems to have been executed about the middle of the 14th century. In the church are several monuments for the families of Ramsey and Clerke. Queen Elizabeth visited Sir William Ramsey at Hitcham in 1602; his grandson Sir John was created baronet in 1660: the title is now extinct, and the manor-house is occupied as a school.

PENN, 3 miles N.W. from Beaconsfield, and the same distance E. from High Wycombe, contains 182 houses, and 1054 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*: in the chancel are monuments of the families of Penn, Curzon, and Baker; a monument of the Honourable Penn Asheton Curzon, who died in 1797, is by Bacon; there is also a monument for General Haviland, who died in 1784. The village, as its name implies, signifying the head or top, stands on very high ground; Berkshire, Oxfordshire, Bedfordshire, Hertfordshire, Essex, Kent, Middlesex, Surrey, and even some parts of Sussex and Northamptonshire, may be seen from the church tower. About half a mile from the church is Beaconhill. Knuttocks or Knotty Green and Forty Green are also in this parish.

TAPLOW, on the banks of the Thames, one mile N. from Maidenhead, contains 97 houses, and 586 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a rectory, value 11*l.* 18*s.* 9*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. In the church is the tomb of Sir Robert Manfeld, and other members of that family. The Thomond aisle was built in 1633, by the Hampsons, formerly lords of the manor; their badge of the hempbrake is repeated on the cornice. Sir Thomas Hampson, of Taplow Court, was created baronet in 1642. Taplow Court, the seat of Viscount Kirkwall, stands near the church, and commands a fine view over Windsor Forest and the river Thames. The grounds are richly studded with fine old timber trees, and are remarkable for the beautiful undulation of surface.

Cliefden House was purchased of the ancient family of Manfelds by the witty and profligate George Villiers, second Duke of Buckingham, who commenced the erection of a magnificent house upon its site, which was purchased and completed by the Earl of Orkney; the architect was William Winde, a pupil of Sir Balthasar Gerbier. Frederick Prince of Wales, father of King George III., rented this house of Anne Countess of Orkney, and resided here several summers. This celebrated mansion was at length destroyed by fire in 1795. Its situation was very superior to that of Taplow Court; the rich view of Windsor and the surrounding country being heightened by the beauty of the scenery more immediately contiguous.

5. Cottesloe Hundred

Is bounded on the north by Buckingham hundred and Newport hundred; on the east by Bedfordshire; on the south by Aylesbury hundred and Hertfordshire; and on the west by Ashenden hundred.

ASTON ABBOTS, 5 miles N.E. from Aylesbury, contains 66 houses, and 321 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 7*s.* 11*d.*, in the patronage of the Earl of Chesterfield. The manor-house, which is pleasantly situated, was occupied by the late Colonel Freemantle. Burston House, a seat of a branch of the Lee family, was nearly rebuilt by Sir Henry Lee, in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, but never entirely completed: it is occupied as a farm-house.

CHEDDINGTON, 2 miles N.W. from Ivinghoe, and 7 miles E. from Aylesbury, contains 42 houses, and 341 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Giles, is a rectory, value 15*l.* 9*s.* 7*d.*, in the patronage of the Countess of Bridgewater. The Grand Junction canal passes the east end of the village.

CHOLESBURY, or Chelwoldsbury, on the borders of Hertfordshire, 4 miles W. from Berkhamstead, and the same distance E. from Wendover, contains 26 houses, and 132 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is a curacy, in the presentation of the nine trustees of John Neale, who in 1705 founded an Evening lecture here, and endowed it with an estate at Cublington. The church, which was formerly a chapel to Drayton Beauchamp, stands within a circular moat, which incloses an area of about twelve acres. Within this area is the Bury Pond, and northward of the village a large dyke runs from east to west over Wigginton Common, through the parish of Tring to Drayton Beauchamp. Straw plat and lace-making is the chief employment of the women in this neighbourhood.

CUBLINGTON, on a branch of the river Thame, 6 miles nearly N. from Aylesbury, contains 55 houses, and 259 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a rectory, value 9*l.* 16*s.* 3*d.*, in the patronage of Lincoln College Oxford. In the church, which was removed to its present site in the year 1400, are monuments of the Tournay family, who became possessed of the manor in 1664.

CRESLOW, a single house on an eminence, 6 miles N. from Aylesbury, is a rectory, value 3*l*. The parish church, which was dedicated to the Holy Trinity, was demolished in the civil war, and has never been rebuilt. The manor formerly belonged to the priory of St. John of Jerusalem, and is now the property of Lord Clifford of Chudleigh.

DRAYTON BEAUCHAMP, on the borders of Hertfordshire, 1½ mile N.W. from Tring, and 6 miles E. from Aylesbury, contains 35 houses, and 272 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 11*l*. 9*s*. 7*d*.: in the chancel is a monument of William Cheney Lord Viscount Newhaven, who died in 1728, by Woodman; and a brass of one of the same family, who died in 1375, supposed to be that of Thomas Cheney, shield-bearer to King Edward III. In the north window of the nave are eight of the Apostles, in stained glass. The manor-house, the seat of the Cheneyes, has been pulled down. Helpsthorpe is a hamlet of this parish.

DRAYTON PARSLOW, or Passelew, 5 miles E. from Winslow, and the same distance S.W. from Fenny Stratford, contains 50 houses, and 372 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is a rectory, value 12*l*. In the reigns of King Henry I. and II. the manor belonged to the Passelews, from whom the village takes its name, and afterwards to Woburn Abbey.

DUNTON, 7 miles N. from Aylesbury, and 5 miles S.E. from Winslow, contains 17 houses, and 98 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Martin, is a rectory, value 9*l*. 9*s*. 7*d*., in the patronage of Earl Spencer.

EDLESBOROUGH, on the borders of Bedfordshire, under the Chiltern Hills, and near the Ikenild Street, 3 miles N.E. from Ivinghoe, and about 4½ miles S.W. from Dunstable, contains 60 houses, and 491 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 13*l*. 17*s*., in the patronage of the Countess of Bridgewater: it is a handsome structure, and forms a conspicuous object, being placed on an insulated hill. In the chancel are some ancient brasses, of a large size; and in the north aisle are monuments of the family of Rufford. Northall, Dagnall, Horton, and Hudnail are hamlets of this parish; also part of Ringshall.

GROVE, on the borders of Bedfordshire, 2 miles S. from Leighton Busard, contains 4 houses, and 18 inhabitants. It is a rectory, value 4*l*. 13*s*. 4*d*., in the patronage of the Earl of Chesterfield.

HARDWICKE, 4 miles N. from Aylesbury, contains 34 houses, and 207 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 39*l*. 9*s*. 7*d*., in the patronage of New College Oxford. The manor belonged anciently to the family of Newmarch, and afterwards to that of Moels, who sold it to William of Wickham, Bishop of Winchester. Weedon is a hamlet of the parish. Lellies is the seat of Lord Nugent, brother of the Duke of Buckingham.

HAWRIDGE, on the borders of Hertfordshire, 2 miles W. from Berkhamstead, and 3 miles N. from Chesham, contains 36 houses, and 208 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 8*l*. 10*s*. 5*d*.: in the chancel is the monument of Dorothy Lady Pakington, who died in 1577, and others of the family of Seare. Hawridge Court is built on a large circular platform, surrounded by a deep trench and vallum.

HOGSTON, or Hoggeston, 4 miles S.E. from Winslow, contains 44 houses, and 188 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a rectory, value 11*l*. 16*s*. 3*d*., in the patronage of Worcester College Oxford: in the chancel is a monument with a figure, supposed to be that of the founder William de Bermingham, lord of the manor, who died in 1342; he is represented holding a church in his hand: there are also monuments of the family of Mayne.

GREAT HORWOOD, or Harwood, 2 miles N. from Winslow, contains 114 houses, and 584 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a rectory, value 14*l*. 4*s*. 2*d*., in the patronage of New College Oxford. In the church are some memorials of the family of Barker. Singleborough, about a mile northward from the village, is a populous hamlet of the parish.

LITTLE HORWOOD, 1½ mile E. from the above, contains 86 houses, and 429 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a vicarage, value 5*l*. 6*s*. 8*d*. In the church is a monument of Sir Stephen Langstone, Alderman of London, who died in 1797. Little Horwood is the seat of the Rev. — Langston.

IVINGHOE, 3 miles N. from Tring, and 8 miles E. from Aylesbury, contains 101 houses, and 551 inhabitants. The market is on Saturday; and there are annual fairs on 6th May and 17th October for cows and sheep. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 12*l*. 16*s*. 1*d*., in the patronage of the Countess of Bridgewater. On the north side of the chancel is an ancient altar-tomb, with an effigy, said to be that of Peter Chaceport. In the church are also monuments of the family of Duncombe, formerly of Barley End House.

Berrystead, in this parish, is said to have been the seat of Henry de Blois, Bishop of Winchester, brother of King Stephen. The manor had been given to the see of Winchester by Edward the Confessor: it was surrendered to the Crown in the reign of Elizabeth. The hamlets of Ivinghoe are Aston, Wardhurst, Ringshall, Clipperdon and St. Margaret's: at the last, which is about five miles distant from the town, was a Benedictine priory, founded by the Bishop of Winchester in the reign of Henry I.: its revenues were valued at 14*l*. 3*s*. 1*d*. The site was granted almost immediately after the Dissolution to Sir John Dance. Thirty years ago the conventual building was almost entire: the hall and parlour appear to be of the time of Henry VII.

LINSLADE, or Linchlade, on the river Ouzell and borders of Bedfordshire, 2 miles N. from Leighton Busard, contains 71 houses, and 370 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a curacy. In the church is the monument of Major Charles Shipman. Processions which were made to a holy well at this place were prohibited in 1299, by a mandate of Oliver Sutton, Bishop of Lincoln, who severely censured the great resort to a profane place, to which the vicar had encouraged these pilgrimages for his own emolument. Sarah, widow of Sir Vincent Corbet, Bart., lord of the manor, was created Viscountess Linchlade in 1675; but the title was only for her life. The Grand Junction canal passes the village.

MARSWORTH, or Manwood, on the borders of Hertfordshire, 2½ miles N. from Tring, contains 81 houses, and 391 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 9*l*. 9*s*. 7*d*., in the patronage of Trinity College Cambridge: in the chancel are monuments of the families of West and Sear. The Grand Junction canal passes the village.

MENTMORE, 4 miles S. from Leighton Busard in Bedfordshire, contains 33 houses, and 137 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 6*l*. 17*s*. 1*d*. Ledburn is a hamlet of this parish.

MURSLEY, 3½ miles E. from Winslow, contains 52 houses, and 473 inhabitants, including the hamlet of Salden. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 11*l*., in the patronage of Lord Eardley. In the church are monuments of Sir John Fortescue, Chancellor of the Exchequer, who died in 1607, Sir Francis Fortescue, and others of the family. Salden House, built by Sir John Fortescue, was visited by King James I. soon after his accession to the throne: it has been pulled down several years.

PIGLESTHORNE, Pightelsthorpe or Pitston, on the borders of Hertfordshire, 1 mile S. from Ivinghoe, and 6 miles N.E. from Berkhamstead, contains 69 houses, and 353 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a curacy, in the presentation of the Countess of Bridgewater.

The chief property here was given to the monastery of Asheridge, founded at the extremity of the parish and verge of the county by Edmund Earl of Cornwall, in the year 1283. The founder had a castle at Asheridge, in which King Edward I. kept his Christmas in the year 1290, and remained five weeks, during which time he held a Parliament at Asheridge. The Earl of Cornwall died here in 1300, having endowed the convent of Bonhommes with the manors of Pitston and Asheridge. The lands belonging to this monastery were estimated in 1538 at 41*l*. 14*s*. 4*d*., per annum. The estate was kept in the hands of the Crown, and Asheridge became a royal palace. It was the frequent residence of the Princess Elizabeth, who had a grant of it from her brother in 1552; and she was at this seat when taken into custody, on suspicion of being concerned in Sir Thomas Wyatt's conspiracy. In 1602 the estate came into possession of Lord Chancellor Ellesmere, ancestor of the Earls of Bridgewater. The remains of the conventual buildings, consisting of the hall and cloisters, were pulled down by the Duke of Bridgewater. Ashridge Park, the seat of the Countess of Bridgewater, is of large extent, well wooded, and abundantly stocked with deer.

The present mansion was erected by John William, seventh Earl of Bridgewater. The north or carriage front is bounded on the east by a row of majestic lime-trees, and on the west by one, equally fine, of stately elms, and includes a length of above 1000 feet, intersected by a variety of towers and battlements; among which, nearly in the centre of the range, is the chapel spire, preeminently rising to the height of 142 feet. The entrance porch is formed by a projecting arch, with bold mouldings, and octagonal towers at each angle; the front is decorated with foliated spandrels, and open battlements with shields, rosets, and portcullises. On the east front are the private apartments of the Countess of Bridgewater; the terrace on this side of the house is ornamented by a statue of Queen Elizabeth, in Malta stone, by Westmacott, which is placed in a niche, decorated with a carved corbel, panelled octagonal towers, and rich canopy, and fronts the south. The entrance hall is surrounded by a line of armorial bearings; and on the corbels supporting the timber-framed roof are the arms of Lord Chancellor Ellesmere, and his descendants, down to the seventh Earl of Bridgewater. Over the fire-place is a portrait of the venerable Chancellor Ellesmere; and opposite to it is an heraldic table, representing the genealogy of the house of Egerton. To the right of the entrance is the following inscription, on a brass plate:—"On the 25th of October, 1808, being the anniversary of the accession of His Majesty George III. to the throne, Charlotte Catherine Ann Countess of Bridgewater laid the foundation stone of this building, in the presence of John William Earl of Bridgewater; James Wyatt, architect; Robert Clarke, auditor; and Henry Grover, steward of the manor: and on the 11th of October, 1814, the building was inhabited. James Wyatt having deceased on the 6th of September, 1813, his nephew, Jeffery Wyatt, architect, designed the great north door, the east wing and stable offices on the west, which were erected in 1817." Having passed through the hall, an ascent under the double archways that support the galleries, leads to the grand staircase, which occupies a space of 38 feet square, and is 95 feet high. The walls of stone are decorated with niches, corbels, and canopies. The ceiling is richly adorned, having in the centre a wind dial. There are several niches filled with the statues of the founders and benefactors of Ashridge College, viz.: Senchia, wife of Richard King of the Romans, and mother of the founder; Edward the Black Prince; Richard King of the Romans; Edmund Earl of Cornwall, founder of the College; Richard De Watford, the first rector; Thomas De Cantilupe, Bishop of Hereford; St. Benedict, the tutelar saint of the college; and one of the brethren of the college. On the first landing, placed on a corbel, and under a canopy, is a statue of King Edward VI., by Westmacott; and opposite to this, over the fire-place, is a portrait of Henry De Grey, the last Duke of Kent of that family. In the staircase-hall there are also various carved table-frames of oak, some covered with Oriental alabaster, and some with polished Purbeck marble slabs, formerly used as the grave-stones of brethren of the college. The drawing-room is 50 feet by 30, exclusive of a large bay window, 19 feet by 7, and 20 feet 4 inches high. The walls are hung with crimson damask, the floor and doors are of oak, and the ceiling and coved cornice are partially gilt. The windows, which have a southern aspect, open upon a terrace commanding a fine view over the neighbouring country. In this room are three pictures: the Embarkation of Louis XVIII. at Dover; and his Landing at Calais, by E. Bird, R.A.; and the Victory at Waterloo, by George Jones, R.A. On the north side of the drawing-room is the library, lighted from the east by five large casements. Several portraits of the Egerton family adorn the vacant spaces; the principal are those of Lord Ellesmere and his interesting granddaughter, the Lady Alice Egerton. Over the chimney-piece is a three-quarter length portrait of John William Earl of Bridgewater, by Owen. The other portraits are those of Sophia Duchess of Kent, Lady Elizabeth Ariana Egerton, Lady Amelia Hume, Lady Farnborough, John, second Earl of Bridgewater, John third Earl of Bridgewater, John Egerton, Lord Bishop of Durham, and Sir Abraham Hume. The windows open to an arcade handsomely groined, and thence, through five open arches, to the eastern terrace. An ante-room separates the drawing-room from the dining-room, which are of a corresponding size. A large picture by Clennel, representing the entertainment given in Guildhall by the corporation of London to the Allied Sovereigns, in June 1814, is placed over the chimney-piece. On the north side of the dining-room a corridor of seven arches connects the chapel with the body of the house. A perforated oak-screen divides the choir from the nave; the ceiling is highly wrought, and the windows are filled with painted glass; three occupy the east end of the choir: the altar-piece, elaborately carved, is inclosed with a brass rail; the pulpit and reading-desk, placed opposite to each other, are somewhat elevated above the highest seats in the stalls: at the end of the stalls are two richly carved canopies, which formed the seats of the Earl and Countess of Bridgewater.

A window at the western end of the dining-room opens into a conservatory, 107 feet in length, 20 feet in width at each end, and 30 feet in the centre, with an open worked oak roof, and is lighted by eleven large pointed windows. The grounds were tastefully laid out by Repton.

At Nettle den, a hamlet of Pitston parish, about 6 miles distant from the village, on the road from Gadesden to Hemel Hempstead, is a chapel, erected in 1470, which was the burial-place of Sir George Cotton, vice-chamberlain to King Edward VI., who died in 1545. Friesdon is also a hamlet of this parish.

SLAPTON, on the Onzell, and borders of Bedfordshire, 4 miles S. from Leighton Busard, and 11 N.E. from Aylesbury, contains 55 houses, and 312 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to Holy Cross, is a rectory, value 14*l.* 9*s.* 7*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Christchurch Oxford.

SOULBURY, or Sulbury, 3 miles N.W. from Leighton Busard, in Bedfordshire, contains 79 houses, and 547 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, in the patronage of Sir Jonathan Lovett, Bart. Bragenham, Chelmscote, Hollingdon, and Liscombe, are hamlets of this parish. Liscombe House, the seat of Sir Jonathan Lovett, Bart., is a quadrangular edifice of the Elizabethan age; one side of it is occupied by a chapel, which by the style of its architecture appears to have been erected about the latter end of the 14th century. Besides the family portraits preserved here, is a half-length of Charles Brandon Duke of Suffolk, with a pink in his hand; the first Earl of Bedford, 1555; Sir Nicholas Crispe; Sir Edmund Verney, standard-bearer to King Charles I.; Archbishop Sancroft, &c. Near Great Brickhill is Stockgrove, the seat of W. H. Hammer, Esq.

STEWKLEY, 7 miles W. from Leighton Busard, in Bedfordshire, and 8 miles E. from Winslow, contains 192 houses, and 933 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 9*s.* 7*d.*, in the patronage of the Bishop of Oxford. This edifice presents a remarkably fine specimen of Anglo-Norman architecture, particularly on its western front; the semicircular arch of the doorway being highly enriched with the chevron moulding. The church is 94 feet in length, including the chancel, which has a groined ceiling, and the nave is 21 feet 8 inches in width. In the church is the monument of Thomas Sheppard, Esq., of Littlecote, who married the heiress of the Tourneys, of Cublington. Stewkley Grange is the property of Mr. Ward. Littlecote, or Litcote, is a hamlet of this parish.

SWANBOURNE, 3 miles E. from Winslow, contains 84 houses, and 616 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Swithin, is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 9*s.* 7*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown: in the chancel are monuments of the Adams's family, and of Josias Askew, who died in 1750.

TATTENHOE, or Tottenhoe, 3½ miles W. from Fenny Stratford, contains 3 houses, and 16 inhabitants. It is a curacy. The church was rebuilt in 1540, and stands in a moated site.

WHADDON, 4 miles S. from Stony Stratford, and 7 miles E. from Buckingham, contains 113 houses, and 525 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 10*l.*, in the patronage of New College Oxford. The manor of Whaddon was part of Queen Jane Seymour's dower, and the hall was afterwards the seat of the brave Arthur Lord Grey of Wilton, who in 1568 was honoured with a visit by Queen Elizabeth, when on her Buckinghamshire progress. On the attainder of William Lord Grey, the manor was given to Sir George Villiers, who occasionally resided at Whaddon Hall, and was created Lord Whaddon Viscount Villiers, 7th August 1616, and afterwards Earl, Marquess, and Duke of Buckingham, K.G., &c. Dr. Willis, the celebrated physician, purchased the manor, which descended to his grandson Browne Willis, the antiquary, who resided at Whaddon Hall. It is now the seat of William Lowndes, Esq. Dr. Cox, Bishop of Ely, tutor to King Edward VI., was a native of Whaddon. Ralph Martell, in the reign of Henry III., founded a Benedictine priory at Snelshal, or Snelsoe, the revenues of which at its suppression were estimated at 18*l.* 1*s.* 11*d.* per annum. The site was granted to Francis Pigot; there are no remains of the conventual buildings. Nash is a hamlet of this parish.

WHITCHURCH, 5 miles N. from Aylesbury, contains 122 houses, and 845 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Evangelist, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 17*s.*, in the patronage of the Crown: in the chancel is a monument of Sir Edward Smith, Chief Justice of the Common Pleas in Ireland, who died in 1682.

WING, or Wenge, 3 miles S.W. from Leighton Busard, in Bedfordshire, contains 157 houses, and 1086 inhabitants. The petty sessions for the hundred of Cottesloe are held here. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 18*l.* 16*s.* 3*d.*, in the patronage of the Earl of Chesterfield. The church is supposed to have been built soon after the manor was given to the priory of St. Mary de Pré in 1416. In the north aisle of the church is the tomb of Sir Robert Dormer, who died in 1552; there are also monuments of Sir William Dormer, who died in 1575, and of Robert Lord Dormer, who died in 1617. The manor of Wenge was granted by the Empress Maud to the abbey of St. Nicholas at Angiers, who established a cell of Benedictine monks at Aseot. This priory and the manor of Wenge, having been seized as the property of an alien monastery, were granted in 1416 to the nuns of St. Mary De Pré, near St. Albans; on the suppression of the smaller monasteries the manor was granted to Cardinal Wolsey; and in 1544, to Sir Robert Dormer of West Wycombe, who resided at Ascot House, and here entertained the Princess Elizabeth in 1554, soon after her sister's accession to the throne. His grandson Sir Robert Dormer, Bart. was created Lord Dormer of Wing, 30th June 1615. Robert, second Lord Dormer, succeeding his grandfather, was advanced to the dignity of Earl Carnarvon and Viscount Ascot in 1628, and was killed at the battle of Newbury in 1643. The title of Earl Carnarvon, &c. became extinct in 1709, but the title of Lord Dormer of Wing devolved to the descendants of Robert Dormer of Peterley, ancestor of the present nobleman. Ascot House, which was situated in Wing Park, descended to Philip Earl of Chesterfield, and was suffered to go into decay after 1720. The park is still enclosed, but the house has been entirely pulled down. Ascot, Burcot, and Crofton are hamlets of this parish. Cotslow, a depopulated hamlet, gave name to the hundred.

WINGRAVE, 5 miles N.E. from Aylesbury, contains 110 houses, and 675 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 9*s.* 7*d.*, in the patronage of the Countess of Bridgewater. Rowsham is a hamlet of this parish.

WINSLOW, 7 miles S.E. from Buckingham, and 50 miles from London, contains 260 houses, and 1222 inhabitants. The market is held on Thursday; and there are five annual fairs: 20th March, Holy Thursday, 21st August, 22nd September, and Thursday before 11th October. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is a vicarage, value 11*l.* 5*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. Shipton is a hamlet of this parish.

6. Desborough Hundred

Is situated at the southern extremity of the county; bounded by Oxfordshire on the west; by the hundred of Aylesbury Vol. I.

on the north; and by the hundred of Burnham on the east. The river Thames separates the county from Berkshire to the south. It takes its name from a depopulated hamlet in the parish of West Wycombe, the remains of which are apparent on a hill called Desborough Castle, presumed to have been the original situation of the hundred court.—Langley.

BRADENHAM, 4½ miles N.W. from High Wycombe, contains 36 houses, and 220 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Botolph, is a rectory, value 5*l.* 3*s.* 9*d.* A chapel, on the north side of the chancel, was built by Sir William Windsor in 1542, as appears by an inscription on a frieze, and contains the monument of the Hon. Charles West, who died in 1684, and his wife Elizabeth, daughter of Sir Edmund Pye, Bart. Bradenham was purchased in 1500 by Sir Andrew Windsor, created Lord Windsor of Bradenham in 1529, and was for many years the seat of that noble family. In 1566 Queen Elizabeth being on her return from the University of Oxford, was entertained at Bradenham House by Edward Lord Windsor, whose kinsman Miles made an oration on the occasion, which was highly commended by Her Majesty. The house, built in the reign of Henry VIII., is a large edifice, and stands pleasantly, commanding a view of the village and church, with the surrounding hills, chiefly covered with beech. The greater part of the parish was formerly a park, but is at present divided into farms, and therefore the grounds are not very extensive.

FAWLEY, on the borders of Oxfordshire, 3 miles N. from Henley, contains 50 houses, and 276 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 11*l.* 10*s.* 10*d.*, in the patronage of S. Freeman, Esq.: this church was repaired in 1748, when the altar, font, pulpit, and pews were brought from the chapel at Canons in Middlesex. The magnificent seat of James Duke of Chandos was pulled down the preceding year. Fawley Court, the seat of Strickland Freeman, Esq., stands some distance southward from the village, in the centre of an extensive lawn, well planted, and terminated by undulating hills, in part clothed with beech. The eastern front of the house commands a view of the Thames, the opposite village of Remenham in Berkshire, and an island in the river. Southward are Henley-bridge, the church, and the grounds at Park Place. The sides, through the woods on the eminences, display the whole scenery of the vale, in which the windings of the Thames, from above Henley to Medmenham, are exceedingly picturesque. Sir James Whitelock, one of the Judges of the Common Pleas, was the possessor of Fawley Court in the reign of Charles I.; his son sold the estate to Colonel Freeman, in whose family it has continued ever since. The present mansion was erected in 1684, from designs by Sir Christopher Wren. In the hall, 40 feet by 20, are antique statues of a Roman senator, and a vestal, part of the Arundelian collection; several others from the same gallery are dispersed in the house and gardens; there are also many fine pictures by the old masters, besides portraits of members of the families of Whitelock and Freeman.

FINGEST, or Finghurst, on the borders of Oxfordshire, 6 miles N.W. from Marlow, contains 63 houses, and 295 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, is a rectory, value 6*l.* 7*s.* 11*d.*, in the patronage of the Prebendary of Dulting Court, in the cathedral of Wells.

HAMBLEDON, on a branch of the river Thames, 3 miles N.E. from Henley in Oxfordshire, and 4½ miles W. from Marlow, contains 230 houses, and 1281 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 35*l.*, in the patronage of Sir M.W. Ridley, Bart.: in the chancel are monuments of the Scrope family, and one supposed to be that of Thomas Lord Sandys of the Vine, who died in 1526. In the Doyley aisle is the tomb of Sir Cope Doyley of Greenland House, who died in 1633. Hambledon House is the seat of Charles Scott Murray, Esq.; it was rebuilt by Lord Scrope of Bolton, about 1604: he was Lord President of the North, and was created Earl of Sunderland in 1627. It is said that King Charles I. came to this house 28th April, 1646, with Dr. Hudson and Mr. Ashburnham, on his road from Oxford to Southwell. Parmoor is the seat of John Doyley, Esq.

HEDSOR, 4 miles S.W. from Beaconsfield, and the same dis-stance N. from Maidenhead, contains 39 houses, and 188 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a rectory, value 4*l.*, in the patronage of Lord Boston and the Bishop of Lincoln alternately: in the chancel are monuments of the families of Hynde and Parkers, and a tablet in memory of Nathaniel Hooke, the author of a History of Rome, who died in 1793. Hedsor Lodge, the seat of Lord Boston, was built in 1778: it stands on the brow of a hill, and commands a beautiful view of the Thames and some of the most picturesque parts of Berkshire and Buckinghamshire. The house contains a small collection of portraits of the families of Irby and Paget, and a portrait of Conrad Ernest Copperman, page of the back stairs to Augusta Princess of Wales. Lillifee is a hamlet of this parish. Near Hedsor Lodge is Dropmore House, the seat of Lord Grenville (omitted in the account of Burnham hundred): it is situated on an elevated spot in the parish of Burnham, about a mile northward of the Bath road, and about three miles from Maidenhead. The house was erected by the present nobleman; and on the south or garden front is a continued library, whence a winter walk, after the plan of Lord Bacon, is carried along a commanding brow. The flower-garden, constructed under the direction of Lady Grenville, rivals the finest examples. Amongst the portraits at Dropmore is that of the Right Hon. William Pitt, by Hopner; his bust by Nollekens; and an original bust of the great Lord Chatham: there are also busts of the Right Hon. George Grenville, Prime Minister in 1763, and others of Lord Grenville's family.

HITCHENDON, or Hughenden, 2 miles N. from High Wycombe, contains 231 houses, and 1247 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.*: in the chancel are some ancient monuments of the descendants of Simon de Montfort Earl of Leicester, who is said to have resided at Wreck Hall in this parish. Hitchendon House is the seat of the Countess Dowager of Conyngham.

IPSTONE, partly in Oxfordshire, 8 miles N.W. from Marlow, contains 50 houses, and 272 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a rectory, value 9*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.*, in the patronage of Merton College Oxford. Ipstone House is the seat of Colonel Innes. The division of the counties passes through the parlour.

GREAT MARLOW, on the river Thames, 31 miles from London, contains 695 houses, and 3763 inhabitants. It has been a market-town by long prescription, as appears from its ancient name of Chipping Marlow. The market is held on Saturday. There are two annual fairs, the first three days in May for horses, cattle and sheep, and on the 29th of October for cattle, hops, and cheese; it is also a great fair for horses. The petty sessions for the hundred are held here. Marlow sent members to Parliament as early as the year 1299; but after 1308 the privilege was disused till 1622, when it was restored by Act of Parliament, and the right of election vested in the inhabitants paying scot and lot. The government of the town is vested in constables, who are the returning officers. The present members for the borough are Owen Williams, Esq. and Thomas Peers Williams, Esq. The bridge over the Thames was built in 1789. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 13*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Gloucester. In the church is a monument of Sir Miles Hobart, M.P. for the borough, who was killed by the overturning of his coach as it was going down Holborn-hill in 1632. Harleyford House, the seat of Sir William Clayton, Bart., was rebuilt in 1756 from a design by Sir Robert Taylor. The extensive walks in the grounds open to many varied and interesting prospects. Court Garden, long the property of the Paget family, was sold in 1748 to Dr. Battie, who built the house.

LITTLE MARLOW, 2 miles N.E. from Great Marlow, contains 152 houses, and 775 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a vicarage, value 8*l.* 5*s.* 10*d.*: in the chancel is an altar-tomb, with brass plates, for Nicholas Ledwich, who died in 1430: there are also some monuments for the families of Chase and Warren. A convent of Benedictine nuns is said to have been founded here by Geoffery Lord Spencer, before the time of King John, in honour of the Virgin Mary: its revenues were valued at 37*l.* 6*s.* 11*d.* per annum in 1534, when it was granted to Bisham Abbey. At the general Dissolution the site of the convent was granted to John Tytley and E. Restwold. The hall, which was sixty feet in length, was pulled down in 1740; there are now no remains of the conventual buildings. Westhorpe House, the seat of Thomas Wilkinson, Esq., was built by James Chase, M.P. for Marlow, in the reign of Queen Anne, and was afterwards the seat of Sir Everard Faulkener, one of the Postmasters General.

MEDMENHAM, on the banks of the Thames, 3 miles W. from Marlow, contains 61 houses, and 369 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 7*s.* 1*d.*: in the chancel are monuments of the Duffield family. At Medmenham, Hugh de Bolebec founded an abbey of Cistercian monks in the year 1200, as appears by the charter of King John: it was dedicated to the Virgin Mary. The Abbot was epistolar of the Order of the Garter, and the arms of St. George were in the chapel; but only one pillar of the north aisle is now standing. Its revenues were valued at 23*l.* 17*s.* 2*d.* per annum; and after the general Dissolution the site of the abbey was granted to Thomas and Robert Moore, and was sold to the family of Duffield in 1558. The abbey-house still forms a very picturesque object, but additions have been made to give effect to the ruined walls of the ancient edifice. This house was tenanted about 1760 by a society of men of fashion, under the title of monks of St. Francis, whose habit they assumed; and over the door is inscribed the motto of its last monastic order, "Fay ce que voidras." Many anecdotes of this society are extant in the memoirs of the time, and their proceedings are commented upon in Churchill's poem of "The Candidate." Danesfield, the seat of Robert Scott, Esq., is so called from Danesditch, a circular entrenchment near the house: it stands in a beautiful situation, on a bank which overhangs the river.

RADNAGE, on the borders of Oxfordshire, 7 miles N.W. from High Wycombe, contains 73 houses, and 366 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 6*l.* 13*s.* 11*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown. The King's manor was granted by Henry I. to the Knights Templars, and on the abolition of that order to the Knights Hospitallers. After the Dissolution of monasteries it continued in possession of the Crown until King Charles I. sold it to certain citizens of London.

SAUNDERTON, or Sanderton, 1½ mile S.W. from Princes Risborough, contains 32 houses, and 210 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 13*l.* 9*s.* 7*d.*, in the patronage of Magdalen College Oxford. The manor is part of the estate of Lord Dormer, whose seat is at Peterley, about six miles distant.

TURVILLE, or Turfield, on the borders of Oxfordshire, 6 miles N. from Henley, contains 84 houses, and 362 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a vicarage, value 9*l.* 9*s.* 9*d.*, in the patronage of the inhabitants; in the chancel are memorials of the families of Doyley, Pococke, and Perry. Turville House, the seat of John Osborne, Esq., was built by one of the Doyley family in the reign of James I.: it is situated on an eminence about a mile from the village, and commands a fine sylvan view. Turville Park is the seat of Thomas Butlin, Esq. The house, chiefly built by William Perry, Esq., sheriff of the county in 1741, stands in a small deer park, which extends to the confines of the county.

WOOBURN, or Bishop's Woburn, on the Wick, a branch of the river Thames, 3½ miles S.W. from Beaconsfield, contains 346 houses, and 1831 inhabitants. Here is an annual fair, for which Lord Wharton obtained a charter in 1686, on All Souls' day, (old style,) now held on 14th of November. The church, dedicated to St. Paul, is a vicarage, value 12*l.*, in the patronage of James Dupré, Esq. of Wilton Park. The tower of the church was built about 1480, as appears by the inscription on the tomb of John Goodwin and Pernell his wife, who were the founders. In the chancel are monuments of the families of Bertie and Wharton, including that of Philip Lord Wharton, who died in 1695. Woburn House was formerly one of the palaces of the Bishops of Lincoln. Bishop Smith, founder of Brazen Nose College, died here in 1513, as did his successor Bishop Atwater in 1520. Bishop Longland, Confessor to King Henry VIII., frequently resided here; and died in 1587, a few months before the manor was alienated from the see. Philip Lord Wharton became possessed of it in right of his wife, and here received the honour of a visit from King William. The Marquess of Wharton and more famous Duke expended vast sums on the house and gardens: the gallery, 120 feet long, was hung with portraits of the Wharton family, which were afterwards in the collection of Houghton in Norfolk. The house was pulled down about 1750, excepting a wing, which was afterwards occupied by the Countess of Orkney.

HIGH WYCOMBE, or Chipping Wycombe, situated on the river Wick, 28½ miles from London, is the handsomest town in the county, and contains 1055 houses, and 5599 inhabitants. Some lace-making is carried on here; but the principal trade arises from the mills on the Wick, where the manufacture of paper is carried to as great an extent as in any part of England. The market, which is on Fridays, is a great mart for corn and other articles. There is also an annual fair on Monday before Michaelmas-day. The charter of incorporation bears date in 1586, and the corporation consists of a mayor, twelve aldermen, a recorder, and other officers. The town is divided into four wards, Easton, High-street, Paul's-row, and Frogmore. The borough extends from Wyncles-bridge on the west to Halywell Mead, situated at the east end of the Rye; and from Bowerhays on the north to a bridge in St. Mary's-street, contiguous to Wycombe Abbey on the south. The town-hall, situated at the western end of the town in the High-street, was built in 1757 at the expense of John Earl of Shelburne; in this hall are held the sessions for the town and other public meetings. The arms of the town, granted in 1574, are sable, a swan with wings close argent, ducally gorged and chained or. The present seal of the corporation represents the wings of the swan elevated, and bears the legend—Burgus de Chipping Wycombe in Com. Bucks. The borough has sent members to Parliament since the year 1300; the right of election is vested in the mayor, aldermen, bailiffs and burgesses, the number of which is about eighty; the present members are Sir Thomas Baring, Bart., and the Hon. R. J. Smith. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a vicarage, value 23*l.* 17*s.* 1*d.*, in the patronage of Lord Carrington. The tower was built in 1522, to which pinnacles and other ornaments were added about 1755. The church consists of a body and two aisles, and with the chancel is 180 feet in length; the chancel screen, of carved oak, was put up in 1460 at the expense of the family of Redhead. The altar-piece, representing St. Paul converting the Druids to Christianity, was painted by John Mortimer, R.A., and was presented to the church by Dr. Bates of Little Missenden, in 1778. In the chancel is the monument of Henry Petty Earl of Shelburne, who died in 1751, by Scheemakers; and in the south aisle is a monument in memory of Sophia Countess of Shelburne, who died in 1771, by Carlini. There are monuments in the church for the families of Archdale, Lluelyn, Shrimpton, and Bradshaw.

The Marsh, Flackwell Heath, and Loudwater are hamlets of this parish; at the last is a chapel, founded and endowed in 1791. Wycombe Abbey, the seat of Lord Carrington, was nearly rebuilt in the Gothic style from designs by James Wyatt: it is situated on the banks of the river near the town; the grounds are extensive, and laid out with much taste.

WEST WYCOMBE, on the river Wick, 3 miles W. from High Wycombe, contains 287 houses, and 1545 inhabitants. The petty sessions for this hundred are held here. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is a vicarage, value 11*l.* 9*s.* 7*d.*, in the patronage of Sir John Dashwood King: it was rebuilt in 1763 by Francis Lord Le Despenser, and stands on an eminence above the village. At the east end is a hexagonal mausoleum of the Tuscan order, dedicated to "George Dodington Baron of Melcombe Regis," whose legacy to erect a monument for him enabled his lordship to build this structure: within are recesses for tombs and niches, for busts and urns; one of which is inscribed to "Paul Whitehead of Twickenham, ob. Dec. 30, 1774;" another to "Thomas Thomson, M.D.;" and in the centre is an altar-tomb for Sarah Baroness Le Despenser, ob. Jan. 19, 1769. The old manor-house, which stood near the village, was the residence of the Dormer family before they removed to Ethorp and Wing. Wycombe Park, the seat of Sir John Dashwood King, Bart., commands a fine prospect of the valley and surrounding hills; the river winds through the whole extent, and the wood, rich in foliage, is happily clumped. The mansion, built by Sir Francis Dashwood, Bart., was considerably enlarged by his son Lord Le Despenser. On the eastern front is a portico, the tympan of which is painted in fresco, with a representation of Apollo and the Muses; beneath the portico are painted busts of Augustus and Livia, and statues of Anibal Caracci and Coreggio. The western or entrance front has an Ionic portico, in excellent taste, styled the Temple of Bacchus. On the south side of the mansion is a colonnade and loggia over it painted in fresco, and containing several busts or pedestals as well as statues. The staircase is mahogany, and all the rooms are finished in a very elegant style. The ceiling of the dining-room, inscribed "Concilia Deorum," represents a full assemblage of the ancient mythology; the cornices and mouldings are curiously carved and gilt; the door-cases are of variegated marble, and the chimney-piece, of statuary marble, represents the Combat of Androcles and the Lion. In the angles of this room are beautiful antique groups, in marble, of the Four Seasons. The library, 36 feet by 24, is very handsome; and the whole suite are adorned with a collection of pictures by the old masters, as well as numerous family portraits; amongst the portraits are those of Charles Dormer Earl of Carnarvon, ob. 1709, and Mary Countess of Carnarvon. The grounds, originally laid out under the direction of Lord Le Despenser, were finished with a similar profusion of ornament to that which pervades the house; but time had spread its changing influence over the scene, and the whole was restored under the direction of Repton, who removed some lofty trees which obscured the house and concealed the charming view below. In this parish is also Plomer Hill, a mansion built by Thomas Mason, Esq.

7. Newport Hundred

Is bounded on the north and north-east by Northamptonshire and Bedfordshire, which last county bounds it entirely on the east. On the south it is bounded by Cottesloe hundred; and on the west by a small part of Buckingham hundred.

ASTWOOD, on the borders of Bedfordshire, 6 miles E. from Newport Pagnell, contains 42 houses, and 263 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a vicarage, value 6*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, in the patronage of the Crown: in the chancel are monuments of the families of Cranmer and Lowndes; amongst which is that of William Lowndes, Auditor of the Exchequer, ob. 1775. Astwood Bury, a fine old mansion, said to have been built by one of the Lords Zouche, was pulled down in 1799.

BLETCHLEY, or Blechley, 1½ mile W. from Fenny Stratford, which is in the parish, contains 64 houses, and 363 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 29*l.* 13*s.* 1*d.* It was repaired at the expense of Browne Willis, the antiquary, whose father and mother are buried here. In the chancel is a tablet in memory of Dr. Sparke, rector of the parish, who died in 1616, and containing his portrait, engraved on copper by Dr. Haydock; also a monument of Edward Taylor and his wife Faith, with their portraits sketched in white upon black marble: in the north aisle is the tomb of Richard Lord Grey of Wilton, ob. 1442. The manor of Water Eaton, a township in this parish, was held by the Greys above 400 years by the service of keeping a falcon for flight for the King's use; and for his fee had a horse with its equipage, the table, tressels, and table-cloth, and all the vessels with which the King was served on the day he carried the falcon to court, as well as a cask of wine as soon as the King had tasted it.

FENNY STRATFORD, a market-town on the ancient Watling-street, 45 miles from London, and containing 106 houses, and 521 inhabitants, is a chapelry, partly in this parish and partly in that of Simpson. By its situation on the river Ousell, or Lovett, and on the Grand Junction canal, some trade is carried on; but the market is discontinued. There are annual fairs on the 19th of April for cattle, 18th July, 11th Oct. and 28th Nov.: that in October is held chiefly for hiring servants. The chapel, dedicated to St. Martin, was rebuilt by subscription, procured by the exertion of Browne Willis, Esq., and was consecrated in 1730: in the chancel is the monument of this celebrated antiquary, who died 5th Feb. 1768, æt. 77. He wrote a history of the town and hundred of Buckingham, and made large collections for the history of the county, which are now in the Bodleian Library at Oxford. The Swan at Fenny Stratford was an inn bearing the same sign in 1474.

BRADWELL, on a branch of the Ouse, 3 miles E. from Stoney Stratford, contains 59 houses, and 271 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is a vicarage, value 5*l.* 11*s.*, in the patronage of the Crown : in the chancel is a monument of Sir Joseph Alston, Bart. of Bradwell Abbey, who died in 1688. Bradwell Abbey or Priory is extra-parochial ; it was founded in the reign of Stephen, and dedicated to the Virgin Mary by Manselin, a relative of the Earls of Warren, and Lord of Wolverton, as a cell to Luffield. After the Reformation the site was granted to Arthur Longueville. Sir Joseph Alston, Bart. in 1664 made it his residence ; and about 1730 it was purchased by Sir Charles Gunter Nicholl, K.B., whose daughter and heiress married the Earl of Dartmouth. There are no remains of the ancient priory, and its site is now a farm.

COLD BRAYFIELD, on the borders of Bedfordshire, 8 miles N.E. from Newport Pagnell, and 3 miles E. from Olney, contains 20 houses, and 80 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a curacy.

BOW BRICKHILL, on the borders of Bedfordshire, 2 miles E. from Fenny Stratford, and 8 miles N.W. from Woburn, contains 101 houses, and 438 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 15*l.* 0*s.* 2*d.* The edifice stands in a very exposed situation at the edge of a steep hill, and is a very conspicuous object, seen at the distance of many miles. The village lies on the side of the hill about a quarter of a mile lower down.

GREAT BRICKHILL, 2½ miles S.E. from Fenny Stratford, contains 135 houses, and 558 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 18*l.* 2*s.* 11*d.* : in the chancel are monuments of the families of Duncombe, Barton, Pouncefort, and Chase. Smewnes Grange formerly belonged to Woburn Abbey : it stood within a moated site near the river Ousell.

LITTLE BRICKHILL, 3 miles S.E. from Fenny Stratford, in the road to Dunstable, and one mile northward from the above, contains 97 houses, and 485 inhabitants. It was formerly a market and assize town, and has two annual fairs on 12th May and 29th Oct. for cheese, hops, and cattle. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a perpetual curacy, in the presentation of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

BROUGHTON, 3 miles S. from Newport Pagnell, contains 30 houses, and 191 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is a rectory, value 10*l.* 9*s.* 7*d.*, in the patronage of William Praed, Esq. : in the chancel are monuments of the families of Broughton, Duncombe, and Chester.

CALVERTON, on the borders of Northamptonshire, one mile S. from Stoney Stratford, contains 75 houses, and 370 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 26*l.* 2*s.* 11*d.*, in the patronage of the Marquess of Salisbury.

CASTLETHORP, on the borders of Northamptonshire, 3 miles N. from Stoney Stratford, contains 60 houses, and 348 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a curacy : it contains a monument of Sir Thomas Tyrell, Bart., who died in 1671. Here was the ancient castle of the Barony of Hanslope, demolished in 1217, and probably was never rebuilt ; traces of its site are visible.

CHICHELEY, 3 miles N.E. from Newport Pagnell, contains 48 houses, and 219 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is a vicarage, value 8*l.*, in the patronage of Charles Chester, Esq. The chancel was rebuilt by Sir John Chester, Bart., who died in 1726. The manor, part of the possessions of Tickford Abbey, was granted to Anthony Cave, whose daughter and heiress Judith married William Chester, Esq. His son Sir Anthony Chester, sheriff of the county in the 44th year of the reign of Elizabeth, built a mansion here : he was created baronet, 23rd March, 1619. His son distinguished himself at the battle of Naseby, in the Royal army ; and when Newport was garrisoned by the Parliament, his house sustained considerable injury. The mansion was rebuilt in a very handsome manner by Sir John Chester, the fourth Baronet, about 1725. The estates were left to Charles Bagot, Esq., who took the name of Chester ; but the house is not inhabited : it contains some family portraits, and a fine picture of Venus, called Nell Gwynn.

CLIFTON REYNES, on the banks of the Ouse, one mile E. from Olney, contains 47 houses, and 230 inhabitants. The church, de-dedicated to the Virgin Mary, is a rectory, value 13*l.* 6*s.* 10*d.* : in the chancel are ancient tombs of the families of Beauchamp, Zouche, and Reynes ; but the only one which has an inscription is that of Sir John Reynes, who died in 1428.

NORTH CRAWLEY, 3½ miles E. from Newport Pagnell, contains 155 houses, and 775 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Firmin, is a rectory, value 27*l.* 10*s.* The chancel, built by Peter de Guildford, rector, who died in 1321, contains monuments of the family of Hacket ; the ancient carved screen and rood-loft remains. At this place was a monastery, dedicated to St. Firmin, which is mentioned in Domesday Boke ; it fell to decay so long before the general Dissolution that no notice of it has yet been found in any subsequent records.

EMBERTON, 4 miles N. from Newport Pagnell, and 1½ mile S. from Olney, contains 121 houses, and 549 inhabitants, including Petsoe and Okeney. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a rectory, value 15*l.* 2*s.* 11*d.*, in the patronage of William Praed, Esq. : in the chancel are three stone seats, with the arms of Tyrringham. The manor of Petsoe belongs to Lincoln College Oxford.
